NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

SAN DIEGO

NON CIRCULATING

CALIFORNIA REPORTER REFERENCES

96 CALIFORNIA APPELLATE REPORTS, 2d SERIES

Cal.App. Page	P.2d Vol.	P.2d Page
1	214	407
9	214	543
19	214	536
26	214	48
28	214	70
29	214	433
34	215	514
40	214	36
43	214	557
55	214	572
61	214	565
65	214	430
70	214	535
72	214	571
74	214	414
78	214	417
82	214	416
84	214	597
86	214	533
89	214	550
92	214	556
94	214	581
101	214	575
107	214	825
112	214	828
119	214	844
134	214	541
138	214	552
141	214	585
147	214	832
154	214	568
159	214	837
163	215	41
171	214	839
178	214	600
183	214	822
187	214	579
191	215	55
197	214	603
201	214	599
204	214	554
207	214	565
208	215	47
210	215	48
212	215	50
215	214	596
217	214	593
221	215	61
225	215	52
230	215	39
234	214	857
240	215	64
245	215	121
250	215	114
255	215	497
259	215	119
263	215	504
270	215	109
273	215	106
278	215	111
283	215	127
293	215	93
313	215	59
315	215	87
324	215	125
327	215	75
333	215	78
336	215	66
346	215	749
348	215	522
358	215	73
361	215	117
363	215	482
371	215	478
377	215	495
380	215	487
386	215	60
388	215	491
394	215	529
398	215	509
402	215	518
408	216	36
411	216	32
417	215	500
423	215	512
427	216	25
439	215	756
460	215	802
465	215	532
467	215	768
471	216	15
481	215	773
493	215	805
503	215	780
519	215	791
521	215	771
524	216	38
531	216	75
539	215	935
545	216	46
550	215	754
553	215	796
562	215	743
571	216	64
579	215	738
589	216	104
597	215	939
600	216	485
617	216	22
621	216	140
629	216	114
634	216	109
638	216	132
642	216	117
645	216	101
651	216	135
661	216	81
666	216	80
668	216	112
671	216	145
681	216	119
688	216	90
693	216	123
700	216	59
709	216	162
717	216	151
725	216	156
734	216	42
738	216	562
742	216	558
748	216	470
757	216	85
766	216	128
772	216	555
777	216	84
778	216	565
783	216	45
786	216	171
787	216	497
793	216	571
797	216	172
799	216	567
804	216	552
808	216	515
816	216	476
824	216	481
827	216	511
833	216	548
840	216	570
841	216	534
859	216	457
872	216	174
876	216	882
909	216	483
913	217	97
926	216	909
932	216	545
937	216	465
943	216	519
946	217	105
951	216	913
963	217	56
974	217	45
979	216	903
986	217	43
990	215	522

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

COVERING CASES REPORTED IN

PACIFIC REPORTER
SECOND SERIES

221 P.2d – 222 P.2d

CITE BY VOLUME AND PAGE OF THE
PACIFIC REPORTER
SECOND SERIES

Thus:
221 P.2d 1

ST. PAUL, MINN.
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1951

COPYRIGHT, 1950, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.
Pacific Reporter, Second Series, Vol. 221, Nos. 1-3;
Vol. 222, Nos. 1-5.

COPYRIGHT, 1951, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.

JUDGES AND OFFICERS

SUPREME COURT

Chief Justice

PHIL S. GIBSON - - - - - - - - - - - - - - San Francisco

DEPARTMENT ONE

Presiding Judge

JOHN W. SHENK - - - - - - - - - - - - - San Francisco

Associate Justices

JESSE W. CARTER - - - - - - - - - - - - San Francisco
B. REY SCHAUER - - - - - - - - - - - - - Los Angeles

DEPARTMENT TWO

Presiding Justice

DOUGLAS L. EDMONDS - - - - - - - - - - San Francisco

Associate Justices

ROGER J. TRAYNOR - - - - - - - - - - - - Berkeley
HOMER R. SPENCE - - - - - - - - - - - - San Francisco

Clerks

WILLIAM I. SULLIVAN - - Clerk - - - - - - San Francisco
HARRY M. GARDISER - - Chief Deputy Clerk - San Francisco
LOREN F. WHITE - - - - Deputy Clerk - - - San Francisco
WILLIAM J. SINKFORD - - Deputy Clerk - - - San Francisco
A. R. FAIRWELL - - - - Deputy Clerk - - - San Francisco
A. F. BRADOVICH - - - Deputy Clerk - - - - Sacramento
HENRY P. CRABTREE - - Deputy Clerk - - - - Los Angeles
DAVID BLOMGREN - - - Deputy Clerk - - - - Los Angeles

DISTRICT COURTS OF APPEALS

FIRST DISTRICT—SAN FRANCISCO

Division 1

PRESIDING JUSTICE

RAYMOND E. PETERS - - - - - - - - - - - San Francisco

ASSOCIATE JUSTICE

A. F. BRAY - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - San Francisco
FRED B. WOOD - - - - - - - - - - - - - San Francisco

Division 2

PRESIDING JUSTICE

JOHN T. NOURSE - - - - - - - - - - - - San Francisco

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES

C. J. GOODELL - - - - - - - - - - - - - San Francisco
MAURICE T. DOOLING, Jr. - - - - - - - - - Hollister

CLERKS

WALTER S. CHISHOLM - - Clerk - - - - - - - San Francisco
L. R. ELKINGTON - - - - Deputy Clerk - - - San Francisco
PAUL DINOIA - - - - - Deputy Clerk - - - San Francisco

SECOND DISTRICT—LOS ANGELES

Division 1

PRESIDING JUSTICE

THOMAS P. WHITE - - - - - - - - - - - Los Angeles

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES

WILLIAM C. DORAN - - - - - - - - - - - Los Angeles
LOUIS C. DRAPEAU - - - - - - - - - - - Los Angeles

Division 2

PRESIDING JUSTICE

MINOR MOORE - - - - - - - - - - - - - Los Angeles

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES

MARSHALL F. McCOMB - - - - - - - - - - Los Angeles
EMMET H. WILSON - - - - - - - - - - - - Los Angeles

DISTRICT COURTS OF APPEALS—Cont'd.

Division 3

PRESIDING JUSTICE

CLEMENT L. SHINN - - - - - - - - - - - Los Angeles

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES

PARKER WOOD - - - - - - - - - - - - - - Los Angeles
PAUL VALLÉE - - - - - - - - - - - - - - Los Angeles

CLERKS

JAMES E. BROWN - - - - Clerk - - - - - - - Los Angeles
WM. E. DORAN - - - - - Deputy Clerk - - - - Los Angeles
EUGENE B. STANLEY - - - Deputy Clerk - - - - Los Angeles

THIRD DISTRICT—SACRAMENTO

PRESIDING JUSTICE

ANNETTE ABBOTT ADAMS - - - - - - - - - Sacramento

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES

PAUL PEEK - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - Long Beach
B. F. VAN DYKE - - - - - - - - - - - - - Sacramento

CLERKS

L. A. ENDRES - - - - - Clerk - - - - - - - - Sacramento
THOMAS J. DILLON - - - Deputy Clerk - - - - - Sacramento

FOURTH DISTRICT

Fresno—San Bernardino—San Diego

PRESIDING JUSTICE

CHARLES R. BARNARD - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - Fresno

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES

LLOYD E. GRIFFIN - - - - - - - - - - - - - - San Diego
STANLEY MUSSELL - - - - - - - - - - - San Bernardino

CLERKS

EARL J. VERDECKBERG - - Clerk - - - - - - - - San Diego
LLOYD E. HIDDEN - - - - Deputy Clerk - - - San Bernardino
ROY M. BOSTWICK - - - Deputy Clerk - - - - - - - Fresno
GEORGE J. KOBELIN - - - Deputy Clerk - - - - - - San Diego

APPELLATE DEPARTMENT, SUPERIOR COURT

LOS ANGELES COUNTY

PRESIDING JUDGE

HARTLEY SHAW - - - - - - - - - - - - Los Angeles

JUDGES

EDWARD T. BISHOP - - - - - - - - - - - - Los Angeles
JESS E. STEPHENS - - - - - - - - - - - - Los Angeles

CLERK

J. J. MacGREGOR - - - - - - - - - - - - Los Angeles

SAN FRANCISCO COUNTY

PRESIDING JUDGE

FRANKLIN A. GRIFFIN - - - - - - - - - - San Francisco

JUDGES

EDWARD P. MURPHY - - - - - - - - - - - San Francisco
HERBERT C. KAUFMAN - - - - - - - - - - - San Francisco

CLERK

S. I. HUGHES - - - - - - - - - - - - - San Francisco

SAN DIEGO COUNTY

PRESIDING JUDGE

L. N. TURRENTINE - - - - - - - - - - - - San Diego

JUDGES

ROBERT B. BURCH - - - - - - - - - - - - San Diego
WILLIAM A. GLEN - - - - - - - - - - - - San Diego

CLERK

BRUCE ROBINSON - - - - - - - - - - - - San Diego

SACRAMENTO COUNTY

PRESIDING JUDGE

RAYMOND T. COUGHLIN - - - - - - - - - - Sacramento

JUDGES

MALCOLM C. GLENN - - - - - - - - - - - Sacramento
GROVER W. BEDEAU - - - - - - - - - - - Sacramento

ALAMEDA COUNTY

PRESIDING JUDGE

S. VICTOR WAGLER - - - - - - - - - - - - Oakland

JUDGES

RALPH HOYT - - - - - - - - - - - - - - Oakland
A. J. WOOLSEY - - - - - - - - - - - - - - Oakland

ATTORNEY GENERAL

FRED N. HOWSER - - - - - - - - - - - - - Los Angeles

CASES REPORTED

	Vol.		Page
Adams v. Allen, App.	222	P.2d	887
Agnew v. City of Los Angeles, App.	221	P.2d	340
Air Purification v. Carle, App.	221	P.2d	700
Allen; Adams v., App.	222	P.2d	887
Alpha Securities Corp.; City of San Diego v., App.	221	P.2d	770
Alvarez; Estrada v., App.	222	P.2d	671
Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butchers Workmen of North America, Local No. 421; Kold Kist, Inc. v., App.	221	P.2d	724
American President Lines; Independent Iron Works v., Sup.	221	P.2d	939
Anglo Cal. Nat. Bank of San Francisco; Women's Athletic Club of San Francisco v., App.	222	P.2d	675
Anglo Safe Deposit Co. v. Graddon, App.	222	P.2d	329
Arnold; Oppenheimer v., App.	222	P.2d	940
Arrow Flying Service v. Universal Flyers Ground School, App.	221	P.2d	231
Babcock; Bishop v., App.	221	P.2d	733
Babcock; Thorsby v., Sup.	222	P.2d	863
Baloian v. Johns, App.	221	P.2d	332
Bank of America Nat. Trust & Sav. Ass'n; Brewster v., App.	222	P.2d	100
Bardin v. Case, two cases, App.	221	P.2d	292
Barents, Ex parte, App.	222	P.2d	488
Barnett v. Furst, App.	222	P.2d	470
Basalt Rock Co.; Clary v., App.	222	P.2d	24
Basalt Rock Co.; Hurt v., App.	221	P.2d	175
Beck v. Unruh, App.	222	P.2d	242
Benatar; Sterling Drug v., App.	221	P.2d	965
Bennett v. Superior Court in and for San Diego County, App.	222	P.2d	276
Berg; Powell v., App.	221	P.2d	743
Berggren; Nelson v., App.	222	P.2d	465
Bernstein; Dencker v., App.	222	P.2d	460
Bishop v. Babcock, App.	221	P.2d	733
Blache v. Blache, App.	222	P.2d	35
Bland v. Potter, App.	221	P.2d	714
Blodgett v. Walker Scott Corp., App.	221	P.2d	325
Board of Ed. of Palo Alto Unified School Dist.; Holbrook v., App.	221	P.2d	205
Board of Medical Examiners; Bogart v., App.	221	P.2d	168
Board of Medical Examiners; Garfield v., App.	221	P.2d	705
Board of Sup'rs of Tulare County; Jordan v., App.	221	P.2d	977
Bobo & Wood; Kauffman v., App.	221	P.2d	750
Bogart v. Board of Medical Examiners, App.	221	P.2d	168
Borba; Gomes v., App.	221	P.2d	124
Borden & Barton Enterprises v. Warner Bros. Broadcasting Corp., App.	222	P.2d	463
Bowden v. Heaton, App.	222	P.2d	247
Boyce; People v., App.	221	P.2d	1011
Brees, Ex parte, App.	221	P.2d	756
Brewster v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Sav. Ass'n, App.	222	P.2d	100
Brig Lumber Mills Co.; Wetmore v., App.	221	P.2d	963
Brock; Knudsen Creamery Co. v., App.	221	P.2d	306
Brotemarkle v. Snyder, App.	221	P.2d	992
Brotherhood of R. R. Trainmen; State v., App.	222	P.2d	27
Brougher; Maxwell v., App.	222	P.2d	910
Brown v. San Francisco Ball Club, App.	222	P.2d	19
Browning, Ex parte, App.	221	P.2d	736

	Vol.		Page
Bullis; Maynard v., App.	222	P.2d	685
Butcher v. Queen City Iron & Metal Co., App.	221	P.2d	265
Butler; Majors v., App.	221	P.2d	994
Calloway; Walker v., App.	222	P.2d	455
Capritti; Howard Greer Custom Originals v., Sup.	221	P.2d	937
Carle; Air Purification v., App.	221	P.2d	700
Case; Bardin v., App.	221	P.2d	292
Cedars of Lebanon Hospital v. Los Angeles County, Sup.	221	P.2d	31
Centers v. Dollar Markets, App.	222	P.2d	136
Central Bank; Martens v., App.	221	P.2d	193
Chapman; People v., App.	221	P.2d	980
Christiana v. Rose, App.	222	P.2d	891
City and County of San Francisco; Germ v., App.	222	P.2d	122
City and County of San Francisco; Laurent v., App.	222	P.2d	274
City and County of San Francisco v. San Mateo County, Sup.	222	P.2d	860
City of Arcadia; Petrovich v., Sup.	222	P.2d	231
City of Bakersfield; Fox Bakersfield Theatre Corp. v., Sup.	222	P.2d	879
City of Glendale; Klimper v., App.	222	P.2d	49
City of Los Angeles; Agnew v., App.	221	P.2d	340
City of Los Angeles; Clemons v., Sup.	222	P.2d	439
City of San Diego v. Alpha Securities Corp., App.	221	P.2d	770
City of San Jose; People ex rel. Smith v., App.	222	P.2d	947
City of Stockton v. West Coast Theatres of Northern Cal., Sup.	222	P.2d	886
Clark v. State, App.	222	P.2d	300
Clary v. Basalt Rock Co., App.	222	P.2d	24
Clemons v. City of Los Angeles, Sup.	222	P.2d	439
Coen v. Superior Optical Co., two cases, App.	221	P.2d	183
Cohen v. Hunter, App.	222	P.2d	93
Colletta; People v., App.	222	P.2d	922
Collins; People v., App.	222	P.2d	686
Columbia Broadcasting System; Stanley v., Sup.	221	P.2d	73
Combs v. Ritter, App.	222	P.2d	252
Cook; Hollywood State Bank v., App.	221	P.2d	988
Costner; Frederiksen v., App.	221	P.2d	1008
Cracolice v. Kramer, App.	221	P.2d	237
Cradick v. Singer, App.	221	P.2d	740
Cullen; People v., App.	221	P.2d	1016
Cunningham; People v., App.	221	P.2d	283
Daly v. White, App.	222	P.2d	950
Davenport v. Davenport Foundation, Sup.	222	P.2d	11
Davenport Foundation; Davenport v., Sup.	222	P.2d	11
Davidson v. Long Beach Pleasure Pier Co., App.	221	P.2d	1005
Dencker v. Bernstein, App.	222	P.2d	460
De Rose; Moeller v., App.	222	P.2d	107
Desert Club v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App.	221	P.2d	766
Deverich; Niemann v., App.	221	P.2d	178
Dick; Woodcock v., Sup.	222	P.2d	667
Dixon; People v., App.	221	P.2d	198
Dodge v. Harbor Boat Bldg. Co., App.	222	P.2d	697
Dollar Markets; Centers v., App.	222	P.2d	136
Donovan v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, App.	222	P.2d	469
Duhart v. O'Rourke, App.	221	P.2d	767
Eastridge; Woods v., App.	222	P.2d	296
Ebner v. Sheehan, App.	222	P.2d	888
Edouarde; Simons v., App.	221	P.2d	203
Edwards v. People, App.	221	P.2d	336
El Centro Properties v. Superior Court of State, in and for San Diego County, App.	221	P.2d	218

	Vol.		Page
Ellis v. National Cas. Co., App.	221	P.2d	127
Ellis; People v., App.	221	P.2d	258
Emanuel Center; Westwood Temple v., App.	221	P.2d	146
Emery; People v., App.	221	P.2d	223
Emett & Chandler; Meadows v., App.	222	P.2d	145
Epstein; Tyree v., App.	221	P.2d	1002
Epstein v. Zahloute, App.	222	P.2d	318
Erickson; Fox v., App.	222	P.2d	452
Escobedo v. State Dept. of Motor Vehicles, Sup.	222	P.2d	1
Estes; People v., App.	222	P.2d	454
Estrada v. Alvarez, App.	222	P.2d	671
Etherington, Ex parte, Sup.	221	P.2d	942
Evans; Harrington v., App.	221	P.2d	696
Farkas; Fuhrman v., App.	222	P.2d	105
Fields; People v., App.	221	P.2d	190
Finley v. Winkler, Super.	222	P.2d	345
First Nat. Bank of Fair Oaks v. Turnbull, App.	222	P.2d	494
Foley v. Riverside Iron & Steel Corp., App.	221	P.2d	998
Four-Wheel Brake Service Co.; Spolter v., App.	222	P.2d	307
Fowler v. Key System Transit Lines, App.	222	P.2d	287
Fox v. Erickson, App.	222	P.2d	452
Fox Bakersfield Theatre Corp. v. City of Bakersfield, Sup.	222	P.2d	879
Fredericka Home for the Aged v. San Diego County, Sup.	221	P.2d	68
Frederiksen v. Costner, App.	221	P.2d	1008
Fuhrman v. Farkas, App.	222	P.2d	105
Furst; Barnett v., App.	222	P.2d	470
Gallimore's Estate, In re, App.	222	P.2d	259
Garfield v. Board of Medical Examiners, App.	221	P.2d	705
Germ v. City and County of San Francisco, App.	222	P.2d	122
Gillies v. Michigan Millers Mut. Fire Ins. Co., App.	221	P.2d	272
Gilmore v. Gilmore, App.	221	P.2d	123
Girard v. Veach, App.	221	P.2d	741
Girsh; Stockton Dry Goods Co. v., App.	221	P.2d	186
Godley v. State, App.	222	P.2d	61
Golceff v. Sugarman, Sup.	222	P.2d	665
Golden Const. Co. v. Superior Court of State, in and for Imperial County, App.	221	P.2d	218
Golding v. R. K. O. Pictures, Sup.	221	P.2d	95
Gomes v. Borba, App.	221	P.2d	124
Graddon; Anglo Safe Deposit Co. v., App.	222	P.2d	329
Graddon v. Knight, App.	222	P.2d	329
Gray v. Jones, App.	222	P.2d	319
Greenhill v. Greenhill, App.	221	P.2d	310
Greenhill's Estate, In re, App.	221	P.2d	310
Greer Custom Originals v. Capritti, Sup.	221	P.2d	937
Griffin; Macmillan Petroleum Corp. v., App.	222	P.2d	69
Groff; Howard v., App.	221	P.2d	246
Groff; Stafford v., App.	221	P.2d	246
Gurwitz; Williams v., App.	222	P.2d	673
Gutierrez; People v., Sup.	221	P.2d	22
Guyer; Nebel v., App.	221	P.2d	337
Hampton; Young v., App.	221	P.2d	195
Hancock v. Williams, App.	221	P.2d	129
Harbor Boat Bldg. Co.; Dodge v., App.	222	P.2d	697
Hardy v. San Fernando Valley Chamber of Commerce, App.	222	P.2d	314
Harrington v. Evans, App.	221	P.2d	696
Harris v. National Union of Marine Cooks & Stewards, App.	221	P.2d	136

	Vol.		Page
Haslett; Owens v., App.	221	P.2d	252
Hayden; People v., App.	221	P.2d	221
Heaton; Bowden v., App.	222	P.2d	247
Helvey v. Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles, App.	221	P.2d	257
Hendershott v. Shipman, App.	221	P.2d	982
Hennessey v. Puertas, App.	221	P.2d	321
Hill; Snidow v., App.	222	P.2d	958
Hill v. Snidow, App.	222	P.2d	962
Hite; Simpson v., Sup.	222	P.2d	225
Hobson v. Mutual Ben. Health & Acc. Ass'n, App.	221	P.2d	761
Holbrook v. Board of Ed. of Palo Alto Unified School Dist., App.	221	P.2d	205
Hollingsworth & Co.; Sipe v., App.	221	P.2d	991
Hollywood State Bank v. Cook, App.	221	P.2d	988
Hoover v. Striegel, App.	222	P.2d	963
House; West v., App.	222	P.2d	269
Howard v. Groff, App.	221	P.2d	246
Howard Greer Custom Originals v. Capritti, Sup.	221	P.2d	937
Howes; People v., App.	222	P.2d	969
Hughes v. Oreb, App.	221	P.2d	327
Hunter; Cohen v., App.	222	P.2d	93
Hurt v. Basalt Rock Co., App.	221	P.2d	175
Imperial-Yuma Production Credit Ass'n v. Shields, App.	222	P.2d	148
Independent Iron Works v. American President Lines, Sup.	221	P.2d	939
Jackson v. Universal Intern. Pictures, Sup.	222	P.2d	433
Jahn; People v., App.	221	P.2d	333
James; People v., App.	222	P.2d	117
Jewell v. New Hotel U. S. Grant, App.	221	P.2d	170
Johns; Baloian v., App.	221	P.2d	332
Johnson; People v., App.	222	P.2d	58
Johnson; People v., App.	222	P.2d	335
Johnson; Ringo v., App.	221	P.2d	267
Johnson v. Snyder, App.	221	P.2d	164
Jones; Gray v., App.	222	P.2d	319
Jordan v. Board of Sup'rs of Tulare County, App.	221	P.2d	977
Jordan v. O'Connor, App.	222	P.2d	322
Justice Court of Vista Tp., San Diego County; U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v., App.	222	P.2d	292
Kauffman v. Bobo & Wood, App.	221	P.2d	750
Kelley v. State Bd. of Social Welfare, App.	222	P.2d	925
Kerrigan v. Maloof, App.	221	P.2d	153
Key System; Overacker v., App.	221	P.2d	754
Key System Transit Lines; Fowler v., App.	222	P.2d	287
Key System Transit Lines v. Superior Court of State, in and for Alameda County, Sup.	222	P.2d	867
King v. Superior Court in and for San Mateo County, App.	221	P.2d	120
Klimper v. City of Glendale, App.	222	P.2d	49
Knapp's Estate, In re, App.	222	P.2d	61
Knight; Graddon v., App.	222	P.2d	329
Knudsen Creamery Co. v. Brock, App.	221	P.2d	306
Kold Kist, Inc. v. Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butchers Workmen of North America, Local No. 421, App.	221	P.2d	724
Kostal v. Pullen, App.	221	P.2d	200
Kovacs v. Mutual Broadcasting System, App.	221	P.2d	108
Kramer; Cracolice v., App.	221	P.2d	237
Kramer v. Superior Court of State, in and for Los Angeles County, Sup.	222	P.2d	874
Kuchel v. Newton, Sup.	221	P.2d	952
La Miller v. St. Claire Packing Co., App.	222	P.2d	75
Laurent v. City and County of San Francisco, App.	222	P.2d	274

	Vol.		Page
Le Blanc; People v., App.	221	P.2d	236
Levin, People ex rel., v. Santa Clara County, App.	222	P.2d	88
Liera v. Los Angeles Finance Co., App.	221	P.2d	737
Lipkin; Sketchley v., App.	222	P.2d	927
Loew's Inc.; Mayers v., Sup.	221	P.2d	26
London v. Morrison, App.	222	P.2d	941
Long Beach Pleasure Pier Co.; Davidson v., App.	221	P.2d	1005
Los Angeles County; Cedars of Lebanon Hospital v., Sup.	221	P.2d	31
Los Angeles County; Pasadena Hospital Ass'n v., Sup.	221	P.2d	62
Los Angeles County; Serra Retreat v., Sup.	221	P.2d	59
Los Angeles County; Young Men's Christian Ass'n of Los Angeles v., Sup.	221	P.2d	47
Los Angeles Finance Co.; Liera v., App.	221	P.2d	737
Los Angeles Transit Lines; McWilliams v., App.	222	P.2d	953
Los Angeles Transit Lines; Saphire v., App.	222	P.2d	956
Lundin v. Shumate's Pharmacy, App.	221	P.2d	260
McClurken; San Diego County v., App.	222	P.2d	688
McGee, In re, App.	222	P.2d	66
McGee; Markwort v., App.	222	P.2d	66
McGuffin v. Maurer, App.	222	P.2d	486
McLain, Ex parte, App.	221	P.2d	323
McLain v. Superior Court in and for Sacramento County, App.	221	P.2d	300
Macmillan Petroleum Corp. v. Griffin, App.	222	P.2d	69
McWilliams v. Los Angeles Transit Lines, App.	222	P.2d	953
Maganini v. Quinn, App.	221	P.2d	241
Majors v. Butler, App.	221	P.2d	994
Maloof; Kerrigan v., App.	221	P.2d	153
Maranville v. State Bd. of Equalization, App.	222	P.2d	898
Mariposa County; Stockton Morris Plan Co. v., App.	221	P.2d	232
Markwort v. McGee, App.	222	P.2d	66
Martens v. Central Bank, App.	221	P.2d	193
Martinez v. Martinez, App.	221	P.2d	986
Maurer; McGuffin v., App.	222	P.2d	486
Maxwell v. Brougher, App.	222	P.2d	910
Mayers v. Loew's Inc., Sup.	221	P.2d	26
Maynard v. Bullis, App.	222	P.2d	685
Meadows v. Emett & Chandler, App.	222	P.2d	145
Meek; Stock v., Sup.	221	P.2d	15
Meherin v. Meherin, App.	222	P.2d	305
Merritt v. Quinn, App.	221	P.2d	241
Mesner's Estate, In re, App.	221	P.2d	740
M. H. Golden Const. Co. v. Superior Court of State, in and for Imperial County, App.	221	P.2d	218
Michigan Millers Mut. Fire Ins. Co.; Gillies v., App.	221	P.2d	272
Milligan; Nielsen v., App.	222	P.2d	916
Mitchell, Ex parte, Sup.	221	P.2d	689
Moeller v. De Rose, App.	222	P.2d	107
Morganti v. Morganti, App.	222	P.2d	78
Morrison; London v., App.	222	P.2d	941
Murphy v. San Gabriel Mfg. Co., App.	222	P.2d	85
Murray; Ruinello v., App.	221	P.2d	184
Mutual Ben. Health & Acc. Ass'n; Hobson v., App.	221	P.2d	761
Mutual Broadcasting System; Kovacs v., App.	221	P.2d	108
National Cas. Co.; Ellis v., App.	221	P.2d	127
National Union of Marine Cooks & Stewards; Harris v., App.	221	P.2d	136
Nebel v. Guyer, App.	221	P.2d	337
Nelson v. Berggren, App.	222	P.2d	465

	Vol.		Page
Neustadt v. Skernswell, App.	221	P.2d	694
New Hotel U. S. Grant; Jewell v., App.	221	P.2d	170
Newman; Tossman v., App.	222	P.2d	945
Newton; Kuchel v., Sup.	221	P.2d	952
Newton's Estate, In re, Sup.	221	P.2d	952
Nielsen v. Milligan, App.	222	P.2d	916
Niemann v. Deverich, App.	221	P.2d	178
Norris; People v., App.	222	P.2d	283
Nuland v. Pruyn, App.	222	P.2d	261
O'Connor; Jordan v., App.	222	P.2d	322
Oliverio; People v., App.	222	P.2d	245
One 1941 Chevrolet Coupe; People v., App.	222	P.2d	473
Oppenheimer v. Arnold, App.	222	P.2d	940
Oreb; Hughes v., App.	221	P.2d	327
O'Rourke; Duhart v., App.	221	P.2d	767
Overacker v. Key System, App.	221	P.2d	754
Owens v. Haslett, App.	221	P.2d	252
Pacific Coast Lumber Co. of Cal.; Potter v., App.	222	P.2d	54
Page, Ex parte, App.	221	P.2d	167
Pasadena Hospital Ass'n v. Los Angeles County, Sup.	221	P.2d	62
Pascale; People v., App.	221	P.2d	177
Pearson; Shook v., App.	221	P.2d	757
Pellin; Rosenkranz v., App.	222	P.2d	249
People v. Boyce, App.	221	P.2d	1011
People v. Chapman, App.	221	P.2d	980
People v. Colletta, App.	222	P.2d	922
People v. Collins, App.	222	P.2d	686
People v. Cullen, App.	221	P.2d	1016
People v. Cunningham, App.	221	P.2d	283
People v. Dixon, App.	221	P.2d	198
People; Edwards v., App.	221	P.2d	336
People v. Ellis, App.	221	P.2d	258
People v. Emery, App.	221	P.2d	223
People v. Estes, App.	222	P.2d	454
People v. Fields, App.	221	P.2d	190
People v. Gutierrez, Sup.	221	P.2d	22
People v. Hayden, App.	221	P.2d	221
People v. Howes, App.	222	P.2d	969
People v. Jahn, App.	221	P.2d	333
People v. James, App.	222	P.2d	117
People v. Johnson, App.	222	P.2d	58
People v. Johnson, App.	222	P.2d	335
People v. Le Blanc, App.	221	P.2d	236
People v. Norris, App.	222	P.2d	283
People v. Oliverio, App.	222	P.2d	245
People v. One 1941 Chevrolet Coupe, App.	222	P.2d	473
People v. Pascale, App.	221	P.2d	177
People v. Porter, App.	222	P.2d	151
People v. Powell, App.	221	P.2d	117
People v. Ross, App.	221	P.2d	280
People v. Rumley, App.	222	P.2d	913
People v. Shevette, App.	221	P.2d	227
People v. Smith, App.	221	P.2d	140
People v. Stembridge, App.	221	P.2d	212
People v. Stones, App.	221	P.2d	202
People v. Terry, App.	222	P.2d	95
People v. Vinson, App.	221	P.2d	161
People v. Walker, App.	221	P.2d	287

	Vol.		Page
People v. Wescott, App.	222	P.2d	256
People v. Whelpton, App.	222	P.2d	935
People v. Whisner, App.	222	P.2d	900
People v. Wissenfeld, App.	222	P.2d	47
People v. Young, Sup.	221	P.2d	13
People ex rel. Levin v. Santa Clara County, App.	222	P.2d	88
People ex rel. Smith v. City of San Jose, App.	222	P.2d	947
Petrovich v. City of Arcadia, Sup.	222	P.2d	231
Podeszwa v. White, App.	222	P.2d	683
Porter; People v., App.	222	P.2d	151
Potter; Bland v., App.	221	P.2d	714
Potter v. Pacific Coast Lumber Co. of Cal., App.	222	P.2d	54
Powell v. Berg, two cases, App.	221	P.2d	743
Powell; People v., App.	221	P.2d	117
Puchta v. Rothman, App.	221	P.2d	744
Puertas; Hennessey v., App.	221	P.2d	321
Pullen; Kostal v., App.	221	P.2d	200
Premium Products Co.; Schwartz v., App.	221	P.2d	334
Proctor & Schwartz v. Superior Court in and for San Mateo County, App.	221	P.2d	972
Pruyn; Nuland v., App.	222	P.2d	261
Queen City Iron & Metal Co.; Butcher v., App.	221	P.2d	265
Quinn; Maganini v., App.	221	P.2d	241
Quinn; Merritt v., App.	221	P.2d	241
Ramelow v. Smilie, App.	222	P.2d	692
Rediker v. Rediker, Sup.	221	P.2d	1
Reilly; Stoumen v., App.	222	P.2d	678
Reites v. Wilkerson, App.	222	P.2d	81
Reizian's Estate, In re, App.	221	P.2d	332
Ringo v. Johnson, App.	221	P.2d	267
Ritter; Combs v., App.	222	P.2d	252
Riverside Iron & Steel Corp.; Foley v., App.	221	P.2d	998
R. K. O. Pictures; Golding v., Sup.	221	P.2d	95
Rose; Christiana v., App.	222	P.2d	891
Rosenkranz v. Pellin, App.	222	P.2d	249
Ross; People v., App.	221	P.2d	280
Rothman; Puchta v., App.	221	P.2d	744
Rowley; Steiner v., Sup.	221	P.2d	9
Ruinello v. Murray, App.	221	P.2d	184
Rumley; People v., App.	222	P.2d	913
St. Claire Packing Co.; La Miller v., App.	222	P.2d	75
San Diego, City of, v. Alpha Securities Corp., App.	221	P.2d	770
San Diego County; Fredericka Home for the Aged v., Sup.	221	P.2d	68
San Diego County v. McClurken, App.	222	P.2d	688
San Fernando Valley Chamber of Commerce; Hardy v., App.	222	P.2d	314
San Francisco Ball Club; Brown v., App.	222	P.2d	19
San Francisco, City and County of v. San Mateo County, Sup.	222	P.2d	860
San Gabriel Mfg. Co.; Murphy v., App.	222	P.2d	85
San Mateo County; City and County of San Francisco v., Sup.	222	P.2d	860
Santa Clara County; People ex rel. Levin v., App.	222	P.2d	88
Saphire v. Los Angeles Transit Lines, App.	222	P.2d	956
Sawyer; Yeoman v., App.	221	P.2d	225
Schmidt v. Sears, App.	221	P.2d	171
Schwartz v. Premium Products Co., App.	221	P.2d	334
Searles v. Searles, App.	222	P.2d	938
Sears; Schmidt v., App.	221	P.2d	171
Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles; Helvey v., App.	221	P.2d	257
Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles; Taylor v., App.	222	P.2d	91
Seidel v. Waring, Sup.	222	P.2d	669

	Vol.		Page
Serra Retreat v. Los Angeles County, Sup.	221	P.2d	59
Sheehan; Ebner v., App.	222	P.2d	888
Shevette; People v., App.	221	P.2d	227
Shields; Imperial-Yuma Production Credit Ass'n v., App.	222	P.2d	148
Shipman; Hendershott v., App.	221	P.2d	982
Shook v. Pearson, App.	221	P.2d	757
Shumate's Pharmacy; Lundin v., App.	221	P.2d	260
Sime; Travers v., App.	222	P.2d	333
Simons v. Edouarde, App.	221	P.2d	203
Simpson v. Hite, Sup.	222	P.2d	225
Sindell v. Smutz, App.	222	P.2d	903
Singer v. Cradick, App.	221	P.2d	740
Sipe v. Hollingsworth & Co., App.	221	P.2d	991
Skernswell; Neustadt v., App.	221	P.2d	694
Sketchley v. Lipkin, two cases, App.	222	P.2d	927
Smilie; Ramelow v., App.	222	P.2d	692
Smilie's Estate, In re, App.	222	P.2d	692
Smith; People v., App.	221	P.2d	140
Smith; Sorel v., App.	221	P.2d	115
Smith, People ex rel. v. City of San Jose, App.	222	P.2d	947
Smutz; Sindell v., App.	222	P.2d	903
Snidow v. Hill, App.	222	P.2d	958
Snidow; Hill v., App.	222	P.2d	962
Snyder; Brotemarkle v., App.	221	P.2d	992
Snyder; Johnson v., App.	221	P.2d	164
Sorel v. Smith, App.	221	P.2d	115
Spolter v. Four-Wheel Brake Service Co., App.	222	P.2d	307
Stafford v. Groff, App.	221	P.2d	246
Standing's Estate, In re, App.	222	P.2d	465
Stanley v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Sup.	221	P.2d	73
State v. Brotherhood of R. R. Trainmen, App.	222	P.2d	27
State; Clark v., App.	222	P.2d	300
State; Godley v., App.	222	P.2d	61
State Bar; Turner v., Sup.	222	P.2d	857
State Bd. of Equalization; Maranville v., App.	222	P.2d	898
State Bd. of Social Welfare; Kelley v., App.	222	P.2d	925
State Dept. of Motor Vehicles; Escobedo v., Sup.	222	P.2d	1
Steiner v. Rowley, Sup.	221	P.2d	9
Stembridge; People v., App.	221	P.2d	212
Sterling Drug v. Benatar, App.	221	P.2d	965
Stock v. Meek, Sup.	221	P.2d	15
Stockton, City of, v. West Coast Theatres, Inc., of Northern Cal., Sup.	222	P.2d	886
Stockton Dry Goods Co. v. Girsh, App.	221	P.2d	186
Stockton Morris Plan Co. v. Mariposa County, two cases, App	221	P.2d	232
Stone v. Yellow Cab Co. of Cal., App.	221	P.2d	131
Stones; People v., App.	221	P.2d	202
Stoumen v. Reilly, App.	222	P.2d	678
Striegel; Hoover v., App.	222	P.2d	963
Sugarman; Golceff v., Sup.	222	P.2d	665
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Desert Club v., App.	221	P.2d	766
Superior Court of State, in and for Imperial County; M. H. Golden Const. Co. v., App.	221	P.2d	218
Superior Court of State, in and for Los Angeles County; Kramer v., Sup.	222	P.2d	874
Superior Court in and for Sacramento County; McLain v., App.	221	P.2d	300
Superior Court in and for San Diego County; Bennett v., App.	222	P.2d	276
Superior Court in and for San Mateo County; King v., App.	221	P.2d	120

	Vol.		Page
Superior Court in and for San Mateo County; Proctor & Schwartz v., App.	221	P.2d	972
Superior Court of Los Angeles County; Donovan v., App.	222	P.2d	469
Superior Court of State, in and for Alameda County; Key System Transit Lines v., Sup.	222	P.2d	867
Superior Court of State, in and for San Diego County; El Centro Properties v., App.	221	P.2d	218
Superior Optical Co.; Coen v., App.	221	P.2d	183
Taylor v. Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles, App.	222	P.2d	91
Terry; People v., App.	222	P.2d	95
Thorsby v. Babcock, Sup.	222	P.2d	863
Tossman v. Newman, App.	222	P.2d	945
Towers; White v., App.	222	P.2d	920
Travers v. Sime, App.	222	P.2d	333
Turnbull; First Nat. Bank of Fair Oaks v., App.	222	P.2d	494
Turner v. State Bar, Sup.	222	P.2d	857
Tyree v. Epstein, App.	221	P.2d	1002
U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Justice Court of Vista Tp., San Diego County, App.	222	P.2d	292
Universal Flyers Ground School; Arrow Flying Service v., App.	221	P.2d	231
Universal Intern. Pictures; Jackson v., Sup.	222	P.2d	433
Unruh; Beck v., App.	222	P.2d	242
Veach; Girard v., App.	221	P.2d	741
Vinson; People v., App.	221	P.2d	161
Walker v. Calloway, App.	222	P.2d	455
Walker; People v., App.	221	P.2d	287
Walker Scott Corp.; Blodgett v., App.	221	P.2d	325
Walters' Estate, In re, App.	222	P.2d	100
Waring; Seidel v., Sup.	222	P.2d	669
Warner Bros. Broadcasting Corp.; Borden & Barton Enterprises v., App.	222	P.2d	463
Wells, Ex parte, Sup.	221	P.2d	947
Wescott; People v., App.	222	P.2d	256
West v. House, App.	222	P.2d	269
West Coast Theatres of Northern Cal.; City of Stockton v., Sup.	222	P.2d	886
Westwood Temple v. Emanuel Center, App.	221	P.2d	146
Wetmore v. Brig Lumber Mills Co., App.	221	P.2d	963
Whelpton; People v., App.	222	P.2d	935
Whisner; People v., App.	222	P.2d	900
White; Daly v., App.	222	P.2d	950
White; Podeszwa v., App.	222	P.2d	683
White v. Towers, App.	222	P.2d	920
Wilkerson; Reites v., App.	222	P.2d	81
Williams v. Gurwitz, App.	222	P.2d	673
Williams; Hancock v., App.	221	P.2d	129
Williams' Estate, In re, App.	221	P.2d	714
Winder's Estate, In re, App.	221	P.2d	193
Winkler; Finley v., Super.	222	P.2d	345
Wissenfeld; People v., App.	222	P.2d	47
Women's Athletic Club of San Francisco v. Anglo Cal. Nat. Bank of San Francisco, App.	222	P.2d	675
Woodcock v. Dick, Sup.	222	P.2d	667
Woods v. Eastridge, App.	222	P.2d	296
Yellow Cab Co. of Cal.; Stone v., App.	221	P.2d	131
Yeoman v. Sawyer, App.	221	P.2d	225
Young v. Hampton, App.	221	P.2d	195
Young; People v., Sup.	221	P.2d	13
Young Men's Christian Ass'n of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles County, Sup.	221	P.2d	47
Zahloute; Epstein v., App.	222	P.2d	318

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

221 PACIFIC REPORTER

SECOND SERIES

35 Cal.2d 796

REDIKER v. REDIKER et al.
L. A. 20704.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.
Aug. 18, 1950.

Action by Alice Gordillo Rediker against Abraham Sanford Rediker and others for separate maintenance, naming Josefina Valle, also known as Josefina Valle Rediker, as co-respondent, wherein named defendant filed a cross-complaint for annulment of marriage. The Superior Court for Los Angeles County, William J. Palmer, J., entered a judgment annulling the marriage as bigamous and awarding plaintiff $15,000 as putative spouse and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that divorce decree obtained by named defendant's first wife after his marriage to plaintiff was not as to plaintiff res judicata of existence of first marriage until entry of decree, that decree of divorce from first wife obtained by named defendant in Cuba was entitled to full faith and credit and that named defendant was estopped from denying the validity thereof.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

Prior opinion, 212 P.2d 612.

1. Appeal and error ⇐122, 805

Award of $15,000 to plaintiff as putative spouse for her share of community property was based on decree annulling marriage as bigamous and was inseparable therefrom and appeal therefore had to be taken from the entire judgment and could not be abandoned as to the award.

2. Divorce ⇐172

While a divorce decree as between parties or privies is res judicata not only of their status with relation to each other but also of all issues that were litigated or could have been litigated therein, as to strangers to the action or a stranger and a party thereto, the decree is res judicata only to the extent that it adjudicates the future status of the parties in relation to each other.

3. Divorce ⇐172

A divorce decree is not res judicata of the previous validity of the marriage as against third persons who were not parties to the action and had no right to be heard therein.

4. Constitutional law ⇐315

A decision purporting to bind by the findings of fact in an earlier action, even though it was a proceeding in rem, a person who was not a party thereto and who had no notice or right to a hearing in such action would deprive such person of property without due process of law in violation of Fourteenth Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

5. Divorce ⇐326, 327

Cuban court had jurisdiction of suit for divorce by husband domiciled in Cuba and where divorce decree recited that court had jurisdiction and there was no evidence that absent spouse was not constructively served with process or that decree was obtained through fraud or collusion, divorce decree must be given the same effect by California courts as final judgments rendered in that state or in the courts of a sister state which are entitled to full faith and credit under Constitution of the United States. Code Civ.Proc. § 1915; U.S.C.A. Const. art. 4, § 1.

6. Divorce ⇐78

Where suit for divorce is brought in state of domicile of complainant, personal service on absent spouse is not a jurisdictional requirement and constructive service on such spouse gives court jurisdiction of the cause and the parties.

7. Divorce ⇐327

It must be presumed, in absence of competent evidence to the contrary, that a foreign court had jurisdiction of suit for divorce brought in the state of domicile of complainant and that recital of jurisdiction in divorce decree is true.

8. Divorce ⇐81

Failure of complainant domiciled in Cuba to appear personally in suit for divorce in Cuba did not deprive Cuban court of jurisdiction to entertain the action, even though entry of decree under such circumstances may have been error.

9. Judgment ⇐501

A judgment entered in a court having jurisdiction of the action is not subject to collateral attack on ground of error in the exercise of such jurisdiction.

10. Divorce ⇐330

Husband, having instituted suit for divorce in Cuba and remarried in reliance on divorce decree, was estopped from denying its validity in suit by second wife for separate maintenance, even though he had merely employed an attorney to obtain divorce and did not appear personally in Cuban action.

11. Divorce ⇐168

The validity of a divorce decree cannot be contested by a party who has procured the decree or has remarried in reliance thereon or by one who has aided another to procure the decree so that the latter will be free to remarry.

12. Marriage ⇐40(1)

A strong presumption exists as to the validity of a marriage in absence of positive evidence to the contrary.

13. Marriage ⇐58(5)

Where marriage was contracted in reliance on divorce obtained by husband from previous wife, public policy required preservation of second marriage rather than its annulment on ground of invalidity of divorce decree, particularly where first wife had already obtained another divorce decree.

William Ellis Lady, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hahn, Ross, Goldstone & Saunders and Philip Gordon, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

[1] Plaintiff appeals from a judgment annulling as bigamous her marriage to defendant and awarding her $15,000 as a putative spouse for her share of the community property and as compensation for her services to defendant during the purported marriage. She seeks to abandon her appeal from the award of $15,000, but that award is based on the decree of annulment and is inseparable therefrom. The appeal must therefore be taken from the entire judgment. Milo v. Prior, 210 Cal. 569, 571, 292 P. 647; Bailey v. Bailey, 60 Cal.App.2d 291, 293, 140 P.2d 693.

Defendant and Bessie Yalkut were married in New York in 1922. The following year they moved to Havana, Cuba, where defendant entered the manufacturing business and registered with the American consul as a Cuban resident. They lived together in Havana until 1930 when Bessie and their minor daughter returned to the United States. Defendant remained in Havana, and on January 27, 1939, in the Court of First Instance of the Southern District of Havana, he obtained a default divorce decree from Bessie. Bessie was awarded custody of their daughter. On November 28, 1939, defendant married plaintiff and lived with her as her husband until January 26, 1945, when he left plaintiff and came to Los Angeles. She followed him and discovered that he had married Josefina Valle, a former employee in his Havana factory.

Defendant was charged with bigamy because he married Miss Valle while still married to plaintiff. He was convicted of the charge but was granted probation upon payment of a $2,500 fine.

Plaintiff brought this action in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County for separate maintenance on the grounds of adultery and extreme cruelty. Defendant was personally served in the action and cross-complained for an annulment of their marriage on the ground that at the time of their purported marriage plaintiff was still the wife of one Reinhold Graf. The trial court found that plaintiff was divorced from Graf six years before her marriage to defendant. The court also found, however, that at the time of her marriage to defendant he was still the husband of Bessie Yalkut Rediker and that the marriage of plaintiff and defendant was therefore bigamous and void. It found defendant's Cuban decree invalid for want of jurisdiction in that "said Bessie Rediker was never served with process in any such proceedings or purported proceedings, if any were had, and no trial or hearing was had in connection with any such proceedings or purported proceedings for the purpose of divorcing defendant from Bessie Rediker," and that defendant was lawfully married to Bessie Rediker until she obtained a divorce decree on August 28, 1944 in the Circuit Court of Dade County, Florida.

Defendant introduced the Florida decree over plaintiff's objection for the purpose of establishing that he and Bessie were lawfully married until the entry of the decree dissolved their marriage. The trial court, holding that the decree was conclusive of that fact stated: "Now, the Constitution of the United States specifically places upon this Court the duty to give full faith and credit to that judgment of the Court of the State of Florida. * * * Consequently I am not in a position to ignore it. I have to accept it and as I pointed out in my notice of decision that judgment carried the absolutely necessary implication that up to the time that it was rendered Abraham and Bessie were married and that at the time Abraham married Alicia he was married to Bessie. * * * You say that you were not a party to the divorce action. That is not a fully correct statement because we are all parties to every divorce action because a divorce action is an action in rem and that divorce action was presented in this Court for the purpose of proving not any of the issues that were involved in the case but simply for the purpose of proving itself, namely, that she was given a decree of divorce as of a certain date and in my judgment it was very properly admissible in this case."

The trial court concluded that in "proving itself" the Florida decree proved the "absolutely necessary implication" that defendant and Bessie were married until the date it was entered and that it was res judicata on that issue. It therefore found that the marriage of defendant and plaintiff was bigamous and granted the prayer of the cross-complaint for an annulment.

On this appeal plaintiff contends that the Florida decree is res judicata in this action only insofar as it adjudicated the parties' lack of marital relationship to each other from then on, that the trial court's finding that the Cuban divorce is invalid is not supported by the evidence, and that defendant, having initiated the Cuban action and having taken advantage of the decree therein by remarrying, is estopped to deny its validity.

Defendant contends that an existing valid marriage is a condition precedent to the entry of a divorce decree under Florida law, Keener v. Keener, 152 Fla. 13, 11 So.2d 180, and that the entry of the decree imports a finding that defendant and Bessie were lawfully married at the time of its entry, five years after the purported marriage of defendant to plaintiff. He urges that, since a divorce decree is a judgment in rem, the essential finding that the parties thereto were lawfully married is res judicata in this action, and that, since the Florida court had jurisdiction to enter the decree and plaintiff does not contend that it was procured by fraud or collusion, this court must accord full faith and credit to the decree and to the finding of a lawful marriage necessarily implied therein. U.S.Const. Art. IV, § 1; Williams v. State of North Carolina, 317 U.S. 287, 299, 63 S.Ct. 207, 87 L.Ed. 279, 143 A.L.R. 1273; Estin v. Estin, 334 U.S. 541, 546–547, 68 S.Ct. 1213, 92 L.Ed. 1561, 1 A.L.R.2d 1412. He alleges that "a judgment in a divorce case must be treated as dealing with status prior to divorce as well as after, and the one independently of the other," and that the res in a divorce action "is not only the subsequent singleness of the parties, but also their prior marital status—a determination which is 'immune from collateral attack'."

[2, 3] That contention, however, is opposed to the prevailing rule in most of the jurisdictions of the United States and to several decisions of this court. It is an oversimplification to state that a divorce proceeding is a proceeding in rem, and to proceed from that statement to the assumption that a decree entered therein is res judicata in an action between a party and a stranger thereto, not only as to the subsequent status of the parties with relation to each other, but also as to all issues decided or that might have been decided in the proceeding. The weight of authority holds that a decree of divorce is a judgment in rem only to the extent that it adjudicates the future status of the parties in relation to each other. Williams v. North Carolina, 317 U.S. 287, 298, 63 S.Ct. 207, 87 L.Ed. 279, 143 A.L.R. 1273; Williams v. North Carolina, 325 U.S. 226, 232, 65 S.Ct. 1092, 89 L.Ed. 1557, 157 A.L.R. 1366. As between parties or privies, the decree is res judicata not only of their status with relation to each other but also of all issues that were litigated or that could have been litigated therein. Blumenthal v. Blumenthal, 97 Cal.App. 558, 561, 275 P. 987; Petry v. Petry, 47 Cal.App.2d 594, 595, 118 P.2d 498; Borg v. Borg, 25 Cal.App.2d 25, 29, 76 P.2d 218; 2 Freeman, Judgments, § 906, p. 1904. Estate of Lee, 200 Cal. 310, 314, 253 P. 145, on which defendant relies, has been properly interpreted in Blumenthal v. Blumenthal, supra, as stating the rule applicable between parties and their privies. As between strangers or strangers and parties, however, the decree is res judicata only in that it conclusively determines that the parties are thereafter free to remarry so far as any relation to each other is concerned. It does not establish the previous validity of their marriage against third persons who were not and had no right to be heard thereon. 2 Freeman, Judgments, § 910, p. 1913; 3 Freeman, Judgments, § 1524, pp. 3131-3132; Restatement, Judgments, § 74, p. 335; Hunter v. Hunter, 111 Cal. 261, 266, 43 P. 756, 31 L. R.A. 411, 52 Am.St.Rep. 180; Estate of James, 99 Cal. 374, 379, 33 P. 1122, 37 Am. St.Rep. 60. "We may lay on one side, then, any argument based on the misleading expression that all the world are parties to a proceeding in rem. This does not mean that all the world are entitled to be heard; and, as strangers in interest are not entitled to be heard, there is no reason why they should be bound by the findings of fact, although bound to admit the title or status which the judgment establishes." Holmes, J., in Brigham v. Fayerweather, 140 Mass. 411, 413, 5 N.E. 265, 267; see also, Wilson v. Mitchell, 48 Colo. 454, 469, 111 P. 21, 30 L.R.A.,N.S., 507; Oborn v. State, 143 Wis. 249, 267, 126 N.W. 737, 31 L.R.A.,N.S., 966; Williams v. Williams, 63 Wis. 58, 75, 23 N.W. 110, 53 Am.Rep. 253; Pollard v. Ward, 289 Mo. 275, 284, 233 S.W. 14, 20 A.L.R. 936; American Woolen Co. v. Lesher, 267 Ill. 11, 17–18, 107 N.E. 882; Willey v. Howell, 168 Ky. 466, 470, 182 S.W. 619; Matter of Holmes' Estate, 291 N.Y. 261, 269–270, 271, 52 N. E.2d 424, 150 A.L.R. 447; 44 Col.L.Rev. 442, 444–445; 16 Cal.L.Rev. 146.

The decisions of this court have established that a divorce decree is res judicata as to strangers thereto only to the extent that it establishes the future status of the parties. Thus, in Hunter v. Hunter, 111 Cal. 261, 43 P. 756, 31 L.R.A. 411, 52 Am. St.Rep. 180, plaintiff, suing to annul as bigamous his marriage to the defendant, introduced a decree of divorce obtained by her from her first husband twenty-five years after she married plaintiff. He asserted that the entry of the decree dissolving that marriage was res judicata of its existence until it was dissolved by the entry of the divorce decree. This court, however, held that as between a party to the divorce action and a stranger thereto the decree was a judgment in rem only in that it adjudicated the future status of the parties. "So far, and no farther, the judgment bound him and all the world." 111 Cal. 261, 266, 43 P. 756, 757.

In Estate of James, 99 Cal. 374, 379, 33 P. 1122, 37 Am.St.Rep. 60, and Estate of McNeil, 155 Cal. 333, 343–344, 100 P. 1086, identical questions were presented. In each case, a first wife challenged the right of decedent's second wife to succeed to his estate. In each case the first wife contended that decedent's second marriage was bigamous for the reason that his divorce from his first wife was invalid. In support of that contention, each first wife offered in evidence a separate maintenance decree obtained by her after the decedent obtained the allegedly invalid divorce, contending that the separate maintenance decree was res judicata of the continued existence of the first marriage. In both cases, the court held that the later decree did not, as between a party thereto and a stranger, reinstate the first marriage notwithstanding the intervention of a previous decree.

This court has also held that an order admitting a will to probate, although a judgment in rem to that extent, was not res judicata of the essential finding that decedent was a California domiciliary, except as between the parties to the probate proceeding. Estate of Bloom, 213 Cal. 575, 578–579, 2 P.2d 753; see also, Estate of Newman, 124 Cal. 688, 692, 57 P. 686, 45 L.R.A. 780; Riley v. New York Trust Co., 315 U.S. 343, 352–353, 62 S.Ct. 608, 86 L. Ed. 885. Although several decisions have held that the findings in a divorce action are res judicata as between the parties thereto, they have disclaimed any intention to apply the doctrine to persons not parties to the divorce action. Estate of Hughes, 80 Cal.App.2d 550, 556, 182 P.2d 253; Godfrey v. Godfrey, 30 Cal.App.2d 370, 380, 86 P.2d 357; Borg v. Borg, 25 Cal. App.2d 25, 29, 76 P.2d 218.

Uncertainty as to the validity of migratory divorces created by the recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court, Williams v. State of North Carolina, 317 U.S. 287, 299, 63 S.Ct. 207, 87 L.Ed. 279, 143 A.L.R. 1273; Williams v. State of North Carolina, 325 U.S. 226, 65 S.Ct. 1092, 89 L.Ed. 1577, 157 A.L.R. 1366; Rice v. Rice, 336 U.S. 674, 69 S.Ct. 751, 93 L.Ed. 957, has induced many spouses, doubtful of the validity of such a divorce and wishing to insure the validity of a remarriage, to seek a second divorce in the state of their present domicile. See Powell, And Repent at Leisure, 58 Harv.L.Rev. 930, 1004. The possibility that a trial court in a later proceeding may find that the moving spouse was not domiciled in the state in which the decree was entered may induce many spouses to secure a second decree rather than to rely on the first, to avoid the risk that later litigation will prove such reliance misplaced. Williams v. State of North Carolina, 325 U.S. 226, 232, 65 S.Ct. 1092, 89 L.Ed. 1577, 157 A.L. R. 1366; Rice v. Rice, 336 U.S. 674, 69 S. Ct. 751, 93 L.Ed. 957; Crouch v. Crouch, 28 Cal.2d 343, 169 P.2d 897; see Powell, supra.

[4] The rights of an innocent second spouse or the children of a second marriage are not diminished by the findings of fact in a proceeding to which they were not parties and in which they had no right to be heard. Such a holding would be not only unreasonable but constitutionally objectionable. A decision of any court purporting to bind by the findings of fact of an earlier action a person who was not a party thereto and who had no notice or right to a hearing in that action deprives that person of property without due process of law and is prohibited by the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution. Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306, 70 S.Ct. 652, 656; Hansberry v. Lee, 311 U.S. 32, 40-41, 61 S.Ct. 115, 85 L.Ed. 22, 132 A.L.R. 741; Gratiot County State Bank v. Johnson, 249 U.S. 246, 248-249, 39 S.Ct. 263, 63 L.Ed. 587. A state court cannot dispense with the requirement of notice and hearing by labelling the proceeding "in rem" if it seeks to make the findings of fact binding upon a stranger to the earlier action. A state court may no more make its findings of fact binding on a person over whom it has no jurisdiction than it may bind him by a judgment in personam when he has not been personally served. Hansberry v. Lee, supra; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714, 729, 24 L.Ed. 565.

[5] Apart from the Florida decree, there is no evidence to support the finding that "the marriage between said Bessie Rediker and defendant was not dissolved prior to August 28, 1944 or at all by or as a result of any proceedings conducted" in the Cuban divorce action. The trial court did not find that defendant was not a bona fide Cuban domiciliary; defendant admits that he was. The Cuban court therefore had jurisdiction to enter the decree and, since its procurement was not the result of fraud or collusion, the decree must be given "the same effect as final judgments rendered in this state" or in the court of a sister state to which this court must give full faith and credit. Code of Civil Procedure § 1915; Williams v. State of North Carolina, 317 U.S. 287, 299, 63 S.Ct. 207, 87 L.Ed. 279, 143 A.L.R. 1273; Sherrer v. Sherrer, 334 U.S. 343, 68 S.Ct. 1087, 92 L.Ed. 1429, 1 A.L.R.2d 1355; Coe v. Coe, 334 U.S. 378, 68 S.Ct. 1094, 92 L.Ed. 1451, 1 A.L.R.2d 1376; Baldwin v. Baldwin, 28 Cal.2d 406, 410-411, 170 P.2d 670.

[6, 7] The trial court found the Cuban divorce decree invalid for want of jurisdiction in that "said Bessie Rediker was never served with process in any such proceedings." It is undisputed that Bessie was not personally served in the Cuban action, but personal service on an absent spouse is not a jurisdictional requirement, if the action is brought in the state of domicile of the complainant. Williams v. State of North Carolina, supra; Baldwin v. Baldwin, supra; Crouch v. Crouch, 28 Cal.2d 343, 169 P.2d 897; Saul v. Saul, 74 App.D.C. 287, 122 F.2d 64, 69. Constructive service on the absent spouse gives the court of the state of domicile jurisdiction of the cause and the parties, and the record is devoid of any evidence that Bessie was not constructively served in the Cuban action. The only evidence before the trial judge on that issue was the recital of jurisdiction in the Cuban decree. In the absence of competent contrary evidence, it must be presumed that the foreign court had jurisdiction and that its recital thereof is true. De Young v. De Young, 27 Cal.2d 521, 525, 165 P.2d 457; Saul v. Saul, 74 App.D.C. 287, 122 F.2d 64, 69.

[8, 9] Defendant testified by deposition that he did not appear in the Cuban action but that he gave an attorney seventy-five dollars and requested him to procure a divorce, and that he knew nothing further about the matter until his attorney informed him that the divorce was granted. Entry of the decree upon the failure of the complainant to appear personally in the Cuban action may have been error, but his failure to appear did not deprive the Cuban court of jurisdiction to entertain the action. If a court has jurisdiction of an action, a judgment entered therein is not subject to collateral attack on a showing of error in the exercise of that jurisdiction. "Something more than mere error must be shown, in attack upon a foreign judgment, to deprive it of force and effectiveness." Rutledge, J., in Saul v. Saul, 74 App.D.C. 287, 122 F.2d 64, 68; Baldwin v. Baldwin, 28 Cal.2d 406, 410-411, 170 P.2d 670.

[10, 11] Even if the Cuban decree were invalid, defendant cannot contest its validity. The validity of a divorce decree cannot be contested by a party who has procured the decree or a party who has remarried in reliance thereon, or by one who has aided another to procure the decree so that the latter will be free to remarry. Brugiere v. Brugiere, 172 Cal. 199, 203-204, 155 P. 988, Ann.Cas. 1917E, 122; Kelsey v. Miller, 203 Cal. 61, 86, 263 P. 200; Harlan v. Harlan, 70 Cal.App.2d 657, 662, 161 P.2d 490; Estate of Davis, 38 Cal.App. 2d 579, 584-585, 101 P.2d 761, 102 P.2d 545; Hensgen v. Silberman, 87 Cal.App.2d 668, 674, 197 P.2d 356; In re Kyle, 77 Cal.App. 2d 634, 639-640, 176 P.2d 96; Goodloe v. Hawk, 72 App.D.C. 287, 113 F.2d 753, 756, 757; Saul v. Saul, 74 App.D.C. 287, 122 F.2d 64, 70; Margulies v. Margulies, 109 N.J.Eq. 391, 392, 157 A. 676; Van Slyke v. Van Slyke, 186 Mich. 324, 330, 152 N.W. 921; Bowen v. Fink, D.C., 34 F.Supp. 235; Krause v. Krause, 282 N.Y. 355, 360, 26 N. E.2d 290; Brown v. Brown, 242 App.Div. 33, 272 N.Y.S. 877, affirmed 266 N.Y. 532, 195 N.E. 186; Chapman v. Chapman, 224 Mass. 427, 433, 113 N.E. 359, L.R.A. 1916F, 528; Matter of Lindgren's Estate, 293 N.Y. 18, 22-23, 55 N.E.2d 849, 153 A.L.R. 936; Marvin v. Foster, 61 Minn. 154, 160, 63 N.W. 484, 52 Am.St.Rep. 586; Mohler v. Shank's

Estate, 93 Iowa 273, 282, 61 N.W. 981, 34 L.R.A. 161, 57 Am.St.Rep. 274; Rest., Conflict of Laws, § 112, pp. 169-170; Goodrich, Conflict of Laws, 3d Ed., 1949, § 127, pp. 401-402. Thus, in a suit for separate maintenance in which the husband asserted as a defense an earlier Nevada divorce secured by him, this court held that the plaintiff wife was estopped from contesting the validity of the decree by virtue of her remarriage in reliance upon it. Brugiere v. Brugiere, 172 Cal. 199, 203-204, 155 P. 988, Ann.Cas. 1917E, 122. By the same reasoning, it has been held that a wife who consented to a Mexican "mail order divorce" and remarried in reliance upon it was estopped from questioning its validity in an action to determine whether she or her ex-husband's second wife was entitled to his estate. Hensgen v. Silberman, 87 Cal. App.2d 668, 674, 197 P.2d 356; see also Estate of Davis, 38 Cal.App.2d 579, 584-585, 101 P.2d 761, 102 P.2d 545. The doctrine of estoppel has also been held applicable to cases in which a husband sought to assert the invalidity of his or his wife's earlier divorce from another as a defense to her action for divorce and alimony. Margulies v. Margulies, 109 N.J.Eq. 391, 392, 157 A. 676; Van Slyke v. Van Slyke, 186 Mich. 324, 330, 152 N.W. 921.

In Harlan v. Harlan, 70 Cal.App.2d 657, 161 P.2d 490, plaintiff sued his wife for an annulment of their marriage as bigamous, alleging that she secured a Mexican divorce from her first husband but that the divorce was invalid for want of jurisdiction in the Mexican court. The trial court granted an annulment on the finding that the Mexican decree was invalid. The judgment was reversed on appeal. The appellate court held that notwithstanding that the defendant's Mexican decree was invalid, plaintiff was estopped from asserting its invalidity because he had aided and counselled the defendant in procuring it so that she might marry him. "To hold otherwise protects neither the welfare nor morals of society but, on the contrary, such holding is a flagrant invitation to others to attempt tc circumvent the law, cohabit in unlawful state, and when tired of such situation, apply to the courts for a release from the indicia of the marriage status." Harlan v. Harlan, 70 Cal.App.2d 657, 663–664, 161 P.2d 490, 494.

The New York Court of Appeals, in a case similar to the present one, reached the same conclusion as the court in the Harlan case. As a defense to his wife's suit for separate maintenance, the defendant contended that their marriage was bigamous on the ground that he had secured a Nevada divorce from his first wife but that the Nevada court lacked jurisdiction to enter the decree. Although the court regarded the Nevada decree as invalid, it refused to annul the marriage because the defendant, having procured the decree, was estopped from questioning its validity. "We cannot lose sight of the fact that the present defendant was himself the party who had obtained the decree of divorce which he now asserts to be invalid and repudiates in order that he may now disown any legal obligation to support the plaintiff, whom he purported to marry. To refuse to permit this defendant to escape his obligation to support plaintiff does not mean that the courts of this State recognize as valid a judgment of divorce which necessarily is assumed to be invalid in the case at bar, but only that it is not open to defendant in these proceedings to avoid the responsibility which he voluntarily incurred." Krause v. Krause, 282 N.Y. 355, 359–360, 26 N.E. 2d 290, 292; Matter of Lindgren's Estate, 293 N.Y. 18, 22, 55 N.E.2d 849, 153 A.L.R. 936; Guilmain v. Guilmain, Sup., 58 N.Y.S. 2d 662, 666; Picciano v. Picciano, Sup., 65 N.Y.S.2d 410, 411; Goodloe v. Hawk, 72 App.D.C. 287, 113 F.2d 753, 756; Saul v. Saul, 74 App.D.C. 287, 122 F.2d 64, 70; Bowen v. Finke, D.C., 34 F.Supp. 235; Chapman v. Chapman, 224 Mass. 427, 433, 113 N.E. 359, L.R.A.1916F, 528; Mohler v. Shank's Estate, 93 Iowa 273, 282, 61 N.W. 981, 34 L.R.A. 161, 57 Am.St.Rep. 274.

By the same reasoning, it is clear that defendant has estopped himself by his conduct from contesting the suit of his wife for separate maintenance on the ground that they are not lawfully married. He was the moving party in the Cuban action; he accepted the benefits of the decree therein by remarrying; and he now seeks to assert its invalidity to avoid his obligations to the plaintiff by virtue of that marriage. "One who has invoked the exercise of a jurisdiction within the general powers of the court cannot seek to reverse its orders upon the ground of lack of jurisdiction." Harlan v. Harlan, 70 Cal.App.2d 657, 662, 161 P.2d 490. Defendant seeks to avoid estoppel in this case by reliance on his testimony that he went to a lawyer to get a divorce, that he did not know anything further about the action until he was informed that the divorce had been granted, and that he did not appear in the divorce proceedings. He contends that he was not the moving party in the action so as to be estopped by his conduct therein. This contention overlooks the facts that he initiated the proceedings, paid for the attorney's services in connection therewith, did not disclaim the divorce when informed that it was granted, and took advantage of the decree by marrying the plaintiff ten months later.

[12] Defendant contends, however, that the public policy of the state requires the annulment of bigamous marriages whenever their bigamous character is discovered. We find no basis for such a sweeping application of public policy. There is a strong presumption that the second marriage is valid in the absence of positive evidence to the contrary. Wilcox v. Wilcox, 171 Cal. 770, 774, 155 P. 95; Estate of Pusey, 173 Cal. 141, 143, 159 P. 433; Hamburgh v. Hys, 22 Cal.App.2d 508, 509, 71 P.2d 301; Immel v. Dowd, 6 Cal.App.2d 145, 147, 44 P.2d 373. Defendant does not indicate how any public purpose is served by the annulment of his marriage. The rights of his first wife are not affected thereby; she has already secured a divorce from him in Florida and will not be injured by defendant's remaining married to plaintiff. Moreover, the state has already recognized the validity of defendant's marriage to plaintiff by its prosecution of defendant for bigamy because of his marriage to Miss Valle in 1945. His prosecution could be maintained only on the ground that his 1939 marriage to plaintiff was valid.

[13] "It can no longer be said that public policy requires non-recognition of all irregular foreign divorces. We have recognized that the interest of the state in many situations may lie with recognition of such divorces and preservation of remarriages rather than a dubious attempt to resurrect the original. From a pragmatic viewpoint, judicial invalidation of irregular foreign divorces and attendant remarriages, years after both events, is a less than ineffective sanction against an institution whose charm lies in its immediate respectability. We think it may now be stated that the general public policy in this jurisdiction, as judicially interpreted, no longer prevents application in annulment actions of the laches and estoppel doctrines in determining the effect to be given such divorce decrees." Vinson, J., in Goodloe v. Hawk, 72 App.D.C. 287, 113 F.2d 753, 757; Harlan v. Harlan, 70 Cal.App.2d 657, 663–664, 161 P.2d 490; Krause v. Krause, 282 N.Y. 355, 360, 26 N.E.2d 290. We conclude that the public policy of this state requires the preservation of the second marriage and the protection of the rights of the second spouse "rather than a dubious attempt to resurrect the original" marriage.

Since the application of the doctrine of estoppel presupposes the entry of a final decree, cases involving remarriage after the entry of only an interlocutory decree, Sullivan v. Sullivan, 219 Cal. 734, 736, 28 P.2d 914; Estate of Elliott, 165 Cal. 339, 132 P. 439, or with the first marriage unaffected by any decree, Anderson v. Anderson, 7 Cal.2d 265, 60 P.2d 290; Brandt v. Brandt, 32 Cal.App.2d 99, 89 P.2d 171, are not in point.

The trial court erred in entering a judgment of annulment on defendant's cross-complaint. The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial on the issues of plaintiff's complaint.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, CARTER, SCHAUER, and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

35 Cal.2d 713

STEINER et ux. v. ROWLEY.

L. A. 21075.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.

Aug. 11, 1950.

Louis Steiner and Louise J. Steiner, husband and wife, sued Thomas James Rowley to recover a broker's commission paid to defendant. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, William B. McKesson, J., entered judgment upon an order sustaining defendant's demurrers to the complaint, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court, Edmonds, J., held that a count alleging that broker was employed by plaintiffs as their agent in the purchase of certain realty, and that broker received a secret profit in consideration of services rendered, sufficiently stated a cause of action to recover secret profits from broker, even though brokerage contract was oral.

Judgment reversed with directions.

Prior opinion 214 P.2d 424.

1. Brokers ⇐82(1)

In action to recover amount of a broker's commission, complaint was unambiguous, certain and intelligible.

2. Pleading ⇐214(1)

A general demurrer admits material allegations of pleading to which it is directed.

3. Principal and agent ⇐69(2)

An agent who received a secret profit must pay it over to principal.

4. Brokers ⇐37

A complaint alleging that broker was employed by plaintiffs for purchase of realty, and that broker received a secret profit in consideration of his services, stated a cause of action to recover secret profits from broker, even though employment contract was oral. Civ.Code, § 1624.

5. Brokers ⇐37

Upon a general allegation of money had and received, a principal may recover a secret profit withheld by a broker upon theory of general assumpsit or common count for money had and received.

6. Brokers ⇐37

Where plaintiffs alleged that their broker received a secret profit and refused to turn same over to them, a common count for money had and received stated a cause of action for recovery of money.

7. Escrows ⇐8(1)

Principals to an escrow are charged with knowledge of its contents.

8. Brokers ⇐37

A complaint alleging that a broker employed by plaintiffs received a secret profit out of an escrow agreement pursuant to instructions given by grantors of property purchased by plaintiffs, stated cause of action for recovery of secret profits.

9. Pleading ⇐53(1)

A complaint may plead inconsistent causes of action, even though it be verified, if there are no contradictory or antagonistic facts.

10. Pleading ⇐54

Averments of one count cannot be amplified by allegations of another separately stated cause of action in same pleading, unless latter are included by special reference or otherwise in portions of complaint under attack.

11. Pleading ⇐53(1)

Unless alternate pleadings contain antagonistic statements, statement of facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in one count is not a bar to maintenance of a separately stated count in same pleading based upon inconsistent allegations.

12. Pleading ⇐18

It is not necessary to plead with same exactness as required at common law. Code Civ. Proc., §§ 452, 475.

13. Brokers ⇐37

A complaint alleging that principal suffered actual damage in amount of broker's commission plus alleged secret profits sufficiently pleaded that principal sustained damages in a specific amount.

14. Election of remedies ⇐7(1)

Whenever a party entitled to enforce two remedies either institutes an action upon one of such remedies or performs any act in pursuit of such remedy, whereby he has gained an advantage over other party, he will be held to have made an election of such remedy, and will not be entitled to pursue any other remedy for enforcement of his rights.

15. Election of remedies ⇐3(1)

An action for tort in which exemplary damages are sought is inconsistent with one for money had and received, and therefore plaintiffs are required to make a timely election of remedies. Civ. Code, § 3294.

16. Election of remedies ⇐3(1)
Pleading ⇐369(1, 5)

Pleading two causes of action in the alternative does not constitute an election of remedies because inconsistent counts are permissible, and an election cannot be forced by demurrer.

17. Election of remedies ⇐7(1)
Estoppel ⇐68(6)

Where plaintiffs had one count for money had and received, on ground that broker had received a secret profit out of transaction with plaintiffs, and plaintiffs had obtained a writ of attachment against broker, plaintiff's action was in pursuit of a contractual remedy, and therefore plaintiffs were estopped to allege a cause of action in tort for exemplary damages.

Charles C. Montgomery, Jr., Burbank, for appellants.

Harold A. Fendler and Robert W. Lerner, Beverly Hills, for respondent.

EDMONDS, Justice.

Thomas J. Rowley, a real estate broker, represented Louis Steiner and his wife in connection with their purchase of certain real estate. He is now being sued by them to recover the amount of his commission, an alleged secret profit and exemplary damages. The appeal is from a judgment entered upon an order sustaining Rowley's demurrers to the complaint.

The pleading is in four counts. In the first one, the Steiners allege that Rowley was employed by them as such broker under an oral contract and he owes them $2,000 because it was paid to him for their use and benefit. More specifically, it is said, Ingwold Andersen and George Shubert paid him that amount "as a side payment and secret profit * * * in consideration of receiving from [him] * * * a favorable recommendation for the purchase of certain property * * *." This payment, the pleading asserts, was obtained by Rowley in violation of his duty to deal with plaintiffs honestly and fairly as their real estate broker.

The second count is for money had and received. Rowley is indebted to the Steiners for $2,000 paid to him by Andersen and Shubert, it is alleged, and despite demand by the plaintiffs, that amount remains wholly due, owing and unpaid.

The third count alleges that, in addition to $400 which the Steiners paid Rowley for his services, he received a secret profit of $2,000 out of a certain escrow pursuant to instructions given by Andersen and Shubert, the grantees of the property purchased by the Steiners. The instructions as to such payment, the Steiners plead, were not assented to nor known by them.

In the last count, the plaintiffs assert that because Rowley obtained the $2,000 by fraud, oppression and malice, express or implied, they are entitled to exemplary damages.

Rowley generally demurred to each of the four counts, and also pleaded that they are uncertain, ambiguous and unintelligible. There was also a special demurrer upon the ground of failure separately to state a cause of action for contract and one for tort. The court did not expressly distinguish between the general and special demurrers in its minute order, which reads: "[d]emurrer as to fourth cause of action is sustained without leave to amend. Demurrer as to first, second and third causes of action is sustained; plaintiffs are given twenty days to amend." The Steiners declined to plead further and the judgment of dismissal followed.

[1] The use of the singular rather than plural in the minute order referring to the "demurrer" to each cause of action, and the arguments of the parties upon appeal, show that it was the general demurrer as to each count which was sustained. In any event, it does not appear that any of the counts is ambiguous, uncertain or unintelligible, or that there was any failure separately to state causes of action in contract and tort in any one of them.

The right of the Steiners to recover against Rowley on count one of their complaint depends upon the applicability of section 1624 of the Civil Code to the transaction which is the basis of the controversy. That statute reads: "An agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or a commission * * *" is invalid unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, is in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged or by his agent. The first count states, the Steiners contend, a cause of action for the recovery of secret profits made by a fiduciary. The purpose of section 1624 of the Civil Code, they say, is only to prevent a broker from recovering a commission for services performed under an oral contract. As Rowley received his commission and the contract was fully executed, the form of the agreement is immaterial. Finally, they assert that there is a fiduciary relationship between the broker and his employer under either an oral or written contract, and a contrary rule would allow the statute of frauds to be used as a cloak for fraud. Rowley declares that because of the allegation of an oral contract between the parties, count one fails to state a cause of action.

[2, 3] A general demurrer admits the material allegations of the pleading to which it is directed. Hevren v. Reed, 126 Cal. 219, 58 P. 536; Glide v. Dwyer, 83 Cal. 477, 23 P. 706. An agent who receives a secret profit must pay it over to the principal. Blandy v. Bowden, 217 Cal. 61, 16 P.2d 993; Butler v. Solano Land Co., 203 Cal. 231, 263 P. 530; Thompson v. Stoakes, 46 Cal.App.2d 285, 115 P.2d 830; Whiting v. Delozier, 82 Cal.App. 525, 255 P. 861. Count one of the Steiners' complaint therefore states a cause of action unless the fact that Rowley was employed under an oral contract bars a recovery against him.

[4] Section 1624 of the Civil Code is applicable to the collection by the agent or broker of his "* * * compensation or a commission * * *" and the enforcement by the principal of the broker's agreement, Marks v. Walter G. McCarty Corp., 33 Cal.2d 814, 205 P.2d 1025; Le Blond v. Wolfe, 83 Cal.App.2d 282, 188 P.2d 278; see 12 Cal.L.Rev. 328; 5 S.C.L.R. 233, but it has nothing to do with the cause of action pleaded by the Steiners. They are not attempting to "enforce" a contract made by Rowley. The commission has been paid and the contract for Rowley's services fully executed. The cause of action is one to recover from a fiduciary his commission and secret profits, and the general demurrer to it should have been overruled.

[5, 6] As to count two, the Steiners insist that neither a general nor a special demurrer will lie against a common count. Rowley relies upon the rule that a common count may not be maintained as the alternative for specifically pleaded facts which do not in themselves state a cause of action. Orloff v. Metropolitan Trust Co., 17 Cal. 2d 484, 489, 110 P.2d 396; Hays v. Temple, 23 Cal.App.2d 690, 695, 73 P.2d 1248. However, count one states a cause of action, and upon a general allegation of money had and received, a principal may recover a secret profit upon the theory of general assumpsit or the common count for money had and received. Minor v. Baldridge, 123 Cal. 187, 55 P. 783. The general demurrer as to count two, therefore, should have been overruled.

[7] The Steiners defend the sufficiency of count three notwithstanding the specific allegation that the claimed secret commission received by Rowley came to him through an escrow to which they were parties. Although the buyers concede that the principals to an escrow are charged with knowledge of its contents, they say that the rule does not make them cognizant of a broker's fraud "even though that fraud may appear incidentally or inferentially in the papers in the escrow".

Notice of the contents of the escrow agreement is imputed through the escrow holder to the parties. Ryder v. Young, 9 Cal.App.2d 545, 50 P.2d 495; Smith v. Brown, 1 Cal.App.2d 492, 495, 36 P.2d 1081; see Early v. Owens, 109 Cal.App.

489, 494, 293 P. 136. The escrow instructions provided for payment of $2,000 to Rowley, and the Steiners are charged with notice that he would be paid that amount. However, knowledge that such payment would be made does not include notice that the consideration for it was the broker's inducement of his principal to purchase the land. The escrow documents disclosed no illegal purpose for the payment. Rowley might have been entitled to it as reimbursement to him for advances which he had made for the vendor, or in connection with a transaction entirely unrelated to that of the Steiners.

[8, 9] The third count, therefore, states a cause of action. But even if the facts pleaded in this count show knowledge of the secret purpose of the payment, the first count would not fall because of those allegations. Concededly, all of the counts are based upon the same transaction. A complaint may plead inconsistent causes of action, Goldwater v. Oltman, 210 Cal. 408, 292 P. 624, 71 A.L.R. 871; Beatty v. Pacific States Savings & Loan Co., 4 Cal. App.2d 692, 41 P.2d 378; Hocker v. Glover, 113 Cal.App. 152, 298 P. 72; American-La France Fire Engine Co. of California v. Bagge, 98 Cal.App. 291, 276 P. 1066, although it be verified if there are no contradictory or antagonistic facts. Beatty v. Pacific States Savings & Loan Co., supra. Here the allegations in the first count to the effect that the profit was secret at most would be inconsistent with, but not antagonistic to, those of the third count in regard to the payments out of escrow. Upon trial, evidence offered in support of the first count may tend to prove the invalidity of the escrow contract, ambiguity in its terms, or mistake in connection with its execution. If, for any reason, this agreement is invalid, then the Steiners are not by imputation bound through knowledge of its provisions.

[10, 11] In the parallel field of aider by reference, the averments of one count cannot be amplified by the allegations of another separately stated cause of action in the same pleading unless the latter are included by special reference or otherwise in the portion of the complaint under attack. Lord v. Garland, 27 Cal.2d 840, 168 P.2d 5. Similarly, unless the alternate pleadings contain antagonistic statements, the statement of facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in one count is not a bar to the maintenance of a separately stated count in the same pleading based upon inconsistent allegations.

Rowley attacks count four upon the ground that, under section 3294 of the Civil Code, exemplary damages are recoverable only in a tort action and, by obtaining a writ of attachment, the Steiners elected to sue in contract. It is further argued that the count is defective because exemplary damages may be allowed only upon the allegation of actual damages, Mother Cobb's Chicken Turnovers, Inc., v. Fox, 10 Cal. 2d 203, 205, 73 P.2d 1185; Clark v. McClurg, 215 Cal. 279, 282, 9 P.2d 505, 81 A.L.R. 908 and the Steiners' pleading does not meet this requirement.

[12] But it is not necessary in this state to plead with the exactitude required at common law. Section 452 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "In the construction of a pleading, for the purpose of determining its effect, its allegations must be liberally construed, with a view to substantial justice between the parties." Section 475 of the Code of Civil Procedure declares that "The court must, in every stage of an action, disregard any error * * * or defect, in the pleadings or proceedings which, in the opinion of said court, does not affect the substantial rights of the parties." Many decisions apply this rule. Continental Mtg. Co. v. Eyraud, 208 Cal. 566, 283 P. 65; Mix v. Yoakum, 200 Cal. 681, 254 P. 557; Hayter v. Fulmor, 66 Cal.App.2d 554, 152 P.2d 746; Brooks v. City of Monterey, 106 Cal.App. 649, 290 P. 540; Snyder v. City Bond & Finance Co., 106 Cal.App. 745, 289 P. 859; Roberts v. Griffith Co., 100 Cal.App. 456, 280 P. 199.

[13] In this action, the complaint as a whole clearly shows that any actual damages suffered were in the amount of the agent's commission plus the alleged secret profits. Under the circumstances the fourth count sufficiently pleads that the Steiners sustained damages in a specific amount. Risco v. Reuss, 45 Cal.App.2d 243, 113 P.2d 914.

[14] Concerning the effect of the writ of attachment obtained by the Steiners, the doctrine of election of remedies is based upon the principle of estoppel. "Whenever a party entitled to enforce two remedies either institutes an action upon one of such remedies or performs any act in pursuit of such remedy, whereby he has gained any advantage over the other party, * * he will be held to have made an election of such remedy, and will not be entitled to pursue any other remedy for the enforcement of his right." De Laval Pac. Co. v. United C. & D. Co., 65 Cal. App. 584, 586, 224 P. 766, 767. The doctrine is well established. Ravizza v. Budd & Queen, Inc., 19 Cal.2d 289, 293, 120 P.2d 865; Holt Manufacturing Co. v. Ewing, 109 Cal. 353, 356, 42 P. 435; Parke & Lacy Co. v. White River L. Co., 101 Cal. 37, 41, 35 P. 442; Smith v. Miller, 5 Cal.App.2d 564, 570, 43 P.2d 347.

[15-17] An action for tort in which exemplary damages are sought is inconsistent with one for money had and received. Civ. Code, sec. 3294. The Steiners were therefore required to make a timely election of remedies. Pleading the two causes of action in the alternative did not constitute an election because inconsistent counts are permissible, Haigler v. Donnelly, 18 Cal. 2d 674, 680, 117 P.2d 331; Goldwater v. Oltman, 210 Cal. 408, 292 P. 624, 71 A.L.R. 871; Beatty v. Pacific States Savings & Loan Co., 4 Cal.App.2d 692, 41 P.2d 378 and an election cannot be forced by demurrer. Wilkerson v. Seib, 20 Cal.2d 556, 563, 127 P.2d 904. But the Steiners also obtained an attachment. This was a positive act of a plaintiff "in pursuit of * * * [the contractual remedy] * * * whereby he has gained * * * advantage over the other party * * *." De Laval Pac. Co. v. United C. & D. Co., 65 Cal.App. 584, 586, 224 P. 766, 767. The Steiners were thereafter estopped to allege a cause of action in tort, and the demurrer as to the fourth count was properly sustained.

The judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrers to the first, second, and third counts and allow the defendant to answer.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CARTER, TRAYNOR, SCHAUER, and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

35 Cal.2d 819

PEOPLE v. YOUNG.

Cr. 5095.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

Aug. 18, 1950.

Lillian Young was convicted in the Superior Court for Los Angeles County, Thomas L. Ambrose, J., of receiving stolen property and from order denying a new trial, she appealed and the People of the State of California moved to dismiss the appeal. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that notice of appeal filed on the same day that motion for new trial was denied was timely, though more than ten days had elapsed since the granting of probation, and that motion for new trial made before judgment was timely, though made after the granting of probation.

Motion to dismiss denied.

Prior opinion, 214 P.2d 391.

1. Criminal law ⇐1081

Notice of appeal from order denying a new trial after conviction of receiving stolen property filed on the same day that motion was denied was filed within the time prescribed by law, though more than ten days had elapsed since making of order granting probation. Rules on Appeal, rule 31; Pen. Code, § 496.

2. Criminal law ⇐1081

The normal time for filing notice of appeal is ten days after the making of the order sought to be reviewed, but in the case of orders denying a new trial, the time is extended until ten days after the granting of probation or the rendition of judgment, whichever shall occur sooner. Rules on Appeal, rule 31.

3. Criminal law ⇐951(2)

Motion for new trial made before judgment was timely, though made after the granting of probation. Pen. Code, § 1182.

4. Criminal law ⇐946

The right to move for a new trial is not deemed waived upon the granting of probation. Pen. Code, § 1182.

Walter L. Gordon, Jr., Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, and Dan Kaufmann, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

The People seek dismissal of this appeal from an order denying a new trial on the ground that the notice of appeal was too late because it was filed more than ten days after the granting of probation, and on the further ground that the motion for a new trial was not timely.

Defendant was granted probation on April 26, 1949, after having been found guilty of receiving stolen property in violation of section 496 of the Penal Code. On July 1 she filed a notice of motion for a new trial. The motion was subsequently ordered off calendar but was renewed on July 29 and was denied August 2. On the same day that the motion was denied, defendant filed her notice of appeal.

[1] Rule 31 of the Rules on Appeal, relating to criminal cases, provides that an appeal may be taken by filing a notice of appeal "within 10 days after the rendition of the judgment or the making of the order, except that an appeal from an order denying a new trial shall not be taken until after the granting of probation or the rendition of judgment. Notice of appeal from an order denying a new trial shall be filed within 10 days after the making of an order granting probation or the rendition of judgment, whichever shall occur sooner." Notwithstanding the fact that the notice of appeal herein was filed at the earliest possible time, i.e., on the same day that the new trial was denied, the People contend that the notice was too late because it was not filed "within 10 days after the making of an order granting probation." We cannot agree with this construction of the rule.

[2] The normal time for filing notice of appeal is ten days after the making of the order sought to be reviewed, but in the case of orders denying a new trial the time is extended until ten days after the granting of probation or the rendition of judgment, whichever shall occur sooner. This intent on the part of the framers of the rule is clearly shown by the Draftsman's article which states the purpose of the rule. See Witkin, New Rules on Appeal; 17 So.Cal. L.Rev. 79, 271. In criminal procedure, a motion for new trial is made before judgment, and frequently it is made in connection with an application for probation. If a defendant were compelled to give notice of appeal within ten days after denial of his motion, he would often be forced to give it before determination of his application for probation, with the result that an unnecessary record would be prepared in cases where probation was granted and defendant elected to abandon his appeal. To avoid this wasteful action, Rule 31 provides for an extension of the time to appeal from the denial of a new trial.

Since the purpose of the rule relating to new trial orders was to give an extension of the normal period of ten days from the making of an order, it should be construed as an extension and not as a limitation on the normal period. Moreover, a contrary construction would result in a denial of the right to appeal whenever the court failed to act on the new trial motion within ten days after the granting of probation. Accordingly, the proper construction of the rule is that a defendant has ten days after the denial of a new trial in which to appeal and that this period is extended where the denial occurs prior to the granting of probation.

[3, 4] As a further ground for dismissal of the appeal the People contend that the motion for a new trial was not timely. It is argued that section 1182 of the Penal Code, which provides that an "application for a new trial must be made before judgment," should be construed along with the provisions dealing with probation and in the light of the legislative intention to have speedy determination of criminal actions, and that when so construed section 1182 must be read as providing that a motion for new trial must be made before the pronouncing of judgment or the granting of probation. The only limitation in section 1182, however, is that the application for a new trial must be made before judgment, and something must be read into the section before it can be construed as advocated by the People. See Pen. Code, § 1450, similar provision as to inferior courts. Moreover, such a construction would deprive a defendant of the right to attack the terms of probation by motion for a new trial or appeal from a denial thereof, and he would be left without adequate remedy since the probation order is not appealable. Although it has been held that the right to the pronouncement of judgment is waived where probation is requested and accepted, see In re DeVoe, 114 Cal.App. 730, 300 P. 874; People v. Noone, 132 Cal.App. 89, 22 P.2d 284, it does not follow that the right to move for a new trial should likewise be deemed waived upon the granting of probation in the absence of express statutory provision to that effect.

The motion to dismiss is denied.

SHENK, CARTER, TRAYNOR, SCHAUER, and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

35 Cal.2d 809

STOCK v. MEEK et ux.
L. A. 20921.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.
Aug. 18, 1950.

Edna Harriet Stock brought action against Glenn L. Meek and Prudence J. Meek to rescind purchase of an apartment unit in a hotel and to recover amount paid therefor, and the defendants filed a counterclaim for interest paid plaintiff on a usurious loan. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Thomas J. Cunningham, J., rendered a judgment for the defendants and an order denying motion of plaintiff for a new trial, and the plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that exclusion of testimony as to alleged misrepresentations by defendants was reversible error, but that recovery of usurious interest on counterclaim was proper.

Judgment reversed in part and affirmed in part, and appeal from order denying motion for new trial dismissed.

Prior opinion 214 P.2d 23.

1. Appeal and error ⇐110

Order denying motion for new trial was not appealable. Code Civ.Proc. § 963.

2. Appeal and error ⇐781(4)

Where vendor induced purchaser to purchase apartment unit in hotel for $9,000 by alleged misrepresentations, but purchaser later discovered alleged misrepresentations, and sued in rescission action to recover $9,000, and vendor counterclaimed for $10,000 overpaid purchaser on a usurious note, and judgment was rendered for vendor on cause of action to rescind and for vendor on counterclaim for $10,000, and vendor caused execution to be levied on apartment unit, and vendor twice acquired a portion of the apartment unit at public sales and finally disposed of it to a third party, purchaser's appeal would not be dismissed because purchaser could no longer restore to vendor all of the apartment unit.

3. Appeal and error ⇐161

Where vendor induced purchaser to purchase apartment unit in hotel for $9,000 by alleged misrepresentations, but purchaser later discovered alleged misrepresentations, and sued in rescission action to recover $9,000, and vendor counterclaimed for $10,000 overpaid purchaser on a usurious note, and judgment was rendered for vendor on cause of action to rescind and for vendor on counterclaim for $10,000, and vendor caused execution to be levied on apartment unit, purchaser did not lose her right to appeal because she had received a homestead exemption at time part of apartment unit was sold on execution. Civ.Code, §§ 1245, 1257.

4. Vendor and purchaser ⇐123

Complaint alleging that defendants, in conversations leading up to sale of apartment unit in hotel to plaintiff, had represented that a portion of the apartment unit could be used and owned exclusively by plaintiff if she purchased the unit, that plaintiff relied on such representation and purchased the unit, that thereafter she learned that building and fire regulations precluded her from obtaining exclusive occupancy of that portion of the unit, and that she gave prompt and proper notice of rescission, offering to restore to defendants everything of value received from them, stated a valid cause of action for rescission because of mutual mistake of law.

5. Evidence ⇐433(1), 434(1)

Extrinsic evidence is admissible to show fraud or mistake.

6. Evidence ⇐429, 432, 433(1), 434(1), 435

Agreements prior to or contemporaneous with an integration are admissible to prove facts rendering agreement void or voidable for illegality, fraud, duress, mistake or insufficiency of consideration.

7. Evidence ⇐433(1), 434(1)

Where an instrument is sought to be avoided for fraud or mistake in law or in fact, evidence is admissible as to what the grantor intended to do or to convey.

8. Appeal and error ⇐1056(1)

Where testimony offered by plaintiff should not have been excluded either as a variance from the pleadings or under the parol evidence rule, and such exclusion precluded plaintiff from presenting her case for recovery, error in exclusion of such testimony required reversal.

9. Usury ⇐102(1), 104

Where there was no attempt by borrower to insert secretly a usurious rate of interest in order to avoid payment of any interest or to take advantage of treble damage provisions of the Usury Law, borrower was not precluded from recovering usurious interest either on ground that borrower and lender were in pari delicto or that usury laws were waived by voluntary payment of excessive interest. Gen. Laws, Act 3757.

10. Usury ⇐89

Section of the Usury Law providing that any person who pays interest at a usurious rate may recover treble the amount paid if action is brought within one year after such payment or delivery does not abrogate any common-law rights of borrowers as parties to an illegal contract, but merely adds a statutory remedy to aid the borrower and penalize the lender. Gen.Laws, Act 3757, § 3.

11. Usury ⇐102(6)

Borrowers may bring an action for money had and received to recover usurious interest paid if suit is brought within two years. Code Civ.Proc. § 339, subd. 1.

12. Limitation of actions ⇐41

Where overpayment of interest occurred on January 12, 1946, and complaint was filed March 26, 1947, defendants were not barred by two-year limitations from setting up counterclaim to recover overpayment. Code Civ.Proc. § 339, subd. 1.

Desmond & Desmond and Walter Desmond, Jr., all of Long Beach, for appellant.

Newton M. Todd, Fred A. Watkins and James J. Baker, all of Long Beach, for respondents.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Plaintiff brought this action to rescind the purchase from defendants, husband and wife, of space in a cooperatively-owned apartment house and to recover the amount she had paid defendants therefor. Defendants counter-claimed for interest that they had paid plaintiff on a usurious loan.

Early in 1945 defendants purchased the Palace Apartment Hotel in Long Beach. They intended to sell the forty-six apartments to purchasers on an "own-your-own" plan. An escrow and trust were set up to convey title to purchasers, to pay expenses, and to distribute any profits.

Defendants consulted counsel about obtaining a permit from the Commissioner of Corporations to sell units to the public. Counsel advised that it was desirable to pay off a $20,000 second mortgage on the property before applying for the permit. Defendants raised $10,000 by selling 30% of the venture to friends. One of these investors suggested that plaintiff might furnish the remaining funds, and introduced defendant Glenn L. Meek to her. Defendant offered to give plaintiff a promissory note for $20,000, payable 365 days from date, in return for a loan of $10,000. Plaintiff wished to consult an attorney and accompanied defendant to his attorney. Plaintiff testified that she intended to buy an interest in the venture, not to lend money to defendant, and that the attorney had advised her that such a purchase would not be illegal but had disapproved of the investment as a gamble. Defendant and the intermediary who introduced the parties testified that the arrangement was always considered a loan and that the lawyer had specifically warned plaintiff that the transaction was therefore usurious. Plaintiff furnished the funds to defendants and was eventually paid $20,000 from the proceeds of the sales of apartments.

In a separate transaction, plaintiff purchased a non-residential part of the same apartment house, called "Space 101" by the parties. She paid defendant Glenn L. Meek $9,000 for the "exclusive and permanent right of occupancy," as described in the Certificate of Beneficial Ownership issued by the trustee, Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles. The record does not disclose what use plaintiff intended to make of the space. Plaintiff alleged, however, that defendant had represented to her that the space could be "used and owned exclusively" after the lobby of the building had been completed, and that she had purchased the space in reliance on this representation. Plaintiff alleged that when the work on the lobby was completed, she discovered that no one could obtain the exclusive and permanent occupancy of the space because of the building and fire regulations of the City of Long Beach. Plaintiff thereafter gave prompt notice of rescission; she seeks in this action to recover the $9,000 paid. Her complaint also included a common count for $9,000 had and received by defendants for her use and benefit.

Defendants denied the allegations of the complaint and counter-claimed for the interest or bonus paid on the note.

At the trial without a jury, the court excluded testimony by plaintiff concerning oral misrepresentations by defendant. Her counsel made the following offer of proof: "[that] a conversation took place in August, 1945 in which conversation the defendants Meeks stated and represented to the plaintiff in this action, Mrs. Stock, that that part of Space 101 described as B in Exhibit 1 could be closed off and locked and that that part, the doorway at A, in Plaintiff's Exhibit 1, could be closed off and locked, and all space in 101 could be private and no one could enter. In October, 1945, we also are able to introduce a conversation between plaintiff and defendant Meeks, a similar statement, and assurance, and on November 7, 1945 a similar conversation took place and likewise in November, 1945 a similar conversation took place and thereafter various conversations took place between the plaintiff and the Meeks to the effect that the space I have referred to could be cut off, the door placed thereon, and Space 101 will be entirely a private property and no one else will be permitted to enter. * * * that the plaintiff had confidence and trusted in the defendant, in making those statements and otherwise she would not have purchased the property and after she purchased or determined, and was advised by the Fire Department, and it was pointed out to her that she could not do so, because of the fire restrictions. * * *"

[1] The trial court gave judgment for defendants in the rescission action on the basis of the evidence before it. The trial court also held that the earlier transaction between the parties was a usurious loan. Judgment for the bonus amount, $10,000, and interest was awarded defendants on their counterclaim. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment and from an order denying the motion for new trial. The latter order is not appealable and the appeal therefrom is dismissed. Gray v. Cotton, 174 Cal. 256, 162 P. 1019; Code Civ.Proc. § 963.

Defendants have moved to dismiss the appeal from the judgment in the light of the following events occurring after entry of judgment. Plaintiff gave notice of appeal on June 23, 1948. Plaintiff did not, however, file a bond for stay of execution. Defendants levied execution on property of plaintiff, including her interest in the Palace Apartment Hotel trust representing Space 101 and Apartment 702. Before entry of judgment, plaintiff had filed and recorded a declaration of homestead as a single person upon Apartment 702. On or about August 6, 1948, defendants applied to the superior court pursuant to Civil Code, section 1245 for the appointment of appraisers to appraise plaintiff's homestead and requested that the court order the sale of Apartment 702. On September 28, 1948, the superior court ordered the sale after due notice to the judgment debtor, hearing, and appraisal. On or about October 28, 1948, both Space 101 and Apartment 702 were sold by the sheriff at public auction to the highest bidders. Space 101 was purchased by defendant Glenn Meek for $3,000, credited as a partial satisfaction of the judgment. Apartment 702 was purchased by one Watkins for $4,000, of which the sheriff paid plaintiff $3,000, her homestead exemption. On or about April 21, 1949, plaintiff transferred her power of redemption and property in Apartment 702 to Abel L. McConnell and Ila M. McConnell. On April 22, 1949, the McConnells redeemed Apartment 702 from the execution purchaser.

After the sale of Space 101 to defendant Glenn Meek on execution, the maintenance charges required of plaintiff by the trust became delinquent. The trustee sold Space 101 at public auction on June 3, 1949, under a power of sale provided by the declaration of trust. Space 101 was again purchased by defendants, who paid a cash consideration not exceeding $1,000. On June 22, 1949, defendants made a bona fide sale of Space 101 for $4,050 to a third person or persons who are now the owners of the space.

Defendants move to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the questions involved have become moot. Their claim is not, however, that the outcome of the appeal is a matter of indifference to the parties or that consideration and disposition of the case on the merits cannot affect the substantial rights of the parties. They contend that plaintiff has destroyed her cause of action for rescission by her loss of Space 101, which she had offered to restore to defendants at the time she gave notice of rescission. The cases relied on by defendants, e. g., Lupton v. Domestic Utilities Mfg. Co., 173 Cal. 415, 160 P. 241; Taylor v. Hammel, 39 Cal.App. 205, 178 P. 547, are cases where plaintiff either made no offer to restore or else made the offer after an undue lapse of time from the notice of rescission, so that no cause of action for rescission ever arose.

[2] Plaintiff complied with Civil Code, section 1691 by her offer of restoration, the bona fides of which is not questioned. Thereafter defendants twice acquired Space 101 at public sales, and finally disposed of it to a third party. In the light of these facts, the plaintiff's cause of action did not become "moot" when defendants reacquired the property. Hillman v. Gordon, 126 Wash. 614, 219 P. 46, 51; Vodicka v. Sette, Mo.Sup., 223 S.W. 578.

[3] Defendants' second ground for their motion to dismiss the appeal is based upon plaintiff's acceptance of her homestead exemption at the time Apartment 702 was sold upon execution. Defendants contend that plaintiff thus accepted benefits from the judgment. Defendants rely on Turner v. Markham, 152 Cal. 246, 92 P. 485, but the case does not support their position. In that case, the appeal was from the order subjecting the homestead to execution, and not from the judgment that was being enforced by execution. In fact, that judgment was appealed, the appeal was heard and the judgment reversed. 155 Cal. 562, 102 P. 272.

In order to benefit from the homestead, the proceeds of the sale under section 1245 of the Civil Code must be accepted by the judgment debtor within six months since they are protected from legal process for only that length of time. Civ.Code, § 1257. Thus, the exemption usually must be accepted before the appeal can be completed. It may be proper to hold, as did the Turner case, that a judgment debtor, by accepting his homestead exemption, loses the right to challenge the order subjecting the homestead to sale. It is quite another matter to deprive him of his appeal from the original judgment.

In the Turner case, the potential liability of the judgment creditor to the purchaser at the execution sale[1] after reversal of the judgment on appeal and the possibility that the exemption proceeds could not be recovered from an insolvent judgment debtor, caused the court to dismiss the appeal. Under the facts of the present case, the judgment creditor cannot be liable to the present owners of the property sold on execution, the McConnells, who have redeemed the property as successors in interest to plaintiff, the judgment debtor, since they will retain Apartment 702 regardless of the outcome of the appeal. Redemption, even by a successor in interest of the debtor, terminates the effect of the sale. Code Civ.Proc. § 703; Calkins v. Steinbach, 66 Cal. 117, 120–121, 4 P. 1103. Thus, the Turner case is distinguishable not only because of the type of judgment appealed from, but also by virtue of the factual situations of the parties.

The motion to dismiss the appeal must be denied. It is therefore proper for this court to consider the merits of the case.

The Exclusion of Evidence in the Rescission Action

[4] It is contended that the trial court erred in excluding plaintiff's testimony concerning the conversations between the parties before plaintiff purchased Space 101. Defendant objected to the evidence, on the ground that it constituted a variance from the issues raised by the pleadings. Plaintiff pleaded the common counts for money had and received. Plaintiff also pleaded, as a second cause of action, (1) that defendants had represented to her that Space 101 could be used and owned exclusively by its purchaser; (2) that plaintiff relied on this representation in buying her share of the beneficial interest in the trust; (3) that plaintiff learned thereafter that the building and fire regulations precluded any owner of Space 101 from obtaining exclusive occupancy; (4) that plaintiff gave prompt and proper notice of rescission, offering to restore to defendants everything of value received from them. This complaint states a valid cause of action for rescission because of mutual mistake of law. Hannah v. Steinman, 159 Cal. 142, 112 P. 1094; Adams v. Heinsch, 89 Cal.App.2d 300, 200 P.2d 796; Civil Code, §§ 1576, 1578. Plaintiff offered to prove the substance of these allegations, but the trial judge excluded the evidence. Even if the offered proof had constituted a variance, we cannot say that defendants were "misled * * * to [their] prejudice in maintaining [their] action or defense upon the merits." Code Civ.Proc. § 469; cf. Wennerholm v. Stanford University School of Medicine, 20 Cal.2d 713, 716, 128 P.2d 522, 141 A.L.R. 1358.

[5-8] Defendants contend also that plaintiff's testimony is an attempt to vary or modify the terms of a written agreement. The Certificate of Beneficial Ownership issued by the Security-First National Bank to plaintiff is said to embody the agreement of plaintiff and defendants in the words, "such holder [plaintiff] * * * has the exclusive and permanent right of occupancy during the continuance of said Trust, of Space No. 101." Code Civ.Proc. § 1856. Extrinsic evidence to show mistake or fraud is admissible. Section 238 of the Restatement of Contracts states the gener-

1. Code Civ.Proc. § 708 provides: "If the purchaser of real property sold on execution, or his successor in interest, be evicted therefrom in consequence of irregularities in the proceedings concerning the sale, or of the reversal or discharge of the judgment, he may recover the price paid, with interest, from the judgment creditor. * * *" al rule: "agreements prior to or contemporaneous with an integration are admissible in evidence: (b) to prove facts rendering the agreement void or voidable for illegality, fraud, duress, mistake or insufficiency of consideration." This court has approved the admission of extrinsic evidence to show a mistake of law by the grantor of a quitclaim deed, taken advantage of by the grantee. Jersey Farm Co. v. Atlanta Realty Company, 164 Cal. 412, 129 P. 593. "It is, of course, true that, where an instrument is sought to be avoided for fraud or for mistake in law or in fact, evidence is admissible as to what the grantor intended to do or to convey." 164 Cal. 412, 418, 129 P. 593, 595. Cf. Mooney v. Cyriacks, 185 Cal. 70, 195 P. 922; Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1856, 1860. Since the testimony by plaintiff should not have been excluded either as a variance or under the parol evidence rule, the trial court erred in its ruling. This error precluded plaintiff from presenting her case for recovery and requires reversal of the judgment for defendants in plaintiff's action for rescission.

Defendants' Counterclaim For Interest Paid

[9] Plaintiff does not deny that the $10,000 "bonus" for the loan of $10,000 was usurious interest under the Usury Law. Act 3757, Deering's Gen.Laws. She contends, however, that defendants were in pari delicto and cannot invoke the aid of the courts to recover the usurious bonus. Plaintiff also contends that the protection of the usury laws can be waived by the voluntary payment of excessive interest by the borrower. Neither proposition is tenable.

[10-12] The Usury Law provides that any person who pays interest at a usurious rate may recover treble the amount paid, "providing such action shall be brought within one year after such payment or delivery." Section 3. It is settled that this section did not abrogate any common law rights of borrowers as parties to an illegal contract, but merely added a statutory remedy to aid the borrower and penalize the lender. Westman v. Dye, 214 Cal. 28, 4 P.2d 134; Taylor v. Budd, 217 Cal. 262, 18 P.2d 333. Borrowers may therefore bring an action for money had and received to recover usurious interest paid within two years of the suit. Babcock v. Olhasso, 109 Cal.App. 534, 293 P. 141; Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1). Since the overpayment occurred on January 12, 1946, and the complaint was filed March 26, 1947, defendants are not barred from setting up a counterclaim to recover the interest. Jones v. Mortimer, 28 Cal.2d 627, 633, 170 P.2d 893.

Plaintiff relies principally on the dictum in Matthews v. Ormerd, 140 Cal. 578, 581, 74 P. 136, that the protection of usury laws can be waived by the voluntary payment of excessive interest by the borrower. The Matthews case and the cases it relied on, Harralson v. Barrett, 99 Cal. 607, 34 P. 342; London & S. F. Bank v. Bandmann, 120 Cal. 220, 52 P. 583, 65 Am.St.Rep. 179, are not in point. They involved a constitutional provision of limited applicability, which did not penalize the lender with treble damages and criminal sanctions as does the Usury Law, but merely invalidated mortgage provisions requiring a mortgagor to pay taxes assessed against the interest of the mortgagee. Moreover, the party seeking to recover the interest paid in the Matthews case was not the original borrower of the funds, but a third party who had purchased the mortgagor's interest.

If the dictum of the Matthews case were accepted, the protection of borrowers provided by the Usury Law would be vitiated. The theory of that law is that society benefits by the prohibition of loans at excessive interest rates, even though both parties are willing to negotiate them. Accordingly, "voluntary" payments of interest do not waive the rights of the payors. "Payments of usury are not considered voluntary, but are deemed to be made under restraint." Taylor v. Budd, 217 Cal. 262, 266, 18 P.2d 333, 334. If no loophole is provided for lenders, and all borrowers save fraudulent ones are protected, usurious transactions will be discouraged.

The cases interpreting the Usury Law have discarded the Matthews dictum. Moreover, they have refused to apply the allied doctrine urged by plaintiff that the parties are in pari delicto. An early case under the Usury Law, Douglas v. Klopper, 107 Cal.App.Supp. 765, 288 P. 36, permitted the recovery of the amount paid in excess of the legal interest charged. In Babcock v. Olhasso, 109 Cal.App. 534, 293 P. 141 (petition for hearing denied), the borrower sought both treble interest under the Law and the recovery of additional interest paid more than one year before the action. Both elements of recovery were sustained. In Westman v. Dye, 214 Cal. 28, 4 P.2d 134, the defendant was permitted to set off all interest paid against the principal obligation. The provisions of the Usury Law permitting recovery of treble interest and making usury a crime on the part of the lender indicated to the court that the borrower is not to be treated as equally culpable with the lender. "The parties to a usurious transaction are not to be regarded as in pari delicto." 214 Cal. 28, 35, 4 P.2d 134, 137. The limitation of the borrower's recovery to the amount charged in excess of the legal rate in Douglas v. Klopper, supra, 107 Cal.App.Supp. 765, 288 P. 36, was expressly overruled in Taylor v. Budd, 217 Cal. 262, 267, 18 P.2d 333, and recovery was allowed of treble the interest paid within the last year and the full amount of interest paid during the year before that. The law in California is thus settled, although the authorities in other jurisdictions do not form a consistent pattern. E. g., Plitt v. Kaufman, 1947, 188 Md. 606, 53 A.2d 673 (borrower not in pari delicto); but see, Wright v. First National Bank, 297 Mich. 315, 297 N.W. 505 (recovery denied); 55 Am.Jur. §§ 111–112.

Proper enforcement of the law of usury precludes the blanket application of the in pari delicto doctrine. One method of preventing usury is to permit the recovery of usurious interest paid. During the first year after payment, the right of borrowers to recover treble the interest paid is enforced. It would be glaringly inconsistent to deny their right to recover the actual interest paid after the passage of one year.

It has been suggested that if the borrower was a "corrupt, collusive confidant who fraudulently inserted a usurious rate of interest for the purpose of defeating an action for interest on the note," he might be estopped from urging the defense of usury. Paillet v. Vroman, 52 Cal.App. 2d 297, 306, 126 P.2d 419, 424 (petition for hearing denied). In Ryan v. Motor Credit Co., 130 N.J.Eq. 531, 23 A.2d 607, 611, (N. J.Chancery 1941) affirmed in 132 N.J.Eq. 398, 28 A.2d 181 (N.J.Err.App.1942) (8-5 decision), cited by plaintiff, the borrower had obtained nearly 500 small loans from the same lender by using the names of nominees, which were often fictitious, forged, or "selected at random from telephone directories, from tombstones or taken from the thin air." These frauds enabled the parties to circumvent the New Jersey Small Loan Act, N.J.S.A. 17:10–1 et seq. The borrower was denied "a reward of $50,000 to $63,000 for his fraud on the statute." 23 A.2d 607, 624.

Defendants were not fraudulent here; plaintiff had ample warning of the usurious nature of the loan but persisted in making it. Defendants did not attempt to recover the interest paid until sued by plaintiff in regard to another matter. There was no attempt to insert secretly a usurious rate of interest in order to avoid the payment of any interest or to take advantage of the treble damage provisions of the Usury Law. The trial court therefore did not err in permitting recovery of the interest paid.

The part of the judgment ordering that plaintiff take nothing by her action for rescission is reversed. The part of the judgment that defendants recover judgment against plaintiff upon defendants' counterclaim is affirmed. The appeal from the order denying the motion for new trial is dismissed. Each party is to bear his own costs on this appeal.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, CARTER, SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

35 Cal.2d 721

PEOPLE v. GUTIERREZ.

Cr. 5082.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.

Aug. 11, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 7, 1950.

Paul Gutierrez was convicted in the Superior Court, Fresno County, Arthur C. Shepard, J., of murder in the first degree and he appealed. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that the evidence sustained conviction on the theory that defendant killed baby girl 17 months of age in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetuate rape.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Homicide ⇐329

Where the evidence sustained conviction of first degree murder on theory that homicide was committed in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate rape, Supreme Court need not determine whether the evidence was sufficient to sustain contentions that defendant was guilty of murder in the first degree because the killing was premeditated and because it was perpetrated by means of torture. Pen. Code, § 189.

2. Homicide ⇐235

Circumstantial evidence sustained conviction of murder in the first degree on theory that defendant killed baby girl 17 months of age in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate rape, notwithstanding absence of evidence of sexual penetration, and even though death resulted from rupture of liver when defendant fell upon child after having formed an intent to rape her. Pen.Code, § 189.

3. Homicide ⇐332(2)

If the record affords substantial support for conclusion that homicide was committed in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate rape, conviction of murder in the first degree must be affirmed. Pen. Code, § 189.

4. Criminal law ⇐1159(2)

After conviction all intendments are in favor of the judgment and a verdict will not be set aside unless the record clearly shows that upon no hypothesis is there sufficient substantial evidence to support it.

Margolis & McTernan, Ben Margolis, William B. Murrish, all of Los Angeles, Lawrence Kennedy, Wm. C. Meux and John J. Gallagher, all of Fresno, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, and Walter L. Bowers, Assistant Attorney General, for respondent.

CARTER, Justice.

The defendant, Paul Gutierrez, having waived a jury, was tried by the court, found guilty of murder in the first degree and was given the death sentence. The defendant was charged with having murdered one Josephine Yanez, a human being, to which charge he pleaded not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity.

On the evening of November 19, 1949, Mr. and Mrs. Jose Yanez and their two children, one a baby of about three months and the other, Josephine, an infant of seventeen months, went to dinner at a restaurant in Huron. Some time after dinner (the testimony as to the exact time is conflicting), the couple stopped at a drugstore to call for Mrs. Yanez' sister who worked there. At approximately 11:30 that same evening these three adults and the two children arrived at a dance hall in Huron where they parked the car. It appears that Mrs. Yanez' sister went into the hall where she stayed until the dance was over, but that either Mr. or Mrs. Yanez stayed in the car with the children with the exception of two occasions. On one of these occasions the parents went into the hall and some friends stayed with the children. On the second occasion, which apparently was at about ten minutes of 1 o'clock, Mr. Yanez went to look for Mrs. Yanez who had taken the youngest child into the dance hall with her, leaving Josephine unattended in the car. When the parents came out of the hall at approximately 1 o'clock, Josephine was not in the car. She had been asleep when Yanez left her and was lying on the back seat fully dressed in diapers, shirt, dress, shoes, socks, coat and bonnet. The car was parked about 45 to 50 feet from the door of the dance hall. At about noon the next day, the father of the child reported to the constable of Coalinga Township, Fresno County, that the child was missing and that the family and their friends had searched for her. On the same day, November 20th, the constable and others engaged in the search found part of the child's clothing about 100 yards from the dance hall. The clothes found in this spot consisted of the diapers, the coat, a shoe and a man's jacket. The man's jacket was identified as that with which she had been covered. Later that day, at about 5:15 or 5:30, the body of the child was discovered about 200 yards from the dance hall. It was lying in a small irrigating furrow in a field. The child's bonnet was still attached to it by the string around its neck; under the baby were the shirt and dress, and it was wearing a shoe and sock on one foot.

Witnesses testified that approximately six to eight feet from the place where the clothing was found, there were recognizable footprints in the mud and that these footprints led out across the field. Photographs and casts made of these footprints showed the words "Bilt Rite" clearly imprinted on the mark made by the heel of the shoe. These casts and photographs were compared with shoes identified by the defendant as the ones worn by him that night and were found to be identical. About half way between the spot where the body was found and the first footprint, was a place where the mud had been disturbed. The witnesses testified that they believed that the person whose tracks they had been following had slipped and fallen there. Clearly visible in the mud were marks that had been made by cloth or heavy woven material, the imprint of three buttons and fine indentations such as would have been made by the hair on a person's arm or head. Photographs and casts were also made of these imprints and indentations and later compared and identified with the weave, markings and buttons on a jacket admittedly owned and worn by the defendant on the night in question. At the place where the body was found, more tracks and imprints were found. Mr. Nevins, deputy sheriff of the county, testified as follows: "Q. Were there any more tracks or imprints found where the body was found? A. Yes. Alongside the body and in front—I would say in front of the body. In front of the head, the way the body was lying, we found the same print that we found where the person had fallen * * *

"Q. You mean the cloth prints, Mr. Nevins? A. The cloth prints. I refer to those. We found those shortly after we arrived there the night the body was discovered, and made casts of them at that time.

"Q. Were there any depressions of any kind out where the baby's body was found? A. There was five depressions in the mud. They were—it appeared that they were round, probably five inches across, and one or two of them was three inches deep.

"Q. All right. And did you see any marks within those depressions? A. In one we made a cast of a mark as cloth marks, and there was a seam as would appear on a person's trousers that had been sewn on trousers." (The depressions just referred to were later identified as knee marks and the impressions made by the fibers in the cloth identified with that in the trousers worn by the defendant on the night of November 19th.) A witness testified that he had seen the defendant with mud on his face and the knees of his trousers.

Dr. C. D. Newel, a licensed physician and a specialist in pathology, performed the autopsy on the body of the child and testified to the condition he found. This description is far from pleasant, but in view of the arguments made by the three attorneys for the defendant, it seems advisable here to set it forth in some little detail. He testified first that the child's body was unclothed, except for the bonnet and one shoe, and that it was covered with mud; that the mouth, the nose, the trachea, larger bronchi and the lungs were filled with mud. "A. (Dr. Newel): From there, with—we noticed that there was round circular marks on the baby's body. They were on the—just above the left nipple on the chest, there appeared to be at least two or three circular marks, that we measured about one and three quarters inches in diameter. There was one over the upper abdomen on the anterior surface. There was one on the right groin. There was one, or maybe two overlapping in the region of the vulva. That is right above the vagina." The doctor stated that in his opinion these marks were "bite marks" made during the lifetime of the child and would have caused "considerable pain", and that he found the same marks on the child's mouth. In response to a question as to any further examination, he testified: "Next the examination was made of the vagina and rectum. The place where normally the vagina should be consisted of a torn, lacerated hole which would admit one finger easily for a depth of about two inches. The rectum did not appear to be torn, although it would also admit one finger readily. This hole was outside the rectum. The vagina itself was unrecognizable due to the extensive tearing." He stated that in any female child of that age, the rectum might be the same size but that the vagina would not have been, and that he thought that "something" had been inserted in the vagina of the dead child. The doctor testified that there was very little hemorrhage at this point at the time of his observation and no indication that there had been a great deal of hemorrhage. The conclusion drawn by him from this fact was that this particular injury to the child had probably occurred after her death. Further testimony by the doctor showed that there was hemorrhage in the pericardial (obviously an error on either the part of the court reporter or the doctor since the pericardium is the conical sac of serous membrane which encloses the heart. This assumption of error is based on the fact that he then uses the word "or") or abdominal cavity (peritoneal cavity is correct for abdominal cavity) caused by multiple lacerations and tearing of the liver and that he thought "this was (caused) probably through trauma; outside trauma, or great body on the body or jackknifing of the body * * *" His testimony showed that there were multiple bruises and hemorrhage into the tissues about the face and forehead and hemorrhages over the surface of the brain. He testified as follows: "So the cause of death could be one of several; there was enough hemorrhage within the brain to cause death. The mouth and nose were plugged with mud, which would cause suffocation. The lacerations and contusions about the vagina, if unattended would undoubtedly cause fatal hemorrhage * * *" He stated that in his opinion at the time the baby's face was in the mud that it was undoubtedly alive; that the hemorrhages about the head and brain occurred after death; that the rupture of the liver could have been caused "if the child had been grasped about the abdomen and in falling, undue pressure had been put on the abdomen with displacement of the liver"; that a fall or blow that caused the liver to rupture would have brought about unconsciousness; that the ruptured liver occurred before death and that he "would say that a person would live (thereafter) only a matter of 15 to 30 minutes * * *" He testified that tests had been made and that no spermatozoa had been found in the region of the vagina.

The defendant's account of his activities on the night in question as he testified to them at the trial (admittedly having lied when first questioned by the authorities) is that he and a friend, Manuel Gutierrez (who was not related to the defendant) went to the China Cafe where he consumed about eight bottles of beer, three drinks of whiskey from a bottle belonging to another friend, and after eating dinner, smoked one marijuana cigarette. These events occurred before and up to a little after 10 o'clock. He then went to the Huron dance hall, arriving there, he thinks, about 11 o'clock. He remembers asking different girls to dance and that they refused to do so. He testified that he stayed half an hour or an hour and that when he went outside he heard a baby crying. He says that he opened the car door, that the baby was lying down on the back seat, that he picked her up and spanked her a little bit and that "I couldn't remember what happened then". He later said that the baby cried about ten minutes and that he remembers walking away with her. He adhered to his lack of memory of any event after that until he woke up the next morning and maintains that he did not know what his friends were talking about when they spoke of the baby that had disappeared and that he did not know that the baby was dead until he heard of it Monday morning. He admitted that there was mud and blood on the clothing he had worn that night.

The defendant was examined by three court-appointed psychiatrists with respect to the use of marijuana in conjunction with the use of alcoholic beverages to determine whether he could have had the requisite intent to commit the crime with which he was charged, and to determine whether or not the two, either singly or together, could have caused a temporary loss of memory. These three psychiatrists, after extensive examinations of the defendant, each testified that, in his opinion, the accused could, if he chose to do so, remember and relate his actions on the night in question after he took the baby from the automobile.

The People contend that defendant is guilty of murder in the first degree because (1) the killing was premeditated; (2) it was perpetrated by means of torture (Penal Code, Sec. 189); and (3) it was committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate rape (Penal Code, Sec. 189).

[1] The third contention of the People must be sustained, and we are not, therefore, called upon to consider or pass upon the sufficiency of the evidence on the issues of premeditation or torture.

[2] While the evidence is circumstantial, it is clearly sufficient to support the inference that the child's death resulted in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate the crime of rape. The record discloses that defendant partially disrobed the child before he started to carry her off across the field. His footprints were found in the same place where the baby's diaper and coat were found and from this the inference is strong that he had then formed an intent to rape her. The instant case is, in its physical aspects, much like that of People v. Fountain, 170 Cal. 460, 150 P. 341, 342, where a ten-year old girl was found "strangled to death with a rope which was found tightly tied around her neck. Upon her body were found bruises and marks of violence, and her sexual organ was lacerated in a shocking manner by the hands of defendant. This was admitted by the defendant and a confession which he made, introduced in evidence, showed that the killing of the child was committed by him in connection with a lecherous and brutal attack which he had made upon her for the purpose of arousing and gratifying an unnatural passion." This court held that although there was no evidence in the record to show that the child had been raped, it did show that she had died because of a violent and brutal attack upon her person in an unnatural gratification of the passions of the defendant, and that her death under such circumstances warranted the jury in finding him guilty of murder of the first degree.

The medical testimony here shows that the child had been treated so brutally that it was impossible, because of lacerations, to state with certainty whether or not there had been any sexual penetration. The evidence, as just pointed out, is sufficient to show that the defendant intended to gratify his desires when he disrobed the child. This evidence, together with that showing the bruised and torn condition of the body, is ample to sustain a conclusion that the homicide, within the meaning of the statute, had been perpetrated in an attempt to commit rape. The absence of any evidence of rape in the vaginal tract does not establish that rape was not intended or attempted. People v. Brown, 22 Cal.2d 752, 141 P.2d 1; People v. Diaz, 26 Cal.2d 318, 158 P.2d 194; People v. Lindley, 26 Cal.2d 780, 161 P.2d 227.

[3, 4] Section 189 of the Penal Code provides that all murder which is committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate rape is murder of the first degree. If the record affords substantial support for the conclusion that one of the enumerated felonies was perpetrated or attempted, and the killing was committed in such perpetration, or attempt, the judgment must be affirmed. People v. Lindley, supra, and cases there cited. After conviction all intendments are in favor of the judgment and a verdict will not be set aside unless the record clearly shows that upon no hypothesis whatsoever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support it. People v. Latona, 2 Cal.2d 714, 43 P.2d 260; People v. Green, 13 Cal.2d 37, 87 P.2d 821; People v. De La Roi, 36 Cal.App.2d 287, 97 P.2d 836.

If the child died as a result of the ruptured liver sustained when defendant fell upon her, the conclusion is still inescapable that her death occurred in an attempt to perpetrate one of the felonies enumerated in the statute and it is unavailing to argue that the shocking acts performed upon her body took place after her death.

Dr. Toller, one of the court-appointed psychiatrists, testified that he was of the opinion that the effect of the beer, liquor and marijuana cigarette would have disappeared by the time the crime was committed and that the defendant would be able to form an intent at that time. He stated, too, that amnesia seldom occurs in the form in which it was alleged to have occurred in this case, that is, that the defendant would be able to remember everything up to a certain time and then have a complete "black-out" until the next morning. Dr. Adams and Dr. Briden, the other psychiatrists, testified to substantially the same effect, and stated that they, too, considered the defendant fully capable of forming an intent at all times on the night in question. They were also of the opinion that he did not suffer any loss of memory.

The defendant, through his attorneys, sought to withdraw his plea of not guilty by reason of insanity but the court refused to permit the withdrawal. The trial proceeded and upon the testimony of the three psychiatrists, based upon their examinations of the defendant, the court found him sane.

A reading of the record in this case discloses that defendant's rights and interests were fully protected by his counsel and by the court, and that he was accorded a fair trial in all respects.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, TRAYNOR, SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

MAYERS et al. v. LOEW'S Inc.

No. L. A. 21480.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.

Aug. 25, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 21, 1950.

Action by C. Mayers and others against Loew's Incorporated to recover bonus payments for work on graveyard shift allegedly due under collective bargaining agreement. The Superior Court for Los Angeles County, Leo Freund, Judge Assigned by Chairman of Judicial Council, entered a judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that refusal to consider letter executed and delivered at the same time as formal agreement and bulletins referred to in letter as part of agreement and exclusion of evidence as to negotiations of the parties and surrounding circumstances constituted reversible error in view of ambiguity of agreement and nature of such evidence.

Judgment reversed.

Prior opinion 215 P.2d 82.

1. Contracts ⇐164

Where two or more written instruments are executed contemporaneously, with reference to the other, for the purpose of attaining a preconceived object, they must all be construed together and effect given, if possible, to the purpose intended to be accomplished. Civ. Code, § 1642.

2. Master and servant ⇐3(2)

Where formal collective bargaining agreement and letter relating to the same subject matter, referring to specified bulletins, were executed and delivered at same time with express purpose of incorporating the effective dates of specified bulletins into the provisions of the formal agreement the letter and specified bulletins must be considered as part of agreement. Civ.Code, § 1642.

3. Evidence ⇐442(1)

In construing formal collective bargaining agreement consideration of letter, which was executed and delivered by union representative at the same time and provided that the effective dates of working conditions in wage agreements should be subject to specified bulletins, was not objectionable on ground that letter tended to vary, modify or contradict terms of agreement, since such terms were established by formal contract and letter construed together. Civ. Code, §§ 1642, 1647; Code Civ. Proc. § 1860.

4. Evidence ⇐450(5)

Formal collective bargaining agreement as modified by contemporaneously executed letter was ambiguous as to meaning attributable to provision for effective date of new starting time of graveyard shift in relation to provisions for payment of bonus for work on graveyard shift and retroactive payment of wage increases, and therefore evidence as to negotiations of the parties and surrounding circumstances was admissible under parol evidence rule for the purpose of determining the meaning of contractual provisions. Code Civ. Proc. § 1860; Civ. Code, § 1647.

5. Appeal and error ⇐1056(1)

Erroneous exclusion of evidence of negotiations of the parties and surrounding circumstances which would have supported a construction of collective bargaining agreement favorable to employer constituted prejudicial error.

Loeb & Loeb, Keating Coffey, all of Los Angeles, Adrian A. Kragen, San Francisco, and Herman F. Selvin, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Mohr & Borstein and Alfred J. Borstein, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Plaintiffs brought this action to recover a bonus of one-half their regular daily wage allegedly due them for the period July 1, 1941 to August 30, 1942 under the terms of a collective bargaining agreement between Local 728, International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and defendant motion picture studio. Defendant appeals from a judgment entered for plaintiffs.

Plaintiffs are members of Local 728. During the period for which compensation is sought they were employed by defendant on its night rigging crew. With minor exceptions not here material, their work shift began at nine P. M. During the fall and winter of 1941 negotiations for a new collective bargaining agreement covering all the major studios in Hollywood, including defendant, were conducted between IATSE through its international representative and the business agents of the various Hollywood locals, and the studios through Fred Pelton as Producers' Labor Administrator and Pat Casey as chairman of the Motion Picture Producers' Association. They resulted in a tentative agreement in January, 1942, providing for a general ten percent wage increase for employees in all classifications. That increase was paid by the studios during 1942. Paragraph 6 of the agreement also provided:

"6. Shifts—The Work Day shall be divided into four shifts of six hours each. First shift may start between six a. m. and eight a. m. Men called to start work two or more hours after the start of the third regular shift shall be considered as performing work on the fourth (graveyard) shift.

"The first three shifts shall be paid for at straight time; the fourth (graveyard) shift at straight time plus a bonus of ½ time."

Paragraph 53 of the agreement provided for the payment of wage increases retroactive to July 1, 1941.

The bonus specified in paragraph 6 was retroactively payable only to employees whose shifts began two or more hours after the starting time of the third shift. Since defendant's third shift began at eight P.M., plaintiffs, who came to work at nine P. M. during that period, were not "considered as performing work on the fourth (graveyard) shift," and consequently were not entitled to the bonus.

Following the circulation of the tentative agreement the parties continued negotiations for a final agreement. From time to time as modifications in the tentative agreement were agreed upon, they were announced in bulletins issued by the producers' representatives. During the negotiations the parties agreed to establish a standard starting time for the graveyard shift to replace the variable time dependent on the starting time of the third shift then provided by paragraph 6 of the tentative agreement. The new starting time was announced by a bulletin issued over Pelton's signature:

"August 24, 1942

"Notice To All Studios

"Subject: Standard Starting Time of 'Graveyard Shift.'

"Re: Wage Scales and Working Conditions for the following I.A.T.S.E. Unions.

"Q.–Local No. 80—Grips
"R.–Local No. 728—Lamp Operators
"T.–Local No. 44—Property Craftsmen
"V.–Local No. 727—Laborers
"X.–Local No. 165—Projectionists
"Y.–Local No. 695—Sound Technicians

"Effective August 30, 1942, the first paragraph of Section 6 in the above references will be replaced and superseded by the following:

"6. Shifts—The Work Day shall be divided into four shifts of six hours each. First shift may start between six a.m. and eight a.m. Men called to start work at nine p.m. or later shall be considered as performing work on the fourth (graveyard) shift

"F. E. Pelton"

Workers reporting to work at nine P. M. were thus newly classified as graveyard shift workers, and the effective date of the change was August 30, 1942. There was no reference to paragraph 53 providing that wage increases such as the graveyard shift bonus were to be paid retroactively to July 1, 1941.

The tentative agreement and the modifying bulletins were sent to the printer for the printing of the formal contract. The printed copies of the formal contract were delivered to the union in January 1943, and were signed by the business agents of the locals. They were thereupon delivered to Pelton's office for the approval and signature of the representatives of the studios. Paragraph 6 of the formal contract provided a nine P. M. starting hour for the graveyard shift but did not provide an August 30, 1942, effective date as provided in the bulletin of August 24th. Paragraph 57 of the contract contained the same provision for retroactive payment of the wage increases as paragraph 53 of the tentative agreement.

Before the agreement was signed by the studio representatives or delivered to the union, Pelton dictated the following letter for signature by the business agents of the locals, including A. J. Moran, business agent of Local 728:

"Hollywood, California
"February 1, 1943

"Mr. Pat Casey, Chairman
"Producers' Committee
"5504 Hollywood Boulevard
"Hollywood, California
"Dear Mr. Casey:

"Notwithstanding the provisions of Section 3 of the wage agreements dated February 15, 1942, between the various Motion Picture Producers whom you represent, and the undersigned, the effective dates of the 'working conditions' in such wage agreements shall be subject to the following bulletins issued by your office:

Date	Subject
May 22, 1942	Meal Periods
Aug. 24, 1942	Standard Starting Time of Graveyard Shift
Aug. 25, 1942	Golden Hours
Aug. 27, 1942	'On Call' Employees Split Week between Studio and Distant Location
Aug. 28, 1942	Distant Location Definitions and Working Conditions

"Yours very truly,
"Studio Electrical Technicians Local 728 of the I.A.T.S.E.
"By A. J. Moran"

The provisions of section 3 referred to in the letter are as follows: "3. Wage scales, hours and working conditions for Local 728 shall be set forth in the 'Wage Scales and Working Conditions' attached hereto and shall be effective as of February 15, 1942, subject to the retroactive adjustments specified in said 'Wage Sales and Working Conditions.'"

Sometime between February 5 and February 8, 1943, Moran went to Pelton's office to get his union's copies of the formal contract and received them after signing certain copies of the contract and the letter set forth above.

Plaintiffs contend that they are entitled to retroactive compensation from July 1, 1941 for work performed on the nine P. M. shift from that date under the terms of the formal contract. Defendant agrees that they are entitled to the bonus provided in paragraph 6 for all days worked after the August 30, 1942 effective date but contends that they are not entitled to the bonus for days worked beginning at nine P.M. before that date for the reason that they were not "considered as performing work on the fourth (graveyard) shift" until nine P. M. became the starting time of that shift on August 30th. In defendant's view, the formal agreement and the letter of February 1, 1943 incorporating the effective date of the August 24th bulletin therein must be read and construed together as a single integrated contract under Civil Code, section 1642.[1] It is urged that the contract and the letter construed together provide for bonus payments to employees starting work at nine P. M. or later after August 30, 1942, and that before that date the bonus payments are payable only to employees starting work two or more hours after the start of the regular third shift, in this case, at ten P. M. or later.

The trial court refused to consider the letter or the bulletin of August 24th in its interpretation of the agreement because it concluded "that said letter and the bulletin to which it referred purported to change, contradict, modify, vary and alter the provisions of the formal collective bargaining agreement above mentioned with respect to retroactive pay," and that "said letter was not a part of the formal collective bargaining agreement but was extrinsic and collateral thereto." Relying solely on paragraphs 6 and 57 of the formal contract, the trial court ordered judgment for plaintiffs for bonus payments retroactively to July 1, 1941.

[1, 2] The conclusion of the trial court that the letter and the bulletin were not part of the formal contract is clearly contrary to the undisputed evidence before it. That evidence demonstrates conclusively that the formal contract and the letter of February 1st were executed and delivered at the same time. They related to the same subject matter, wages and working conditions of IATSE members employed by the studios. They were delivered at the same time with the express purpose of incorporating the effective dates of the specified bulletins into the provisions of the formal contract. "Where two or more written instruments are executed contemporaneously, with reference to the other, for the purpose of attaining a preconceived object, they must all be construed together, and effect given, if possible, to the purpose intended to be accomplished." People v. Ganahl Lumber Co., 10 Cal.2d 501, 507, 75 P.2d 1067, 1070; Symonds v. Sherman, 219 Cal. 249, 253, 26 P.2d 293; Tuso v. Green, 194 Cal. 574, 581, 229 P. 327; Burr v. Western States Life Ins. Co., 211 Cal. 568, 575, 296 P. 273; Shattuck v. Chase, 86 Cal.App.2d 810, 813, 195 P.2d 475; Reid v. Johnson, 85 Cal.App. 2d 112, 115-116, 192 P.2d 106; Holbrook v. Fazio, 84 Cal.App.2d 700, 701, 191 P.2d 123; Body-Steffner Co. v. Flotill Products, 63 Cal.App.2d 555, 560, 147 P.2d 84; Lynch v. Bank of America, 2 Cal.App.2d 214, 223, 37 P.2d 716; Basile v. Cal. Packing Co., 9 Cir., 25 F.2d 576, 577; 1 Restatement, Contracts, § 235, pp. 319, 322–323. Since the purpose of the agreements may be ascertained only by reference to each of the documents executed to accomplish that purpose, it was error to exclude any of those documents from consideration.

[3] The consideration of the letter of February 1st in the interpretation of the formal contract is not objectionable on the ground that it tends to vary, modify, or contradict the terms of that contract. Those terms are established by the contract and the letter and not by one to the exclusion of the other. By the express provision of the letter the contract must be read as if it specifically provided that the provisions of paragraph 6 with respect to the starting time of the graveyard shift became effective August 30, 1942. It must therefore be determined whether the parties meant that the payment of retroactive compensation based on paragraph 6 should be governed by the effective date thereof or by the earlier date of July 1, 1941 established by paragraph 57.

1. "Several contracts relating to the same matters, between the same parties, and made as parts of substantially one transaction, are to be taken together."

The trial court, on plaintiffs' objection, excluded evidence of the negotiations of the parties offered by defendant for the purpose of establishing the meaning that the union and the studios attributed to the effective date of the new starting time. Defendant contends that the excluded evidence would establish that the parties meant that the new starting time would be effective August 30th and that this date would govern the payment of retroactive compensation under the contract.

[4, 5] The agreements in the present case are ambiguous and internally inconsistent. Paragraph 57 of the formal contract provides for the retroactive payment of wage increases to July 1, 1941. Paragraph 6 as modified by the letter of February 1st provides that the graveyard shift shall start at nine P. M. and that a bonus shall be paid to all employees starting work at that hour or later, but by its terms it is not effective until August 30, 1942. Is the payment of retroactive compensation to graveyard shift employees governed by paragraph 57 and thus payable to employees who were not considered as performing work on the graveyard shift at the time the work was performed? Or is the payment of retroactive compensation limited by the provision that the new starting time is effective August 30, 1942 so that before that date the graveyard bonus is payable only to persons considered as performing work on the graveyard shift at the time the work was performed, that is, those starting work two or more hours after the start of the third regular shift? Paragraph 3 of the formal contract provides that wage scales and working conditions therein provided are effective February 15, 1942, subject to the retroactive adjustments specified in paragraph 57. The letter of February 1st provides that, "notwithstanding the provisions of Section 3," the effective date of the new starting time of the graveyard shift shall be August 30, 1942. Did the parties thereby intend to supplant only the effective date specified in paragraph 3, February 15, 1942, or did they intend to supplant the whole of paragraph 3, including the provision that wage scales and working conditions are "subject to the retroactive adjustments specified" in paragraph 57? The terms of the agreement furnish no clear answer to these questions. It is thus apparent that the contract is not clear on its face, and under the theory of the parol evidence rule that has been accepted by the majority of this court, evidence of the negotiations of the parties and of surrounding circumstances was admissible for the purpose of determining the meaning of the contractual provisions. Universal Sales Corp. v. Cal. Press Mfg. Co., 20 Cal.2d 751, 761-762, 128 P.2d 665; California Canning Peach Growers v. Williams, 11 Cal.2d 221, 228-229, 78 P.2d 1154; Merkeley v. Fisk, 179 Cal. 748, 757, 178 P. 945; see Union Oil Co. v. Union Sugar Co., 31 Cal.2d 300, 306, 307, 188 P.2d 470; Body-Steffner Co. v. Flotill Products, 63 Cal.App. 2d 555, 561-562, 147 P.2d 84; Torrey v. Shea, 29 Cal.App. 313, 316-317, 155 P. 820; Code of Civil Procedure, § 1860; Civil Code, § 1647. That evidence would have supported a construction of the contract favorable to defendant and it should have been considered by the trial court in its interpretation of the terms of the contract. Exclusion of that evidence was therefore prejudicial error.

The judgment is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, CARTER, SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

35 Cal.2d 729

CEDARS OF LEBANON HOSPITAL v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (and five other cases).

L. A. 20610, 20611, 20613–20616.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.

Aug. 18, 1950.

Cedars of Lebanon Hospital, a nonprofit corporation, and others, sued the County of Los Angeles and City of Los Angeles, a municipal corporation, to recover taxes and assessments paid under protest. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Alfred L. Bartlett, J., rendered judgments from which both plaintiffs and defendants appealed. The Supreme Court, Spence, J., held that specified uses of hospital property were uses exclusively for hospital purposes within statute exempting from taxation under specified circumstances property used exclusively for hospital purposes, and that exemption from taxation granted by the statute does not extend to a levy imposed under authority of the Los Angeles County Flood Control Act.

Judgment in accordance with opinion.

Shenk, J., dissented in part.

Prior opinion 206 P.2d 915.

1. Taxation ⇐204(2)

Constitutional provisions and statutes granting exemption from taxation are strictly construed to end that such concession will be neither enlarged nor extended beyond plain meaning of language employed.

2. Taxation ⇐241(2)

In determining whether hospital comes within statute exempting from taxation under specified circumstances property used exclusively for hospital purposes, it is immaterial that hospital in question may contribute to public welfare and serve interests of state. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

3. Taxation ⇐251

Hospitals have burden of showing that they clearly come within statute exempting from taxation under specified circumstances property used exclusively for hospital purposes. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

4. Taxation ⇐111.21

Exemption provisions in social security and unemployment compensation acts will be liberally construed so as to effectuate their beneficent purpose to encourage and promote organizations seeking classification within broad scope of statutory language.

5. Taxation ⇐204(2)

The rule that constitutional provisions and statutes granting exemptions from taxation are strictly construed to end that such concession will be neither enlarged nor extended beyond plain meaning of language employed does not require that narrowest possible meaning be given to words descriptive of exemption.

6. Statutes ⇐181(2)

A fair and reasonable interpretation must be made of all laws, with due regard for ordinary acceptation of language employed and object sought to be accomplished thereby.

7. Statutes ⇐235

A strict construction of statutes must still be a reasonable construction.

8. Taxation ⇐241(2)

In enacting statute exempting from taxation under specified circumstances property used exclusively for hospital purposes, and constitutional provision authorizing enactment of such statute, people and Legislature had in mind a complete, modern hospital plant rather than one consisting only of minimum indispensable facilities. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

9. Taxation ⇐241(2)

The phrase "property used exclusively for hospital purposes" within statute exempting from taxation under specified circumstances property used exclusively for hospital purposes, includes any property which is used for any facility which is incidental to and reasonably necessary for accomplishment of hospital purposes. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Property Used Exclusively for Hospital Purposes".

10. Taxation ⇐241(2)

Use of property by hospital as a nursing school and as a nurses' home as an incident to operation of hospital was used "exclusively for hospital purposes" within statute exempting from taxation under specified circumstances property used exclusively for hospital purposes. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Exclusively for Hospital Purposes".

11. Evidence ⇐20(1)

It is common konwledge that in many, if not most, hospitals, nurses and student nurses sleep in hospital building or in premises nearby which have been acquired by hospital for furnishing such accommodations.

12. Taxation ⇐241(2)

Hospital property used to provide housing facilities for interns, resident doctors, superintendents, and other members of the hospital staff, was used "exclusively for hospital purposes" within statute exempting from taxation under specified circumstances property used exclusively for hospital purposes. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

13. Taxation ⇐241(2)

A building under construction on day of determination of its tax status was on such day not being "used exclusively for hospital purposes" within statute exempting from taxation under specified circumstances property used exclusively for hospital purposes. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Used Exclusively for Hospital Purposes".

14. Taxation ⇐241(2)

Property used by hospital for maintenance of tennis court as a limited recreational facility for hospital employees, student nurses, interns and residents was being used "exclusively for hospital purposes" within statute exempting from taxation under specified circumstances property used exclusively for hospital purposes. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

15. Taxation ⇐241(2)

Where so-called "thrift shop" located on hospital property was place where donated clothing and furnishings were sold, and proceeds were devoted to maintenance of the free children's clinic maintained jointly by hospital and a Community Chest agency, such hospital property was not used "exclusively for hospital purposes" within statute exempting from taxation under specified circumstances property used exclusively for hospital purposes. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

16. Taxation ⇐246

The exemption from taxation granted by Welfare Exemption Law does not extend to a levy imposed under authority of Los Angeles County Flood Control Act. Gen.Laws, Act 4463.

17. Taxation ⇐246

Exemptions of private property from taxation do not extend to special assessments, levied upon basis of equivalent benefit, unless specifically so provided.

18. Taxation ⇐246

The rule that exemptions of private property from taxation do not extend to special assessments, levied upon basis of equivalent benefit, unless specifically so provided, is generally applied to charitable institutions.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, Andrew O. Porter, Deputy County Counsel, Ray L. Chesebro, City Attorney, Hugh H. MacDonald and Louis A. Babior, Deputy City Attorneys, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Faries & McDowell, Wayne R. Hackett, Musick, Burrell & Ingebretsen, Philip C. Jones, James E. Ludlam, Leonard G. Ratner, Beverly Hills, Joseph Scott, J. Howard Ziemann, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, Bert A. Lewis, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SPENCE, Justice.

These are appeals by both plaintiffs and defendants from judgments entered after rulings on demurrers in six separate actions, each of which was brought by one of plaintiff hospitals to recover certain taxes and assessments paid under protest in view of the recently enacted welfare exemption. Cal.Const. art. XIII, § 1c; Rev. & Tax. Code, § 214.

The California welfare exemption was operative for the first time in the tax year 1946-1947, and each of the plaintiffs duly filed its exemption claim. Rev. & Tax. Code, §§ 254, 254.5. Such exemption was granted by the taxing authorities in each case as to 90 to 95 per cent of the property of the respective hospitals, but denied as to the remaining 5 to 10 per cent on the ground that such portions were not being used for exempt purposes. Accordingly, a tax was levied upon such unexempted portions and, in addition, a Los Angeles County Flood Control District assessment was made in every case against all of the respective hospitals' real property. The hospitals paid the taxes and assessments under protest, and then commenced these actions to recover such portions of those payments as the respective plaintiffs deemed contrary to the provisions of the welfare exemption law. The complaint in each case was divided into several causes of action, each of which causes presented a phase of the numerous points in dispute. A general demurrer as to each cause of action was filed in each case, and all of the cases were consolidated for the purpose of hearing.

The major portion of the property which plaintiffs claimed to be tax exempt, despite the adverse rulings of the taxing authorities, was that devoted to the housing of essential hospital personnel and to the conduct of nurses' training schools operated in connection with the hospital. The trial court agreed with plaintiffs' contentions as to these matters and overruled defendants' demurrer to the causes of action relating to the hospital property as thus used by plaintiffs. Likewise the trial court sustained the contentions of those plaintiffs herein who sought exemption of their real property from the flood control district assessments, and overruled the demurrer to the causes of action so premised. From the portions of the judgments entered in accordance with these rulings, defendants have appealed.

The following pieces of hospital property, however, were not deemed to be tax exempt by the trial court, and it sustained demurrers without leave to amend as to the causes of action relating thereto: buildings under construction to furnish housing for student nurses (counts two and four of the complaint in action L.A. No. 20615, involving the Hollywood Presbyterian Hospital); a tennis court maintained as a recreational facility for hospital employees, and a "thrift shop" operated for the sale of donated clothing, with the proceeds therefrom devoted to the upkeep of a free children's clinic (counts four and seven of the complaint in action L.A. No. 20616, involving plaintiff Lutheran Hospital Society of Southern California). Plaintiffs have filed appeals from the portions of the judgments accordingly entered. Also sustained without leave to amend was the demurrer to the fourth, sixth and eighth causes of action of plaintiff Monte Sano Foundation (action L.A. No. 20614) relating to portions of a building leased for use as an X-ray laboratory or doctor's office, but said plaintiff has not filed an appeal from such adverse rulings.

Defendants do not dispute the status of any of these plaintiffs as an institution qualifying for the welfare exemption, so that the parties' opposing arguments center on these two main considerations: (1) the particular uses to which certain portions of the hospital property were put as determining the status—exempt or non-exempt—of such portions; and (2) the extension of the claimed exemption to include flood control district assessments levied on the real property of the several hospitals. Upon an analysis of the welfare exemption law, it appears (1) that except for its rulings on the tax status of the tennis court, the trial court was correct in its allowance or disallowance of exemption claims as to the several plaintiffs' tax payments, but (2) that it erred in construing the tax exemption to embrace the assessment levies.

Adopted at the general election of November 7, 1944, the relevant constitutional provision—article XIII, § 1c—reads as follows: "In addition to such exemptions as are now provided in this Constitution, the Legislature may exempt from taxation all or any portion of property used exclusively for religious, hospital or charitable purposes and owned by community chests, funds, foundations or corporations organized and operated for religious, hospital or charitable purposes, not conducted for profit and no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual."

Pursuant to the authority thus granted, the legislature in 1945 enacted § 214 of the Revenue and Taxation Code, providing as follows:

"Property used exclusively for religious, hospital, scientific, or charitable purposes owned and operated by community chests, funds, foundations or corporations organized and operated for religious, hospital, scientific, or charitable purposes is exempt from taxation if:

"(1) The owner is not organized or operated for profit;

"(2) No part of the net earnings of the owner inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual;

"(3) The property is not used or operated by the owner or by any other person for profit regardless of the purposes to which the profit is devoted;

"(4) The property is not used or operated by the owner or by any other person so as to benefit any officer, trustee, director, shareholder, member, employee, contributor, or bondholder of the owner or operator, or any other person, through the distribution of profits, payment of excessive charges or compensations or the more advantageous pursuit of their business or profession;

"(5) The property is not used by the owner or members thereof for fraternal or lodge purposes, or for social club purposes except where such use is clearly incidental to a primary religious, hospital, scientific, or charitable purpose;

"(6) The property is irrevocably dedicated to religious, charitable, scientific, or hospital purposes and upon the liquidation, dissolution or abandonment of the owner will not inure to the benefit of any private person except a fund, foundation or corporation organized and operated for religious, hospital, scientific, or charitable purposes. * * *

"The exemption provided for herein shall be known as the 'welfare exemption.' This exemption shall be in addition to any other exemption now provided by law. This section shall not be construed to enlarge the college exemption or to extend an exemption to property held by or used as an educational institution of less than collegiate grade." Stats. 1945, ch. 241, § 1.

[1-4] Constitutional provisions and statutes granting exemption from taxation are strictly construed to the end that such concession will be neither enlarged nor extended beyond the plain meaning of the language employed. Cypress Lawn Cemetery Association v. City and County of San Francisco, 211 Cal. 387, 390, 295 P. 813; City and County of San Francisco v. San Mateo County, 17 Cal.2d 814, 817, 112 P.2d 595. In this regard, it is immaterial that the institutions in question may contribute to the public welfare and serve the interests of the state, for they, like other private owners of property, have the burden of showing that they clearly come within the terms of the exemption. 51 Am.Jur. § 633, p. 606; Corporation of Sisters of Mercy v. Lane County, 123 Or. 144, 261 P. 694, 697. This rule has been expressly recognized in this state in the application of the orphanage exemption. Cal.Const. art. XIII, § 1½a; Helping Hand Home v. San Diego County, 26 Cal.App.2d 452, 458-459, 79 P.2d 778. Such rule of strict construction governing property tax exemptions is distinguished from the rule of liberal construction applying in the determination of exemption qualifications under social security and unemployment compensation acts. Scripps Memorial Hospital v. California Employment Comm., 24 Cal.2d 669, 676-677, 151 P.2d 109, 155 A.L.R. 360; Seaside Memorial Hospital v. California Employment Comm., 24 Cal.2d 681, 682, 151 P.2d 116. Exemption provisions in statutes of the latter character will be liberally construed so as to effectuate their beneficent purpose to encourage and promote organizations seeking classification within the broad scope of the statutory language. 61 C.J. § 396, p. 394; see Santa Fe Lodge No. 460 v. Employment Security Comm., 49 N.M. 149, 159 P.2d 312, 314-315. This is not, however, the rule to be applied where exemption is claimed from general property taxation as provided in our State Constitution. Art. XIII, § 1; Watchtower Bible & Tract Soc., Inc. v. County of Los Angeles, 30 Cal.2d 426, 429, 182 P.2d 178.

[5-7] But the rule of strict construction does not require that the narrowest possible meaning be given to words descriptive of the exemption, for a fair and reasonable interpretation must be made of all laws, with due regard for the ordinary acceptation of the language employed and the object sought to be accomplished thereby. Cooley on Taxation, Fourth Ed., vol. 2, ch. 13, § 674, p. 1415; 51 Am.Jur. § 528, p. 531; State ex rel. Spillers v. Johnston, 214 Mo. 656, 113 S.W. 1083, 1084-1085, 21 L.R.A.,N.S., 171; Trustees of Phillips Exeter Academy v. Exeter, N.H., 11 A.2d 569, 590-591. As was said in the Spillers case, supra: "* * * strict construction must still be a reasonable construction * * *." On the basis then of a strict but reasonable construction of the welfare exemption law, the several points of dispute between the parties will be determined.

In determining what constitutes "property used exclusively for * * * hospital * * * purposes", it is appropriate first to note generally the nature of a "hospital." A fair and unchallenged description of the nature of such an institution is set forth in plaintiffs' combined brief as follows: "A hospital is primarily a service organization. It serves three groups: the patients, its doctors, and the public. It furnishes a place where the patient, whether poor or rich, can be treated under ideal conditions. It makes available room, special diet, X-ray, laboratory, surgery, and a multitude of other services and equipment now available through the advances of medical science. Essential to the administration of these techniques is the corps of highly-trained nurses and student nurses who are on duty twenty-four hours per day. In the large hospitals there are the interns and residents whose presence makes it possible for the hospital to do a better job. In addition, the hospital * * * must have administration to see that its services function properly and are coordinated, and that patients are received and cared for regardless of the hour or the patient's condition. Nothing can be left to chance because a slip may mean a life or many lives. These facilities also stand ready to serve the community in times of epidemic or disaster."

[8] This description expresses in general terms the nature, functions, and purposes of a complete, modern hospital plant, which functions and purposes are more fully and more specifically alleged in the complaints on file herein and are admitted by the demurrers thereto. And as the constitutional amendment and statute under consideration were adopted and enacted in 1944 and 1945, respectively, it is entirely clear that the people and the legislature had in mind such a complete, modern hospital plant rather than one consisting only of the minimum and indispensable facilities found in earlier hospitals which inadequately served their purposes many years ago.

[9] It thus appears that under the rule of strict but reasonable construction, the phrase "property used exclusively for * * hospital * * * purposes" should be held to include any property which is used exclusively for any facility which is incidental to and reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of hospital purposes; or, in other words, for any facility which is reasonably necessary for the fulfillment of a generally recognized function of a complete modern hospital. This test is fully supported by reason and the weight of authority, as evidenced by the cases hereinbefore and hereinafter cited. St. should be recalled, however, that under the statute here in question, there are other conditions which must be met in order to entitle the property, or the particular portion thereof, to tax exemption. Such other conditions will be discussed as the occasion may require, but one of the main disputes between the parties concerns the question of whether certain portions of plaintiffs' properties met the requirement of being used exclusively for hospital purposes. Having thus declared in general terms the test to be used in determining that question, we shall proceed to apply that test, as well as any other conditions of the statute upon which defendants rely, to the particular portions of the hospitals' properties which are the subject of dispute.

The first question presented is whether the use of property by plaintiff hospitals for a nurses' training school and to provide housing for hospital interns, resident doctors, student nurses, and certain other alleged essential employees required to be readily available in their effective operation constitutes a use exclusively for hospital purposes and so brings the property within the scope of the welfare tax exemption.

Unquestionably the maintenance of a school for training nurses is an important phase of the functions of a complete modern hospital. If the major hospitals did not so provide, no student nurses would be available and resort would have to be made to registered nurses at much greater expense to the patients. Moreover, if hospitals did not train nurses in the requirements of the profession, eventually there would be no registered nurses, and obviously trained nurses are just as necessary as any other factor in the effective conduct of the general hospital facilities. Recognizing that the greater part of a nurse's training is in actual work with patients and ministering to their needs, our state law requires that "an accredited school of nursing" must be "affiliated or conducted in connection with one or more hospitals." Bus. & Prof. Code, § 2786. The character of such a school was considered in the case of Luthern Hospital Society v. County of Los Angeles, 25 Cal.2d 254, 153 P.2d 341, where tax exemption of the school was sought on the ground that it was an "educational institution of collegiate grade." Cal.Const. art. XIII, § 1a. In denying the exemption claim as the test therefor was defined by appropriate enactment, Rev. & Tax. Code, § 203, this court said, 25 Cal. 2d at pages 257-258, 153 P.2d at page 343: "Under our Constitution * * * the words 'educational institution,' used in the ordinary and commonly accepted sense, do not include a general hospital which has, as an incident to its main purpose and usefulness, an educational feature. Furthermore, it is apparent that in the ordinary acceptation of the term, a hospital is not considered as an 'educational institution of collegiate grade' or as a 'college or seminary of learning.' In this field of legislation the Legislature may well have concluded that the training of women as nurses is mainly in connection with and for the benefit of the hospital (see article 2, ch. 6, div. II of the Business and Professions Code, as added by St.1937, p. 1377), and that the property used for such purposes is entitled only to the classification accorded general hospital property devoted to nonprofit or charitable uses. The record indicates that upon application to the Board of Equalization and a presentation of facts showing its use exclusively for charitable and nonprofit purposes, the plaintiff received a 50 per cent reduction in the assessed valuation of all of its property including Larson Hall [where the nursing school was conducted]. Total exemption of the property of such institutions was rejected by the electors of the state in November, 1930, when it was proposed to add section 1⅝ to article XIII of the Constitution to accomplish that purpose. However, at the November, 1944, election, proposed section 1c of article XIII was added, making it permissive for the Legislature to exempt all or a portion of the properties of nonprofit hospital corporations. That section is, of course, prospective only." (Emphasis added.)

It is therefore apparent that there is no merit in defendants' argument that the allowance of the exemption claim on the nursing school property would involve the enlargement of the exemption in favor of an "educational institution" contrary to the express language of the statute extending the welfare exemption. Rev. & Tax. Code, § 214. Maintained as an integral part of the hospital operations, a nurses' training school has generally been regarded as a facility which is incidental to and reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of hospital purposes, and therefore entitled to exemption. Hot Springs School Dist. v. Sisters of Mercy, 84 Ark. 497, 106 S.W. 954; Lutheran Hospital Ass'n of South Dakota v. Baker, 40 S.D. 226, 167 N.W. 148, 151; Nuns of Third Order of St. Dominic v. Younkin, 118 Kan. 554, 235 P. 869, 870; see, also, Reynolds Memorial Hosp. v. Marshall County Court, 78 W.Va. 685, 90 S.E. 238, 240; Corporation of Sisters of Mercy v. Lane County, supra, 123 Or. 144, 261 P. 694, 697; Calais Hospital v. City of Calais, 138 Me. 234, 24 A.2d 489, 490. Though necessarily serving the private educational interest of the student nurses in attendance, property so used for a nurses' training school does not thereby lose its character as property "used exclusively for * * * hospital * * * purposes" within the scope of the welfare exemption law. Ibid; Sisters of Third Order of St. Francis v. Board of Review, 231 Ill. 317, 83 N.E. 272, 274; Board of Review of Cook County v. Provident Hospital & Training School Ass'n, 233 Ill. 242, 84 N.E. 216, 217-218. Rather, it is to be regarded simply as "an educational feature" of the hospital—"an incident to [the latter's] main purpose and usefulness". Lutheran Hospital Society v. County of Los Angeles, supra, 25 Cal.2d 254, 257, 153 P. 2d 341, 344.

[10, 11] The same reasoning applies with respect to the exemption of property used to provide a nurses' home as an incident to the operation of the hospital. It is a matter of common knowledge that in many, if not most, hospitals, nurses and student nurses sleep in the hospital building or on premises near by which have been acquired by the hospital for furnishing such accommodations. Manifestly, emergencies may arise from time to time during the night requiring immediate attention and which make it necessary to have more nursing personnel available than is actually on nighttime duty. Such situation can be met, as alleged by plaintiffs, only by providing housing facilities upon the hospital grounds for nurses, student nurses, and kindred aids. Typical of such living quarters were those furnished by plaintiff Cedars of Lebanon Hospital in "a building known as Lebanon Hall * * * attached to the main building of the hospital" and for which "each of the nurses" so accommodated "makes a payment of $10.00 per month" to the hospital. As set forth in the pleadings in these cases, the use of such property for such purposes is a use for a facility which is incidental to and reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of hospital purposes, and the property so used should be held to be tax exempt. Such conclusion seems to be clearly in accord with the weight of authority. Annos. 34 A.L.R. 674, 62 A.L.R. 336, 108 A.L.R. 295, Nuns of Third Order of St. Dominic v. Younkin, supra, 118 Kan. 554, 235 P. 869, 870; Aultman Hospital Ass'n v. Evatt, 140 Ohio St. 114, 42 N.E.2d 646, 647; see, also, Corporation of Sisters of Mercy v. Lane County, supra, 123 Or. 144, 261 P. 694, 697; Appeal of Parmentier, 139 Pa. Super. 27, 11 A.2d 690, 693; Dougherty v. City of Philadelphia, 139 Pa.Super. 37, 11 A.2d 695, 697.

Defendants argue that a building which serves as a residence for nurses should not be deemed property "used exclusively for * * * hospital * * * purposes." Johnson v. Mississippi Baptist Hospital, 140 Miss. 485, 106 So. 1. The cited case did take such narrow view of the statute there involved and the tax exemption was denied. This is the only case, insofar as citation by counsel or independent research has disclosed, where a like decision has been reached in distinguishing the tax status of such portion of hospital property. Moreover, it no longer is the law even in Mississippi since the express amendment of the pertinent exemption statute to include "nurses' homes." Board of Supervisors v. Vicksburg Hospital, 173 Miss. 805, 163 So. 382, 384; Board of Sup'rs v. Jackson Hospital Benev. Ass'n, 180 Miss. 129, 177 So. 27, 28; Rush Hospital Benev. Ass'n v. Board of Sup'rs, 187 Miss. 204, 192 So. 829, 831. Defendants' single reference in this regard requires no further discussion as it is wholly contrary to the prevailing view. See anno. 62 A.L.R. 336.

It is of no importance here that the legislature in 1947, upon enacting a new body of law dealing with hospital survey and construction, Health and Safety Code, ch. 3, §§ 430–435.7, Stats.1947, ch. 327, § 2, p. 882, defined a hospital to include "related facilities such as * * * nurses' home and training facilities". Health and Safety Code, § 430.4. Defendants urge that since the legislature there deemed it proper to so define the scope of the term, the word "hospital" would not otherwise have such broad meaning. But aside from the fact that wholly unrelated, subsequent legislation would have no particular bearing on the questions before us, the cited definition simply accords with the commonly accepted understanding of the word "hospital" as used in the ordinary, and not broad sense. See Lutheran Hospital Society v. County of Los Angeles, supra, 25 Cal.2d 254, 257, 153 P.2d 341. It has been so construed here. Accordingly, plaintiffs' claims are well taken with respect to the nature of the facilities of a nursing school and nurses' home as constituting property "used exclusively for * * * hospital * * * purposes" within the contemplation of the welfare exemption law.

[12] The same considerations apply with respect to the exemption of hospital property used to provide housing facilities for interns, resident doctors, superintendents, and other members of the hospital staff—that the administration of the affairs of the institution requires that certain personnel and employees be located on or near its grounds to the end that its operation may be efficiently conducted and supervised, and that emergency cases may be effectively handled as they arise. Since it is commonly expected by the public that admittance to a hospital may be had at any hour of the day or night, such twenty-four hour service necessarily involves the presence at all time of adequate help and trained personnel. In this connection, reference need only be made to the pertinent allegations of the complaint filed by plaintiff Lutheran Hospital Society of Southern California (L.A. No. 20616), relative to its two hospital plants, the "California Hospital" and the "Santa Monica Hospital," and admitted by defendants' demurrer:

"That plaintiff receives patients at all hours of the day or night and in connection therewith must have available employees to receive these patients, enter them in the hospital record, make up their rooms, attend to their personal effects, clean up after emergency operations, do the clean-up and maintenance work around the hospital at such times that it will not interfere with the essential services of the hospital. To do part of this work, The California Hospital employs 48 housekeeping employees, including porters and orderlies, of whom 26 are housed by it, and The Santa Monica Hospital employs 30 housekeeping employees, including porters and orderlies, of whom 2 are housed by it. In addition plaintiff employs a large body of employees doing what it classifies administration work, which group includes clerks, bookkeepers, stenographers, telephone operators, engineers and the like. Of these The California Hospital employs 263 and houses 26, and The Santa Monica Hospital employs 104 and houses 5.

"That plaintiff operates its dietary department upon a split-shift (four hours' service during the day and four hours during the night). That if plaintiff operated its said personnel on straight eight-hour shifts, the unions to which such personnel belong would require plaintiff to hire more personnel than are required under the split-shift plan. That plaintiff thereby effects a substantial saving by employing the said personnel on a split-shift basis. That it is difficult to obtain competent personnel to work on a split-shift basis unless they are actually housed in the immediate vicinity since a split-shift requires them to be at the hospital for two different periods during each 24 hours. That the morning shift in the dietary department starts at between 4:00 o'clock and 6:00 o'clock at a time when public transportation is not readily available. That plaintiff houses 57 of its 67 dietary employees employed at The California Hospital and

2 of its 54 employees employed at The Santa Monica Hospital.

"That plaintiff does not employ a night-shift engineer at The Santa Monica Hospital, but furnishes its two daytime engineers with housing on its premises so that they will be readily available in case of emergency to service the pressure boiler maintained by plaintiff to furnish steam to its sterilizers as well as general heating service."

As the welfare exemption law has been heretofore discussed "property used exclusively for * * * hospital * * * purposes" would comprehend not only the buildings and grounds actually used for housing the patients in their treatment and care, but also such adjacent or nearby buildings used for housing such persons as may be essential for the efficient operation of the hospital. Here again, as appears from plaintiffs' allegations, the facilities were incidental to and reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of hospital purposes and were therefore tax exempt. See County of Hennepin v. Brotherhood of Gethsemane, 27 Minn. 460, 8 N.W. 595, 596, 38 Am.Rep. 298; Corporation of Sisters of Mercy v. Lane County, supra, 123 Or. 144, 261 P. 694, 700; Appeal of Parmentier, supra, 139 Pa.Super. 27, 11 A.2d 690, 693; Calais Hospital v. City of Calais, supra, 138 Me. 234, 24 A.2d 489, 490.

[13] The next question to be determined is whether buildings under construction on the tax date and intended for use in the housing of student nurses are within the welfare exemption. This issue relates to counts two and four of the complaint in action L.A. No. 20615, relating to the Hollywood Presbyterian Hospital. It appears from the pleading that "on the first Monday of March, 1946," the building on each of the two pieces of property involved "was approximately eighty-five percent (85%) completed," was "designed to be used exclusively as a dormitory and residence for student nurses attending [the hospital's School of Nursing," was "placed in use" for the designated purposes "on or about July 1, 1946," and "has been so used ever since said date." The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer to these two counts, thus distinguishing between (1) buildings completed and "used exclusively for * * * hospital * * * purposes" and (2) buildings so intended for use but still in the construction stage on the day determinative of their tax status. Such distinction appears to have been properly made.

As above quoted, the pertinent constitutional provision, Art. XIII, § 1c, and the implementing statute, Rev. & Tax. Code, § 214, unequivocally require that the property be "used" for the enumerated purposes. Such express limitation, making use the focal point of consideration, contemplates actual use as differentiated from an intention to use the property in a designated manner. It has been generally so held in the construction of kindred exemption laws in other jurisdictions, see Annos. 34 A.L.R. 671, 62 A.L.R. 335, 108 A.L.R. 294, although, as indicated in the cited annotations, there are cases to the contrary. This point of interpretation has been adjudicated in this state in Southern California Telephone Co. v. Los Angeles County, 212 Cal. 121, 298 P. 9, 11, concerning the taxation of a building under construction belonging to the telephone company which if "used exclusively in the operation of their business" was subject to assessment by the state board of equalization as "operative property," and immune from county taxation. It was there held that under no construction of the language—whether strictly construed as in cases "dealing with tax exemptions" where the courts have "interpreted the words 'used exclusively' to require an actual use" or liberally construed as in the instant situation of a gross receipts tax "which is not an exemption"—could it "possibly include property which is neither used nor available for use in such business." 212 Cal. at page 126, 298 P. at page 11. The same observation may well be made in this case for regardless of the rule of strict construction here applicable, it would appear that under no theory of construction could a building in the course of erection be viewed as being used for any purpose.

It is argued that some effect should be given to these factors: that the exemption here is sought for property on which considerable progress had already been made with the building, that the work was being diligently prosecuted, and upon its completion it was in fact used pursuant to its design for an exempt purpose—as distinguished from a claim made with respect to vacant land on which it is the intention to start construction at some future date. But these considerations attesting to the exercise of the institution's good faith in carrying out its building program are wholly immaterial under the welfare exemption law, where the language plainly makes use of the property the basis of the exemption, and manifestly an incompleted building cannot meet that condition. Such matters of bona fide intention as well as acts on the part of the qualifying institution have been recognized in decisions by courts which are committed to the doctrine of liberal construction of tax exemption statutes. El. Jebel Shrine Ass'n v. McGlone, 93 Colo. 334, 26 P.2d 108, 109; McGlone v. First Baptist Church of Denver, 97 Colo. 427, 50 P.2d 547, 548-549; Trustees of Property of Protestant Episcopal Church in New Mexico v. State Tax Commission, 39 N.M. 419, 48 P.2d 786, 787. But the reasoning of such decisions is without force under the rule of strict construction followed in this state and in most of the other states. This is not a case involving repairs, restoration or enlargement of a hospital or essential hospital facilities where the construction project assumes the character which had previously attached to the property for exemption purposes pursuant to its actual use, but rather here the problem concerns new buildings on property which had not yet acquired a definite character, and would not until completed and used for the designated hospital purposes. Dougherty v. City of Philadelphia, 112 Pa.Super. 570, 172 A. 177, 180. Accordingly, the trial court properly denied the exemption on the buildings here under construction on the determinative tax date.

[14] The next matter to be considered is whether property used for the maintenance of a tennis court as a limited recreational facility for hospital employees—student nurses, interns and residents—comes within the scope of the welfare exemption law. This issue relates to count four of the complaint in action L.A. No. 20616, involving plaintiff Lutheran Hospital Society of Southern California. The trial court denied the exemption upon sustaining defendants' demurrer to said count. That ruling cannot be sustained.

The tennis court is located on the hospital grounds and is used as an outdoor recreational facility for the hospital personnel as above mentioned. In its complaint plaintiff alleged that "To qualify for the training of interns or residents under the rules of the American Medical Association Council on Medical Education and Hospitals, a hospital must provide for the health, care, housing, recreation and food for its residents and interns." There is no dispute of the fact that the nature and type of this recreational facility is of a reasonable character both as to cost and size in relationship to the cost and size of the hospital.

It appears that the exempt status of recreational facilities maintained by a hospital has been considered in but two cases, and in each instance the exemption was sustained: (1) Corporation of Sisters of Mercy v. Lane County, supra, 123 Or. 144, 261 P. 694, 697, wherein a tennis court used "to afford recreation for the pupil nurses and employees of the hospital, and sometimes the patients" was held tax exempt as part of the hospital property; and (2) State v. Academy of Our Lady of Lourdes, 221 Minn. 227, 21 N.W.2d 617, 618, wherein the property of a hospital, including a "swimming pool [and] recreation hall," was likewise held tax exempt. Defendants argue that these adjudications should be distinguished because in the first case the tennis court was "sometimes used by patients," and in the second case "it is not shown that [the recreational facilities] were not maintained primarily for the use of patients and they were not considered separately from the rest of the hospital." But these considerations have no force here under the facts presented and the test above set forth, as such use of the property was for a facility which was incidental to and reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of hospital purposes, regardless of whether it was used to meet the recreational needs of patients or of essential personnel, or both. In other words, the tennis court was reasonably necessary for the fulfillment of a generally recognized function of a complete, modern hospital. Perhaps it may not be said that such recreational facility, in its use by either patients or essential personnel, is indispensable to the accomplishment of hospital purposes; but absolute indispensability does not commend itself as an appropriate test, and it finds no support in the authorities. Accordingly, we conclude that the trial court erred in denying the exemption claim with respect to the tennis court as a reasonable recreational facility on the hospital grounds.

[15] But hospital property used to house a "thrift shop," as that project in count seven of the complaint in action L.A. No. 20616, involving plaintiff Lutheran Hospital Society of Southern California, is not entitled to the benefit of the tax exemption, and the trial court correctly so held in sustaining defendants' demurrer to that count. It appears that the "thrift shop" is located on the lower floor of the hospital building, "where donated clothing and furnishings are sold" and the "entire proceeds * * * are devoted to the maintenance of the Free Children's Clinic maintained jointly by the [hospital] and [a Community Chest] agency * * * deemed by the [hospital's] board of directors to be a charitable use." But such enterprise, laudable as its purpose manifests it to be, cannot escape classification as an independent undertaking to raise revenue, and it cannot be said to have been incidental to and reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of hospital purposes. In truth it was conducted soley for revenue purposes as distinguished from hospital purposes. While the profit or gain derived from the operation of the thrift shop benefited the hospital in providing support for its clinic, such consideration must be viewed in the light of the welfare exemption law's express proviso that "property used exclusively for * * * hospital * * * or charitable purposes is exempt from taxation if * * * the property is not used or operated by the owner or by any other person for profit regardless of the purposes to which the profit is devoted." Rev. & Tax.Code, § 214, subd. (3). (Emphasis added.) Such plain language prohibits the allowance of the exemption claim here in question.

The quoted profit proviso emphasizes the fundamental condition of the welfare exemption as premised upon use of the property for an exempt purpose. As defendants state, such qualifying limitation is well illustrated in Cypress Lawn Cemetery Association v. City and County of San Francisco, supra, 211 Cal. 387, 295 P. 813, involving the construction of the exemption allowed (1) "all property used or held exclusively" for burial grounds or (2) "for the care, maintenance or upkeep" thereof, "except as used or held for profit." Const. art. XIII, § 1b. Plaintiff, a cemetery association, had invested certain trust moneys in a hotel, which it then operated. It claimed that the hotel came within the second provision in classification of the exempt property because "the entire income derived from the hotel [was] devoted exclusively to the care and maintenance of" the cemetery. 211 Cal. at page 390, 295 P. at page 814. In rejecting this claim, the court stated, 211 Cal. at page 391, 295 P. at page 814: "While the application of the income derived from the operation of the hotel undoubtedly assists, and perhaps materially so, in the proper maintenance of the nontaxable burial grounds, and lends value thereto, this alone should not work an exemption of the hotel proper. (Citing authority.) Had it been the intention to grant the exemption upon the basis of the use of the income from property rather than upon the use of the property itself, such intention could, and probably would, have been directly and positively expressed." (Emphasis added.) So here the use of the income from the "thrift shop" for "hospital * * * or charitable purposes" is of no significance when the determinative prerequisite is "the use of the property itself"—a condition made doubly certain under the terms of the statute's exception expressly denying exemption to the property if "used or operated * * * for profit regardless of the purposes to which the profit is devoted." Rev. & Tax. Code, § 214, subd. (3). The case of San Gabriel Cemetery Association v. County of Los Angeles, 49 Cal.App.2d 624, 122 P.2d 330, 332, cited by the hospital as supporting its exemption claim, is not in point, for there the alleged profit or gain, used for the upkeep of the cemetery, arose from "the sale of burial space at a price in excess of its cost"—the very activity constituting the basis of the cemetery exemption and so not regarded as an operation for "profit" within the meaning of the exemption qualification.

[16] There now remains for consideration the final question of whether the exemption from taxation granted by the welfare exemption law extends to a levy imposed under authority of the Los Angeles County Flood Control Act. Stats. 1915, ch. 755, p. 1502; Deering's General Laws, Act 4463. The trial court held that it did, and overruled defendants' demurrers to the causes of action presented by the respective plaintiff hospitals claiming the benefits of such exemption. Such ruling cannot be sustained.

The constitutionality of the above-mentioned flood control statute was assailed in the case of Los Angeles County Flood Control District v. Hamilton, 177 Cal. 119, 169 P. 1028, and in sustaining its validity, this court declared that though the act used the expression "tax," it in fact conferred authority merely to levy an assessment against the real property of the district on the basis of benefits to be received and the legislature itself had determined the question of these benefits when it authorized the imposition of such levy on the basis of the assessed valuation of the real property for general taxation purposes. Following this decision that the flood control district levy is a special assessment, and not a tax, is a long line of additional cases: City of Inglewood v. County of Los Angeles, 207 Cal. 697, 702–703, 280 P. 360; Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist. v. Wright, 213 Cal. 335, 338, 2 P.2d 168; City of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist., 11 Cal.2d 395, 404, 80 P.2d 479; Los Angeles Ry. Corp. v. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist., 78 Cal.App. 173, 180–181, 248 P. 532; Southern Pacific R. R. Co. v. Stibbens, 103 Cal.App. 664, 676, 285 P. 374; Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 73 Cal.App.2d 548, 553, 166 P.2d 917; see, also, Cheseboro v. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist., 306 U.S. 459, 465–466, 59 S.Ct. 622, 83 L.Ed. 921.

[17, 18] It is well settled that exemptions of private property from taxation do not extend to special assessments, levied upon the basis of equivalent benefit, unless specifically so provided. Cooley on Taxation, Fourth Ed., vol. 2, ch. 13, § 689, p. 1444; 48 Am.Jur. § 80, p. 636; 24 Cal.Jur. § 80, p. 97; Hollywood Cemetery Ass'n v. Powell, 210 Cal. 121, 135, 291 P. 397, 71 A.L.R. 310, and cases there cited. This rule is generally applied to charitable institutions. 48 Am.Jur. § 97, p. 647; Anno. 34 A.L.R. 687. To avoid application of this rule here, plaintiff hospitals urge that the flood control district levy is an ad valorem rather than a specific lien type of special assessment, and as thus distinguished in type, the method prescribed for its collection is so much like that followed in the collection of a tax that it should be treated as a tax within the meaning of the welfare exemption law. But such asserted distinction is not a determinative factor, for the character of a levy as a tax or an assessment depends upon whether it is exacted in compensation for a benefit to the property upon which it is made a charge, and its classification is not affected by the method adopted for collection. If the welfare exemption law were intended to include special assessments, provision therefor should have been made in explicit terms, pursuant to the rule of strict construction as generally held applicable in tax exemption cases. Moreover, many years before the adoption of the welfare exemption law, the flood control district levy had been construed as a special assessment, Los Angeles County Flood Control

Dist. v. Hamilton, 1917, supra, 177 Cal. 119, 129, 169 P. 1028, and not covered by a general exemption from taxes, Los Angeles Ry. Corp. v. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist., 1926, supra, 78 Cal.App. 173, 181, 248 P. 532; Southern Pacific R. R. Co. v. Stibbens, 1930, supra, 103 Cal.App. 664, 676–677, 285 P. 374. In view of such judicial construction as to the character of the levy in question and its exclusion from the scope of a tax exemption, the conclusion inescapably follows that the benefit of the "exemption from taxation" accorded by the welfare exemption law was intended to apply within the limits of the cited decisions rather than in any enlarged sense. In re Nowak, 184 Cal. 701, 705, 195 P. 402; City of Long Beach v. Payne, 3 Cal. 2d 184, 191, 44 P.2d 305. Accordingly, the exemption claims as to the flood control district assessments cannot here prevail.

The only hospital which did not seek recovery of the flood control district assessment was plaintiff Queen of Angels Hospital in action L.A. No. 20611. The trial court correctly disposed of all issues presented in that case, and the judgment should be affirmed. In all the other cases the trial court correctly disposed of some of the issues and incorrectly disposed of others, as above indicated. It therefore appears appropriate to reverse with directions the judgments in these other cases, which judgments made certain all-inclusive adjudications regarding exemptions and also awarded recoveries in a single sum as against each defendant.

The judgment in Queen of Angels Hospital v. County of Los Angeles, L.A. No. 20611, is affirmed. The judgments which are the subjects of the other appeals are, and each of them is, reversed with directions to the trial court to proceed in accordance with the views herein expressed. Plaintiff in Queen of Angels Hospital v. County of Los Angeles, L.A. No. 20611, will recover its costs therein, but the parties will bear their own costs on the other appeals.

GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS, CARTER and TRAYNOR, JJ., concur.

SCHAUER, Justice (concurring).

In concurring I call special attention to the fact that in each of these cases the complaint alleges and defendants, solely for the purposes of their demurrers, admit that the property is not used or operated for profit or to benefit any person in the more advantageous pursuit of his business or profession.

Section 214 of the Revenue and Taxation Code provides that "Property used exclusively for * * * hospital * * * purposes owned and operated by * * * corporations organized and operated for religious, hospital, scientific, or charitable purposes is exempt from taxation if: * * * (3) The property is not used or operated by the owner or by any other person for profit regardless of the purposes to which the profit is devoted; (4) The property is not used or operated by the owner or by any other person so as to benefit any officer * * *, member, employee * * * or any other person, through the distribution of profits, payment of excessive charges or compensations or the more advantageous pursuit of their business or profession." (Italics added.)

There are no allegations in the complaints which would show that any of the hospitals charges paying patients more per day for the room, board and services furnished those patients than the cost to the hospital of furnishing such room, board and services. If some rooms are intentionally and consistently rented to paying patients at more than cost this operation, in my view, comes within the express language of the above quoted statute (use or operation "or profit regardless of the purposes to which the profit is devoted") and, hence, the hospital property so used does not qualify for exemption from taxation.

It is also to be noted that there are no allegations in the complaints here which would show that, with respect to the admission of patients who are charged fees by their doctors, the hospitals selectively admit only the patients of staff doctors. If the hospitals have such an admission policy, it would seem that they are being operated "so as to benefit" the staff doctors in the "more advantageous pursuit of their * * * profession" (Rev. & Tax.Code, § 214, par. (4)), and hence, by the express standard set by the Legislature such hospitals would not qualify for the exemption.

It may be noted that a view similar to that which I here express was taken by the trial court in the Monte Sano Foundation case (L.A. 20614) with reference to an area in its hospital building which is leased to a physician who uses it exclusively for essential hospital purposes but who is also benefited in his practice by the lease arrangement. The physician, a roentgenologist, furnishes the hospital's patients with X-ray services and charges them for such services. It would appear that plaintiff Monte Sano agrees with the view that this leased area is being used for "the more advantageous pursuit" of the lessee-doctor's profession and, therefore, does not come within the tax exemption of section 214, for the plaintiff did not appeal from the portion of the judgment against it, after demurrer sustained without leave to amend, on the cause of action (fourth) involving such leased area.

SHENK, Justice (concurring and dissenting).

I concur in the opinion and judgment as to the Los Angeles County Flood Control District Tax; and as to the general tax insofar as the result is tax exemption. But I am not in agreement with those portions of the opinion which lead to non-exemption from the general tax. In the latter are included the thrift shop and the buildings under construction. In my opinion the proper application of the law should result in tax exemption of these items from the general tax.

The rule of construction to discover a tax exemption applies only until the meaning of the language makes it clear that an exemption was expressed. When that meaning is found in the language employed the rule is of no further use. Since the electorate and the legislature used express words of exemption, section 1c, Art. XIII Const., sec. 214, Rev. & Tax. Code, there is here no need for the rule of construction to discover whether an exemption was intended. The task from that point is to apply the express language of exemption in accordance with the intent appearing from the constitutional and statutory provisions and other relevant factors.

It is obvious that the welfare exemption is designed to serve both social and economic ends. The electors of the state must be deemed to have been aware of the need of the services afforded by the designated organizations when carried on impartially and without self-interest. Implicit in the legislation is the knowledge that the maintenance of the facilities and the dispensation of the services as a result of private contributions of funds and personal effort become less of a burden on the taxpaying public than would be the cost under public ownership and control. The lessened cost of operation by the relief from taxation of such organizations also renders the services more widely available to those for whom they are intended. The resulting cost reduction must have been considered a greater benefit to the people than decreased taxes if the properties were not exempt.

As the majority opinion points out, many operations involved are incidental to a hospital use but are important and necessary to the conduct of each organization and without which its function as a hospital would be severely handicapped. Considering the social and economic ends to be served, the governing policy should be to so apply the express exemption as to bring about fully the legislative objectives. To do so requires that the words "use" and "purposes" be given their separate meanings. The exemption could have been afforded only when the property was devoted solely to a hospital use. But the wider compass in the expression of use for hospital purposes should include every purpose deemed essential to operation as a hospital. In this aspect the determination of necessity by the owners and operators should be given proper weight. Therefore, although a property might not be devoted to a hospital use, if it is essential for a hospital or other exempt purpose as distinguished from a use foreign to such purpose, it should be considered to be used exclusively for the exempt purpose within the meaning of the constitutional and legislative provisions. The majority opinion appropriately includes within the use for hospital purposes a training school for nurses, residence facilities for nurses, doctors and employees, and health and recreational facilities. But there has been omitted the thrift shop conducted by one of the hospitals and the buildings under construction intended for use as housing for student nurses attending the school of nursing.

The "Thrift Shop"

The so-called "thrift shop" is located in a portion of a hospital building otherwise exempt. Here donations of personal property are received and where not usable as donated they are converted into cash and used on behalf of the Free Children's Clinic maintained jointly by the hospital and the Los Angeles Community Chest. Nothing is purchased for resale. It is not a commercial enterprise, and there is no true profit-making objective involved. These charitable activities are common and are plainly distinguishable on the facts from Cypress Lawn Cemetery Association v. City and County of San Francisco, 211 Cal. 387, 295 P. 813. There property of the plaintiff "except as used or held for profit" was tax exempt. A hotel, the proceeds from the operation of which were devoted to the upkeep of the cemetery property, was owned and operated by the plaintiff. It was decided that the hotel property was not exempt from taxation. The case suggests a fair test of when property is used or operated for profit "regardless of the purposes to which the profit is devoted" under the statute here involved. If, as in the cemetery case, the propetry is held primarily as investment property to derive a profit and has no connection with the hospital or charitable use, it is not used for hospital or charitable purposes although the profit therefrom is applied to maintain the facilities devoted to those purposes. It was such investment property as was intended to be omitted from the exemption provisions. The legislature no doubt considered the possibility that, in the absence of language of express exclusion, the courts might conclude that investment property was exempted when all the proceeds from its operation were devoted to the hospital or other designated purpose. But the thrift shop is not held as investment property nor is it pursued as a commercial venture. There is here a direct connection with the charitable purpose of receiving contributions for distribution in the same or converted form to the children applying for free assistance at the clinic. Cf. Missouri Goodwill Industries v. Gruner, 357 Mo. 647, 210 S.W.2d 38. Every case obviously must be determined on its own facts. And in this instance it seems to me that the alleged charitable use of the property far outweighs any possible attribute of commerce for the reason that contributions are necessarily converted to usable liquid assets in their charitable application. Here the result should be the same as though money contributions had been offered and accepted in the first instance.

Buildings under Construction

As to the lots and the buildings thereon under construction for use as student nurse housing it is necessary to consider whether during construction they were "property used exclusively for * * * hospital * * * purposes." I do not agree with the conclusion that the question has been determined in this state adversely to the claim of exemption by the case of Southern California Telephone Co. v. Los Angeles County, 212 Cal. 121, 298 P. 9. There was no question of exemption from taxation in that case. The court pointed out that public utilities were not exempt from property taxes. If the property in question was "operative" property it fell under the substituted state tax on gross receipts. If non-operative it was subject to taxation by the county. It was decided that the property was non-operative and therefore taxable by the county. The conclusion has no bearing on the present question of the application of provisions for tax exemption. In arriving at the holding that the exemption does not apply to property under construction it is conceded that there are cases to the contrary. The reasoning of those cases to me is persuasive. In the application of such exemptions, construction for a proper hospital purpose is a use for such purpose. Expansion is necessary to keep abreast of increased public need due to population and other changes. Under modern conditions, neither a hospital nor any other welfare service can remain static. If the trust funds, contributions and earnings are tax-exempt, no good reason requires a denial of exemption because of the temporary use of the assets to construction purposes, where the property in its converted state is also exempt. In El Jebel Shrine Ass'n v. McGlone, 93 Colo. 334, 26 P.2d 108, the constitution and statute exempted lots and buildings thereon if used solely and exclusively for religious or charitable purposes. It was held that a lot with the foundation thereon for a building to be used for charitable purposes was exempt. Among other cases the court followed New England Hospital v. Boston, 113 Mass. 518. There vacant lots were held exempt where construction plans were diligently being pursued in good faith. See to similar effect McGlone v. First Baptist Church of Denver, 97 Colo. 427, 50 P.2d 547; Trinity Church v. Boston, 118 Mass. 164, 166. In a case holding to the contrary, Boston Society v. Boston, 129 Mass. 178, vacant land was held taxable because the only intent appearing was that at some indefinite time in the future it was to be improved for the required purpose. In re Miriam Osborn Memorial Home Ass'n, Sup., 140 N.Y.S. 786, also involved real property not yet in actual use but suitable buildings were in good faith contemplated, plans discussed, and funds in existence for the purpose. Since the property was shown to be essential to the comprehensive plan of development for charitable purposes, it was held to be exempt. In re Children's Hospital, 1923, 82 Pa.Super. 196, the exemption statute provided that the entire revenue of the charity should be used among other things for the necessary increase of grounds and buildings thereon. It was held that an addition in the course of construction was exempt. Dougherty v. City of Philadelphia, 1934, 112 Pa.Super. 570, 172 A. 177, involved two properties, neither of which was in actual use. One school building was being demolished, while the replacement building was still under construction. The exemption was applied to the former. The court held the property entitled to one exemption. Neither property was then in condition for actual use, but the exemption was nevertheless applied.

The statement in 26 R.C.L., Taxation, Sec. 283, was accepted as the general rule in Trustees of Property of Protestant Episcopal Church in New Mexico v. State Tax Comm., 39 N.M. 419, 48 P.2d 786, 787, namely: "When a religious society has bought a lot for the purpose of erecting a church thereon, and has begun and is prosecuting with all reasonable diligence the erection of the building, the lot is generally held to be exempt from taxation." See also Osteopathic Hospital of Maine v. Portland, 139 Me. 24, 26 A.2d 641, 644; Foresee v. Board of Directors of Bergman Special School Dist., 1948, 213 Ark. 569, 211 S.W.2d 432; State v. Second Church of Christ, Scientist, 185 Minn. 242, 240 N.W. 532; Village of Hibbing v. Commissioner of Taxation, 1944, 217 Minn. 528, 14 N.W. 2d 923, 156 A.L.R. 1294; Commonwealth v. First Christian Church of Louisville, 169 Ky. 410, 183 S.W. 943, Ann.Cas.1918B, 525.

It is no answer to say that in such cases the policy was one of liberal construction. Under the "strict but reasonable" formula announced the result should be the same. When an exemption appears under that rule of construction, the "reasonable" application of the exemption language in my opinion requires a result in conformity with the general rule accepted in the foregoing cases.

35 Cal.2d 760

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASS'N OF LOS ANGELES v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.

L. A. 21208.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.

Aug. 18, 1950.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Los Angeles sued the County of Los Angeles and the City of Los Angeles to recover taxes and assessments paid by plaintiff under protest for the taxable years 1946–1947. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, W. Turney Fox, J., allowed plaintiff a refund of tax payments and disallowed recovery of flood control district assessments, and defendants appealed and plaintiff cross-appealed. The Supreme Court, Spence, J., held that plaintiff's property which was devoted to dormitory rooms was exempt from taxation under statute exempting from taxation under specified circumstances property used exclusively for charitable purposes, and that property of plaintiff used for a restaurant, tailor shop, barber shop, and store, and property of plaintiff rented to the Selective Service Board, was not entitled to tax exemption under statute.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded with instructions.

Shenk, J., dissented in part.

1. Taxation ⇐204(2)

The statute exempting from taxation under specified circumstances property used exclusively for charitable and other specified purposes must be strictly construed, but the construction must also be reasonable. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

2. Taxation ⇐241(1)

Property used "exclusively for charitable purposes" within statute exempting from taxation under specified circumstances property used exclusively for charitable purposes includes property used exclusively for any facility which is incidental to and reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of such purposes. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Exclusively for Charitable Purposes".

3. Taxation ⇐241(1)

Y.M.C.A. property devoted to dormitory rooms was used "exclusively for charitable purposes" within statute exempting from taxation under specified circumstances property used exclusively for charitable purposes, and such property was exempt under statute notwithstanding the dormitory rooms were rented and returned income. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

4. Taxation ⇐241(1)

Under statute exempting from taxation property used exclusively for charitable and other specified purposes, but precluding exemption if property is used or operated for profit, reference to "profit" covers income derived from a facility which is not correlated with exempt purposes, and does not cover income from a facility which is incidental to and reasonably necessary for accomplishment of exempt purposes. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Profit".

5. Taxation ⇐241(1)

A restaurant, barber shop and tailor shop operated in Y.M.C.A. branch, and available to public as well as to Y.M.C.A. members, and charging standard prices for their respective services in competition with like enterprises in community, were not property used "exclusively for charitable purposes" within statute exempting from taxation under specified circumstances property used exclusively for charitable purposes, notwithstanding money derived therefrom was used exclusively for operational upkeep of Y.M.C.A. and notwithstanding facilities were desirable in promotion of general service plan of Y.M.C.A. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

6. Taxation ⇐241(1)

A store operated in Y.M.C.A. branch, begun as a "gym store" for sale of athletic equipment and clothing pursuant to uniform policy of Y.M.C.A. to provide such merchandise for use in athletics at branches having physical training facilities, was not property used "exclusively for charitable purposes" when store temporarily stocked other items of merchandise as convenience to servicemen who visited branch during wartime, within statute exempting from taxation under specified circumstances property used exclusively for charitable purposes. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

7. Taxation ⇐241(1)

Space in Y.M.C.A. building rented to Selective Service Board was not used "exclusively for charitable purposes" within statute exempting from taxation under specified circumstances property used exclusively for charitable purposes. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

8. Taxation ⇐246

The exemption from taxation granted by Welfare Exemption Law does not extend to a levy imposed under authority of Los Angeles County Flood Control Act. General Laws, Act 4463; Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

Brady & Nossaman and Walter L. Nossaman, all of Los Angeles, for plaintiff-appellant.

Henry C. Clausen, San Francisco, as amici curiae on behalf of plaintiff-appellant.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, Andrew O. Porter, Deputy County Counsel, Ray L. Chesebro, City Attorney, and Louis A. Babior, Deputy City Attorney, all of Los Angeles, for defendants-appellants.

SPENCE, Justice.

Plaintiff, the Young Men's Christian Association of Los Angeles, brought this action to recover certain taxes and assessments paid under protest for the taxable year 1946–1947. The controversy involves the application of the recently enacted welfare exemption law, Cal.Const. art. XIII, § 1c; Rev. & Tax. Code, § 214, to five buildings owned by plaintiff and used in carrying on its work. The county assessor refused to exempt from taxation such portions of plaintiff's buildings as were used for dormitories, restaurant and dining-room accommodations, barber shops, valet shops, a particular type of merchandise store, and office space rented to a Government agency; and, in addition, he deemed each of plaintiff's pieces of property liable for a Los Angeles County Flood Control District assessment.

The cause was tried upon an agreed statement of facts, and by the judgment thereupon entered plaintiff's exemption claims were sustained as to the tax payments made on the disputed portions of its buildings but denied as to the flood control district assessments made against its property. The judgment is assailed by both parties, defendants having appealed from that portion allowing plaintiff a refund of the tax payments, and plaintiff having appealed from that portion disallowing recovery of the flood control district assessments.

Various aspects of the scope of the welfare exemption law in relation to particular claimants seeking the benefits thereof have been discussed in the case of Cedars of Lebanon Hospital v. County of Los Angeles, Cal.Sup., 221 P.2d 31, and reference is made to such opinion for such bearing as it may have on the consideration of the general problem. The parties have resolved their controversy here to turn principally on these points: (1) whether the portions of the buildings in question, as property belonging to plaintiff, concededly a nonprofit corporation, were "used exclusively for religious * * * or charitable purposes" as a basic prerequisite, Const. art. XIII, § 1c; Rev. & Tax. Code, § 214, and (2) the effect of the further proviso that the "property [be] not used or operated by the owner * * * for profit regardless of the purposes to which the profit is devoted." Rev. & Tax. Code, § 214, subd. (3). Upon an analysis of the agreed factual basis of plaintiff's several exemption claims, it appears that plaintiff (1) properly invoked the "welfare exemption" with respect to the tax levy made on the dormitory facilities it furnished in its respective buildings but (2) was not entitled to such exemption with respect to (a) tax levies made on the restaurant and dining-room accommodations, barber shops, valet shops, the particular mechandise store involved, and the office space rented to the Government agency; or (b) flood control district assessments made against its property.

The record identifies the five buildings owned by plaintiff as the Downtown Branch, San Pedro Branch, Hollywood Branch, 28th Street Branch, and East Los Angeles Branch. In each instance exemption was accorded generally to the portions of these buildings devoted to locker rooms, swimming pools, gymnasiums, club rooms, social rooms, classrooms, storage and maintenance rooms; and the parties are in dispute only as to the tax status of the following physical facilities in their respective locations:

(1) Downtown Branch, an eleven-story structure, with basement and sub-basement, and situated in the central business section of Los Angeles: dormitory rooms provided on the sixth to tenth floors; a small barber shop; and a valet shop. These two shops are located in a small adjoining structure, each having entrances from the street and through a court from the lobby of the main building. The valet shop maintains a small room on the basement level in the main building for the performance of its cleaning and pressing services. Both shops serve the public, as well as dormitory residents and Y. M. C. A. members generally. The barber shop is operated by Y. M. C. A. employees, who are paid by plaintiff on the basis of an agreed percentage of the gross receipts. The valet shop is operated by an independent contractor, who pays plaintiff a monthly rental of $100. The charges made by both shops for their services are equivalent to standard commercial prices in the community.

(2) San Pedro Branch, a five-story structure, with a basement, and situated close to the business center and harbor channel of San Pedro: dormitory rooms provided on the third to fifth floors, and also a portion of the second floor; a restaurant on the first floor, a room approximately 1600 square feet in area, with counters and seats accommodating 38 persons and 7 tables serving 28 persons—66 persons in all; Cluverius Hall, a special meeting room on the second floor containing an area of 1800 square feet and used by non-Y.M.C.A. groups, where meals are served to a maximum of 100 people in conjunction with scheduled meetings; a barber shop and a valet shop, each located at the rear of a small court in the interior of the building and reached only through the main lobby; and a small store located in the rear of the first floor, and without a direct street entrance.

The restaurant is operated by Y.M.C.A. employees, and meals are served to the general public, as well as to resident and non-resident Y.M.C.A. members, with a price range of 45¢ to 95¢ for breakfast, and 70¢ to $1.05 for lunch and dinner. In Cluverius Hall meals are served to various civic groups at a charge varying from $1.00 to $1.50 per person, according to the choice of menu. Both the barber shop and the valet shop are open to the public, as well as to dormitory residents and Y.M.C.A. members generally. The barber shop is operated by an independent contractor, who pays plaintiff a weekly rental of $10. The valet shop is operated by a Y.M.C.A. employee, a tailor, whose compensation consists in a fixed percentage of the gross receipts. In both shops standard prices prevail. The small store was started as a "gym store" for the sale of athletic equipment and clothing pursuant to plaintiff's uniform policy to provide such merchandise for use in athletics at all branches having gymnasium, swimming or similar physical training facilities. This particular store was so operated since the opening of the present building in 1926, but during World War II as a convenience to the large number of servicemen visiting the San Pedro Branch, the store began to stock various other items of merchandise, principally toilet articles, drugs, and various kinds of trinkets and curios. This augmented line of purchasable articles was still being offered in the store during 1946, the tax year in question, but apparently was allowed to dwindle in 1947 and 1948, at which time the stock of the store returned to its prewar status as a true "gym store."

(3) Hollywood Branch, a four-story structure and situated in the center of Hollywood: dormitory rooms provided mainly on the third and fourth floors, with a few accommodations on the second floor.

(4) 28th Street Branch, a four-story structure, with a basement, and situated near Central Avenue in a district in Los Angeles populated largely by Negroes: dormitory rooms provided mainly on the third and fourth floors, with some rooms also on the second floor.

(5) East Los Angeles Branch, a two-story structure, with a separate gymnasium building in the rear, and situated in the eastern part of Los Angeles: dormitory rooms provided on the second floor; three office rooms on the first floor, having a total area of 1122 square feet and rented to the Selective Service Board, originally at a rental beginning in 1943 of $25 per month but increased in December, 1945, to $100 per month and so continued until the occupancy of the board was terminated in December, 1946.

Plaintiff follows a general pattern in the operation of the dormitory facilities in its respective branches: In each instance the dormitory area is under the supervision and management of a trained Y. M. C. A. secretary, who also has the additional responsibility of acting as a counsellor and advisor to the branch's residents. Applicants for living quarters are required to fill out a written form of questionnaire giving information as to background, experience, and character of the individual and declaring his agreement with the fundamental purposes of the Y. M. C. A. Each applicant is interviewed by the supervising secretary at the branch and told about the organizational policy of the Y. M. C. A., its general objectives in making available various facilities and activities as part of its regular program, and the prevailing standard of good conduct and moral behavior that must be followed. All accepted applicants for residence are required to become members of the Y. M. C. A. An effort is made to confine dormitory residence to men under forty years of age, but exceptions are made on occasions. Loans are made to those who are without funds, coincident with arrangements for their stay at the branch for a reasonable period of time on credit and until they can get established. The rooms are rented at moderately low rates, consistent with their modest furnishings and limited size, ranging according to the branch from $4.50 to $7.00 per week for singles; $4.50 to $6.50 per week, two in a room; and $3.50 to $5.50 per week, three in a room.

Plaintiff's financial records appear to make no breakdown or allocation of general and administrative overhead expenses pursuant to the various activities or facilities provided at each branch, but the total expenditures thereof are lumped together as against total operating expense. Such accounting procedure shows that plaintiff during its entire existence has functioned at an overall loss, and that the aggregate deficit is discharged yearly by individual contributions and an allowance from the Community Chest. All the original cost of plaintiff's buildings and the furnishings thereof was met by voluntary contributions, and without resort to operating income or receipts. Plaintiff's annual budget makes no allowance for the depreciation of buildings, fixtures or equipment. In view of these accounting practices, and particularly the failure to segregate income and expense items as to specific facilities, it is impossible to determine precisely from the standpoint of profit or loss the financial results of dormitory, restaurant or other designated departmental operations considered separately. However, it is clear that the revenues derived from plaintiff's dormitory facilities as provided at each branch constitute a substantial source of operating income. Furthermore, the most significant of plaintiff's exemption claims involves the dormitory areas in that at least 90% of the total disputed tax assessment in each case is attributable to such residential facilities.

Plaintiff's general object and purpose, as stated in its articles of incorporation, is to promote "the spiritual, moral, mental and physical condition of youth and adults"—to bring them under moral and religious influences, to improve their characters, and to stimulate in them higher ideals of life and conduct. From the agreed statement of facts it appears that plaintiff's "activities include physical education, sports, recreation, teaching of skills, informal educational activities, social and cultural activities, religious and moral instruction and guidance, worship and inspirational occasions." In addition, plaintiff cites certain specialized functions of its respective branches determined in large part by their particular location: Downtown Branch, with its metropolitan administration and facilities for individuals and groups in the central business area who would not be served by any particular outlying Y. M. C. A. branch; San Pedro Branch, with its focus upon the needs and activities of members of the Armed Forces stationed temporarily or permanently in the Harbor district—in fact, known as the "Army and Navy Branch"; Hollywood Branch, with its emphasis upon service and assistance to young men brought to that area in quest of employment with the motion picture and radio industries; 28th Street Branch, with its activities gauged to serve members of the Negro race settled in that locale; and East Los Angeles Branch, with its facilities used primarily in serving members of several minority racial groups located in that area. Plaintiff's general policy is established by a board of directors, and the administrative operations thereunder are supervised by a board of managers functioning at each branch. The members of these respective boards are citizens of the community who serve without compensation. Salaries, of course, are paid to plaintiff's staff of trained secretaries and their assistants in the administration of plaintiff's policies, as well as to the personnel employed by plaintiff in maintaining the various branches and supplying the services there rendered.

Plaintiff contends that the above-mentioned facilities on which it seeks the welfare exemption are all being used for the purpose of carrying on its broad, diversified program as a religious and charitable institution, organized on a non-profit basis to serve the moral, mental, and physical needs of young men and aid in the development of their characters for the general benefit of society, and that as integral parts of the single, overall Y. M. C. A. program in the advancement of its fundamental objectives, all such operations qualify within the law's requirement of "property used exclusively for religious * * * or charitable purposes." Defendants, on the other hand, maintain that the disputed facilities are used for commercial revenue-producing purposes, and the fact that "plaintiff is a charitable corporation and devotes the profit, if any, from [its] business operations to charitable purposes * * * is not sufficient to entitle it to tax exemption on * * * purely commercial enterprises." As heretofore stated, we have concluded that plaintiff's position is well taken with respect to the portions of its buildings devoted to dormitory accommodations as constituting facilities which are incidental to and reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of its charitable and religious purposes, but that the other disputed facilities and undertakings by plaintiff, while undoubtedly valuable in its general operational plan, do not appear to meet the conditions set forth in the welfare exemption law.

[1, 2] As discussed in the opinion this day filed in the case of Cedars of Lebanon Hospital v. County of Los Angeles, Cal. Sup., 221 P.2d 31, in connection with the claims of certain hospitals seeking the benefits of the welfare exemption, the rule of strict construction generally applicable to tax exemption laws must prevail here, but adherence to such legal principle does not require that the narrowest possible meaning be given to the exempting language if it would establish too severe a standard and defeat the apparent object of the law. Rather the construction of the law, though strict, must also be reasonable. To this end it would appear that the exemption of property "used exclusively for * * * charitable purposes", like the exemption of property "used exclusively for religious [or] hospital * * * purposes," should be held to include property used exclusively for any facility which is incidental to and reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of such purposes. Accordingly, plaintiff's respective facilities and activities must be examined as a whole, as well as separately, in determining the qualification of each portion of its properties for a tax exempt status.

[3] The dormitory accommodations furnished at plaintiff's respective branches appear to be a reasonably necessary facility in carrying out plaintiff's general program and to constitute a base of operations from which radiate its commonly recognized influences and teachings directed to the elevation and betterment of young men and boys. Through operation of its dormitories, plaintiff makes available safe, clean, wholesome living quarters and environment —particularly for young men who are away from home and in need of low-cost housing within their means while they endeavor to establish themselves in the community—and likewise provides complete recreational facilities as well as opportunities to participate in activities intended to promote moral and spiritual well-being. Functioning as a non-sectarian institution and rendering its services without discrimination as to creed or race in line with its endeavors to inculcate Christian standards of character and conduct in the young men coming within its benevolent influences, plaintiff summarizes its activities to include "physical education, sports, recreation, teaching of skills, informal educational activities, social and cultural activities, religious and moral instruction and guidance, worship and inspirational occasions." All applicants for lodging in any of plaintiff's branches are required to complete a questionnaire setting forth their background and experience, and declaring the desire to "become a member and support [the] aims and purposes" of the Young Men's Christian Association as a worldwide Christian Fellowship, dedicated to developing and improving the spiritual, social, mental and physical life of youth and adults in accordance with [Christian] spirit and teachings."

Defendants argue that even though plaintiff's maintenance of dormitory facilities be regarded as aiding in the accomplishment of its fundamental purposes, such property also serves in another capacity through satisfying a housing need for the residents at a prescribed rental, a consideration which is not only commercial in character as opposed to an extension of charity, but which likewise precludes classification as property "used exclusively for * * * charitable purposes." As authority for their argument defendants rely heavily on the decision reached in Young Men's Christian Ass'n of Germantown v. City of Philadelphia, 1936, 323 Pa. 401, 187 A. 204, 207. In that case the tax exemption applied to "all * * * associations and institutions of learning, benevolence, or charity, with the grounds thereto annexed and necessary for the occupancy and enjoyment of the same, founded, endowed, and maintained by public or private charity". (Emphasis added.) The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania analyzed the dormitory accommodations as there provided at moderate rental rates to constitute no more than the operation of a competitive hotel or residential facility, and as such commercial enterprise, not entitled to the tax exemption. However, these precise factors are to be noted as influencing that decision: (1) the concept of charity as confined solely to the relief of the needy and destitute, 187 A. 209, rather than comprehending as well activities which are humanitarian in nature and rendered for the general improvement and betterment of mankind, though the recipients of such benefits may be able to pay at least in part therefor, In re Estate of Henderson, 1941, 17 Cal.2d 853, 857–858, 112 P.2d 605; Scripps Memorial Hospital, Inc., v. California Employment Comm., 1944, 24 Cal.2d 669, 676, 151 P.2d 109, 155 A.L.R. 360; also Y.M.C.A. of City of Lincoln v. Lancaster County, 1921, 106 Neb. 105, 182 N.W. 593, 595, 34 A.L.R. 1060; Springfield Y.M.C.A. v. Board of Assessors, 1933, 284 Mass. 1, 187 N.E. 104, 106; People v. Y.M.C.A. of Chicago, 1936, 365 Ill. 118, 6 N.E.2d 166, 169; Miami Battlecreek v. Lummus, 1939, 140 Fla. 718, 192 So. 211, 218; Missouri Goodwill Industries v. Gruner, 1948, 357 Mo. 647, 210 S.W.2d 38, 40; People ex rel. Provident Loan Society v. Chambers, 1949, 196 Misc. 367, 88 N.Y.S.2d 459, 467; (2) the exemption qualification premised on the narrow consideration of whether the maintenance and operation of the dormitory rooms were clearly "necessary for the occupancy and enjoyment" of that part of the Y.M.C.A. building "in which its work of charity or benevolence [was] carried on", 187 A. 214, rather than focused on the use of such dormitory facilities as a reasonably necessary and integrated factor in furtherance of the declared corporate purposes of the association; and (3) the reliance placed on certain Missouri cases, State ex rel. St. Louis Young Men's Christian Ass'n v. Gehner, 1928, 320 Mo. 1172, 11 S.W.2d 30, 38; St. Louis Y.M.C.A. v. Gehner, 1932, 329 Mo. 1007, 47 S.W.2d 776, 81 A.L.R. 1449, where under a constitutional provision exempting from taxation buildings "used exclusively for religious worship * * * or for purposes purely charitable", dormitory accommodations provided in Y.M.C.A. buildings were held taxable because serving a commercial purpose rather than used exclusively for charitable purposes within the purport of the exemption, 11 S.W.2d 37–38; 47 S.W.2d 778, a construction of the exempting language which has been expressly disapproved in later Missouri cases as too rigid in principle and inconsistent with the policy of the law. Salvation Army v. Hoehn, 1945, 354 Mo. 107, 188 S.W.2d 826, 830–831; Missouri Goodwill Industries v. Gruner, 1948, supra, 357 Mo. 647, 210 S.W.2d 38, 40.

It is manifest from the record here that plaintiff's conduct of dormitory facilities at its respective branches correlates wholly with its purpose of providing for the welfare of young men and boys of moderate earning capacity and income, through the maintenance of lodging quarters at a minimum cost so that they may have a place of study, recreation and abode, under wholesome and decent influences and with proper protection and guidance designed to foster good citizenship and inculcate Christian ideals and character. Plaintiff's method of operating the dormitory sections of its buildings indicates the close interrelation between dormitory residence and plaintiff's basic purpose to furnish clean and elevated surroundings for young men and boys—and a lapse from the prescribed standards constitutes cause for expulsion. Such circumstances effectively serve to distinguish plaintiff's dormitory operations from a commercial hotel enterprise and indicate them to be properly classifiable in the light of plaintiff's practical charity work through serving the public welfare—in a sense dovetailing with and rounding out plaintiff's fundamental religious and charitable purposes. As so analyzed, the fact that plaintiff's dormitories, as a secondary consideration, also serve the residential purposes of the occupants does not destroy the effect of their dominant purpose as property "used exclusively for religious * * * or charitable purposes" within the contemplation of the welfare tax exemption law.

Similar considerations prevailed in opinions this day filed with regard to the tax exempt status of a nurses' home operated as a necessary adjunct of a hospital, Cedars of Lebanon Hospital v. County of Los Angeles, Cal.Sup., 221 P.2d 31, and the lodgings of priests in effectuating the operation of a religious retreat house. Serra Retreat v. County of Los Angeles, Cal.Sup., 221 P.2d 59. Like reasoning has been applied in other jurisdictions where the exemption of dormitory facilities maintained by Y.M.C.A. and similarly organized institutions has been sought under substantially the same tax exempting language as is here involved, Y.M.C.A. of City of Lincoln v. Lancaster County, supra, 1921, 106 Neb. 105, 182 N.W. 593; In re Syracuse Y.M.C.A., 1925, 126 Misc. 431, 213 N.Y.S. 35; Young Women's Christian Ass'n v. Baumann, 1939, 344 Mo. 898, 130 S.W.2d 499; Salvation Army v. Hoehn, supra, 1945, 354 Mo. 107, 188 S.W.2d 826, and the Germantown Y.M.C.A. case on which defendants mainly rely is distinguishable not only on the basis of the precise exempting language there involved as above noted, but also as contrary to the modern trend of authority.

Defendants further argue that since plaintiff rents the dormitory rooms at its respective branches, their tax exemption would run counter to the statutory provision that the property in question "not [be] used or operated by the owner * * * for profit regardless of the purposes to which the profit is devoted." Rev. & Tax. Code, § 214, subd. (3). However, such contention misconstrues the purport of the stated prohibition. It is true that plaintiff requires its dormitory residents to pay a moderate rental for the rooms in keeping with the modest scale of furnishings, and so realizes income which is used to defray operating expenses. But under the stipulated facts, it does not appear that there was any real profit motive in such undertaking as integrated into plaintiff's recognized religious and charitable objectives. The housing accommodations are rendered at a minimum charge and while plaintiff's method of bookkeeping only classifies receipts and expenditures as total items in relation to all operations at the respective branches, without breakdown or allocation among any of the particular activities or facilities as provided, it is apparent from plaintiff's accounting records that at each branch the amount of revenue derived from its functions is substantially less than the sum of expenditures, with the difference met by voluntary contributions and a Community Chest allowance. That such operating deficit prevails with respect to the dormitory portions as a segregable department in plaintiff's buildings cannot be disputed when it is remembered that at some of plaintiff's branches, as above noted these facilities constitute the only additional service feature offered and while, wherever furnished, they are a main source of revenue, nevertheless the branch as a whole carries on its work at a net financial loss. Moreover, a further factor affecting the balance of plaintiff's receipts against its expenses in regard to its dormitory facilities is plaintiff's frequent practice of furnishing housing accommodations to young men who apply for lodging though they are without funds to pay even a moderate rental therefor, and arrangements for their limited stay are made on a loan basis. Often the loans are not repaid, and to that extent plaintiff suffers an additional financial loss.

[4] Furthermore, the mere fact that the exempt institution may have income or earnings from its property is not necessarily decisive in determining the tax status of its property or any portion thereof. Both the constitutional provision and the statute contemplate that the exempt institution may have income and even "net earnings" without losing the benefit of its exemption, provided such earnings are derived from the normal pursuit of its exempt purposes and provided further that all other conditions, enumerated in § 214 of the Revenue and Taxation Code, are met. Therefore, income derived by plaintiff here from dormitories maintained for its members in the normal pursuit of its exempt purposes, that is to say, from a facility which is incidental to and reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of its exempt purposes, is to be distinguished from income derived from a facility which is not so correlated with its exempt purposes. It is income in the latter sense that the welfare exemption condition, reasonably construed, should be held to cover in its reference to the receipt of "profit" as precluding property so used from attaining a tax exempt status even though such "profit" be exclusively devoted to the exempt purposes. Analogous considerations illustrating this distinction prevailed in the case of San Gabriel Cemetery Ass'n v. County of Los Angeles, 1942, 49 Cal.App. 2d 624, 122 P.2d 330, 331 where in analyzing the purport of article XIII, § 1b of the state Constitution, exempting from taxation "property used or held exclusively for" burial purposes and "no part thereof * * used or held for profit", the "financial benefit that accrue[d] to the association through the sale of burial space at a price in excess of its cost where such gain [was] used for the upkeep of the cemetery property" was not deemed to involve the receipt of "profit" so as to defeat the tax exempt character of the association's cemetery property. 49 Cal.App.2d page 626, 122 P.2d at page 332. Accordingly, the court distinguished such situation from that existing in the case of Cypress Lawn Cemetery Ass'n v. City and County of San Francisco, 1931, 211 Cal. 387, 295 P. 813, where the association's devotion of "the entire income derived from [its operation of a] hotel * * * to the care and maintenance of" its cemetery, 211 Cal. at page 390, 295 P. at page 814, income received from a differing use of property than that prescribed by the constitutional provision—was held "not [to] work an exemption of the hotel proper." 211 Cal. at page 391, 295 P. at page 814. To like effect see opinion this day filed in the consolidated hospital cases, Cedars of Lebanon Hospital v. County of Los Angeles, Cal. Sup., 221 P.2d 31, with reference to the operation of a "thrift shop" on premises of one of the hospitals, and the use of the income therefrom for "hospital * * * or charitable purposes"; also see Y.M.C.A. of City of Lincoln v. Lancaster County, supra, 1921, 106 Neb. 105, 182 N.W. 593, 596; Young Women's Christian Ass'n v. Baumann, supra, 1939, 344 Mo. 898, 130 S.W. 2d 499, 502. In line with the views hereinabove expressed, plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of the welfare exemption law with respect to the portions of its respective branches used as dormitory accommodations.

There now remains for consideration the other disputed facilities furnished by plaintiff at specific branches and claimed to meet the basic requirement of "property used exclusively for religious * * * or charitable purposes" within the meaning of the welfare exemption law: (1) At the San Pedro Branch, the restaurant operated by Y.M.C.A. employees but open to the public as well as to plaintiff's members, resident and non-resident, and serving meals at standard charges prevailing in the community; Cluverius Hall, the meeting room where outside groups up to a maximum of 100 may be served meals; the barber shop leased to outside parties at a rental of $10 per week, and the valet shop operated by Y.M.C.A. employees on a gross receipt percentage basis, both shops open to the public and with charges at regular commercial rates; and the "gym store," which at the time here pertinent had expanded its stock of merchandise to include toilet articles, trinkets, curios, and like items over and above its regular line of athletic equipment and clothing, and was open to the public as well as to Y.M.C.A. members; (2) at the Downtown Branch, the barber and valet shops—here the former operated by Y.M.C.A. employees on a gross receipt percentage basis and the latter leased to outside parties at a rental of $100 per month—both shops open to the public and charges for the respective services made at commercial rates; and (3) at the East Los Angeles Branch, the office space rented to the Selective Service Board at a rental of $100 per month.

With reference to these facilities as located at the mentioned branches, plaintiff takes the position that they not only function primarily as additional services for the benefit of its dormitory residents, but they materially assist plaintiff in making its entire plan attractive to young men as well as promote public interest and awareness of plaintiff's general activities, thereby strengthening and extending plaintiff's moral and uplifting influences in the community. Relative to the restaurant, plaintiff argues that the meal service not only accommodates the dormitory residents, their relatives and friends, but likewise brings to this particular branch such members of the public as choose to come so that it functions as a community service—an added facility which, if established at other branches, would redound to their great advantage in the carrying out of the general program; that consistent with its performance of practical charitable work, credit for meals is extended to needy individuals, who sometimes fail to repay the amount of their obligation in this regard; that outside groups are encouraged to meet at plaintiff's branch and participate in its recreational program if there is a place where such groups can get together at mealtime; and that plaintiff has refused to lease the restaurant facility because it wanted to keep control of its operation and maintain the meal service on the same price level in harmony with its basic purposes. In regard to Cluverius Hall, plaintiff notes that it is the only place in the community of San Pedro where there are facilities suitable for serving meals to civic organization groups at a reasonable cost and, as such, it constitutes a public service and is valuable in promoting favorable public relations. As to the tailor and barber shop services, plaintiff maintains that they are provided primarily as an incident to the dormitory facilities—accommodating in the main the dormitory residents, to a considerably lesser extent plaintiff's non-resident members, and only a relatively small portion of the general public; that the public is allowed to avail itself of these particular services only because the demands therefor on the part of plaintiff's members, resident and non-resident, are not sufficient to require their full-time use. In relation to the expanded inventory of the "gym store" as precluding its tax exempt status, plaintiff calls attention to the fact that such condition was only temporary to meet a wartime need on the part of members of the Armed Forces visiting the San Pedro Branch and whom plaintiff particularly wished to accommodate as part of its basic objectives in serving young men; that the added items of merchandise have been discontinued as the need therefor disappeared, and the "gym store" in question has returned to the uniform policy prevailing with respect to other gym stores operated by plaintiff, limited to the sale of athletic equipment and clothing for use in the sports and recreational activities pursued at the various branches. And finally with regard to the office rooms rented to the Selective Service Board, plaintiff emphasizes that such arrangement was temporary and "somewhat involuntary" in that the accommodation was extended to the draft board upon request and following its eviction from certain office space previously occupied in a public school building; that such use of its property, having to do with young men, "had a rather accidental relationship to the basic activities of the Y.M. C.A."; that in any event it was discontinued as of December, 1946, and in the absence of these "special circumstances," "exemption could not be allowed as to this item."

[5] But conceding the praiseworthy motives underlying the establishment of these respective facilities as outlined by plaintiff, it must be remembered that the test for the welfare exemption is not the number of good purposes to which plaintiff's property may be put nor the amount of benefit that may be derived therefrom by plaintiff's members as well as the general public, but whether the property may reasonably be regarded as "exclusively used" for exempt purposes. Under the agreed facts here, the conclusion is inescapable that the restaurant, as well as the tailor and barber shops, all available to the public as well as to plaintiff's members, and charging standard prices for their respective services in competition with like enterprises maintained in the community, are largely commercial in character and properly classifiable as business ventures. That the money derived therefrom may be used exclusively for plaintiff's operational upkeep as a charitable organization, Cypress Lawn Cemetery Ass'n v. City and County of San Francisco, supra, 1931, 211 Cal. 387, 390, 295 P. 813, or that such facilities may be desirable in the promotion of plaintiff's general service plan does not alter the fact that they involve the use of portions of plaintiff's property for facilities which are not merely incidental to and reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of exempt purposes. Y. M. C. A. of City of Lincoln v. Lancaster County, supra, 1921, 106 Neb. 105, 182 N.W. 593, 596. It is true, as plaintiff contends, that in the last-cited case the restaurant facility maintained on the Y. M. C. A. property and held to constitute "a commercial enterprise" so as not to be tax exempt, was rented to outside parties rather than operated by Y. M. C. A. employees as is the situation here. Nevertheless the absence of such consideration alone does not establish the propriety of plaintiff's exemption claim on this particular facility in view of its service of the general public and the basic competitive nature of its operation in relation to similar business in the community that is taxable. Y. W. C. A. v. City of New York, 1926, 217 App.Div. 406, 216 N.Y.S. 248, 252–253. The restaurant as here conducted is in nowise integrated into any educational or training program on the part of plaintiff in the sense that its members prepared the meals incident to the learning of the art of cooking as a gainful occupation, such as was a material consideration in the case of Young Women's Christian Ass'n v. Baumann, supra, 1939, 344 Mo. 898, 130 S.W.2d 499, 502, for the exemption of the cafeteria there involved.

[6, 7] The same essential competitive, commercial features prevail with respect to plaintiff's tailor and barber shops, whether rented to outside parties or operated by its employees, so as to deprive these facilities of a tax exempt status. The fact that the restaurant and the shops may be maintained at a net financial loss or serve primarily plaintiff's own members does not determine their tax exempt status, for use of the property is the criterion of the welfare exemption law, not its self-sustaining ability or the precise extent of its service to the public at large. Likewise commercial in aspect was the expanded "gym store," with a competitive line of merchandise extending beyond the requirements of plaintiff's athletic and recreational facilities. While such expanded inventory was temporary, so long as such store continued to serve the general public, the portion of the property occupied by it was not entitled to an exempt status. And finally, consistent with the recognized rule that property of such an institution as the Y. M. C. A. or Y. W. C. A. "leased or rented for business purposes is generally held not exempt from taxation" under such exemption law as is here involved, "although the proceeds derived in [that] manner are applied to the purposes of the organization", 51 Am.Jur. § 642, p. 611; 34 A.L.R. 1072; 81 A.L.R. 1457, the rented office space to the Selective Service Board cannot be held tax exempt.

[8] Turning now to plaintiff's claim to the benefits of the welfare exemption law in relation to the flood control district assessments, plaintiff cannot prevail in view of the limited scope of the law to exemption from "taxation" and the distinguishable nature of an assessment levy as fully discussed in the opinion this day filed in the consolidated hospital cases, Cedars of Lebanon Hospital v. County of Los Angeles, Cal.Sup., 221 P.2d 31, to which reference is hereby made in disposition of this issue between the parties.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with instructions to the trial court to proceed in accordance with the views hereinabove expressed. The parties will bear their own costs on this appeal.

GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS, CARTER and TRAYNOR, JJ., concur.

SCHAUER, Justice (concurring).

I concur in the judgment. I am in accord with the conclusions of the majority as to the non-exempt character of the shops, restaurants and property leased to the government agency, and as to the inapplicability of the welfare exemption to the flood control assessments.

As to the holding that the dormitory property is exempt from taxation, I concur solely on the ground that it is apparent from the agreed statement of facts that no portion of such property was consistently and intentionally operated so as to produce a profit. As stated by the majority (221 P.2d 54), "That [an] operating deficit prevails with respect to the dormitory portions as a segregable department in plaintiff's buildings cannot be disputed when it is remembered that at some of plaintiff's branches * * * these facilities constitute the only additional service feature offered and while, wherever furnished, they are a main source of revenue, nevertheless the branch as a whole carries on its work at a net financial loss."

If a portion of the dormitory property were operated under a policy of charging more rent than the cost of furnishing shelter, then in my view such property would not be tax exempt even though the profits were devoted to defray the expense of operating other dormitory property at a loss. To hold otherwise would not seem to me to give to the tax exemption statute a "strict but reasonable" construction; rather, with excessive liberality to the selected taxpayer, such holding would effectively delete from the statute the clause, "regardless of the purposes to which the profit is devoted." As I understand the majority opinion, it would permit such a holding. For example, the majority say (221 P.2d 54), "income derived by plaintiff here from dormitories maintained for its members in the normal pursuit of its exempt purposes, that is to say, from a facility which is incidental to and reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of its exempt purposes, is to be distinguished from income derived from a facility which is not so correlated with its exempt purposes. It is income in the latter sense that the welfare exemption condition, reasonably construed, should be held to cover in its reference to the receipt of 'profit' as precluding property so used from attaining a tax exempt status even though such 'profit' be exclusively devoted to the exempt purposes."

The case of San Gabriel Cemetery Ass'n v. County of Los Angeles, 1942, 49 Cal. App.2d 624, 122 P.2d 330, here relied upon by the majority (221 P.2d 54) but distinguished by them in Cedars of Lebanon Hospital v. County of Los Angeles, Cal.Sup., 221 P.2d 31, was concerned with the meaning of the phrase "used or held for profit" in section 1b of article XIII of the California Constitution, which exempts "all property used or held exclusively for the burial or other permanent deposit of the human dead or for the care, maintenance or upkeep of such property or such dead, except as used or held for profit." There, cemetery lots were sold at more than cost, but the excess proceeds were used for upkeep, advertising and the purchase of more lots. It was held that such use of the lots and the proceeds of sale was within the use permitted by the exemption clause of the Constitution. In my view the clause "regardless of the purposes to which the profit is devoted" was placed in section 214 of the Revenue and Taxation Code to prevent a similar construction where, for example, hospital beds are operated at more than cost and the proceeds are devoted to hospital uses. Hence, the cited case neither requires nor permits a construction of the present exemption statute which would exempt dormitory property operated for profit even if such profit is used to defray the expense of operating other dormitory property at a loss.

SHENK, Justice (concurring and dissenting).

I concur in the opinion and judgment insofar as it holds that the dormitories in question are tax-exempt and that all of the properties are taxable under the Los Angeles County Flood Control District Act, Gen.Laws, Act 4463. But I do not agree that the other properties are not exempt from the general tax. My dissent in the main is based on the views expressed in my concurring and dissenting opinion in Cedars of Lebanon Hospital v. County of Los Angeles, Cal.Sup., 221 P.2d 31.

The conclusions of non-exemption are said to result from the partially commercial nature of the restaurant, Cluverius Hall, barber and valet shops, a small merchandising department featuring gymnasium supplies (in that respect concededly exempt) but temporarily selling trinkets to army men, and a space temporarily used by the Selective Service Board during wartime activities at a nominal rental. It is declared that adherence to legal principle does not require that the narrowest possible meaning be given to the exempting language if it would establish too severe a standard and defeat the apparent object of the law. In my opinion the result in this case does what the statement purportedly attempts to avoid. None of the properties was held as investment property with profitmaking as the objective. As in the case of the dormitories, so in the conduct of the other services, there does not appear to be, as said in the opinion, "any real profit motive in such undertaking as integrated into plaintiff's recognized religious and charitable objective." The facts alleged in connection with these, as with other activities, show that there is no profit, and that deficits are met by voluntary contributions and community chest allowances. No contention is made that if the various services were available solely to "Y" members the property would be taxable. But the policy of the "Y" to make its influence as far-reaching as possible renders it impractical to close the doors of its departments to the public generally. So long as the basic conception of need to its members is present, in the absence of any real profit motive, the fact of incidental availability to the public should not be held to convert the service into a commercial venture and thus beyond the application of the exempting language. These services were "integrated" with the exempt purposes, and the property should likewise be held to be exempt. As indicated in my opinion in the Cedars of Lebanon case, the integration with the exempt purposes distinguishes the facts from Cypress Lawn Cemetery Ass'n v. City and County of San Francisco, 211 Cal. 387, 295 P. 813, where the cemetery association conducted a hotel for profit, which was a use clearly dissociated from the exempt cemetery purpose.

The space rented to the selective draft board should likewise be deemed exempt for the reason that this temporary use of the property otherwise devoted to religious and charitable purposes was in essence a governmental "command performance", without any profit motive, and it does not appear from the facts alleged that a profit was derived by virtue of the nominal rental received.

The arguments presented by the plaintiff and outlined in the majority opinion serve to support a conclusion that all of the properties here involved were used exclusively for religious and charitable purposes.

35 Cal.2d 755

SERRA RETREAT v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY.
L. A. 20612.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.

Aug. 18, 1950.

Serra Retreat, a nonprofit corporation, sued the County of Los Angeles to recover taxes paid under protest for the tax year 1946–1947. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Alfred L. Bartlett, J., rendered a judgment adverse to defendant, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Spence, J., held that portion of retreat house used as living quarters for priests and lay brothers who attended to spiritual and temporal needs of laymen making the retreat was used "exclusively for religious or charitable purposes" within Welfare Tax Exemption Law.

Judgment affirmed.

Prior opinion 206 P.2d 940.

1. Taxation ⇐204(2, 4)

The Welfare Tax Exemption Law must be strictly construed, and institution seeking benefit of law must clearly show that institution comes within terms of law, but law is not to receive so rigid and narrow an interpretation of exemption language as to defeat apparent design of lawmakers. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

2. Taxation ⇐244

Property used "exclusively for religious or charitable purposes," within Welfare Tax Exemption Law includes any property of religious or charitable entity which is used exclusively for any facility which is incidental to and reasonably necessary for accomplishment of religious or charitable purposes of entity. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Exclusively for Religious or Charitable Purposes".

3. Taxation ⇐244

Portion of retreat house used as living quarters for priests and lay brothers who attended to spiritual and temporal needs of laymen making retreat was used "exclusively for religious or charitable purposes" within Welfare Tax Exemption Law, where presence of priests and lay brothers was necessary to conduct and operation of religious and charitable activities of retreat, and was necessary to spiritual and temporal needs of laymen using facilities of retreat. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, and Andrew O. Porter, Deputy County Counsel, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Joseph Scott and J. Howard Ziemann, Los Angeles, for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice.

Plaintiff brought this action to recover certain taxes paid under protest for the tax year 1946-1947. The question to be determined is the tax status of that portion of plaintiff's building, a retreat house, used as living quarters for four priests and six lay brothers who attend to the spiritual and temporal needs of laymen making the retreats. Plaintiff relies on the welfare tax exemption extended to "property used exclusively for religious * * * or charitable purposes." Cal. Const. art. XIII, § 1c; Rev. & Tax. Code, § 214. The trial court sustained the exemption claim and overruled defendant's general demurrer to plaintiff's complaint. From the judgment accordingly entered in favor of plaintiff, defendant has appealed.

This case presents a problem somewhat similar to that discussed in the opinion this day filed in six consolidated hospital cases. Cedars of Lebanon Hospital v. County of Los Angeles, Cal.Sup., 221 P.2d 31, relative to the welfare exemption of hospital property used for nurses' homes and the housing of other alleged essential personnel. The considerations there determinative that such property was "used exclusively for * * * hospital * * * purposes" within the concept of the welfare exemption likewise here prevail in support of plaintiff's claim to the exemption benefit. Thus it affirmatively appears from the allegations of plaintiff's complaint, which were admitted by the demurrer thereto, that use of the portion of the property for living accommodations for its priests and lay brothers is a use for a facility which is incidental to and reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of religious and charitable purposes. The trial court therefore properly awarded to plaintiff the tax relief here sought.

As appears from the complaint plaintiff, Serra Retreat, is a California religious corporation organized, owned and operated exclusively for religious and charitable purposes, and not for profit; no part of its net earnings, if any there be, inures to the benefit of any person or individual. It has been duly exempted from federal and state income, corporation, franchise, gift, estate, inheritance, social security and unemployment insurance taxes, and it has qualified as an institution entitled to welfare exemption status under the laws of this state. Rev. & Tax. Code, §§ 214, 251, 254, 254.5 and 259.5. The property known as Serra Retreat consists of a single edifice—a retreat house—which is allegedly operated "for the sole and exclusive purpose of dispensing charity and providing a place of religious reflection to which all persons regardless of race, color or creed may come to spend time" in religious meditation and to make a "layman's religious retreat" for the purpose of gaining "spiritual benefits and improvement of character." A layman's retreat lasts for "fifty hours," during which time "religious exercises and instructions are conducted by the Franciscan Fathers" and for the entire period "it is required as part of the religious activity that all retreatants remain constantly on the property, without radios, newspapers, telephone calls or visitors, and that they keep complete and absolute silence so as to be able to meditate upon the religious instructions and exercises without distraction or interruption." Retreats are regularly given over weekends as well as at various times during the week, and the retreat house is "open to the public at any and all times for use as a place of religious worship and meditation." No charge is made for the use of the retreat house or for the board and room received by anyone in connection therewith; rather as a religious institution, it "is supported entirely by voluntary, confidential offerings."

The retreat house consists of a two-story and basement building with housing accommodations for fifty-five lay retreatants, four Roman Catholic Franciscan priests, and six Franciscan lay brothers; in addition to chapel, library, kitchen, dining-rooms, laundry and service quarters. It is further alleged that the presence of said priests and lay brothers on the retreat property is "essential, indispensable and necessary" in carrying out the regular retreat schedule—in that (1) the "sermons, meditations and religious services are given and conducted by said priests alternately," who "live on [the retreat] property so as to participate in and prepare and be available for" the prescribed religious activities in ministering to "the spiritual needs of" the lay retreatants; and (2) all "cooking, housekeeping, laundry, garden and maintenance work in and around [the] retreat house" is done by said lay brothers in caring for "the temporal needs of" the lay retreatants using the retreat facilities. Neither the priests nor the lay brothers receive any "remuneration whatsoever for their services excepting board, room and maintenance," and all "work under a vow of property." It is further alleged that the retreat property as a whole has been "irrevocably dedicated to religious or charitable purposes." Rev. & Tax. Code, § 214, subd. (6).

Defendant has recognized plaintiff as a qualifying non-profit religious institution under the welfare exemption law, but it has segregated plaintiff's property in making the tax levy thereon. Thus defendant granted the exemption on 78 per cent of the retreat house, designated as "open to the laymen"—"the chapel, library, dining-room, kitchen, laundry, service quarters and housing accommodations for 55 laymen"—and denied the exemption of the remaining 22 per cent of the building because "used as permanent housing" for the aforesaid priests and lay brothers, the retreat personnel. But such distinction does not comport with the design of the welfare exemption as analyzed in relation to the undisputed facts in this case.

[1, 2] As discussed in the opinion this day filed in the six consolidated hospital cases, Cedars of Lebanon Hospital v. County of Los Angeles, Cal.Sup., 221 P.2d 31, the rule of strict construction applies to the welfare exemption law and the institution seeking its benefit must clearly show that it comes within the terms thereof; but adherence to this rule does not require so rigid and narrow an interpretation of the exempting language as to defeat the apparent design of the lawmakers. In short, there must be a strict but reasonable construction of this law as applied to the particular facts at hand. To this point it would appear that the exemption of property "used exclusively for religious * * * or charitable purposes" should be held to include any property of the religious or charitable entity which is used exclusively for any facility which is incidental to and reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of religious or charitable purposes. The integrated activities as a whole must be examined in determining the tax status of property for the welfare exemption.

As support for its denial of the exemption on that portion of plaintiff's property used for housing the priests and lay brothers, defendant calls attention to the fact that while there is some conflict of opinion, the weight of authority sustains the rule that a parsonage or rectory owned by a church society or religious body, and occupied as a residence by the pastor or corresponding church dignitary, are not exempt as property "used for religious purposes." Annos: 13 A.L.R. 1196; 168 A.L.R. 1247. The cases generally fall into these main categories: (1) those considering a differing law in that the exemption of church property was confined to "places of religious worship" or to "houses of public worship"; (2) those involving an express statutory limitation as to amount of exemption for parsonages and buildings of that character, which direct provision precluded consideration on the additional ground that they constituted property "used for religious purposes"; or (3) those where the determination rested upon an analysis of the particular facts affecting the exemption of the church property in question so as to show that the use of the property for the parsonage or similar building was not a use for a facility which was incidental to and reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of the religious purposes of the church. The present case presents a different problem in that it does not concern an exemption provision in favor of churches, such as § 1½, article XIII, of the California Constitution. Thus our constitutional provision exempting churches from taxation limits the benefit to "buildings * * * used solely and exclusively for religious worship," while the later enacted welfare exemption law is described as "in addition to such [church] exemptions," Cal. Const. art XIII, § 1c, and so, in evidence of a broader concept, refers to property "used exclusively for religious * * * purposes." Ibid., Rev. & Tax. Code, § 214.

[3] But the determinative factor here sustaining the propriety of the welfare tax exemption is the alleged institutional necessity for the provision of living quarters on the retreat property for the essential personnel. So significant are the allegations in the complaint that the "presence on [plaintiff's] property of [the] priests and lay-brothers is essential, indispensable and necessary to the conduct and operation of [the] religious and charitable activities of [the] Serra Retreat," and that their living on said property is "essential and necessary" to the "spiritual" and "temporal needs," respectively, of "the laymen using the facilities of said institution." These allegations are admitted by defendant's demurrer to the complaint, and the conclusion is inescapable that the portion of plaintiff's building used to furnish housing accommodations for the essential retreat personnel is properly classifiable as property "used exclusively for religious * * * purposes." As so viewed, plaintiff's provision of living quarters for its needed retreat personnel as an institutional necessity—a facility incidental to and reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of its religious and charitable purposes—is wholly distinguishable from the parsonage cases where the provision of housing for the pastor or minister on church property does not stem from claims of institutional necessity as contrasted with mere considerations of residential convenience. It therefore follows that the trial court properly concluded that all of plaintiff's retreat house was entitled to the welfare exemption, and correctly overruled defendant's general demurrer to plaintiff's complaint.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, CARTER, TRAYNOR and SCHAUER, JJ., concur.

35 Cal.2d 779

PASADENA HOSPITAL ASS'N, Limited, v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

L. A. 20609.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.

Aug. 18, 1950.

Pasadena Hospital Association, Limited, a nonprofit corporation, sued the County of Los Angeles to recover taxes paid under protest for the tax year 1946–1947. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Alfred L. Bartlett, J., rendered a judgment adverse to plaintiff, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court, Spence, J., held that plaintiff had not irrevocably dedicated plaintiff's property within statute exemption from taxation property used exclusively for hospital purposes if property is irrevocably dedicated to religious, charitable, scientific, or hospital purposes.

Judgment affirmed.

Prior opinion 206 P.2d 936.

1. Taxation ⇐241(2)

Whether an "irrevocable dedication" has been made, within statute exemption from taxation property used exclusively for hospital purposes if property is irrevocably dedicated to religious, charitable, scientific, or hospital purposes, is ordinarily to be determined by ascertaining powers of owner with respect to assets, including properties and proceeds thereof. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214 and subd. (6); Const. art. 13, § 1c.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Irrevocable Dedication".

2. Taxation ⇐241(1, 2), 242(2), 243, 244

Where plaintiff's powers regarding hospital assets could only be ascertained from articles of incorporation of plaintiff, and articles permitted present use of assets for purposes not exempt from taxation under Welfare Exemption Law, and permitted ultimate and permanent diversion of all of plaintiff's assets to nonexempt purposes, there was no "irrevocable dedication" to exempt purposes within statute exempting from taxation property used exclusively for hospital purposes if property is irrevocably dedicated to religious, charitable, scientific, or hospital purposes. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214, and subd. (6); Const. art. 13, § 1c.

3. Taxation ⇐241(1, 2), 242(2), 243, 244

Fact that plaintiff had operated as a nonprofit, charitable hospital since date of plaintiff's incorporation more than 50 years previously was immaterial on issue as to whether an irrevocable dedication had been made within statute exempting from taxation property used exclusively for hospital purposes if property is irrevocably dedicated to religious, charitable, scientific or hospital purposes. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214 and subd. (6); Const. art. 13, § 1c.

4. Corporations ⇐38

Statutory provision that certificate of amendment of articles of incorporation shall be submitted to Secretary of State, who shall file certificate and put an endorsement of filing thereon if he finds that it shows a compliance with law, and thereupon articles shall be deemed amended, is tantamount to a provision that amendment does not become effective until date of filing. Corporations Code, § 3673.

5. Taxation ⇐241(1, 2), 242(7), 243

Where amendment to articles of incorporation received consent of all members of plaintiff corporation before fixation of tax status of plaintiff's property for year involved, but certificate of amendment was not submitted to Secretary of State for filing until after tax status was fixed, such amendment could not be a timely irrevocable dedication of plaintiff's property applicable in year involved within statute exempting from taxation property used exclusively for hospital purposes if such property is irrevocably dedicated to religious, charitable, scientific or hospital purposes. Corporations Code, § 3673; Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 214 and subd. (6), 441; Const. art. 13, § 8.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, Bert A. Lewis and Samuel O. Pruitt, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, and Andrew O. Porter, Deputy County Counsel, Los Angeles, for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice.

This action for the recovery of taxes paid under protest for the tax year 1946-1947 likewise involves the construction of the recently enacted welfare exemption law, Cal.Const. art. XIII, § 1c; Rev. & Tax. Code, § 214, in relation to hospital property. Accordingly it was consolidated for hearing with six other hospital cases as noticed in an opinion this day filed, Cedars of Lebanon Hospital v. County of Los Angeles, Cal.Sup., 221 P.2d 31.

Plaintiff here framed its complaint to allege two causes of action for application of the welfare exemption: (1) as to the portion of the property used for a nurses' home and for a nurses' school operated in connection with the hospital; and (2) as to all of its property on the premise of irrevocable dedication to exempt purposes. Rev. & Tax. Code, § 214(6). Defendant interposed a general demurrer, which was sustained without leave to amend, on the ground that it affirmatively appeared from the complaint that "none of [plaintiff's] property was irrevocably dedicated to the [required] purposes * * * on March 4, 1946 [the tax day in question]." From the judgment accordingly entered in defendant's favor, plaintiff has appealed.

Though as appears from our opinion in the consolidated hospital cases, Cedars of Lebanon Hospital v. County of Los Angeles, Cal.Sup., 221 P.2d 31, the tax exempt status of the portion of the hospital property used for a nurses' home and for a nurses' school was sustained, such consideration is of no avail to plaintiff unless plaintiff qualified in all other respects as an institution entitled to claim the welfare tax exemption on the first Monday in March, 1946—concededly March 4, 1946. Section 214, subdivision (6), of the Revenue and Taxation Code provides that property used exclusively for hospital purposes is exempt from taxation if "[t]he property is irrevocably dedicated to religious, charitable, scientific, or hospital purposes and upon the liquidation, dissolution or abandonment of the owner will not inure to the benefit of any private person except a fund, foundation or corporation organized and operated for religious, hospital, scientific, or charitable purposes."

Plaintiff argues these alternative grounds as constituting its compliance with the quoted statutory requirement of irrevocable dedication: (1) its articles of incorporation prior to the 1946 amendment thereof as interpreted in the light of its long-continued use of its property for hospital purposes; (2) so-called amalgamation with a hospital trust; and (3) express amendment in 1946 of its articles of incorporation subsequent to the adoption of the welfare exemption law. Defendant, on the other hand, challenges the efficacy of any of these factors to effect the tax exemption here sought. An examination of the record in the light of applicable legal principles shows defendant's position to be well taken and sustains the propriety of the trial court's ruling denying plaintiff's exemption claims.

According to its complaint, plaintiff was organized as a nonprofit corporation in 1892 and has operated exclusively as such ever since. For many years it has been exempt from all federal and state income, corporation, franchise, and social security taxes as a charitable hospital. Plaintiff's assets stem from these two sources: (1) the major part from charitable gifts, and (2) the balance from the excess of receipts over disbursements, which has been realized in certain of its prior years' operations and invested in hospital property. Plaintiff has never made any distribution of assets to any individual, and it has never used any asset except in furtherance of the charitable hospital purpose for which it was organized.

In 1932, in satisfaction of a legacy of $2,000,000, the executors of the estate of Henry E. Huntington distributed funds to certain trustees, in trust however, to use a portion thereof for the purpose of establishing a memorial hospital and to use the remainder as an endowment fund to invest and reinvest so that it would yield an income for the perpetual maintenance of the hospital. In 1936, the directors and members of plaintiff hospital association accepted a proposal of the trustees under the Huntington will that the hospital owned by plaintiff be conducted thereafter as the "Collis P. and Howard Huntington Memorial Hospital"—becoming the hospital contemplated by the said testator and operating under the trust. At that time all the members and directors of plaintiff hospital association resigned, and the trustees of the aforesaid trust became the only directors and members thereof. None of the trustees has ever contributed any property to plaintiff or had ever been a member or director of plaintiff prior to the "amalgamation." "None of [the] trustee members and directors have any basis for claiming any interest in plaintiff's property, should it dissolve." Since the "amalgamation" in 1936, "the entire hospital property has been operated as one unit, some of it being owned by the trust and some of it being owned by plaintiff."

Plaintiff's governing articles of incorporation are recited in full as "Exhibit A," attached to the complaint. Certain provisions thereof pertinent to the question of dedication are as follows:

"Know All Men By These Presents: That we, the undersigned, citizens and residents of the State of California, do hereby voluntarily associate ourselves together for the purpose of incorporating under the laws of the State of California a private corporation.

"And We Do Hereby Certify:

* * * * * *

"Second—(A) That the objects and purposes for which this corporation are (is) formed are:

"(1) To establish, maintain, and carry on within the County of Los Angeles, State of California, a hospital for the sick and injured, and for that purpose or any other lawful purpose where pecuniary profit is not the object thereof, to purchase, lease * * * (etc.)

* * * * * *

"(7) To convey all or any portion of the corporate property in trust for such lawful purposes as the Board of Directors may deem advisable; to receive endowments and to invest the same.

* * * * * *

"(9) To do and perform every act and thing necessary to carry out the foregoing purposes and powers in other states and jurisdiction, which like corporations or corporations organized for social, charitable or religious purposes under the laws of such states and jurisdictions may lawfully do or cause to be done therein.

"(10) To do each and every thing necessary, appropriate or adapted to carry into effect any and all of the foregoing purposes and powers, or to attain any one or more of the objects herein enumerated, or which shall at any time appear conducive to or expedient for the protection or benefit of this Corporation, and, generally, to do any act, or transact any business in connection with said purposes and powers which a copartnership or natural person could do or exercise, and which now or hereafter may be authorized by law; to carry on any other lawful business, enterprise, or activity whatsoever which may seem capable of being carried on in connection with the foregoing, or calculated, directly or indirectly, to promote the interests of this Corporation or to enhance the value of its properties.

"(B) This is a corporation which does not contemplate pecuniary gain or profit to the members thereof. No part of the net earnings of this corporation shall inure to the benefit of any private member or individual, and no substantial part of the activities of this corporation shall be devoted to carrying on propaganda or otherwise attempting to influence legislation." (Emphasis added.)

After the welfare exemption became a part of the Revenue and Taxation Code, plaintiff, on December 21, 1945, adopted a resolution amending the foregoing section "B" to read as follows: "(B) This corporation has no capital stock, is not formed for profit, and is a corporation which does not contemplate pecuniary gain, profit or dividends to the members thereof. No part of the net earnings of this corporation shall inure to the benefit of any member or individual, and no part of the activities of this corporation shall be devoted to carrying on propaganda or otherwise attempting to influence legislation. The property of this corporation is irrevocably dedicated to charitable, scientific, educational and hospital purposes, and upon the abandonment, liquidation or dissolution of this corporation said property shall not inure to the benefit of any private person but shall be distributed to a fund, foundation or corporation organized and operated for hospital, scientific, educational or charitable purposes, or to the United States of America, the State of California, or any political subdivision thereof." (Emphasis added.)

This amendment received the consent of all the members of plaintiff on March 1, 1946, but was not indorsed as filed in the office of the Secretary of State until March 14, 1946.

As will hereinafter appear, we have concluded that the 1946 amendment to plaintiff's articles of incorporation did not take effect until after the first Monday in March, 1946. It therefore becomes necessary to determine whether upon that date and under its then effective articles of incorporation, plaintiff's properties were "irrevocably dedicated" to exempt purposes within the meaning of the welfare exemption law.

The term "irrevocably dedicated" appears to be new to tax law, and neither counsel nor independent research has disclosed any case wherein that phrase has been construed. Nevertheless, one of the specified conditions for exemption is that "the property is irrevocably dedicated" to exempt purposes; and that provision, like other provisions of the welfare exemption law, must be given a strict but reasonable construction. See Cedars of Lebanon Hospital v. County of Los Angeles, Cal.Sup., 221 P.2d 31.

It will be noted that the requirement that property be "irrevocably dedicated to * * * hospital purposes" or other exempt purposes is concerned with purposes rather than with uses. The distinction between the two concepts is important here. The question of present uses, rather than of ultimate purposes, to which particular pieces or portions of property were being put was the main and all-important consideration in the aforementioned consolidated hospital cases, Cedars of Lebanon Hospital v. County of Los Angeles, Cal. Sup., 221 P.2d 31, in determining whether each of such pieces or portions of the property was then entitled to exemption. The additional but distinct condition of irrevocable dedication does not appear to be concerned with present uses as distinguished from ultimate purposes, and it seems clear that the requirement of irrevocable dedication to exempt purposes could, in itself, be met before any actual use is made of any of the property, and that it would not necessarily be affected by any diversion, through sale or otherwise of any particular piece or portion of the property to non-exempt uses provided the proceeds of such sale or non-exempt uses are irrevocably dedicated to exempt purposes. In other words, while the present exclusive use for exempt purposes is the primary condition to be met in order to obtain exemption for any particular piece or portion of the property at any given time, it would be wholly unreasonable to construe the further condition of irrevocable dedication to exempt purposes as requiring that the particular piece or portion of the property should, in some manner, be frozen permanently and irrevocably into such exclusive use. This reasoning is in line with that found in an opinion given by the office of the Attorney General, where it was said: "In our opinion, however, the statute does not require that the particular parcel of property be dedicated, but rather that the property or its proceeds be dedicated. For example, a church is irrevocably dedicated to religious purposes even if the members reserve the right to sell the property and to use the proceeds for the purpose of constructing a new church in another location which is more suitable to their purposes." 8 Opin.Att. Gen., 1946, 72, 75.

[1, 2] In the present case, we are not called upon to determine what may constitute irrevocable dedication under all circumstances, for we are satisfied that there was no irrevocable dedication to exempt purposes here. We are of the opinion that this requirement of irrevocable dedication is ordinarily to be determined by ascertaining the powers of the owner with respect to its assets, including its properties and the proceeds thereof. And where, as here, the extent of such powers can be ascertained only from plaintiff's articles of incorporation, and such articles permit not only the present use for, but also the ultimate and permanent diversion of all of plaintiff's assets to, non-exempt purposes, then the requirement of irrevocable dedication to exempt purposes cannot be said to have been satisfied under any construction of said subdivision (6) of section 214 of the Revenue and Taxation Code.

As above indicated plaintiff's articles of incorporation, which fixed the extent of its powers on March 4, 1946, conferred such broad powers and enumerated such non-exempt purposes as to preclude the successful assertion of the claim that plaintiff's assets were irrevocably dedicated to exempt purposes on that date. Thus, plaintiff was authorized to permanently divert all of its property to any lawful nonprofit purpose (Article Second (A) (1)), though the welfare exemption does not extend to all lawful nonprofit purposes and, in fact, expressly excludes certain ones such as fraternal, lodge, or social purposes unless "clearly incidental" in nature, Rev. & Tax. Code, § 214(5), its directors were empowered to convey all or part of its property in trust for any lawful purposes which they might deem advisable (Article Second (A) (7)); in carrying out its broad purposes, plaintiff's powers were likened to those of corporations organized for social as well as other purposes (Article Second (A) (9)); and finally, plaintiff was vested with authority "to carry on any other lawful business, enterprise or activity whatsoever" which would "enhance the value of its properties" (Article Second (A) (10)). As a restricting factor on these provisions, Article Second (B) prior to the 1946 amendment purported to be no more than a limitation to nonprofit activities—which, of course, may or may not be "charitable" or "hospital" in nature.

[3] Plaintiff argues, however, that its articles of incorporation must be interpreted in the light of methods of its operation as a nonprofit, charitable hospital since the date of its organization more than fifty years ago and, by such standard, there has been an irrevocable dedication of its property to hospital purposes. While the fact that plaintiff is operating, and has for many years operated, as a nonprofit charitable hospital might be considered in determining its status with respect to tort liability under the authorities cited by plaintiff, Stonaker v. Big Sisters Hospital, 116 Cal.App. 375, 378, 2 P.2d 520; Armstrong v. Wallace, 8 Cal.App.2d 429, 432-433, 47 P.2d 740, it does not necessarily follow that such fact would be of any controlling significance in determining its status with respect to tax exemption. Fletcher, Cyclopedia Corporations, Perm.Ed., vol. 10, ch. 54, § 4932, p. 626; anno. 119 A.L.R. 1012, 1013, 1022; La Societe Francaise v. California Employment Comm., 56 Cal. App.2d 534, 543, 133 P.2d 47; William Budge Memorial Hospital v. Maughan, 79 Utah 516, 3 P.2d 258, 261, 13 P.2d 1119. But in any event, the question under discussion is not whether plaintiff may be classified as a nonprofit, charitable hospital but whether its property has been "irrevocably dedicated" to exempt purposes. On this last-mentioned question, plaintiff's manner of operation and plaintiff's use, past or present, of its properties are wholly immaterial. The sole consideration in determining the question of irrevocable dedication of its properties is that of plaintiff's powers with respect thereto. It seems entirely clear that plaintiff's broad powers with respect to non-exempt purposes were not lost through non-use over a period of years, and that the continued existence of such powers was fatal to its claim of irrevocable dedication to exempt purposes on the tax date in question. In this connection it is futile for plaintiff to cite section 9505 of the Corporations Code, which permits the Attorney General to institute proceedings against a non-profit corporation if "it may fail to comply with trusts which it has assumed or may depart from the general purposes for which it is formed." It does not appear that the permanent diversion by plaintiff of all the corporate assets to certain non-exempt purposes would constitute a violation of any trust or a departure from the broad purposes specified in its articles.

Nor does plaintiff's so-called amalgamation with the Huntington trust strengthen its position on the point involved. It is not shown by the record that any change was made thereby in plaintiff's corporate powers; nor does it appear that there was any conveyance of plaintiff's property to the trust. Rather, in consequence of the new relationship as disclosed by plaintiff's complaint, the trustees of the Huntington trust merely became the directors of plaintiff hospital association, the name was changed to the "Collis P. and Howard Huntington Memorial Hospital," and plaintiff's former directors, upon resigning their office, adopted a resolution announcing the "surrender [of] their responsibilities, assured that the new custodians [would] continue to develop the hospital in accordance with the plans and services of those who have established and carried forward this important and generously supported institution." Though "the entire hospital property has [since] been operated as one unit," it further appears that plaintiff did not relinquish ownership of its property upon consummation of such united undertaking. In the light of these related circumstances, plaintiff's amalgamation with the trust cannot be viewed as effecting an irrevocable dedication of plaintiff's own corporate assets within the meaning of the welfare exemption law.

[4, 5] There finally remains the matter of plaintiff's qualification for the welfare tax exemption by reason of the above-quoted 1946 amendment to its articles of incorporation (Article Second (B)). In challenging the effectiveness of such amendment, defendant properly objects at the outset to its timeliness as a consideration for the tax year 1946-1947. Pursuant to section 8, article XIII, of the Constitution, and section 441 of the Revenue & Taxation Code, each taxpayer is required to file a declaration of his property as of noon on the first Monday in March, at which time the tax status of property becomes fixed for the tax year. It is conceded that in the year 1946 this determinative date was March 4, or ten days before the amendment of plaintiff's articles of incorporation was filed with the Secretary of State. By section 605(d) of the Civil Code, now Corporations Code, § 9305, a "nonprofit corporation may amend its articles [of incorporation] * * * in the same manner and with the same effect as a stock corporation under the general corporation law existing at the time thereof." So pertinent then is section 362(b) of the Civil Code, now Corporations Code, § 3673 in providing that "[t]he certificate [of amendment] shall be submitted to the Secretary of State, who shall file the same and put an indorsement of filing thereon if he find that it shows a compliance with the provisions of the law [and] [t]hereupon the articles of incorporation shall be deemed amended in accordance with such certificate * * *." This is tantamount to a provision that the amendment does not become effective until the date of filing. See Ballantine & Sterling, California Corporation Laws, 1949 Ed., § 319, p. 391; Fletcher, Cyclopedia Corporations, Perm. Ed., vol. 7, ch. 43, § 3721, p. 891. Accordingly, plaintiff's belated filing of the 1946 amendment precluded it from accomplishing its purpose of obtaining tax exemption for the tax year in question. In view of this conclusion it becomes unnecessary to consider defendant's further objections to the effectiveness of the 1946 amendment.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, CARTER, TRAYNOR and SCHAUER, JJ., concur.

35 Cal.2d 789

FREDERICKA HOME FOR THE AGED v. SAN DIEGO COUNTY.

L. A. 20634.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.

Aug. 18, 1950.

Fredericka Home for the Aged sued the County of San Diego to recover taxes paid under protest for the tax year 1946–1947. The Superior Court, San Diego County, Arthur L. Mundo, J., rendered a judgment adverse to defendant, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Spence, J., held that plaintiff was a charitable institution within the Welfare Tax Exemption Law.

Judgment affirmed.

Prior opinion 206 P.2d 931.

1. Taxation ⇐204(2), 251

The problem of determining whether a plaintiff is entitled as a charitable institution to welfare tax exemption must be resolved upon basis of a strict but reasonable construction of exempting language of law and plaintiff has burden of showing that it clearly comes within terms thereof. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

2. Taxation ⇐241(2)

An institution must actually dispense charity if it is to satisfy requirement of Welfare Tax Exemption Law that its property be used exclusively for charitable purposes, and it is not sufficient that that institution originated through a charitable gift or bequest. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

3. Charities ⇐1

The concept of "charity" is not confined to relief of needy and destitute, for aged people require care and attention apart from financial assistance, and the supply of such care and attention is as much a charitable and benevolent purpose as relief of their financial wants.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Charity".

4. Charities ⇐1

Fact that institution engaged in caring for aged people charges a fee for such care does not necessarily prevent classification of institution as being a charitable institution if such fees go to pay expenses of operation and not to the profit of the founders or shareholders.

5. Charities ⇐1

The word "charity" as commonly understood does not refer only to aid to poor and destitute and exclude all humanitarian activities, though rendered at cost or less, which are maintained to care for the physical and mental well-being of recipients, and which make it less likely that such recipients will become burdens on society.

6. Taxation ⇐241(2)

An institution engaged in caring for aged people was a "charitable institution" within Welfare Tax Exemption Law, notwithstanding it charged an entry fee, where 35 per cent of income of institution came from interest on endowment fund and from donations and 65 per cent from entry fees, and rates were established which together with other income would equal expenses, and there was no element of private gain, and entry fee was within reach of persons of limited means, and notwithstanding a three-month probationary period was imposed upon prospective inmates. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Charitable Institution".

7. Taxation ⇐241(2)

Property of institution engaged in caring for aged people, which was used to house personnel of institution, was used "exclusively for charitable purposes" within Welfare Tax Exemption Law. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 214; Const. art. 13, § 1c.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Exclusively for Charitable Purposes".

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, E. G. Benard, Deputy Attorney General, James Don Keller, District Attorney, and Carroll H. Smith, Chief Trial Deputy District Attorney, San Diego, for appellant.

Gray, Cary, Ames & Driscoll and John M. Cranston, all of San Diego, for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice.

Plaintiff, a nonprofit corporation operating a home for elderly people on a "life care contract" basis, brought this action to recover taxes paid under protest for the tax year 1946-1947. It claimed that it was a charitable organization devoting its property exclusively to charitable purposes and so entitled to the benefit of the recently adopted welfare exemption. Cal. Const. art. XIII, § 1c; Rev. & Tax. Code, § 214. With certain exceptions—a parcel of vacant land, some acreage leased for commercial purposes, and a small item of solvent credits—the trial court adjudicated the exemption claim in plaintiff's favor and entered judgment accordingly for a tax refund. From such judgment defendant county has appealed, contending that the record does not sustain the conclusion that plaintiff was functioning as a charitable institution within the meaning of the welfare tax exemption law. Upon the undisputed facts, we have concluded that defendant's contention cannot be sustained.

At the trial the only evidence introduced was that offered by plaintiff. It appears that plaintiff was incorporated in 1908 and received as a gift certain land in Chula Vista—some 15 acres—and the buildings then on it. Subsequent buildings were donated, and in 1916 a trust fund of $200,000 was created. It is conceded that plaintiff is a nonprofit corporation organized for the purpose of providing a home for aged people at its site in Chula Vista, and that the property in dispute, with the exception of the portion hereinafter mentioned, is used exclusively for such purpose and is irrevocably dedicated thereto; that all of its income—whether from charges to inmates, investments, gifts or donations—is used entirely in the maintenance and operation of the home; that the members of its board of directors serve without compensation, and that the compensation paid to its employees is "fair and reasonable." But regardless of these qualifying factors, defendant cites plaintiff's "manner of operation" as determinative of its ineligibility for the tax benefit applicable to a "charitable institution" within the meaning of the welfare exemption law.

Applicants for admission to the home must have attained the age of 69 years, be in good health, and meet the approval of the board of directors—including consideration over a three months' probationary period. Prior to November 1, 1944, each applicant, in addition to paying a fixed fee for maintenance at the home, was required to execute a trust agreement whereby three-fifths of the applicant's estate would go to the home upon death of the applicant. A new policy was adopted after said date eliminating the trust agreement as an entry requirement, and at the same time the minimum fee for admission to the home was fixed at $5,500. By the terms of the life care contract made with the applicant, the home agreed to furnish room, board, and other services.

As documentary evidence in its behalf and representing the "last figures available at the time [the exemption] claim was filed", Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subds. 28–32, plaintiff introduced a financial report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1945. According to that accounting record, 21 new residents were admitted during the period covered, 16 of them under the policy of charging a minimum fee of $5,500 as established in November, 1944, the average fee being $6,264.04. The exact amount of the admission fee of each applicant was computed actuarily and also depended on the applicant's choice of accommodations. According to one of plaintiff's directors, the division as to the source of plaintiff's income was fixed at 35 per cent from interest on the endowment fund and donations and 65 per cent from admission fees. Certain other schedules introduced in evidence clearly showed that over 25 per cent of plaintiff's gross cash income, as well as its land and buildings, came from sources other than the residents of the home. The trial court found that the total amounts received by plaintiff from its inmates and from the endowment fund have always been insufficient to pay operating expenses of the home, and that the deficit has been met through voluntary gifts and contributions from persons not inmates of the home. The same director, a certified public accountant who prepared all of plaintiff's tax reports, also testified that plaintiff had been exempted from payment of all federal social security and income taxes, as well as from state unemployment insurance taxes, and a finding was so made. The court further found that the recited facts attesting to plaintiff's method of operation prevailed during the taxable year in question, 1946–1947, and "were true when plaintiff's claim for exemption was filed and [denied] by the county officials." Such finding was in accord with the testimony of plaintiff's director attesting to the continued level of service and "policy" of operation maintained at the home "from the inception of the institution as I know it" to "the present [time]" (date of trial, January, 1948).

[1, 2] As discussed in the opinion filed by this court in certain consolidated hospital cases, Cedars of Lebanon Hospital v. County of Los Angeles, Cal.Sup., 221 P.2d 31 the problem of determining whether or not plaintiff is entitled as a charitable organization to the welfare tax exemption must be resolved upon the basis of a "strict but reasonable construction" of the exempting language, and the claimant of such benefit has the burden of showing that it clearly comes within the terms thereof. It is not sufficient that the institution shall have originated through a charitable gift or bequest, but "it must actually dispense charity" if it is to satisfy the requirement that its property be "used exclusively for * * * charitable purposes." 51 Am.Jur. § 601, p. 584. (Emphasis added.) However, due regard must be had for the ordinary acceptation of the exempting language and its purport in effecting the object of the lawmakers. In the light of such guiding principles, the particular facts establishing plaintiff's method of operation and function in the community must be considered.

[3-5] The concept of charity is not confined to the relief of the needy and destitute, for "aged people require care and attention apart from financial assistance, and the supply of this care and attention is as much a charitable and benevolent purpose as the relief of their financial wants." In re Estate of Henderson, 17 Cal.2d 853, 857, 112 P.2d 605, 607. So the charge of fees by such an institution as a home for the aged will not necessarily prevent its classification as charitable if such sums "go to pay the expenses of operation and not to the profit of the founders or shareholders," for all persons may "under certain conditions be proper objects of charity." Scripps Memorial Hospital, Inc., v. California Employment Comm., 24 Cal. 2d 669, 675, 151 P.2d 109, 113, 155 A.L.R. 360; see, also, 51 Am.Jur. § 602, p. 585; anno. 34 A.L.R. 634, 637; 62 A.L.R. 328, 330; 108 A.L.R. 284, 286. In short, as the word "charity" is commonly understood in modern usage, it does not refer only to aid to the poor and destitute and exclude all humanitarian activities, though rendered at cost or less, which are maintained to care for the physical and mental well-being of the recipients, and which make it less likely that such recipients will become burdens on society.

Defendant's challenge of plaintiff's denomination as a charitable institution and the use of its property for charitable purposes stems primarily from the fact that plaintiff does not extend free services to the poor, but the welfare exemption law as above quoted makes no such requirement as a qualifying factor for the tax exemption, and if such condition were intended, appropriate language to that effect could readily have been adopted. Rather, the welfare exemption law as here involved appears to rest on a concept of charity in its ordinary sense. Consistent with such interpretation, the controlling consideration in determining whether an institution such as plaintiff should be classified as a charitable one is not whether a few or all of the recipients of its benefits may make reasonable contributions toward defraying the cost of such benefits, but whether such contributions as are made do not exceed what is required for the maintenance of the institution at a reasonable standard and are devoted to the purposes for which the institution was founded, which purposes, in the absence of the required contributions, would clearly be deemed to be charitable. If such is the situation, then the institution is no less a charity because of the receipt of such contributions, and within such concept plaintiff properly claims a tax-exempt status under the welfare exemption law.

The record contains abundant evidence that approximately 35 per cent of plaintiff's income came from interest on the endowment fund and from donations, while only about 65 per cent came from fees of the inmates. Moreover, it appears from the testimony of one of the directors of the home, as above mentioned, that the rates were set so that the amounts received from the inmates "together with income from the endowment and from other sources" would equal expenses. In such state of the record, defendant unavailingly attacks the trial court's finding to the effect that the inmates of the home do not pay the full cost of their support and maintenance, and that in fixing the rates to be charged "the directors * * * do not endeavor to [make] a profit or even to meet all operating expenses, but rather endeavor to set rates as low as possible without creating a deficit so large that [it] cannot [be met] by gifts and contributions which can reasonably be expected."

While it is true that each applicant for admission to the home is required to pay an entry fee in return for his care, it is also true that plaintiff contributes a substantial proportion of the annual cash expenditures, as well as the use of its properties for such care. Under these circumstances, the mere payment of such fees by the inmates does not militate against plaintiff's status as a charitable organization. Nor does it matter that plaintiff requires the applicant to the home to submit to a three-month probationary period and meet the approval of the board of directors rather than permit the home to be open to the admission of any individual upon demand. Such stipulation only suggests an attempt to maintain the home in a manner which would engender harmony of association among the elderly inmates rather than endanger their peaceful, congenial living conditions through the introduction of discordant elements.

[6] As was pertinently said in Re Estate of Henderson, supra, 17 Cal.2d 853, at page 857, 112 P.2d 605, at page 607: "Since the enactment of the Statute of Charitable Uses during the reign of Elizabeth, aid to the aged and infirm has been recognized as charitable." Here the record shows that plaintiff is ministering to its elderly residents at a charge which, although appreciable, is within the reach of persons in modest circumstances and is no greater than that which is required to augment the substantial amount which plaintiff is able to contribute to the accomplishment of its purposes. There can be no doubt that arrangements for such life care contracts fill a social purpose as well as a need of the applicants for admission. Approaching those years when the physical and mental faculties normally decline over an indefinite period of time and being faced with the prospect of expending increased but indeterminable amounts for care during that period, the applicants, by means of such life care contracts, avoid the need of living in penury occasioned by the haunting fear that they will exhaust their meagre resources and become public charges. Accordingly, it is our conclusion that where, as here, the payments made by the elderly residents are within the reach of persons of limited means, where such payments are not commensurate with the benefits derived, where there is no element of private gain, and where all the income of the institution—including that received from residents and the substantial portion received from gifts and other sources—is devoted exclusively to affording a reasonable standard of care to such elderly persons for the balance of their lives, the concept of charity in its ordinary sense, as well as under a strict but reasonable construction of the welfare exemption law, is met. Such determination of plaintiff's status as a charitable institution is in accord with the general trend of authority in cases determining the character of institutions for tax exemption as well as for other purposes. 51 Am.Jur. § 602, p. 585; In re Estate of Henderson, supra, 17 Cal.2d 853, 857–858, 112 P.2d 605; Scripps Memorial Hospital, Inc., v. California Employment Comm., supra, 24 Cal.2d 669, 675, 151 P.2d 109, 155 A.L.R. 360; also, Bishop & Chapter of Cathedral of St. John the Evangelist v. Treasurer of City and County of Denver, 37 Colo. 378, 86 P. 1021, 1024–1025; Old Colony Trust Co. v. O. M. Fisher Home, Inc., 301 Mass. 1, 16 N.E.2d 10, 11; Gundry v. R. B. Smith Memorial Hospital Ass'n, 293 Mich. 36, 291 N.W. 213, 214–215; Salvation Army v. Hoehn, 354 Mo. 107, 188 S.W.2d 826, 829–831; In re Vassar's Estate, 127 N.Y. 1, 27 N.E. 394, 397–398; In re Mendelsohn, 262 App.Div. 605, 31 N.Y.S.2d 435, 440–441; People ex rel. Doctors Hospital, Inc., v. Sexton, 267 App.Div. 736, 48 N.Y.S.2d 201, 205; Baylor University v. Boyd, Tex.Civ.App., 18 S.W.2d 700, 701; Brattleboro Retreat v. Town of Brattleboro, 106 Vt. 228, 173 A. 209, 212–213.

[7] Such adjudication of plaintiff's status in relation to the welfare tax exemption likewise comprehends that portion of its property used to house its personnel as that issue is here presented. Thus, there is considerable testimony in the record showing that those of the personnel living on plaintiff's premises do so as a matter of institutional necessity. In this regard it must be remembered that a prerequisite for entrance to the home as a resident is the 69-year age qualification, indicating the need of adequate personnel to care for such elderly persons on the basis of 24-hour service. All of this testimony as to the institutional necessity of plaintiff's furnishing of housing accommodation for certain personnel stands uncontradicted in the record. Similar considerations were discussed in certain opinions filed with regard to the tax-exempt status of a nurses' home and the housing of other alleged essential personnel as a necessary adjunct to a hospital, Cedars of Lebanon Hospital v. County of Los Angeles, Cal.Sup., 221 P.2d 31, and the lodging of priests and lay brothers in effectuating the operation of a religious retreat house, Serra Retreat v. County of Los Angeles, Cal.Sup., 221 P.2d 59, to which opinions reference is hereby made in support of this phase of plaintiff's welfare tax exemption claim.

It therefore follows that the trial court correctly determined that plaintiff is a charitable institution and entitled to exemption from taxation on all the property in dispute.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, CARTER, TRAYNOR and SCHAUER, JJ., concur.

35 Cal.2d 653

STANLEY v. COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM, Inc. et al.
L. A. 20686.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.
Aug. 4, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 31, 1950.

Action by Jack Stanley against the Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. and others, to recover on an implied agreement of defendant to pay plaintiff for a radio program which plaintiff claimed to have originated. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Roy V. Rhodes, J., entered judgment for plaintiff for $35,000 and the named defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that verdict for plaintiff for $35,000 was sustained by the evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

Traynor and Spence, JJ., dissented.

Prior opinion, 208 P.2d 9.

1. Literary property ⇐7

The originator of a novel idea reduced to concrete form and disclosed to wrongful appropriator under circumstances indicating that compensation was expected if the idea should be used, may recover from such appropriator upon an implied contract.

2. Literary property ⇐7

The general rule that the problem of similarity between the two compositions, whether literary, musical or dramatic, is a question of fact to be determined ultimately by comparison of the two works upon the basis of the opinion of the average individual possessing a practical understanding of the subject, applied to radio programs involved in action to recover on an implied agreement of defendant to pay plaintiff for a radio program which the plaintiff claimed to have originated. Civ. Code, §§ 980, 983.

3. Literary property ⇐9

In action on implied contract of defendant to pay plaintiff for a radio program which the plaintiff claimed to have originated, finding of jury as to the similarity of the defendant's program to plaintiff's was sustained by the evidence.

4. Appeal and error ⇐1001(1)

Jury's finding that the defendant's radio program was similar to plaintiff's would not be disturbed on appeal where there was sufficient evidence to sustain it.

5. Literary property ⇐9

In action on implied contract to pay plaintiff for a radio program which plaintiff claimed to have originated, evidence sustained finding that the defendant had access to plaintiff's program idea.

6. Literary property ⇐9

In action on implied contract to pay plaintiff for a radio program which plaintiff claimed to have originated, evidence sustained finding that plaintiff's radio program was new and novel and was originated by plaintiff.

7. Literary property ⇐2

An author who takes existing materials from sources common to all writers, arranges and combines them in a new form giving them an application unknown before is entitled to a copyright notwithstanding that he may have borrowed much of his materials and ideas from others, provided they are assembled in a different manner and combined for a different purpose and his play and arrangement are a real improvement upon existing modes; since the labor of making such selection, arrangements and combinations has entailed the exercise of skill, discretion and creative effort. Civ. Code, §§ 980, 983.

8. Appeal and error ⇐842(7)

In action on implied contract to pay plaintiff for a radio program which plaintiff claimed to have originated, the question of originality of plaintiff's program was not one of law to be determined by the court but was one of fact for the jury's determination.

9. Literary property ⇐5

Where originator of radio program made his audition recording before an audience in defendant's broadcasting studio, he was not making his idea "public property" within the meaning of the law. Civ. Code, §§ 980, 983.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Public Property".

10. Literary property ⇐5

Prior to publication an author may make copies of his production and enjoy the benefit of limited or restricted publication without forfeiture of the right of a general publication. Civ.Code, §§ 980, 983.

11. Literary property ⇐9

In action on implied contract to pay plaintiff for a radio program which plaintiff claimed to have originated by plaintiff, verdict for plaintiff for $35,000 was sustained by the evidence.

12. Appeal and error ⇐981
New trial ⇐99

A motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence is to a large extent addressed to the discretion of the trial judge and an appellate court will not disturb his ruling unless a gross or unmistakable abuse of discretion appears.

13. New trial ⇐99

In action on implied contract to pay plaintiff for a radio program which plaintiff claimed to have originated, denial of the defendant's motion for a new trial on ground of newly discovered evidence was not an abuse of discretion.

O'Melveny & Myers, Homer I. Mitchell, Louis W. Myers, W. B. Carman, Jr., and Deane F. Johnson, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Loeb & Loeb and Herman F. Selvin, all of Los Angeles, as amici curiæ on behalf of appellant.

Harold A. Fendler, Beverly Hills, and John W. Preston, Los Angeles, for respondent.

CARTER, Justice.

Defendant has appealed from a verdict and judgment for $35,000 given by a jury in favor of the plaintiff. The action was brought to recover on an alleged implied agreement of defendant to pay plaintiff for a radio program which plaintiff claims to have originated.

In his complaint, plaintiff alleged that during the year 1941 he originated and caused to be prepared, composed and written an original script for a radio program entitled "Walter Wanger Presents" and a radio program format entitled "Preview Parade" or "Hollywood Preview" and that about September 1st of that year he had this script recorded for the purpose of submitting it to prospective sponsors, advertising agencies and broadcasting companies. He alleged that he, at all times, retained full ownership of the radio program and that he at no time licensed or authorized the use of it in any manner. Plaintiff further alleged that during the years 1942, 1943 and 1944 he submitted to the defendant, Columbia Broadcasting System, Incorporated, the radio program, script, format and records for the purpose of having the defendant determine whether or not it desired to purchase it or license the right to use it under an implied agreement that if the defendant did use the radio program it would pay plaintiff its reasonable value. But that on or about the first of May, 1945, the defendant produced and presented a radio program entitled "Hollywood Preview" which substantially copied and embodied plaintiff's radio program and, as a result, became indebted to the plaintiff for the use thereof.

On this appeal, defendant contends that the court should have found, as a matter of law, that there was no similarity between the two programs; that the evidence was insufficient to show that defendant had access to plaintiff's program idea; that there can be no implied agreement to pay for an abstract idea which is not new or novel; that the jury arbitrarily ignored the uncontradicted, unimpeached testimony of defendant's witness, Hudson; that when an idea is made public there can be no liability for its use; that its motion for a new trial on the grounds that (1) the jury's verdict for damages was so excessive that it appeared to have been given under the influence of prejudice and passion, (2) newly discovered evidence, and (3) that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict should have been granted.

[1] As a general observation from the cases, it may be stated that the right of the originator of an idea to recover from one who uses or infringes it seems to depend upon whether or not the idea was novel and reduced to concrete form prior to its appropriation by the defendant, and, where the idea was disclosed by the originator to the appropriator, whether such disclosure took place under circumstances indicating that compensation was expected if the idea was used.

Where these prerequisites exist, recovery may be had upon a theory of contract implied in fact or in law. Plus Promotions, Inc., v. R. C. A. Mfg. Co., D.C. N.Y., 49 F.Supp. 116; Alberts v. Remington Rand, Inc., 175 Misc. 486, 23 N.Y.S.2d 892; Healey v. R. H. Macy & Co., 251 App.Div. 440, 297 N.Y.S. 165, affirmed 277 N.Y. 681, 14 N.E.2d 388.

Plaintiff's complete program is as follows:

"Announcer: 'Ladies and gentlemen, Walter Wanger Presents Hollywood Preview! Hollywood Preview! Hollywood Preview!

" 'And here is Hollywood's distinguished producer, Walter Wanger.'

"Wanger: 'How do you do, ladies and gentlemen. Welcome to our Hollywood Preview Parade, a radio show designed for your pleasure and to give you a voice in what pictures Hollywood shall produce in the months to come. Hollywood is very interested in giving you motion pictures you want to see. Unfortunately producers do not and cannot always know just what you do want. This is the reason for this "Preview Parade." Each week we plan to present a radio story we think will make a good film. We ask you to send us your opinion and suggest players for the leading roles. Our sponsor will give worthwhile cash prizes for the best letters, but more about that later.

" 'Now allow me to introduce Mr. True Boardman.'

"Boardman: 'This is the sixth program of the new series, "Walter Wanger Presents." Your host is one of Hollywood's most progressive film leaders, the President of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, and producer of such outstanding films as Foreign Correspondent, Blockade, Long Voyage Home, Stagecoach, Algiers, and currently Sundown.

" 'Each week Mr. Wanger selects a story which he feels should be made into a picture. You are asked to write to Mr. Wanger and give him your opinion. The sponsors pay $500 for the best letter written by one of our listeners and if enough of you vote for it our play will be produced as a motion picture.

" 'And now, once again, Walter Wanger.'

"Wanger: 'Thank you, Mr. Boardman. Tonight our play is entitled "So Gallantly Gleaming." It has been written by Harvey Thew, Peter Ordway, and Sonya Levien. The radio adaptation is by Hector Chevigny.

" ' "So Gallantly Gleaming" tells a thrilling and romantic story of a great explorer, his beautiful wife, and the acquisition of California. Listen closely. Do you think it should be made into a motion picture? Your votes will decide.

" 'Our guests who will later give their opinion are Miss Joan Bennett, Hector Chevigny and Henry Hathaway. Music is by Robert Armbruster.' "

(Drama)

"Boardman: 'Thank you, ladies and gentlemen. Did you like "So Gallantly Gleaming?" Would you like to see it as a motion picture? The story of John Charles Fremont, I think, is one that deserves retelling. In a moment we will hear the opinion of our three Hollywood guests, Joan Bennett, Hector Chevigny, and Henry Hathaway, and then have an opportunity to compare their opinions with yours.

" 'Now again a word as to the real idea behind this program. Each week Walter Wanger Presents brings you a story which we think would be a good motion picture. And here is your part in the program. We ask you to write to Mr. Wanger, telling him whether or not you would like to have this play made into a motion picture, and why. Also include your choice of stars to play the leading roles. The best letter received each week will receive an award of $500 from our sponsor. The award is based not on the style of your letter, not on brilliant writing, but entirely on the reasons you set down as your opinion. And believe me, Hollywood is waiting for your vote. Whether or not you win a prize, your vote will help decide whether or not to film "So Gallantly Gleaming." The American picture-going public has long said it wished a voice in the choice of stories presented on the screen. Here is the chance for you to have that voice and make it heard across the nation. Write your letter now tonight. Address Walter Wanger, Hollywood, California.

" 'Last week Mr. Wanger presented "Out of the Night", the sensational novel which has attracted such nationwide comment. A storm of argument was aroused. Sixty-eight thousand letters have been received to date, and we are happy to announce that Warner Brothers Studio have arranged to make this startling story into a film in the near future. So, thanks to your letters, you have helped Warner Brothers to their decision to film "Out of the Night."

" 'Last week's best letter was from Mrs. William Wentworth of Brockton, Massachusetts. Congratulations, Mrs. Wentworth! Your check for $500 goes forward immediately.

" 'Now, Mr. Wanger, I think we are all anxious to hear the opinions of your guests about tonight's show.'

(Interview with Board of Experts)

"Wanger: 'Thank you. Thank you very much. Thank you, Joan Bennett, Henry Hathaway, Hector Chevigny. Do you ladies and gentlemen, agree with the opinions of our guests? Do you agree that "So Gallantly Gleaming" should become a motion picture? And who do you think should play the leading roles? Won't you write and tell us. Remember that whether your letter is best and wins the prize or not, you are helping Hollywood decide on what to give you on the screen. Next week we will have something totally different for you, a story called "Two Arabian Knights." Until then, this is Walter Wanger saying, Good night.'

"Announcer: 'Walter Wanger Presents is brought to you at this time each week by our sponsor. Original music for tonight's show was written and directed, as always, by Robert Armbruster. The cast included Hollywood's outstanding radio stars—Lurene Tuttle, Lou Crosby, Norman Field, Elliott Lewis, Lou Merrill, Frederick Shields, Paul Whitley, Norene Gamille, Gayne Whitman.

" 'This is John Hiestand hanging out the "Goodnight" sign until we meet again next week at this same time. This is the National Broadcasting Company.' "

The following is a portion of the broadcast preceding and following the drama as actually put on the air by defendant:

"Announcer: 'Its The Flying Red Horse * * * the sign that identifies the Mobilgas and Mobiloil dealers who bring you * * * "Hollywood Preview" * * * with Mr. Otto Kruger!'

"Announcer: 'Tonight, on behalf of your Mobilgas and Mobiloil dealer * * * Mr. Otto Kruger, eminent star of radio, stage and screen brings you another Hollywood Preview of a motion picture of the future! Tonight's story * * * "Growing Pains" * * * a comedy by Aurania Rouveral now scheduled for production by RKO Pictures.

" 'And as our star * * * Miss Marcy Maguire!

"'Now * * * ladies and gentlemen * * * Otto Kruger!'

"Kruger: 'Thank you. Good evening, everyone. Well, its another Preview Night here in Hollywood, and Mobilgas invites you to share in the excitement. For just as the first showing of a new motion picture in the film capitol means bright lights and eager crowds, so does the same spirit of enthusiasm prevail on our radio version of Hollywood Preview. So, tonight it's "Growing Pains" * * * famous as a play * * * and now being prepared for filming at RKO. And as our star * * * well, because "Growing Pains" is a story about irresistible youth, we wanted Hollywood's most enthusiastic, effervescent young lady in the leading role of Terry. And we found exactly that in the person of redheaded * * * Marcy Maguire.'

"Announcer: 'And now, "Growing Pains" * * *'

"Announcer: 'So ends tonight's Hollywood Preview Story.'"

(Interview with star follows.)

"Announcer: 'Now, as our theatre audience fills out cards giving their comments and indicating their favorites for the picture version of "Growing Pains", a special word of greeting to some new listeners.'" (Advertising for sponsor follows; announcements as to producer, director and music.)

[2] The problem of similarity between two compositions, whether literary, musical or dramatic, is a question of fact to be determined ultimately by a comparison of the two works upon the basis of the opinion of the average individual possessing a practical understanding of the subject. Although the majority of the decided cases involved a questioned infringement of a copyrighted work, it would seem that the test of whether or not an infringement existed would be the same as the question here involved—the determination of whether or not such similarity exists between plaintiff's and defendant's programs as to suggest to the average person the use by defendant of an idea originating with plaintiff upon proof of the other elements necessary to enable the plaintiff to recover. The analogy between the two is drawn by the court in De Acosta v. Brown, 2 Cir., 146 F.2d 408.

The parties have conceded that the applicable sections of the Civil Code, 980 [1] and 983 [2] as they read at the time plaintiff's cause of action arose, are but codifications of the common law. The common law right in literary property and the right existing under the copyright law are contrasted as follows: "The term 'copyright' is sometimes used to designate the property in intellectual productions conferred by the common law as well as that conferred by statute, the full phrase 'common-law copyright' being sometimes used. The justification for this use of the term at the present day is found only in the fact that the common law confers on the owner of an intellectual production the exclusive right to make first publication of it, that is, the right to copy it in the first instance * * * Whether the common law ever conferred a copyright in the sense of an exclusive right of continued publication and sale has been a matter of doubt and dispute, * * * but however this may be, the range of rights and liabilities existing at common law with respect to intellectual productions is essentially and greatly different from those existing under the copyright statutes. [Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus, 210 U.S. 339, 28 S.Ct. 722, 52 L.Ed. 1086.] Speaking generally, common-law rights are limited to unpublished works, and all common-law property rights therein are lost on a publication * * * while statutory copyrights relate mainly to published works, * * * Again, common-law rights in unpublished works are of a wider and more exclusive nature than the rights conferred by statutory copyright in published works. The common law prohibits any kind of unauthorized interference with, or use of, an unpublished work on the ground of an exclusive property right, and the common-law right is perpetual, existing until lost or terminated by the voluntary act of the owner, * * * while a statutory copyright permits a 'fair use' of the copyright publication, without deeming it an infringement. * * *" [Emphasis added.] 18 C.J.S., Copyright and Literary Property, § 2, page 138, et seq.; and cases there cited.

1. "§ 980. The author of any product of the mind, whether it is an invention, or a composition in letters or art, or a design, with or without delineation, or other graphical representation, has an exclusive ownership therein, and in the representation or expression thereof, which continues so long as the product and the representations or expressions thereof made by him remain in his possession."

2. § 983. If the owner of a product of the mind intentionally makes it public, a copy or reproduction may be made public by any person, without responsibility to the owner, so far as the law of this state is concerned."

The test, with respect to infringement, which is laid down by the cases is that impression received by the average reasonable man upon a comparative reading of the two works "not by a dissection of sentences and incidents, suitable for the study of a digest or text-book, but inherently unnatural for any man who has the kind of brains that make him able to adapt a work of fiction." Frankel v. Irwin, D.C., 34 F.2d 142, 144. White-Smith Music Co. v. Apollo Co., 209 U.S. 1, 17, 28 S.Ct. 319, 52 L.Ed. 655, 14 Ann.Cas. 628; 13 C.J. 1113, sec. 276, note 30; 18 C.J.S., Copyright and Literary Property, § 94; Harold Lloyd Corporation v. Witwer, 9 Cir., 65 F.2d 1, 18; Hewitt v. Coward, 180 Misc. 1065, 41 N.Y.S.2d 498; Dymow v. Bolton, 2 Cir., 11 F.2d 690; Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. v. Dieckhaus, 8 Cir., 153 F.2d 893; 15 Cornell L. Q. 633, 639.

In determining whether the similarity which exists between a copyrighted literary, dramatic or musical work and an alleged infringing publication is due to copying, the common knowledge of the average reader, observer, spectator or listener is the standard of judgment which must be used. Echevarria v. Warner Bros. Pictures, D.C., 12 F.Supp. 632; Sieff v. Continental Auto Supply, D.C., 39 F.Supp. 683; Barbadillo v. Goldwyn, D.C., 42 F.2d 881, 885.

[3] With respect to the comparison between the two programs and without unnecessarily "dissecting" them, there appears to be sufficient similarity to justify the finding of the jury as the "average, reasonable man." There are, it is true, certain dissimilarities which appear: The lack of the so-called Board of Experts on defendant's program; the fact that the studio audience only was requested to respond; and the rather less emphasis which is placed on the reaction of the public to the play it has heard. The element of prizes offered for the best letter was incorporated into defendant's program after it had made its first few appearances on the air and was continued for a period of six weeks. Each case must be determined on its own facts. Frankel v. Irwin, supra. "It is of course essential to any protection of literary property, whether at common-law or under the statute, that the right cannot be limited literally to the text, else a plagiarist would escape by immaterial variations. That has never been the law, but, as soon as literal appropriation ceases to be the test, the whole matter is necessarily at large, so that, as was recently well said by a distinguished judge, the decisions cannot help much in a new case. Fendler v. Morosco, 253 N.Y. 281, 292, 171 N.E. 56." Nichols v. Universal Pictures Corporation, 2 Cir., 45 F.2d 119, 121. "Evidence of these differences is relevant upon the question of infringement, but if such differences are shown to exist, the question remains for the trier of fact to decide the issue." Universal Pictures Co. v. Harold Lloyd Corporation, 9 Cir., 162 F.2d 354, 361; Pellegrini v. Allegrini, D.C., 2 F.2d 610. "Slight differences and variations will not serve as a defense." Universal Pictures Co. v. Harold Lloyd Corporation, supra, 162 F.2d 361; Fleischer Studios, Inc., v. Ralph A. Freundlich, Inc., 2 Cir., 73 F.2d 276, 278; Nutt v. National Institute Incorporated for the Improvement of Memory, 2 Cir., 31 F.2d 236, 238.

[4] We then have a question of fact—that of the similarity between the two programs. This question of fact was decided adversely to defendant by the jury whose duty it was to make the determination. The rule is settled that this determination will not be interfered with upon appeal where there is evidence to sustain it. The evidence, in the form of the two programs alone, shows that there is substantial similarity to support the verdict.

Because of the factual dissimilarity between this case and Golding v. R.K.O. Pictures, Inc., Cal.Sup., 221 P.2d 95, the scope of the inquiry upon the issue of similarity is necessarily different. In each case the issue of similarity was properly submitted to the jury. Similarity having been found by the jury, we look to the evidence to ascertain whether such similarity existed as to the portion of the production which plaintiff claims to have originated. In this case it is the entire plan, the grouping together or arrangement of various elements which constitutes the claimed infringement. In the Golding case it is only the plot or basic dramatic core of the play which is claimed to be original and to have been unlawfully copied by the defendant. It follows that the inquiry in the Golding case is a more limited one than that in the present case because of the nature of the claimed infringement.

[5] The next contention made by the defendant is that the defendant had no access to plaintiff's program idea. There is evidence in the record to show that plaintiff submitted his program to several officials and employees of the broadcasting company at different times during the years 1942, 1943 and 1944. Implicit in this submission was the belief that if the program were used he would be compensated therefor. It was admitted by defendant's witness Hudson at the trial that it was the custom in the radio industry to pay for such ideas when and if they were used.

[6, 7] It is conceded by the defendant in its brief that plaintiff's idea had been reduced to the concrete form of a script format and recording. The next question to be discussed is whether or not plaintiff's idea as such was so new and novel as to be worthy of protection. It may be conceded at the outset that there is nothing new in a play broadcast over the air; it may also be conceded that there is nothing new in the use of the words "Hollywood Preview" in connection with the first showing to the public of a motion picture; it may also be noted that audience participation, as such, is not new to radio. But when all of these elements are joined to make one idea for a radio program, it is the combination which is new and novel. An author who takes existing materials from sources common to all writers, arranges and combines them in a new form, giving them an application unknown before, is entitled to a copyright, notwithstanding the fact that he may have borrowed much of his materials and ideas from others, provided they are assembled in a different manner and combined for a different purpose, and his plan and arrangement are a real improvement upon existing modes; for the labor of making these selections, arrangements and combinations has entailed the exercise of skill, discretion and creative effort. Edwards & Deutsch Lithographing Co. v. Boorman, 7 Cir., 15 F.2d 35. "If the author has accomplished a unique and useful result through the application of intellectual labor and literary or artistic skill, his work is entitled to a copyright which will protect the plan, arrangement and combination of the materials therein, even though all the materials of such work, or some parts of its plan, or the arrangement and modes of illustrating the subject matter thereof, may be found separately, or in a different form or setting, or in a different combination in other distinct works." Ball, The Law of Copyright and Literary Property, p. 247. Barsha v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 32 Cal. App.2d 556, 90 P.2d 371. It has been previously pointed out that an author's right in the fruits of his intellectual labor at common law is even broader than that which he has under the law of copyright.

It was admitted by Hudson, defendant's principal witness, that prior to the time the program in question was placed on the air that there was no program in which the listening audience in the studio or the listening audience on the radio were asked to give their opinions as to the suitability of the material broadcast by radio for motion picture products. He further admitted that it was a new idea for the listening audience, whether studio, or the entire listening public, to comment on the prospective stars to appear in the proposed productions. The defendant, however, maintains that its studio audience participation was merely atmosphere and was not intended to give the public any real participation in the choice of future pictures. If this was the true intention of defendant, the following excerpt from the testimony of Hudson shows that the studio audience was not so advised nor led to believe:

"Q. When you first put the program on the air starting on May first your studio audience was asked to submit comment first as to whether they thought the material suitable for pictures, and second, the persons they would like to see in the leading roles, isn't that right? A. That is right."

[8] Thus the evidence shows that defendant's principal witness, a man who had been in the radio business for some years, believed that a plan such as plaintiff's was new in the sense that the particular combination of ideas had not before been used in radio. It is also evident that it was the custom in the radio industry to pay for such ideas. Furthermore, the question of originality of plaintiff's program is not one of law to be determined by the court but is one of fact for the jury's determination. Yadkoe v. Fields, 66 Cal.App.2d 150, 159, 151 P.2d 906; Dezendorf v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., 9 Cir., 99 F.2d 850, 851; New York Belting & Packing Co. v. New Jersey Car-Spring & Rubber Co., 137 U.S. 445, 450, 11 S.Ct. 193, 34 L.Ed. 741.

The next contention made by defendant is that the jury arbitrarily ignored the uncontradicted, unimpeached testimony of defendant's witness, Hudson. The record shows that this witness' testimony was contradicted and impeached at different times throughout the trial. His testimony with respect to the so-called program evolved by him in 1940 (before defendant had access to plaintiff's work) which it is contended is the one broadcast by the defendant company, is worthy of mention. He testified that the idea back of his program was to promote the sale of stories by authors who could not get a hearing from important motion picture executives. He admitted that he had not considered having any audience participation feature, and, of course, no prize offered for the best letters, nor had he considered the title "Hollywood Preview." It would seem that the audience participation feature, whether the studio audience or the entire listening public, was one of the more salient parts of plaintiff's program. The members of the listening, movie-going public, may well have been sufficiently intrigued with the thought that they were having a voice in the selection of "moving pictures of the future" so as to increase the popularity rating of the program. There was a great deal of testimony at the trial concerning the "Hooper" system of ratings. This is a system used to ascertain the number of listeners tuned in to a particular program. It was also shown at the trial that the percentage of listeners increased with respect to this particular program after the "prize for the best letter" feature was added. Using the same test here as to the similarity between the program actually broadcast and Hudson's program, it would seem that defendant's contention is without merit. It would not be apparent to the "reasonable man" upon a comparison of the two that there was such similarity to raise the inference that defendant's program was that originated by Hudson in 1940.

[9, 10] Defendant's contention that there can be no liability to pay for an idea which has been made public is without merit when the facts of this case are considered. When plaintiff made his audition recording before an audience in the National Broadcasting Company's studio he was not making his idea "public property" within the meaning of the law. Prior to publication an author may make copies of his production and enjoy the benefit of limited or restricted publication without forfeiture of the right of a general publication. The communication of the contents of a work under restriction, known as a "restricted or limited" publication, is illustrated by performances of a dramatic or musical composition before a select audience, private circulation of the manuscript, etc. Ball, Literary Property and Copyright, 473; Werckmeister v. American Lithographic Co., 2 Cir., 134 F. 321, 324, 68 L.R.A. 591; Palmer v. De Witt, 47 N.Y. 532, 543, 7 Am.Rep.

480; American Tobacco Co. v. Werckmeister, 207 U.S. 284, 28 S.Ct. 72, 52 L.Ed. 208, 12 Ann.Cas. 595; Nutt v. National Institute Inc. for the Improvement of Memory, supra; Ferris v. Frohman, 223 U.S. 424, 32 S.Ct. 263, 56 L.Ed. 492; Uproar Co. v. National Broadcasting Co., D.C., 8 F.Supp. 358, affirmed 1 Cir., 81 F.2d 373.

[11] With respect to defendant's motion for a new trial which was denied by the trial court, various contentions are made by defendant as to why it should have been granted. First, it is said that the jury's verdict was so excessive that it must have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice. There is evidence in the record to show that plaintiff spent several years in the preparation of his idea for a radio program; that he had a recording made of it when the audition was held which entailed the employment of various screen and radio actors, technicians and the like. There is evidence to show that plaintiff's idea was of no value whatsoever to him after its use by the defendant. As was said in Yadkoe v. Fields, 66 Cal.App.2d 150, 161, 151 P.2d 906, 912: "Moreover, the implied finding that the nature of the material here involved is such that no value attaches thereto aside from the use thereof, and that once such material is used the value therein is gone, is fully justified by the evidence. * * * Under the circumstances here presented, appellant's contention as to lack of evidence of the value of the use of the material is without merit." The above quoted case involved the affirmation by the District Court of Appeal of a jury verdict of $8,000 damages given for the use of isolated "gags". In the present case, both plaintiff and his expert witness testified as to the estimated worth of the program idea, and as to the custom in the industry to pay the author a certain percentage of the production costs based on the number of weeks a show was on the air. "'The fact that personal property which is injured or destroyed by the wrongful or negligent act of another, has no market value, does not restrict the recovery to nominal damages only; its value or the plaintiff's damages must be ascertained in some other rational way and from such elements as are attainable. In such case the proper measure of damages is generally its actual value or its value to the owner. The value of an article may be shown by proof of such elements or facts as may exist—such as its cost, the cost of reproducing or replacing it, its utility and use * * *." Universal Pictures Co. v. Harold Lloyd Corporation, 9 Cir., 162 F.2d 354, 370, quoting from 15 Am.Jur. 554, 555. It would appear that the evidence is sufficient to support the finding of the jury as to the amount of damages, and that the verdict was not given under the influence of passion and prejudice.

[12, 13] The newly discovered evidence claimed by defendant is shown by the affidavit of one James Allen who states that in 1935 he conceived the idea of a radio program on which would appear stories presented in dramatic form to the public as a "showcase" of possible literary material for the legitimate stage. This idea was registered with "Billboard", a theatrical publication in New York City in 1935. In 1939, this idea was registered with the Screen Writers' Guild under the possible title, "Play Preview." It contained no element of audience participation or offer of prizes. The idea back of his program was to present the stories to "the attention of stage and screen producers" and not to the public generally. Allen's 1939 prospectus did not set forth any of the details of his idea. Plaintiff was working for Allen as musical director at that time, and he states that he made several suggestions with respect to the program. This is denied by Allen in his affidavit. There are affidavits in the record to the effect that plaintiff had discussed his program idea in 1938 with the affiants. These affidavits present the same conflict as the evidence adduced at the trial. They were before the court upon the motion for a new trial. A motion for a new trial on this ground is to a large extent addressed to the discretion of the trial judge, and an appellate court will not disturb his ruling unless it is manifest that a gross or unmistakable abuse of discretion appears. Kirschbaum v. McCarthy, 5 Cal.2d 191, 54 P.2d 8; Cooper v. Kellogg, 2 Cal.2d 504, 42 P.2d 59; Buckhantz v. R. G.

Hamilton Co., 71 Cal.App.2d 777, 163 P.2d 756; Montaldo v. Hires Bottling Co., 59 Cal.App.2d 642, 139 P.2d 666. It cannot be said that there was such an abuse of discretion in the present case.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK and EDMONDS, JJ., concur.

SCHAUER, Justice.

I concur in the judgment of affirmance.

The problem in this case is to me a closer one and more difficult of solution than that presented in Golding v. R. K. O. Pictures Inc., 208 P.2d 1. In Golding there is no substantial similarity between the two works except possibly in the so-called "central core," which, in this decade, as I have shown (208 P.2d 8), is no more novel or original than (on a claim of like date) the Star Spangled Banner. But here there is cognizable similarity or deducible relationship between every substantial element of the program which defendant produced and that which was proposed by plaintiff. Likewise, the evidence shows ample opportunity for piracy. The sole controlling question then is one of fitness for literary protectability of that which was pirated.

The problem here is more difficult than in Golding because here we are in a newer field; all of its vistas have been by no means explored. The merchandise offered for sale in this case—and assertedly appropriated—is of a quite different character from that involved in Golding. The craft of story-plotting, together with the art of story-telling, has come down through the centuries, and legislatures and courts long have experimented with affording a measure of monopolistic or property-right protectibility to literary compositions of conventional nature even though all plotted stories, it is said, must be but an application of one or more of "The Thirty-Six Dramatic Situations." (Georges Polti.) Although original plots (dramatic situations) were exhausted centuries ago, original and novel ideas for handling old plots seem inexhaustible, and as long as sufficient originality in treatment or handling of the old plot appears the law endeavors to afford property protection.

In Golding, where the details and whole treatment of plaintiffs' play and defendants' picture are essentially different, and where the only possibly cognizable similarity is in the so-called "central core" or "basic plot," we can turn to a plot catalog and it becomes immediately obvious that no property right of plaintiffs has been appropriated in The Ghost Ship. But here, as above indicated, the problem and its solution are not so simple; the answer cannot as yet, I think, be found in a catalog nor even in the law books.

The plaintiff here did not write a story or a play. He does not claim originality in the handling of any dramatic plot. He does claim to have originated a plan for a radio program and to have written and recorded the formal script for the proposed program. Such a plan, together with its script, if truly original, may constitute a protectible "product of the mind" (see Civil Code, § 980). The plan, together with the script as formulated by plaintiff, has been set forth fully in the majority opinion and is largely again quoted in the dissenting opinion of Justice Traynor; it need not be repeated here. Suffice it to say that such plan proposed this version of the "theatre of the air" type of weekly program: Recognized plays—at least plays which had already been produced or scheduled for production in motion picture form—would not be used; instead, sketches or scenarios which the author was offering for motion picture use would be adapted for radio presentation; the special announcer or "producer" for the radio presentation would be a prominent picture figure; he would ask the radio audience to send in their opinions of the show with particular reference as to whether they would like a motion picture version and their ideas for casting the parts; a cash prize would be awarded each week to the author of the "best letter"; the program would be denominated "———[the producer] Presents" and, generically, it was referred to as a "Hollywood Preview" or "Preview Parade." Plaintiff does not claim to have himself authored any play offered for use on the proposed program.

Several years after the plaintiff's plan was submitted to defendant it (in 1945) produced a program entitled "Hollywood Preview." Like plaintiff's plan it embodied a theatre-of-the-air type presentation "of a motion picture of the future" with announcements pertaining to the production by an "eminent star of radio, stage and screen"; the studio audiences were requested to "fill out cards giving their comments" on the proposed picture production and "suggesting their favorite stars for the motion picture." Likewise, the defendant in connection with the program it produced, announced a six-weeks prize-contest for best letters relating to the program in which letters, it was suggested, the listeners should "express their opinion of the stories 'previewed'" and "vote for the stories they would like to see on the screen."

The pervasive over-all similarity between plaintiff's program-plan and that used by defendant is patent; the evidence establishes (under rules which historically have governed appellate courts) that plaintiff submitted his plan to defendant and that there was opportunity to appropriate it. The jury, under proper instructions, impliedly found that it was appropriated with an implied promise to pay its reasonable value. The basic question for us then, as I view it, is this: Is the plan as presented by plaintiff such an original product of the mind as to be legally the subject of private ownership? If it is, and if a protectible element of it has been appropriated by defendant, the verdict must stand; if not, the defendant is entitled to judgment.

A fair answer to such critical question requires this further factual analysis. No single basic element of plaintiff's program can be said to be novel or to have originated with him; all such elements had been used before. Plaintiff, however, did suggest what appears to have been a novel adaptation and application of the audience participation idea—its adaptation and application, theoretically, to aid producers in the selection of stories for picture production. The real object of the audience participation technique is, of course, an appeal to the interest of the listeners. This program, it would seem, was devised to appeal particularly to "movie fans," to win their radio program attention through catering to their motion picture interest. Upon the record it cannot be held that this particular application of the audience participation appeal, as it was dressed up and treated by plaintiff, was not originated by him nor that its admittedly somewhat varied and limited use in the program produced by defendant was so unsubstantial as to be legally negligible.

The learned and careful trial judge painstakingly explained to the jury that "Any person is free to use matters in the public domain as sources of literary or dramatic property but no person * * * is free to use the composition of another if such composition involves a new arrangement, combination or treatment of matters in the public domain, although such matters by themselves might not be protectible." He further told the jury that "in order to return a verdict for plaintiff, the radio program idea which plaintiff expressed in writing and recorded, or some feature thereof, must have been new, novel and original. An abstract idea cannot be the subject matter of an implied agreement to purchase but if such abstract idea is reduced to concrete form, it may in such form be made the subject of such an agreement to the extent that the concrete form of such idea is new, novel and original." Lastly, in this connection, it is to be noted that the jury were told: "You should determine, first [italics added], whether plaintiff's idea could be the subject matter of such an agreement; secondly, whether the facts justify your finding that there was any such implied agreement; and, thirdly, whether defendant copied or appropriated from plaintiff any portion of plaintiff's idea which is found to be a proper subject matter of such an agreement"; and he cautioned the jury, "If you find similarities between plaintiff's program * * * and defendant's program * * * you must determine, first, whether any of such similarities are in ideas or features or combinations thereof which are new, novel or original, and, secondly, whether, if any such similarities exist such similarities were appropriated by defendant from plaintiff's program or, on the other hand, whether they were originated by employees of defendant or were secured from sources other than plaintiff's program. Unless you are convinced * * * that there are such similarities between the two programs and that such similarities are a result of defendant's use of plaintiff's program rather than origination and development by employees of defendant or from the use of other sources, your verdict must be for the defendant * * * Independent creation of identical ideas is not a basis for liability. In order that a verdict can be returned against defendant there must have been copying or appropriation from plaintiff."

It is difficult to conceive how the jury could have been more clearly or adequately instructed on the applicable law. The question as to whether, on the law as declared by the trial judge, the evidence admits of the findings made by the jury is admittedly a close one. But where, as here, there is an element of originality in plaintiff's program and there is some similarity between every element of plaintiff's program and that which defendant produced, and where plaintiff's program was submitted to defendant and the jury has found, on the instructions quoted, that defendant copied and appropriated plaintiff's program, including an original element thereof, in the construction of the one it produced, and further found the implied promise to pay the value of that which it appropriated, it seems to me that we should breach a fundamental principle of trial by jury were we to hold that the evidence does not support the verdict. In other words, I think that the dissenting view in this case rests not on a pure question of law nor on a total lack of evidence but, necessarily, on an analysis of the evidence which argues its weight. I do not think that because the element of originality in the combination of free ideas is comparatively small, we can hold that as a matter of law the composition is wholly unprotectible.

Obedient, then, to the principle declared in such cases as Cardillo v. Liberty Mutual Ins. Co. (1947), 330 U.S. 469 [67 S.Ct. 801, 807, 91 L.Ed. 1028]; Ellis v. Union Pacific Railroad Co. (1947), 329 U.S. 649, 653 [67 S.Ct. 598, 600, 91 L.Ed. 572, 576]; Eagles v. United States ex rel. Samuels (1946), 329 U.S. 304, 317 [67 S.Ct. 313, 320, 91 L.Ed. 308, 317]; Estate of Bristol (1943), 23 Cal. 2d 221, 223, 143 P.2d 689; Cate v. Certain-teed Products Corp. (1943), 23 Cal.2d 444, 448, 144 P.2d 335; Estate of Teel (1944), 25 Cal.2d 520, 526, 154 P.2d 384; Fackrell v. City of San Diego (1945), 26 Cal.2d 196, 207, 157 P.2d 625, 158 A.L.R. 773; Viner v. Untrecht (1945), 26 Cal.2d 261, 267, 158 P.2d 3; Pewitt v. Riley (1945), 27 Cal.2d 310, 316, 163 P.2d 873; De Young v. De Young (1946), 27 Cal.2d 521, 526, 165 P.2d 457; Millsap v. National Funding Corp. (1944), 66 Cal.App.2d 658, 665, 152 P.2d 634; Southern Calif. Freight Lines v. State Bd. of Equalization (1945), 72 Cal.App.2d 26, 29, 163 P.2d 776; Berry v. Chaplin (1946), 74 Cal.App.2d 652, 663, 169 P.2d 442; Medina v. Van Camp Sea Food Co. (1946), 75 Cal.App.2d 551, 556, 171 P.2d 445; Seidenberg v. George (1946), 76 Cal. App.2d 306, 308, 172 P.2d 891, the verdict should be sustained.

For the reasons above stated I concur in the judgment of affirmance.

TRAYNOR, Justice (dissenting).

Abstract ideas are common property freely available to all. What men forge out of these ideas with skill, industry, and imagination, into concrete forms uniquely their own, the law protects as private property. It gives the special form the stamp of recognition; it does so to stimulate creative activity. It does something more to stimulate creative activity: it assures all men free utilization of abstract ideas in the process of crystallizing them in fresh forms. For creativeness thrives on freedom; men find new implications in old ideas when they range with open minds through open fields. They would indeed be stifled in their efforts to create forms worth protecting, if in the common through which they ranged they were diverted from their course by one enclosure after another. "We must take care to guard against two extremes equally prejudicial: The one that men of ability, who have employed their time for the service of the community, may not be deprived of their just merits and the reward of their ingenuity and labor; the other, that the world may not be deprived of improvements, nor the progress of the arts be retarded. The act that secures copyrights to authors guards against the piracy of the words and sentiments, but does not prohibit writing on the same subject." Lord Mansfield, in Sayre v. Moore, 1 East 361, 101 Eng.Rep. 140.

It would be ironic if copyright law, designed to encourage creative activity, became the instrument of its destruction. The very function of creative activity is to keep the common field in continuous germination; it is not for copyright law to render it barren by a succession of enclosures denying access to those who would cultivate it. "The object of copyright is to promote science and the useful arts. If an author, by originating a new arrangement and form of expression of certain ideas or conceptions, could withdraw these ideas or conceptions from the stock of materials to be used by other authors, each copyright would narrow the field of thought open for development and exploitation, and science, poetry, narrative, and dramatic fiction and other branches of literature would be hindered by copyright, instead of being promoted. A poem consists of words, expressing conceptions of words or lines of thoughts; but copyright in the poem gives no monopoly in the separate words, or in the ideas, conception, or facts expressed or described by the words. A copyright extends only to the arrangement of the words. A copyright does not give a monopoly in any incident in a play. Other authors have a right to exploit the facts, experiences, field of thought, and general ideas, provided they do not substantially copy a concrete form, in which the circumstances and ideas have been developed, arranged, and put into shape." Eichel v. Marcin, D.C., 241 F. 404, 408-409; Nichols v. Universal Pictures Corp., 2 Cir., 45 F.2d 119, 121; Holmes v. Hurst, 174 U.S. 82, 19 S.Ct. 606, 43 L.Ed. 904. To insure free trade in ideas, therefore, the monopoly created by copyright is limited to "the arrangement and combination of the ideas * * * the form, sequence, and manner in which the composition expresses the ideas." Bowen v. Yankee Network, Inc., D.C., 46 F.Supp. 62, 64.

The policy that precludes protection of an abstract idea by copyright does not prevent its protection by contract. Even though an idea is not property subject to exclusive ownership, its disclosure may be of substantial benefit to the person to whom it is disclosed. That disclosure may therefore be consideration for a promise to pay. Bristol v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 132 N.Y. 264, 267, 30 N.E. 506, 28 Am.St.Rep. 568; Moore v. Ford Motor Co., 2 Cir., 43 F.2d 685, 686. Unlike a copyright, a contract creates no monopoly; it is effective only between the contracting parties; it does not withdraw the idea from general circulation. Any person not a party to the contract is free to use the idea without restriction.

Even though the idea disclosed may be "widely know and generally understood", Schonwald v. F. Burkart Mfg. Co., 356 Mo. 435, 202 S.W.2d 7, 13, it may be protected by an express contract providing that it will be paid for regardless of its lack of novelty. Brunner v. Stix, Baer & Fuller Co., 352 Mo. 1225, 1237, 181 S.W.2d 643; High v. Trade Union Courier Pub. Co., Sup., 69 N.Y.S.2d 526, 529. An implied-in-fact contract differs from an express contract only in that the promise is not expressed in language but implied from the promisor's conduct. Yadkoe v. Fields, 66 Cal.App.2d 150, 158, 151 P.2d 906; Ryan & Associates, Inc., v. Century Brewing Ass'n, 185 Wash. 600, 603, 55 P.2d 1053, 104 A.L.R. 1353; Cole v. Phillips H. Lord, Inc., 262 App.Div. 116, 28 N.Y.S.2d 404, 409. It is not a reasonable assumption, however, in the absence of an express promise, or unequivocal conduct from which one can be implied, that one would obligate himself to pay for an idea that he would otherwise be free to use. Even an express contract to pay for "valuable information" to be submitted by the plaintiff does not carry the implication of a promise to pay if it is found upon disclosure to be common knowledge. Masline v. New York, New Haven & Hartford R. Co.,

95 Conn. 702, 708, 112 A. 639. If the idea is not novel, the evidence must establish that the promisor agreed expressly or impliedly to pay for the idea whether or not it was novel. Masline v. New York, New Haven & Hartford R. Co., supra; Soule v. Bon Ami Co., 235 N.Y. 609, 139 N.E. 754.

The gravamen of plaintiff's cause of action is not the unauthorized use of his idea, since ideas may be freely borrowed, but the breach of an agreement to pay for its use. If the evidence discloses that there is no express or implied-in-fact contract there can be no recovery. Bristol v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 132 N.Y. 264, 267, 30 N.E. 506, 28 Am.St.Rep. 568; Alberts v. Remington Rand, Inc., 175 Misc. 486, 23 N.Y.S.2d 892, 894; Bowen v. Yankee Network, Inc., D.C., 46 F.Supp. 62, 63-64. It is urged that even in the absence of express or implied contract recovery may be predicated upon a quasi-contract, or implied-in-law promise to pay the reasonable value of the idea if it is used. Quasi-contractual liability, however, is based, not upon any evidence of consensual agreement but in the absence of such agreement, upon the theory that the defendant would be unjustly enriched if he were allowed to use the idea without paying for it. A defendant who makes use of an abstract idea that is common property is not unjustly enriched thereby, since he has taken nothing to which the plaintiff or any other person has the right of exclusive ownership. Given the principle that abstract ideas are free, there is no more right to recovery for their use in an action in quasi-contract than in an action for infringement of copyright. It has been consistently held that an action in quasi-contract for the use of an idea is governed by the same principles that control a tort action for copyright infringement: the idea must be embodied in a concrete form attributable to plaintiff's own ingenuity, Bailey v. Haberle Congress Brewing Co., 193 Misc. 723, 85 N.Y.S.2d 51, 52; Bowen v. Yankee Network, Inc., D.C., 46 F.Supp. 62, 63; Thomas v. R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 350 Pa. 262, 267, 38 A.2d 61, 157 A.L.R. 1432; Moore v. Ford Motor Co., D.C., 28 F.2d 529, 539, affirmed 2 Cir., 43 F.2d 685, 688, and the form as distinguished from the abstract idea must be used by the defendant. Matarese v. Moore-McCormack Lines, Inc., 2 Cir., 158 F.2d 631, 634, 170 A.L.R. 440; Plus Promotions, Inc., v. R.C.A. Mfg. Co., D.C., 49 F.Supp. 116, 117; Booth v. Stutz Motor Car Co., 7 Cir., 56 F.2d 962, 969. In either case the plaintiff must prove that property was taken that was his. His choice of alternative actions is analogous to that of a plaintiff whose personal property has been converted and who may elect between a tort action for the value of the converted property and an action based upon an implied-in-law contract to pay the reasonable value of its use. The plaintiff's election will govern the nature of his recovery, but it does not affect the basic elements of his cause of action. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n v. Hill, 9 Cal.2d 495, 498-499, 71 P.2d 258; Los Angeles Drug Co. v. Superior Court, 8 Cal.2d 71, 74, 63 P.2d 1124; Hallidie v. Enginger, 175 Cal. 505, 508, 166 P. 1; Corey v. Struve, 170 Cal. 170, 172, 149 P. 48; Bechtel v. Chase, 156 Cal. 707, 711, 106 P. 81.

Plaintiff developed a script and format embodying his idea for a radio program based upon the production of radio plays in a Hollywood setting. Had defendant appropriated the concrete form in which the idea was expressed, the "literary or artistic creation available for advertising use or otherwise", Williamson v. New York Cent. R. Co., 258 App.Div. 226, 16 N.Y.S.2d 217, plaintiff would have a cause of action for infringement of his common law copyright in the development of the idea that he had conceived. Civil Code § 980; Barsha v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 32 Cal.App. 2d 556, 561, 90 P.2d 371; Sheldon v. Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corp., 2 Cir., 81 F. 2d 49, 54. Plaintiff concedes, however, that there could be no recovery if this action were one in tort for copyright infringement and that he was properly nonsuited as to his cause of action based thereon, presumably because there was no appropriation of whatever craftsmanship gave concrete form to his program idea. For the same reason there could be no recovery in quasi-contract. Plaintiff can only recover upon an implied-in-fact agreement that defendant would pay him the reasonable value of his idea.

Plaintiff's second cause of action, upon which the judgment in his favor rests, was based upon the allegation that he submitted his program idea to defendant's agents "at said defendant's special instance and request * * * under and pursuant to an implied agreement that if said defendant used plaintiff's said radio program or any part or portion thereof, that said defendant would pay to plaintiff the reasonable value thereof." There is substantial evidence to support the allegation that defendant accepted plaintiff's submission of his program idea with knowledge that he expected to be compensated for its use under an implied agreement that he would be paid for the idea if it proved to be commercially valuable and was in fact used by the defendant.[1] The evidence does not, however, furnish support for an inference that defendant agreed to pay for the use of the idea even though it might prove to be "common or even open to public knowledge." High v. Trade Union Courier Pub. Co., Sup., 69 N.Y.S.2d 526, 529.

Such a promise cannot reasonably be implied from the practice of the radio industry.[2] Admittedly, the industry is will-

1. Plaintiff testified to his conversation with Russ Johnson, then program director of KNX, defendant's station for the Los Angeles area:

"I think I called him on the telephone for an appointment and told him I had a recording, and a format and a script on what I thought was a new and a good radio idea, and he asked me to bring it to his office. I brought it to his office, and when I got it there he told me he was very busy at the time and would I please leave the recording, and the script and the format with him for about a week or 10 days, or at the outside two weeks, and that he would listen to me in the interim and give me his opinion as to what he thought of it, and if the Columbia Broadcasting System or its sales department could sell it."

Hal Hudson, defendant's western program director, also testified to his conversation with Ben Paley, defendant's program operations manager:

"Q. Did Mr. Paley ever mention to you the fact that Stanley had a program? A. Yes. At some later date I believe he told me that Mr. Stanley had a program entitled Walter Wanger Presents.

"Q. Well, can you fix the date of that statement that Mr. Paley made to you? A. Only that it undoubtedly was after May 15, 1943 because before that time I had no responsibilities toward new programs. My duties were concerned with programs on the air.

"Q. What did Mr. Paley tell you about this program Walter Wanger Presents? A. He told me only that Stanley, whom I had previously met, had such a program.

"Q. Did he tell you what it was about? A. No, he didn't.

"Q. What was the occasion of his mentioning it to you? What did he say? A. I think he said in effect, 'Stanley has a program Walter Wanger Presents which I would like to have you hear.'"

"Q. Did he tell you it concerned the broadcast of stories written for motion pictures? A. No. He told me nothing about it. He said, 'I think it is a pretty good program.'"

2. The testimony of Hudson, upon which plaintiff relies, demonstrates the willingness of the industry to pay for ideas of commercial value but furnishes no support for any inference that it would agree to pay for common and hackneyed ideas:

"Q. Now, Mr. Hudson, is there any recognized right in the radio field to an original program idea? A. It seems to me that is a point of law which I am not qualified to answer.

"Q. You are not familiar with the practices of the industry so far as the recognition of program ideas are concerned, or payment therefor? A. I am familiar with the practice, yes.

"Q. Now, is there such a thing as recognition in the radio industry of a radio program idea? A. Yes.

* * * * * *

"Q. By Mr. Fendler: Is there any practice in the radio industry on the part of broadcasting companies to pay for the reasonable value of radio program ideas apart from services? A. Ideas which they have contracted for?

"Q. Which they have contracted for or used. A. Which they have contracted for, yes.

"Q. As a matter of fact, the broadcasting companies request the submis-ing to pay for new ideas of commercial value to it, but there is no basis for an inference that a national radio network would agree to pay for the use of an idea, regardless of whether it is novel or shopworn, hackneyed, and commonplace. "A duty not to use an idea already known cannot be created by virtue of the fact that one makes a confidential disclosure of that idea." Smoley v. New Jersey Zinc Co., D.C., 24 F.Supp. 294, 300, affirmed 3 Cir., 106 F.2d 314. Plaintiff's recognition that novelty is essential to the marketability of a radio program idea is implicit in his statement to Johnson that he had "what I thought was a new and a good radio idea." Defendant's policy is set forth in a standard form, of which plaintiff was aware, that all persons who submit program ideas for consideration were requested to sign.[3] In that form, Columbia unequivocally disclaimed any intention to pay for the use of a non-novel idea. Its willingness to consider plaintiff's program idea was in accord with that policy. The evidence does not indicate any intention on defendant's part to deviate therefrom. It must therefore be held that plaintiff submitted his program idea to defendant upon the latter's implied-in-fact promise to pay him the reasonable value of the idea if it should prove to be novel and commercially valuable and if defendant should put it to use.

This appeal thus presents two questions for the decision of this court:

(1) Is plaintiff's radio program or any part thereof novel and commercially valuable?

(2) Is there similarity between plaintiff's idea and defendant's radio program with respect to any novel aspects of the former to support an inference that defendant made unauthorized use of plaintiff's idea?

I.

Plaintiff testified that the basic idea of his program, for the use of which he claimed a reimbursement of $100,000, was to give the people of America "a voice in what pictures Hollywood shall produce in the years to come." His idea took the form of a proposed weekly radio program entitled "Walter Wanger Presents," "Preview Parade," or "Hollywood Preview," which was to present a play that might be suitable for motion picture production. The listening public was to be encouraged to write letters, by an offer of prizes for the best, commenting upon the motion picture value of the plays and suggesting stars for the leading roles; it was thus to have a voice in selecting stories and stars for motion pictures.

Virtually none of the elements of the proposed program to give the public a voice in this selection is novel. There is nothing novel in the idea of linking dramatized stories on the radio with the glamour of Hollywood. The following programs, broadcast nationally, were also based upon this idea: "Lux Theater of the Air," "Hollywood Star Time," "Screen Guild Theater," "Hollywood Premiere," "Hollywood Playtime," "Hollywood Players," "This is Hollywood."

There is nothing novel about plaintiff's title "Hollywood Preview." There was uncontradicted testimony that during the period defendant's program was broadcast, another program with the same title was broadcast locally over other stations. Moreover, these words have long been associated with the previews of Hollywood motion pictures, notably at Grauman's Chinese Theater and at the Carthay Circle Theater. To the millions of movie-conscious persons at whom all these programs sion of program ideas, do they not? A. I wouldn't say they solicit them. They accept them.

"Q. And they accept them upon the basis that if they are used, they will be paid for? A. Yes.

"Q. Is that right? A. Yes.

"Q. And that is well understood in the industry, isn't that correct? A. Yes."

3. "To Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

"I am submitting my idea, summarized or characterized below, about a radio program to you today with the understanding that you are wholly free to determine questions of priority and originality in connection with any identical or substantially similar ideas * * *."

are aimed, the title has become generic and descriptive, symbolizing the glamour associated with Hollywood, the bright lights, the milling throngs waiting for a glimpse of the celebrities attending a first showing of a motion picture. "There can be no property in words which are merely generic or descriptive." Johnston v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, 82 Cal.App. 2d 796, 808, 187 P.2d 474, 482. That this title is generic or descriptive is clearly indicated by plaintiff's use of it in the script of his proposed program, not as its title (the proposed title was "Walter Wanger Presents"), but as a descriptive term, indicating the first performance of a proposed motion picture. In giving their program this title, defendants appropriated nothing in which plaintiff could claim a property interest.

There is nothing novel in the idea of listener participation in a radio program. Radio has long been glutted with programs in which listeners are importuned to participate. Thus listeners on the Jack Benny program were importuned to submit letters on the topic "I hate Jack Benny because—." Listeners on the program entitled "The Shadow" were importuned to relate in a hundred words or less why they use Camay Soap. Listeners on the program entitled "Listeners' Digest" were importuned to write on what they considered the outstanding radio entertainment they had heard in the preceding week.

There is nothing novel in the idea of giving prizes to radio listeners for best letters. The idea of giving prizes for best letters is an ancient one in advertising.

There is nothing novel in the idea of soliciting the comments of listeners as to whether a radio program merits commercial presentation. Thus the Major Bowes program solicited the comment of listeners on the amateurs on the program with the object of determining whether they should receive professional engagements.

There is nothing novel about the following elements or their combination with the foregoing features of plaintiff's program: repetition and emphasis of the title throughout the broadcast, introduction of the master of ceremonies by the announcer, a master of ceremonies prominent in the motion picture industry, announcement of the title of the play to be presented and the stars therein, and announcement of the author of the play. These elements have for years been a part of almost every program featuring radio stories with a Hollywood connection. Defendant, as well as plaintiff, may use these elements freely either singly or in combination. See, Ornstein v. Paramount Productions, Inc., D.C., 9 F.Supp. 896, 901.

It may be possible to combine such hackneyed elements so imaginatively that they comprise a novel program idea, or to give them a new twist that places them in the category of fresh material. A new twist to a worn idea may be as much entitled to credit as an entirely new idea. "No man writes exclusively from his own thoughts, unaided and uninstructed by the thoughts of others. The thoughts of every man are, more or less, a combination of what other men have thought and expressed * * *." Emerson v. Davies, 8 Fed.Cas., pages 615, 618, No. 4,436, "Presenting old material in a new plan or arrangement is sufficient to lend copyrightability to the resulting work." Amdur, Copyright Law and Practice, 86; Universal Pictures Co. v. Harold Lloyd Corporation, 9 Cir., 162 F.2d 354, 363; Edwards & Deutsch Lithographing Co. v. Boorman, 7 Cir., 15 F.2d 35, 36. Two architects may originate very different designs for the same structure, specifying the use of identical materials; each has a property interest in his design. Similarly writers may create original stories out of the same problem, as Anatole France created "Thais", Somerset Maugham, "Miss Thompson" ("Rain"), and Andre Gide, "Symphonie Pastorale." And in the literature of music there are many creative variations by one great composer on the themes of another.

Plaintiff has made no unique combination or interpretation of old material. Whatever novelty there may be in his program lies in a fresh variation of the listener participation idea, a variation of the idea in the Major Bowes program of having the listeners participate in determining whether amateur artists should become professionals. Although the evidence demonstrates that previous to the presentation of plaintiff's program to defendant there was no radio program in which the listeners participated in determining the selection of stories and stars for motion pictures, there is a question whether plaintiff has conceived a variation of the listener participation idea substantial enough to warrant a claim to novelty. Novelty of ideas in radio programs must be assessed in the light of the fact that many programs are commonplace presentations of commonplace materials. Inevitably ideas in this field may have a claim to novelty by virtue of their attention-getting possibilities, even though they lack the brilliance commonly associated with creative thought. A fresh application of the familiar, however dull or commonplace it may appear to the critical, may be a marketable idea if it gives enough promise of winning the attention of the public. It is not for the court to consider the quality of an idea or to pass judgment on the public's taste; the problem before it is not one of aesthetics but of property rights. Bleistein v. Donaldson Lithographing Co., 188 U.S. 239, 251–252, 23 S.Ct. 298, 47 L.Ed. 460. On the other hand, in the fertile field of commonplaceness there is also a propagation of ideas whose claims to novelty are spurious, for whatever value they may have rests not on their uniqueness but on their resemblance to the familiar. The value of a fresh application of an idea that has thrived on repetition may lie, not in the application, but in the familiar idea itself. The secret of success of such programs as plaintiff's seems to be listener participation, and since listener participation has already been used for such a variety of purposes, it is open to question whether its application to plaintiff's purpose is imaginative enough to compel one to say that something new has been added, that there has been a variation of the old that in some measure transforms it. See, Hirsch v. Paramount Pictures, D.C., 17 F.Supp. 816, 818.

II.

Whatever the validity of plaintiff's claim to novelty for his application of the listener participation idea, it constitutes his only claim to novelty, and defendant is not liable if it did not use that application.

There can be no finding that defendant used plaintiff's program idea without proof that it had access thereto. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. v. Dieckhaus, 8 Cir., 153 F.2d 893, 894, certiorari denied 329 U.S. 716, 67 S.Ct. 46, 91 L.Ed. 621; Lewys v. O'Neill, D.C., 49 F.2d 603, 608, 610. Access is established by proof that employees of defendant read or heard plaintiff's program before or in the course of the development of defendant's program. Kustoff v. Chaplin, 9 Cir., 120 F.2d 551, 560. It is undisputed that before defendant's program was broadcast, the employees of defendant had read and considered the script, recording, and format submitted to them by plaintiff. There was a conflict in the evidence as to whether Hudson, defendant's western program director, developed defendant's program before plaintiff submitted his idea. The jury resolved that conflict against the defendant. Proof of opportunity to use plaintiff's idea, however, does not compel affirmance of the judgment without proof that defendant availed itself of that opportunity. Kustoff v. Chaplin, supra; Cain v. Universal Pictures Co., D.C., 47 F.Supp. 1013, 1015. Direct proof of use is seldom available. If there is proof of access, however, copying may be inferred from similarity between the two programs with respect to the feature of plaintiff's idea, which it will be assumed for the purpose of this dissent was novel, the application of listener participation to the determination of a story's suitability for motion pictures.

It must therefore be determined whether there is such a similarity between the two programs. Mere general similarity that proceeds not from the novelty of plaintiff's idea but from its commonplaceness is irrelevant. Only similarity with respect to what is novel in plaintiff's idea is relevant. Booth v. Stutz Motor Car Co., 7 Cir., 56 F.2d 962, 969; Saco-Lowell Shops v. Reynolds, 4 Cir., 141 F.2d 587, 593; Plus Promotions, Inc., v. R. C. A. Mfg. Co., D.C., 49 F.Supp. 116, 117. The standards that govern this inquiry are the same as those governing the question whether there is relevant similarity between two productions to support a finding of copying in a suit for copyright infringement. When a plaintiff claims the protection of common law or statutory copyright for his literary effort, that protection extends only to any originality of treatment or expression that is copyrightable. When a plaintiff claims the protection of an implied-in-fact contract for an abstract idea, his idea must have the characteristic of novelty for which defendant has promised to pay. In both cases, only similarity appearing between the two works with respect to that which is protected in plaintiff's work is relevant. General similarity in non-protectible elements, being irrelevant, cannot support an inference of copying in a piracy suit or use in a suit upon a contract. Harold Lloyd Corp. v. Witwer, 9 Cir., 65 F.2d 1, 17; MacDonald v. Du Maurier, D.C., 75 F. Supp. 655, 662; Shipman v. R. K. O. Radio Pictures, 2 Cir., 100 F.2d 533, 537; Rosen v. Loew's Inc., 2 Cir., 162 F.2d 785, 788.

The majority opinion holds that the jury's finding will be upheld on appeal if "such similarity exists between plaintiff's and defendant's programs as to suggest to the average person the use by defendant of an idea originating with plaintiff. * * * In determining whether the similarity which exists between a copyrighted literary, dramatic or musical work and an alleged infringing publication is due to copying, the common knowledge of the average reader, observer, spectator or listener is the standard of judgment which must be used. * * * The evidence, in the form of the two programs alone, shows that there is substantial similarity to support the verdict." This statement assumes that a general similarity between the two programs justifies submitting to the jury the issue of use. Recovery can be allowed, however, only if there is similarity between the programs with respect to the novel aspects of plaintiff's program.

The majority opinion holds that plaintiff has met this requirement by introducing evidence that his program contains a novel idea. Once he has done this, the mere fact of introduction of the two programs into evidence is enough to allow the case to go to the jury and to support a verdict reached thereon. The jury compares the programs as an average listener would. If it receives the impression from its common knowledge that there is similarity between the two programs, this impression and common knowledge support the inference that defendant used plaintiff's program idea, and defendant is liable for the reasonable value thereof. The jury may determine that defendant must pay therefor, even though it is evident that plaintiff's protectible property interest in his program comprises only a small part thereof, and even though it is evident from a comparison of the two programs that there is no similarity between them in regard to the novel idea of plaintiff's program. Such a procedure may have the prejudicial effect of supporting a charge of piracy even though substantial similarity between two programs results from the use in both of stock situations or standardized techniques long used in the radio industry and therefore in the public domain. See, Harold Lloyd Corporation v. Witwer, 9 Cir., 65 F. 2d 1, 17; Moore v. Ford Motor Co., D.C., 28 F.2d 529, 536; Echevarria v. Warner Bros. Pictures, D.C., 12 F.Supp. 632, 635; 18 C.J.S., Copyright and Literary Property, § 113, p. 231. It is therefore of the greatest importance to narrow the issue of similarity. If the jury is permitted to reach its verdict on the basis of a general comparison of the programs in their entirety, there is great risk that similarity between the programs in their commonplace aspects will be weighed to defendant's disadvantage and that plaintiff will be permitted reimbursement for the non-novel elements of his program idea, for which defendant did not agree to pay. If a general similarity may of itself support a verdict in plaintiff's favor an appellate court would be powerless to afford relief from such a verdict, even though the only similarity is between the non-novel elements contained in both programs.

The error inherent in the scope of inquiry prescribed by the majority opinion is not obviated by its concession that, once the jury has returned a verdict for plaintiff that may have been based on irrelevant general similarity, "we look to the evidence to ascertain whether such similarity existed as to the portion of the production which plaintiff claims to have originated." We thus have the anomalous situation in which a case must first be submitted to the jury and a verdict returned for the plaintiff before the court can determine whether the case should have been submitted to the jury.

Such a result is not supported by the weight of case authority. In Harold Lloyd Corporation v. Witwer, 9 Cir., 65 F.2d 1, plaintiff sought to enjoin the exhibition of a motion picture by the defendant on the ground that it constituted an infringement of a magazine story previously published by the plaintiff. Admittedly there was substantial similarity in plot and in several isolated comedy sequences, and on this basis, the trial court gave judgment for the plaintiff. The Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, however, reversed the judgment, stating that an examination of the two scripts revealed no similarity in those elements of plaintiff's production that were the product of his own ingenuity and creative talent. In discussing the fact that plaintiff relied upon admitted similarities in basic elements of each production, the court stated: "In the case at bar, if it be assumed that there are such similarities between the story and the play as to provoke in the casual observer the consciousness that there is such a similarity between them, and that copying may be inferred therefrom, we are still confronted with the fact that mere similarity does not necessarily involve literary piracy or an infringement of a copyright. Such similarities then as exist would require further analysis to determine whether or not they are novel in the story and thus copyrightable. The copyright of a story only covers what is new and novel in it, so that the question of infringement involves a consideration of what is new and novel in the story to which the author has acquired a monopoly which has been misappropriated by another * * * 'It should also be borne steadfastly in mind, that if a work is not entirely original, there is no copyright in the unoriginal part, which will prevent its use, separately, or in combination, with matter not covered by copyright. Hence, of course, any inquiry as to infringement must exclude permissible reproduction of such non-original matter.'" 65 F.2d 23–24.

In Dymow v. Bolton, 11 F.2d 690, the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit also reversed a trial court verdict for the plaintiff that had been reached upon admitted similarity in non-original elements of the two productions. In stating that infringement could not be established by cutting and trimming down to basic themes and concepts, the court stated: "This incomplete skeleton the two plays have in common, but it is with real difficulty that the flesh and blood, the incidental, yet essential adornment and trimming, of the plays can be cut away to show similarity between a few bones. This difficulty is fatal to plaintiff's case * * * the copying which is infringement must be something * * * recognized as having been taken from the work of another." 11 F.2d 692. See also Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. v. Dieckhaus, 8 Cir., 153 F.2d 893; Nichols v. Universal Pictures Corp., 2 Cir., 45 F.2d 119; Frankel v. Irwin, D.C., 34 F.2d 142; Cain v. Universal Pictures Co., D.C., 47 F.Supp. 1013.

It follows that the issue before this court is not, as the majority opinion holds, whether there is substantial similarity between the two programs, but whether there is evidence of substantial similarity between the two programs with respect to plaintiff's novel idea to justify submitting the case to the jury. That issue can be determined only by the comparison of the two radio scripts whose contents are not disputed. Such a comparison will reveal whether there is relevant similarity between them. Defendant's motion for a directed verdict raised the issue whether there was such similarity. If there was no evidence of such similarity, then no proper inference of copying could be drawn, and the trial court should not have let the case go to the jury on the basis of the general similarity between the two programs. In denying the motion for a directed verdict, the trial court committed reversible error. Hewitt v. Coward, 180 Misc. 1065, 41 N.Y.S.2d 498, 500; Soy Food Mills, Inc., v. Pillsbury Mills, Inc., 7 Cir., 161 F.2d 22, 25; Nichols v. Universal Pictures Corp., 2 Cir., 45 F.2d 119, 122; Wiren v. Shubert Theatre Corp., D.C., 5 F.Supp. 358, 362; Becker v. Loew's, Inc., 7 Cir., 133 F.2d 889, 894; Dorsey v. Old Surety Life Ins. Co., 8 Cir., 98 F.2d 872, 874, 119 A.L.R. 1250; Barbadillo v. Goldwyn, D.C., 42 F.2d 881, 885; Eastern Wine Corp. v. Winslow-Warren, Ltd., 2 Cir., 137 F.2d 955, 960; California Fruit Growers Exchange v. Sunkist Baking Co., 7 Cir., 166 F.2d 971, 973; Kaeser & Blair, Inc., v. Merchants' Ass'n, Inc., 6 Cir., 64 F.2d 575, 576; see Code of Civil Procedure § 426, subd. 3.

The cases relied upon by the majority indicate that only when there is evidence of relevant similarity to support an inference of copying is the question of copying submitted to the jury. Universal Pictures Co. v. Harold Lloyd Corp., 9 Cir., 162 F.2d 354, 363; Fendler v. Morosco, 253 N.Y. 281, 287, 171 N.E. 56; Barsha v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 32 Cal.App.2d 556, 561, 90 P.2d 371. In reversing the judgment, this court would not be substituting its judgment for that of the jury, as the majority opinion suggests, but would be determining that there was insufficient evidence to support the implied finding that there was similarity between the two programs with respect to plaintiff's novel idea.

Plaintiff's program was based on the idea, in his own words "the most important idea in my show," that it would afford the public a "voice in what pictures Hollywood shall produce in the years to come." This idea is emphasized in virtually every paragraph of the program: "Wanger: How do you do, ladies and gentlemen. Welcome to our Hollywood Preview Parade, a radio show designed for your pleasure and to give you a voice in what pictures Hollywood shall produce in the months to come. Hollywood is very interested in giving you motion pictures you want to see. Unfortunately producers do not and cannot always know just what you do want. This is the reason for this 'Preview Parade.' Each week we plan to present a radio story we think will make a good film. We ask you to send us your opinion and suggest players for the leading roles. Our sponsor will give worthwhile cash prizes for the best letters, but more about that later.

"Of the five stories we have so far presented this series, three will be made into motion pictures largely because of your voting. * * *

"Boardman: * * * Each week Mr. Wanger selects a story which he feels should be made into a picture. You are asked to write to Mr. Wanger and give him your opinion. The sponsors pay $500 for the best letter written by one of our listeners and if enough of you vote for it our play will be produced as a motion picture.

"Wanger: * * * 'So Gallantly Gleaming' tells a thrilling and romantic story. * * * Listen closely. Do you think it should be made into a motion picture? Your votes will decide.

"Boardman: * * * *Now again a word as to the real idea behind this program. Each week Walter Wanger Presents brings you a story which we think would be a good motion picture. And here is your part in the program. We ask you to write to Mr. Wanger, telling him whether or not you would like to have this play made into a motion picture, and why. Also include your choice of stars to play the leading roles. The best letter received each week will receive an award of $500 from our sponsor. * * * And believe me, Hollywood is waiting for your vote.* Whether or not you win a prize, your vote will help decide whether or not to film 'So Gallantly Gleaming.' The American picture-going public has long said it wished a voice in the choice of stories presented on the screen. Here is the chance for you to have that voice and make it heard across the nation. * * *

"Last week Mr. Wagner presented 'Out of the Night'. * * * A storm of argument was aroused. 68,000 letters have been received to date, and we are happy to announce that Warner Brothers Studio have arranged to make this startling story into a film in the near future. So, thanks to your letters, you have helped Warner Brothers to their decision to film 'Out of the Night'. * * *

"Wanger: * * * Thank you, [board of experts] * * * Do you, ladies and gentlemen, agree with the opinions of our guests? Do you agree that 'So Gallantly Gleaming' should become a motion picture? And who do you think should play the leading roles? Won't you write and tell us. Remember that whether your letter is best and wins the prize or not, you are helping Hollywood decide on what to give you on the screen. * * *" (Italics added.)

It is apparent from defendant's programs that their basic idea was to simulate the "first showing of a new motion picture in the film capitol" and thereby to capture in its "radio version of [a] Hollywood Preview," the "same spirit of enthusiasm," to make its listeners feel they were viewing that glamorous event. The programs were described as a "Hollywood Preview of a motion picture of the future," as a preview of a "new story written especially for the screen," and "now scheduled for production" or "now in preparation" at one of the motion picture studios. The public was to be given "a glimpse into the movies of tomorrow" but nobody at any time was asked to influence their selection. The studio audience was requested to "[fill] out cards giving their comments" on the play and "suggesting their favorite stars for the motion picture" for the purpose of giving a Hollywood atmosphere by adapting to a broadcast of motion pictures "previewed" on the air, the custom of having the motion picture audience fill out preview cards. There was no intimation that the reaction of the studio audience would in any way influence the production of the picture. In contrast the radio audience comments solicited in plaintiff's program were not for the purpose of atmosphere; they were indispensable to his idea of giving the public a voice in the selection of motion pictures to be filmed. On August 21, 1945, defendant announced that a contest awarding prizes for best letters would be staged for a six-weeks period; that listeners would thus be given "a chance to express their opinion of the stories 'previewed'" and "to vote for the stories they would like to see on the screen." Defendant's contest was the time-honored advertising scheme used to increase sales of the sponsor's gasoline. To participate, listeners had to get entry blanks from the sponsor's service stations. The contest, lasting only six weeks, was an incident of the program, not its core. Defendant's program did not, in its contest feature, or otherwise, give the listening public the impression that "if enough of [the listeners] vote for it [the] play would be produced as a motion picture." It was specifically announced on defendant's programs that a "motion picture of the future" was being presented: on three programs it was stated that the plays were in production.

A comparison of defendant's program with the application in plaintiff's program of the listener participation idea, makes it clear that defendant did not in any of its programs copy that idea. There is a fundamental difference between the themes of the two programs. The basic idea of plaintiff's program was listener participation in the selection of stories and stars for motion picture production in the future. The basic idea of defendant's programs was listener participation in the simulation of whatever glamour attends a Hollywood preview. If there is kinship between the two programs, it rests on their common capitalization of Hollywood glamour. But defendant stops short of executing plaintiff's idea that the public might do more than behold the glamour that spells Hollywood by participating in determining by what and by whom it should be bedazzled.

SPENCE, J., concurs.

Rehearing denied; TRAYNOR and SPENCE, JJ., dissenting.

35 Cal.2d 690

GOLDING et al. v. R. K. O. PICTURES, Inc. et al.

L. A. 20699.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.

Aug. 4, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 31, 1950.

Action by Samuel R. Golding and Norbert Faulkner and others, against R. K. O. Pictures, Inc., and Val Lewton for infringement of a literary property. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Ingall W. Bull, J., entered judgment for plaintiffs for $25,000 and from an order denying a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the defendants appealed. The Supreme Court, Edmonds, J., held that evidence sustained finding that owners of play had been damaged in sum of $25,000 by infringement of owners' common law copyright by producers of motion pictures.

Judgment affirmed.

Traynor, Schauer and Spence, JJ., dissented.

Prior opinion, 208 P.2d 1.

1. Literary property ⇐9

In action for infringement of common-law copyright of literary property, plaintiff must establish ownership of a protectible property interest, unauthorized copying by the defendant and damage resulting therefrom.

2. Literary property ⇐1

Literary property in the fruits of a writer's creative endeavor extends to the full scope of the writer's inventiveness but only the produce of the writer's creative mind is protectible.

3. Literary property ⇐9

An inference of copying may arise when there is proof of access coupled with a showing of similarity to plaintiff's protectible property and when there is strong evidence of access, less proof of similarity may suffice, but if the evidence of access is uncertain, strong proof of similarity to plaintiff's protectible property must be shown before the inference of copying may be indulged.

4. Literary property ⇐8

The fact that a plan or theme of the plaintiffs' story is similar to the plots of prior stories does not defeat the claim of originality for common law copyright purposes, and where there was strong evidence from which jury had reasonably concluded that scenario of moving picture was copied from plaintiffs' play, the fact that the defendants could have obtained the story from another source was of no consequence.

5. Literary property ⇐9

In action by writers of a play for infringement of common law copyright finding that defendants had opportunity and inclination to pirate plaintiffs' literary property was clearly supported by the evidence.

6. Literary property ⇐9

Proof of access establishes no more than opportunity to copy and not actual copying of literary property.

7. Literary property ⇐9

In action for infringement of common law copyright of literary property, liability for damages must rest upon substantial evidence of similarity between plaintiffs' literary property and the moving picture produced by the defendants.

8. Appeal and error ⇐1001(2)

No finding of fact is binding upon an Appellate Court if it is not supported by substantial evidence.

9. Appeal and error ⇐989

The function of the Supreme Court, when the contention of insufficiency of the evidence is made, is to examine the record to ascertain whether there is evidence to support the verdict of the jury.

10. Appeal and error ⇐989

Where writers of play asserted that the defendants' moving picture infringed common law copyright of the writers, it was necessary to read or view the play and the moving picture involved to determine whether they presented any substantial similarity so far as the property of the writers of the play was concerned, but the appellate court would not substitute itself for the jury to decide what it thought of the issue of similarity but would determine only whether there was any substantial evidence of similarity to support the jury's finding for such writers.

11. Literary property ⇐9

In action by writers of play called "The Man and His Shadow" for infringement of common law copyright by producers of motion picture called the "Ghost Ship," evidence sustained finding that there was substantial similarity to plaintiffs' protectible property in such play.

12. Literary property ⇐8

In determining whether writers of play have a protectible common law property right therein, the play must be subjected to expert analysis and if such right is found to exist, the question of similarity of motion picture to the original and protectible part of the play must be determined on the basis of an average observer.

13. Evidence ⇐474(16)

The owner of property is competent to testify to its worth.

14. Literary property ⇐9

Evidence sustained finding that owners of play had been damaged in the sum of $25,000 by infringement of owners' common law copyright by producers of motion picture.

Mitchell, Silberberg & Knupp and Guy Knupp, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Loeb & Loeb and Herman F. Selvin, all of Los Angeles, as amici curiae on behalf of appellants.

Harold A. Fendler, Beverly Hills, for respondents.

EDMONDS, Justice.

In an action for the infringement of literary property, the producers of a motion picture appeal from a judgment awarding the authors of the assertedly plagiarized stage play damages in the sum of $25,000. The sufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment is the principal question presented for decision.

Samuel R. Golding and Norbert Faulkner, both well-established writers, collaborated in writing a play entitled, "The Man and His Shadow". They neither published nor dedicated it to the public and it was not copyrighted. The Pasadena Playhouse produced the play in December, 1942. After the authors made some revisions, they submitted it to R.K.O. Radio Pictures, Inc. and Val Lewton, a producer. Lewton retained the manuscript for about six weeks. At that time, according to the evidence, Lewton was looking for a story with the action on board a ship in order to utilize an old set which was available. The appellants admit access to the play in that a copy of it was in the custody of Lewton for some time.

In August, 1943, the appellants released the motion picture entitled "The Ghost Ship" and this action followed. Upon the trial, the play was read to the jurors and the motion picture was shown to them. After they returned a verdict for damages in the amount of $25,000, a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was denied. The appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying the motion.

The central dramatic situation or core in which the plaintiffs claim property is as follows: The action takes place on board a ship. Only one person aboard, a passenger, suspects the captain of being a murderer. He accuses the captain who neither admits nor denies the accusation; in fact, to his crew and passengers the captain clearly implies that his accuser is either guilty of hallucinations or himself desires to kill him. The accuser knows that he is subject to the captain's whims and is in a position where he can be killed or imprisoned. The captain, sure of his authority, informs the accuser that he is free to try to convince any one on board ship of the truth of his suspicions. The passenger tells his story to the first mate and to others on the ship but they refuse to believe him and instead suspect the passenger of hallucinations or malice. Finally, however, the captain becomes aware that he is suspected by at least one other person and he threatens to kill, or does kill that person as an intermeddler. Knowledge that his murders are about to be uncovered causes him to lose his mind and brings about his own undoing and death.

In the plaintiffs' play this basic dramatic core was filled out by placing the passengers and crew upon a pleasure cruise and making the captain an imposter who has come to show his superiority to the man in whose shadow he has worked for years; this man is the person throughout who knows the captain's true identity. There are various other sub-characters who give body and filling to the central plot, but as testified to by both Golding and Faulkner, this matter was all superficial and could be changed in innumerable ways without affecting the literary property and its value.

The moving picture "Ghost Ship" has its captain as the dominant figure of the story. The locale of the drama is on a freighter with members of the crew having the subordinate roles. The ship carries no passengers and, to that extent, the minor characters are quite different from those in the play. However, the captain and his obsession with authority and the fact that no one aboard can successfully challenge his position is found in the picture, as is the dramatic struggle between the captain and his adversary, the one person who knows his true nature. Basically, the psychological situation is that described by the plaintiffs as the dramatic core of their work.

The producers contend that the evidence does not support the finding of plagiarism. The correct standard for making a comparison between the play and the picture, they assert, is that of an ordinary observer; if dissection, rather than observation, is necessary to determine the question of similarity, a finding of infringement is unwarranted. They also claim that the evidence is insufficient to support the award of damages. In answer, the respondents argue that "whether or not similarities are apparent to an 'ordinary observer' and support a finding of copying is a question of fact upon which the jury's unanimous determination is conclusive."

[1] The rights asserted in this case are not based upon statutory copyright but stem from the so-called common-law copyright. Civ.Code, § 980. Upon such a cause of action, to recover for infringement, or piracy, of literary property, three elements must be established: (1) ownership by the plaintiff of a protectible property interest; (2) unauthorized copying of the material by the defendant; and (3) damage resulting from the copying. See Caruthers v. R.K.O. Radio Pictures, Inc., D.C., 20 F.Supp. 906, 907.

[2] Literary property in the fruits of a writer's creative endeavor extend to the full scope of his inventiveness. This may well include, in the case of a stage play or moving picture scenario, the entire plot, the unique dialogue, the fundamental emotional appeal or theme of the story, or merely certain novel sequences or combinations of otherwise hackneyed elements. It is, however, only the product of the writer's creative mind which is protectible. If only a portion of the play or story is original and the remainder is but an orthodox collection of filler comprising matters in the public domain, the property right must be fully analyzed and closely defined, because in the subsequent determination of the issue of copying, it is necessary to make a comparison of the two works, and such comparison is of value only if it is based upon a correct determination of the issue as to the extent and nature of the plaintiff's protectible interest.

The question as to whether the claimed original or novel idea has been reduced to concrete form is an issue of law. The determination of it must be made as a condition precedent to the vesting of any rights stemming from the common law copyright. The plaintiff must establish, as the subject of the cause of action, a right in the nature of property which is capable of ownership. Certainly, if the only product of the writer's creative mind is not something which the law recognizes as protectible, that is, an idea not reduced to concrete form, O'Brien v. R.K.O. Radio Pictures, 68 F.Supp. 13, no right of action for infringement of literary property will lie even if the idea assertedly infringed is original and the result of his independent labor.

[3] After a plaintiff has established a protectible property right, the further issue, common to all copyright cases, statutory or common law, is: Was the plaintiff's material copied by the defendant? There will seldom be direct evidence of plagiarism, and necessarily the trier of fact must rely upon circumstantial evidence and the reasonable inferences which may be drawn from it to determine the issue. An inference of copying may arise when there is proof of access coupled with a showing of similarity. Shipman v. R.K.O. Radio Pictures, Inc., 2 Cir., 100 F.2d 533, 538; O'Rourke v. R.K.O. Radio Pictures, Inc., D. C., 44 F.Supp. 480, 482. Where there is strong evidence of access, less proof of similarity may suffice. Conversely, if the evidence of access is uncertain, strong proof of similarity should be shown before the inference of copying may be indulged.

It is particularly important to keep clearly in mind, insofar as the question of similarity is concerned, that it is only similarity as to the plaintiff's protectible property which is relevant. Thus, if the property interest entitled to protection extends only to certain sequences or characters, similarity of the plaintiff's and the defendant's works as to other phases of the play or scenario is wholly irrelevant.

If it is established that the plaintiff has a protectible property in his literary work, and there was copying, the elements of liability for infringement or piracy are established and all that remains is the determination of damages. On this latter issue, the rules are the same with regard to literary property as apply to any other form of personal property. Barsha v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 32 Cal.App.2d 556, 90 P.2d 371; Universal Pictures Co. v. Harold Lloyd Corp., 9 Cir., 162 F.2d 354.

The plaintiffs do not claim that their entire play, or any particular sequence or dialogue, was directly or totally pirated. Their insistence throughout has been that the thing of value in their play is the central dramatic situation and the interplay of the dominant and secondary characters upon each other. All other characterizations and dialogue are admittedly nothing more than hackneyed filler which could be added or subtracted without affecting the value or substance of the plaintiffs' literary property.

Golding testified that when Lewton became reluctant to purchase the play, he told the producer that a moving picture of "The Man and His Shadow" could be based upon very simple lines, and the action need not necessarily take place on a pleasure yacht. The story might well be played in all its dramatic aspects on a freighter, having an ordinary captain and an ordinary crew. There is one important dramatic figure in this play and only one, he said; that is the captain, with his insane lust for power, driving to carry out his sadistic objectives. And as the production on the Pasadena stage was summarized by the witness, "the sub-story of the other characters seemed very much warped and almost trivial as compared to the figure of the captain who dominated the scene when he appeared."

The first question presented for decision is whether this basic dramatic situation constitutes protectible literary property. On the subject of the use of such plots Faulkner, who formerly had been a story editor at a studio, testified that "the basic duty of [the story editor] is to read a book or * * * play * * * and condense the story theme into two or three pages. This material is then used for conferences with producers and executives of the studios so they don't have to read the whole book or play * * * You have in studios a great problem of budget * * * That means the studio gives a producer an assignment and says, 'Here is a story, but * * * we don't want you to spend more than this amount of money for the production.' * * * Now in such cases, the story editor goes in and talks over the story with the producer, he says, 'You can do this story * * *, for the lower budget cost because you can eliminate certain incidents, certain persons, certain settings, so that you can create the same basic theme and powerful story. * * *'"

According to this evidence, the real value of a story or play may have little to do with specific dialogues or sequence of scenes or locale and there is ample evidence tending to prove that the basic dramatic core of the plaintiffs' play constitutes the truly original and valuable feature of it. Further, there was testimony to the effect that this particular psychological drama, with its emphasis upon the captain's controlling monomania for authority and power, was particularly well timed with the early days of the war and, therefore, of unusual value at that time. Nor was it a mere abstract idea. It had been reduced to the form of a full stage play. Its creators had embellished it with much of the trappings that give form, if not substance, to such literary work.

[4] The fact that a plan or theme of the plaintiffs' story is similar to the plots of prior stories does not defeat the claim of originality within the meaning of that word for copyright purposes. "It is not essential that any production, to be original or new within the meaning of the law of copyright, shall be different from another * * * the true test of originality is whether the production is the result of independent labor or of copying." Drone, Copyrights, cited with approval in Fred Fisher, Inc., v. Dillingham, D.C., 298 F. 145, 151; to same effect, Amdur on Copyrights, sec. 3, pp. 69, 70. It is of no consequence that R.K.O. could have obtained the story from another source, when there is strong evidence from which the jury has reasonably concluded that the scenario of "Ghost Ship" was copied from the plaintiffs' play. "Any subsequent person is, of course, free to use all works in the public domain as sources for his compositions. No later work, though original, can take that from him. But there is no reason in justice or law why he should not be compelled to resort to the earlier works themselves, or why he should be free to use the composition of another, who himself has not borrowed. If he claims the rights of the public, let him use them; he picks the brains of the copyright owner as much, whether his original composition be old or new. The defendant's concern lest the public should be shut off from the use of works in the public domain is therefore illusory; no one suggests it." Fred Fisher, Inc., v. Dillingham, supra, 298 F. at page 150. Or, as stated by Justice Holmes: "Others are free to copy the original. They are not free to copy the copy." Bleistein v. Donaldson Lithographing Co., 188 U.S. 239, 249, 23 S.Ct. 298, 299, 47 L.Ed. 460.

Concerning the issue of copying, and its subsidiary determinations of access and similarity, the evidence as to access is strong. The producers of the motion picture have conceded access, but because the inference of copying must rest upon both access and similarity, it is necessary to examine, to a certain extent, the nature of the evidence of access.

[5] It appears without conflict that the plaintiffs' play was submitted to Lewton to read and consider. Both Golding and Faulkner testified to conversations with Lewton regarding the acceptability of the story for moving picture purposes. In one of the discussions of it, according to Golding, Lewton stated: "Well, Golding, I don't have to buy my stories. I don't have to lay out money for originals; I get my idea and I call in a couple of writers in the lot and I make my stories that way." It was a few days later that the manuscript was returned to plaintiffs. The evidence of opportunity and, indeed, inclination to pirate plaintiffs' literary property is therefore clearly supported by the evidence.

[6, 7] Proof of access, however, establishes no more than the opportunity to copy and not actual copying. Kustoff v. Chaplin, 9 Cir., 120 F.2d 551, 560; Cain v. Universal Pictures Co., D.C., 47 F.Supp. 1013, 1015. And liability for damages must rest upon substantial evidence of similarity between plaintiffs' literary property and the moving picture produced by the defendants. The play was read to the jury and the picture was viewed by them. There was no other evidence of similarity offered or received, and whether such evidence is sufficient to sustain the jury's implied finding of similarity is a question which can only be determined upon appeal by reading the play and seeing the moving picture, which have been done by this court.

[8, 9] The parties are directly at variance as to whether this issue of similarity presents a question of law or of fact. The only direct statements in the cases appear to confirm the playwrights' position that it is a question of fact for the jury. Universal Pictures Co. v. Harold Lloyd Corp., 9 Cir., 162 F.2d 354, 360; Dam v. Kirke La Shelle Co., C.C., 166 F. 589. However, they extend this point too far when they contend that the determination by the jury of this issue "is conclusive" upon appeal. No finding of fact is binding upon an appellate court if it is not supported by substantial evidence. The function of this court, when the contention of insufficiency is made, is to examine the record to ascertain whether there is evidence to support the verdict of the jury.

[10] The situation presented by the issue of similarity is a peculiar one. There is always some evidence in the record. That is to say, if plagiarism is claimed there will always be a play by the plaintiff and one assertedly copied from it by the defendant. Yet the mere existence of two dramatic works in evidence does not, per se, constitute sufficient evidence of similarity. It is necessary to read or view the two works to see if they present any substantial similarity insofar as the plaintiff's property in his work is concerned. This is not to say that the appellate court will substitute itself for the jury to decide what it thinks of the issue of similarity, it is merely a question of determining if there is any substantial evidence of similarity to support the jury's finding.

[11] In the present case, the movie "Ghost Ship" contains all the elements of the plaintiffs' basic dramatic situation. It is true that the story is placed on a freighter instead of a luxury cruise; that it showed no passengers but only the crew aboard; and that there are many differences in the minor characters. "Evidence of these differences is relevant upon the question of [similarity], but if such differences are shown to exist, the question remains for the trier of fact to decide the issue." [162 F.2d 361] Universal Pictures Co. v. Harold Lloyd Corp., supra; Maurel v. Smith, D.C. 220 F. 195, 199; Sheldon v. Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corp., 2 Cir., 81 F.2d 49, 56. The basic factors of the play and the moving picture show strong similarity in their respective plots although superficially there is considerable difference. But such differences go to the quality of the plagiarism, and not to its existence or nonexistence.

The appellants' main contention, however, is that in making a comparison of the two works, "the standard of the ordinary observer should be applied—that is, the comparison should be made without dissection of the works under observation and without expert or elaborate analysis." Harold Lloyd Corp. v. Witwer, 9 Cir., 65 F.2d 1, 18; Frankel v. Irwin, D.C., 34 F.2d 142, 144; Dymow v. Bolton, 2 Cir., 11 F.2d 690, 692. It is therefore, argued that the court must look at the two plays as a whole to determine if they would impress the average observer as similar. The argument suffers from oversimplification. The rule of law stated is correct insofar as the issue of similarity is concerned, but it has no application to the preliminary issue of originality or a plaintiff's protectible property interest.

[12] It is essential from the nature of the inquiry as to originality to first dissect the play to determine wherein, if at all, plaintiffs have any protectible property right. Assuming this is established, then comparison may be made between the two works as to the original and protectible portion only. If, as may often be the case, plaintiff's rights extend to the entire play, then the trier of fact should compare the one with the other. If, as in Stanley v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Cal.Sup., 221 P.2d 73, the plaintiff establishes his ownership of an original combination and arrangement of various elements into a new plan for a radio broadcast, the comparison made by the trier of fact should be of that plan with the broadcast which was made by the defendant. But where, as in the present case, the plaintiffs' property rights extend only to the dramatic core, a portion of the play, the issue of similarity is accordingly limited to a comparison on the basis of an average observer looking to that part of the literary work which can properly be protected from infringement. Otherwise stated, dissection may be necessary to define the existence and extent of a plaintiff's property interest, and on the issue of similarity the test is always that of the average observer comparing such property interest with the alleged copy made by the defendant.

[13, 14] In support of the appellants' contention that there is not sufficient evidence of the value of the damages sustained by the authors of the play, it is argued that all of the evidence concerning the value of the motion picture rights is found in the testimony of the respondents, and that no person with experience in the determination of the value of such property was called to testify on their behalf. But the testimony of Faulkner, who stated his opinion in regard to the value of the play, was not necessary as an expert for both he and his co-author testified as owners of the property. Each of them told the jury that the value of the play before the infringement was between $25,000 and $50,000 and that it had no value after the production and distribution of the picture. It is a well recognized rule that the owner of property is competent to testify as to its worth. 10 Cal.Jur. 1023. "Literary property is not distinguished from other personal property and is subject to the same rules and is likewise protected, Palmer v. De Witt, 47 N.Y. 532, 538, 7 Am.Rep. 480. California has held that plaintiffs may testify to the value of an unpublished manuscript prior to misappropriation in Barsha v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 32 Cal.App.2d 556, 90 P.2d 371. See Yadkoe v. Fields, 66 Cal.App.2d 150, 151 P.2d 906; Nathan v. King Features Syndicate, Sup., 32 N.Y.S.2d 519." Universal Pictures Co. v. Harold Lloyd Corporation, supra. The testimony of the appellants' experts that the play contained no material of value for motion picture purposes merely created a conflict in the evidence.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict are affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK and CARTER, JJ., concur.

TRAYNOR, Justice (dissenting).

The majority opinion in this case, unlike that in Stanley v. C. B. S., Cal.Sup., 221 P.2d 73, recognizes that the question whether there has been copying of plaintiffs' work cannot be submitted to the jury until it has been determined by the trial judge that there is evidence of substantial similarity between plaintiffs' play and defendants' motion picture with respect to the protectible features of plaintiffs' play. With these conflicting decisions before him, may a trial judge on motion for nonsuit or directed verdict determine on the authority of Golding v. R. K. O. whether there is relevant similarity between the two productions, and only if there is such similarity, deny the motion and submit the case to the jury? Or must he, on the authority of Stanley v. C. B. S., deny the motion without consideration of the issue of relevant similarity and let the case go to the jury before determining whether plaintiff established a cause of action upon which the case could properly have gone to the jury?

I cannot agree that a comparison of defendants' picture with plaintiffs' play reveals evidence of similarity not attributable to the use of a common idea, theme, or plot in the public domain and therefore not subject to exclusive appropriation by any author. I would therefore reverse the judgment.

Under Civil Code section 980[1] the author of an original composition has a property interest in it that will be protected against copying to the extent that it is marked by original expression in "a concrete form, in which the circumstances and ideas have been developed, arranged, and put into shape." Eichel v. Marcin, D.C., 241 F.

1. "The author or proprietor of any composition in letters or art has an exclusive ownership in the representation or expression thereof as against all persons except one who originally and independently creates the same or a similar composition."

404, 409; Holmes v. Hurst, 174 U.S. 82, 19 S.Ct. 606, 43 L.Ed. 904. That principle governs the determination of a charge of piracy, whether under federal or common law copyright. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. v. Dieckhaus, 8 Cir., 153 F.2d 893, 894, 897–898; Echevarria v. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., D.C., 12 F.Supp. 632, 634; Columbia Pictures Corp. v. Krasna, Sup. 65 N.Y.S.2d 67, 68.

"Exclusive ownership" is limited to the "representation or expression." (Civil Code section 980.) Themes, ideas, and plots in books or plays are a common fund from which every author may draw the basic materials of his work without restriction. They are not subject to exclusive ownership, and no author can acquire a superior interest in a theme or plot by making an earlier use thereof. "The copyright cannot protect the fundamental plot which was common property long before the story was written; it will protect the embellishments with which the author added elements of literary value to the old plot, but it will not operate to prohibit the presentation by someone else of the same old plot without the particular embellishments." London v. Biograph Co., 2 Cir., 231 F. 696, 698–699; Harold Lloyd Corp. v. Witwer, 9 Cir., 65 F.2d 1, 24; Lewys v. O'Neill, D.C., 49 F.2d 603, 607; Dymow v. Bolton, 2 Cir., 11 F.2d 690, 692; Nichols v. Universal Pictures Corp., 2 Cir., 45 F.2d 119, 121, 122; Cain v. Universal Pictures Co., D.C., 47 F.Supp. 1013, 1016; Dellar v. Samuel Goldwyn, Inc., 2 Cir., 150 F.2d 612, 613; Shipman v. R. K. O. Radio Pictures, 2 Cir., 100 F.2d 533, 536; Fendler v. Morosco, 253 N.Y. 281, 287, 171 N.E. 56; see Chafee, Reflections on the Law of Copyright, 45 Col.L.Rev. 503, 513–514. The author's only property interest is in the concrete form that he has developed by his own originality and craftsmanship, the "arrangement and combination of the ideas * * * the form, sequence, and manner in which the composition expresses the ideas." Bowen v. Yankee Network, Inc., D.C., 46 F.Supp. 62, 64.

Plaintiffs have developed an unprotectible plot into an original play entitled to protection. The protection extends, however, only to its "details, sequence of events, and manner of expression and treatment." Barsha v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 32 Cal. App.2d 556, 561, 90 P.2d 371, 374. Even if defendants have taken from the play its plot, they have taken nothing of its expression and development to which alone plaintiffs can claim a superior right.

Plaintiffs rely on a dictum in Dam v. Kirk La Shelle, 2 Cir., 175 F. 902, 907–908, 41 L.R.A., N.S., 1002, 20 Ann.Cas. 1173, that a basic plot may be protected by copyright. What the court there described as a "plot," however, was in fact the concrete form of plaintiff's literary work appropriated almost verbatim by the defendant. Any intimation that a plot apart from its development and expression in a concrete form is protectible should not have survived the decision of Shipman v. R. K. O. Radio Pictures, supra, 100 F.2d 533, 536–537, 538. See also, Dymow v. Bolton, 2 Cir., 11 F.2d 690, 692; Sheldon v. Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corp., 2 Cir., 81 F.2d 49, 53–54; Christie v. Cohan, 2 Cir., 154 F.2d 827, 828.

The majority opinion, however, states that "the fact that a plan or theme of the plaintiffs' story is similar to the plots of prior stories does not defeat the claim of originality within the meaning of that word for copyright purposes." The implication is that the plot of the play is protected by copyright if plaintiffs conceived it independently of earlier stories in which it is found. It is settled, however, that the plot of a literary work is not protectible merely because the author has conceived it independently. "We assume that the plaintiff's play is altogether original, even to an extent that in fact it is hard to believe. We assume further that, so far as it has been anticipated by earlier plays of which she knew nothing, that fact is immaterial. Still, as we have already said, her copyright did not cover everything that might be drawn from her play; its content went to some extent into the public domain * * * Whatever may be the difficulties a priori, we have no question on which side of the line this case falls. A comedy based on conflicts between Irish and Jews, into which the marriage of their children enters, is no more susceptible of copyright than the outline of Romeo and Juliet." Nichols v. Universal Pictures Corp., 2 Cir., 45 F.2d 119, 122; Sheldon v. Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corp., 2 Cir., 81 F.2d 49, 54; De Acosta v. Brown, 2 Cir., 146 F.2d 408, 410; Echevarria v. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., D.C., 12 F.Supp. 632, 635; Fendler v. Morosco, 253 N.Y. 281, 287, 171 N.E. 56; MacDonald v. Du Maurier, D.C., 75 F.Supp. 655, 660; McConnor v. Kaufman, D.C., 49 F.Supp. 738, 744; Becker v. Loew's, Inc., 7 Cir., 133 F.2d 889, 892, certiorari denied 319 U.S. 772, 63 S.Ct. 1438, 87 L.Ed. 1720; Heywood v. Jericho Co., 193 Misc. 905, 85 N.Y.S.2d 464, 468.

The majority opinion seeks to support the converse proposition by the cases of Bleistein v. Donaldson Lithographing Co., 188 U.S. 239, 23 S.Ct. 298, 47 L.Ed. 460, and Fred Fisher, Inc., v. Dillingham, D.C., 298 F. 145. Those decisions, however, support the rule of the Nichols and Sheldon cases and do not enunciate a rule contrary thereto. In Bleistein v. Donaldson Lithographing Co., supra, infringement resulted from the defendants' identical reproduction in reduced size of plaintiff's lithographs of circus scenes. Copying was admitted. As a defense it was alleged that plaintiff's lithographs were picturizations of actual scenes and living persons and he was not entitled to copyright thereof. The court held that the fact that the subject of the production was in the public domain did not excuse the theft of the concrete form in which plaintiff's original development of the subject was expressed. "It is obvious also that the plaintiff's case is not affected by the fact, if it be one, that the pictures represent actual groups,—visible things * * * that fact would not deprive them of protection. The opposite proposition would mean that a portrait by Velasquez or Whistler was common property because others might try their hand on the same face. Others are free to copy the original. They are not free to copy the copy." 188 U.S. 239, 249, 23 S.Ct. 298, 299. It is clear that Justice Holmes regarded as protectible only plaintiff's originality of expression.[2] His holding that defendants were not free to copy the original expression and development of a non-protectible theme or subject cannot be distorted to mean that others are precluded from giving the same theme a different form. One does not "copy the copy" merely by using the same subject or theme. The "whole contribution may not be protected; for the defendants were entitled to use, not only all that had gone before, but even the plaintiffs' contribution itself, if they drew from it only the more general patterns; that is, if they kept clear of its 'expression.'" Sheldon v. Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corp., 2 Cir., 81 F.2d 49, 54.

Since "the degree of protection afforded by the copyright is measured by what is actually copyrightable in it; that is, by the degree and nature of the original work", American Code Co. v. Bensinger, 2 Cir., 282 F. 829, 834; Dorsey v. Old Surety Life Ins. Co., 10 Cir., 98 F.2d 872, 873, 119 A.L.R. 1250, similarity between the play and the picture not attributable to the copyrightable features of the play is irrelevant. Harold Lloyd Corp. v. Witwer, 9 Cir., 65 F.2d 1, 17; Nichols v. Universal Pictures Corp., 2 Cir., 45 F.2d 119, 121; Cain v. Universal Pictures Co., D.C., 47 F.Supp. 1013, 1017; Affiliated Enterprises v. Gruber, 1 Cir., 86 F.2d 958, 961; De Montijo v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., D.C., 40 F.Supp. 133, 138; Shipman v. R. K. O. Radio Pictures, Inc., 2 Cir., 100 F.2d 533, 537; Rush v. Oursler, D.C., 39 F.2d 468, 473; Rosen v. Loew's, Inc., 2 Cir., 162 F.2d 785, 788; Eichel v. Marcin, D.C., 241 F. 404, 409; MacDonald v. Du Maurier, D.C., 75 F. Supp. 655, 662; Hewitt v. Coward, 180 Misc. 1065, 41 N.Y.S.2d 498, 500; Columbia Pictures Corp. v. Krasna, Sup., 65 N.Y.S.2d 67, 69; Heywood v. Jericho Co., 193 Misc. 905, 85 N.Y.S.2d 464, 468; see dissenting opinion in Stanley v. C. B. S.,

2. The same explanation applies to Judge Learned Hand's decision in the Fred Fisher case, holding that defendant's identical duplication of plaintiff's original variation of a musical theme constituted copyright infringement. 298 F. at page 150; see also his concurring opinion in Shipman v. R. K. O. Radio Pictures, supra.

Cal.Sup., 221 P.2d 73. General similarity between two productions attributable to their use of a common plot drawn from the public domain, or similarity in incident attributable to the use of common sources of material, is not evidence of literary piracy. Unless "the two works, when compared, show such pronounced similarities of substantial portions of protectible material, i. e., of details, sequence of events, and manner of expression and treatment, as to warrant the inference of copying," it is error to submit the issue of copying to the jury. Barsha v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 32 Cal.App.2d 556, 561, 90 P.2d 371.

Upon this principle, the federal and New York courts have consistently reversed judgments for plaintiffs or granted motions for dismissal or for judgment on the pleadings for defendants when the only similarity between the two productions has been that attributable to the use of a common plot. In Harold Lloyd Corp. v. Witwer, 65 F.2d 1, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed a judgment for plaintiff based on the trial court's finding that defendant's motion picture had been copied from plaintiff's magazine story. Both works were based on the same plot: A university freshman of little physical ability, attempting to impress a coed with his athletic prowess becomes involved in a number of ludicrous situations that subject him to the ridicule of the student body. Through a series of improbable events, he involuntarily becomes a game-winning football hero and wins the love of the girl and the plaudits of his classmates. These similarities were held to be irrelevant, attributable only to the "use of common materials, and common sources of knowledge, open to all men." The court declared that "the resemblances are either accidental or arising from the nature of the subject", 65 F.2d at page 17 and held that the "reproduction of such non-original matter," even though a conscious borrowing, is not actionable copying. 65 F.2d at page 24.

In Ornstein v. Paramount Productions, Inc., D.C., 9 F.Supp. 896, plaintiff's story and defendant's motion picture were both based on a married woman's sacrifice of her honor to pay for her husband's medical care. In each story, the husband accepted the aid in ignorance of its source, and upon discovery indignantly repudiated his wife. Both story and picture described the wife's struggle against adversity until her reconciliation with her husband in the picture and her death in the story. The court dismissed plaintiff's bill for failure to state a cause of action, holding that the acknowledged similarities lay only in a common plot in the public domain. Substantial dissimilarities in treatment and development between the two productions were held as a matter of law to preclude a finding of copying. The same result was reached in the following cases: Heywood v. Jericho Co., 193 Misc. 905, 85 N.Y.S.2d 464 (both plays dealt with the return of a Negro war hero to his native southern community, his love for a white girl, and their struggle against the bigotry, violence, and hatred of the white community); Collins v. Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corp., D.C., 25 F.Supp. 781, 782 (both stories portrayed the life of a test pilot); London v. Biograph Co., 2 Cir., 231 F. 696 (both stories dealt with the successful attempts of two thieves to poison each other to avoid a division of their spoils); Fendler v. Morosco, 253 N.Y. 281, 171 N.E. 56 (both plays were based on the love of a white youth for an Hawaiian girl); MacDonald v. Du Maurier, D.C., 75 F.Supp. 655 (the book "Rebecca" was alleged to have infringed a story by plaintiff concerned also with the conflict between a second wife and the spirit and memory of the first); McConnor v. Kaufman, D.C., 49 F.Supp. 738 (both plays dramatized the late Alexander Woolcott's eccentricities and interest in unsolved murders); Columbia Pictures Corp. v. Krasna, Sup., 65 N.Y.S.2d 67 (both stories involved the writing of letters to a soldier overseas by an adolescent girl posing as her own older sister); and Cain v. Universal Pictures Co., D.C., 47 F. Supp. 1013 (alleged infringement was based on the common use of a sequence in which a storm forces the hero and heroine to take overnight refuge in a church loft; see also Dymow v. Bolton, 2 Cir., 11 F.2d 690, 692; Kustoff v. Chaplin, 9 Cir., 120 F.2d 551, 561; Lewys v. O'Neill, D.C., 49 F.2d 603, 607; Dellar v. Samuel Goldwyn, Inc., D.C., 40 F.Supp. 534, 536; Rush v. Oursler, D.C., 39 F.2d 468, 472–473; Rosen v. Loew's Inc., 2 Cir., 162 F.2d 785, 788; Eichel v. Marcin, D.C., 241 F. 404, 408–409; Lowenfels v. Nathan, D.C., 2 F.Supp. 73, 80; Gropper v. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., D.C., 38 F.Supp 329, 332; Affiliated Enterprises v. Gruber, 1 Cir., 86 F.2d 958, 961; Caruthers v. R. K. O. Radio Pictures Inc., D.C., 20 F.Supp. 906, 907; Christie v. Harris, D.C., 47 Supp. 39, 42, affirmed sub nom Christie v. Cohan, 2 Cir., 154 F.2d 827.

If, however, the finding of copying is supported by evidence of similarity between two works with respect to the expression and development of their common plot in a concrete form and sequence of events marked by the first author's craftsmanship and creative talent, a judgment for plaintiff based thereon will be affirmed, as in Sheldon v. Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corp., 2 Cir., 81 F.2d 49. In that case, plaintiff's play was based on the 1857 trial in Scotland of a young woman named Madeleine Smith, on the charge that she murdered a discarded lover to prevent his revelation of their former intimacy to her present fiance. "This was the story which the plaintiffs used to build their play. As will appear they took from it but the merest skeleton, the acquittal of a wanton young woman, who to extricate herself from an amour that stood in the way of a respectable marriage, poisoned her lover. The incidents, the characters, the mis en scène, the sequence of events, were all changed; nobody disputes that the plaintiffs were entitled to their copyright. All that they took from the story they might probably have taken, had it even been copyrighted." 81 F.2d at page 50. From this "merest skeleton" plaintiffs developed an original story of sensuality and murder suggested by the events upon which it was based. Defendant's motion picture presented not just a similar story based on the same facts (which would have been permissible even if it were suggested by plaintiff's play), but substantially the same details, sequence of events, manner of expression and development, and often the same dialogue, that gave plaintiffs' play its character of originality and concreteness of form. The Second Circuit Court of Appeals reversed a decree of dismissal, stating that although plaintiffs could not preclude any subsequent use of the same source of material or story outline or the deliberate borrowing of their plot, they were entitled to protection against piracy of their original contribution to that plot in a concrete form. Since similarity between the two works was manifested by a parallelism of incident and detail originally developed by plaintiffs, an inference of copying was held to be reasonable. In De Acosta v. Brown, 2 Cir., 146 F.2d 408, 410, both works were based on the life of Clara Barton, but there was similarity between them in the names of seven principal characters (of the six fictional names one accidentally misspelled name in plaintiff's story was identically reproduced in defendant's), in a fictional romance between Miss Barton and a young gold prospector even as to the details of its genesis and termination, and in the complete sequential development of the story outline. The Second Circuit Court of Appeals affirming a judgment for the plaintiff, emphasized that the finding of infringement was supported by evidence of similarity in expression and development and not by similarity in the plot of the two stories or in their use of historical material. See also, Barsha v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 32 Cal. App.2d 556, 561, 90 P.2d 371, and Universal Pictures Co., Inc. v. Harold Lloyd Corp., 9 Cir., 162 F.2d 354, 360, in which judgments for the plaintiffs were held supported by evidence of the use of identical comedy sequences originally developed by the plaintiffs, not by similarities resulting from the use of the same plot.

Admittedly, both play and picture in the present case utilize the same basic plot, the story of a paranoiac ship's captain obsessed by his position and authority, engaged by an opponent aboard his ship, and defeated by that opponent and by his own mental collapse. If a plot apart from its expression in a concrete form were protectible, the first use of this plot would have withdrawn from all subsequent use a most fertile field for the production of stories of the sea. The captain and his opponent have long been stock sea story material. They were present in the persons of Captain Bligh and Fletcher Christian of "Mutiny on the Bounty," of Wolf Larsen and Humphrey van Weyden of "The Sea Wolf," and in the principals of numerous other stories of ships and the men who man them. It is immaterial, however, whether the plot common to play and picture is old or new; the only protection plaintiffs can claim under copyright law is limited to its expression and development in a concrete form. In the present case there is no substantial evidence of similarity between the play and picture with respect to the features protected by copyright. "When one attempts comparison of the two works, in those matters as to which copyright protects—that is, the spirit or soul infusing the creatures of the author's imagination, what they desire, and how they go about achievement, the reasons for their actions, and the words in which such reasons are expressed—I can see nothing but differences." Frankel v. Irwin, D.C., 34 F.2d 142, 144; MacDonald v. DuMaurier, D.C., 75 F.Supp. 655, 662.

Plaintiffs' captain (Crawley) is an impostor, an actor who knows nothing of seamanship, who has killed the real captain to get aboard the boat and bring about the death of an enemy (Brancato) he believes has ruthlessly stifled the acting ability that he (Crawley) may now display. He exults in the power he possesses, but only because he holds it by virtue of his ability to act the part of the captain. He is obsessed by his art, not by his authority. He challenges Brancato to expose him to demonstrate that by his consummate acting he can make others believe only what he wants them to believe. He kills only because murder is necessary to the maintenance of his pretense. He hates Brancato and attempts to drive him to suicide. When he believes he has accomplished his purpose, he takes his own life in fear and remorse. The form and development of this story, the embellishment of incident and detail, give the play the stamp of plaintiffs' originality and entitle it to protection, but only against piracy of the protectible features.

Defendants, however, have taken from plaintiffs' play, if anything, only that which is common property. In order to use an old ship set not then in use, they used a story outline a great deal older and more timeworn. They added to it nothing not already in the public domain; certainly they added to it no ingredient for which plaintiffs can claim protection. Their story was built on a tyrannical captain, his abuse of authority, and his eventual defeat. Their captain (Stone) is a veteran of the sea, competent and experienced. Pride in his authority has become an obsession, driving him insane. He kills only to prove his authority. He does not hate his opponent, Merriam, whose only common denominator with plaintiff's Brancato is his opposition to an insane captain. He does not commit suicide, but is killed to prevent the murder of Merriam.

"This incomplete skeleton the two plays have in common, but it is with real difficulty that the flesh and blood, the incidental, yet essential, adornment and trimming, of the plays can be cut away to show similarity between a few bones." Dymow v. Bolton, 2 Cir., 11 F.2d 690, 692. Here, as in Stanley v. C. B. S., Cal.Sup., 221 P.2d 73, defendant's motions for nonsuit, directed verdict, and judgment notwithstanding the verdict raised the question whether there was substantial evidence of relevant similarity to justify the submission of the case to the jury for a determination whether that similarity was the result of copying. In denying the motions, the trial court erroneously determined that there was substantial evidence of relevant similarity. In reversing the judgment, this court would not be substituting its judgment for that of the jury on a question of fact, but would determine merely that there was insufficient evidence to support a finding of copying. Nichols v. Universal Pictures Corp., 2 Cir., 45 F.2d 119, 121, 122; Hewitt v. Coward, 180 Misc. 1065, 41 N.Y.S.2d 498, 500; Dorsey v. Old Surety Life Ins. Co., 10 Cir., 98 F.2d 872, 874, 119 A.L.R. 1250; Soy Food Mills, Inc. v. Pillsbury Mills, Inc., 7 Cir., 161 F.2d 22, 25. I would therefore reverse the judgment.

SPENCE, J., concurs.

SCHAUER, Justice.

I dissent.

Certainly there was no necessity for the defendants to read plaintiffs' "The Man and His Shadow" in order to obtain the "basic plot," or its subordinates, as depicted in "The Ghost Ship"; they needed only to turn to "The Universal Plot Catalog" (Henry Albert Phillips) or to "Story Plotting Simplified" (Eric Heath). In the last named work (which admittedly only suggests further sub-classifications or applications of the fundamental law[1] proclaimed by Georges Polti[2]) we find in chapter XIX (sub-situation 15 of the sixteenth situation) the following listing:

"Madman	Victim	The Cause"
"A sea-captain	His crew	Insanity"

And in chapter XXVII we find:

"Superior Rival	Inferior Rival	The Object"
"A sea-captain	His first mate	A native girl"

These situations, it seems to me, are too well and widely known and have been too often written about, to admit of present proprietorship in them merely as such. They might be used in something original but they are not original. Yet it is only in relationship to these situations that any similarity between play and picture can be found. They fit the "The Ghost Ship" almost precisely; indubitably they constitute the so-called "basic plot" or "central core" of the picture story; they fit it far more closely than does any situation portrayed in plaintiffs' sketch; and they were free to defendants' use.

Plaintiffs' sketch, likewise, uses formulae plot and subordinates. It avails of a mad sea-captain, a passenger instead of a crewman, and, as the cause, descends to jealousy —mad jealousy. Jealousy, in the Thirty-Second Situation of Polti, is labeled "Mistaken Jealousy." "The reason," says Heath, "is that jealousy in itself is not dramatic." Even "Mistaken Jealousy" has poor emotional value and "the usual solution [which plaintiffs have adopted] * * —a murder, suicide, divorce, or separation —is extremely hackneyed and undramatic." (Italics added.) Plaintiffs' use of the equally hackneyed "pursuit-escape" technique and "A hurricane A vessel Seamanship" may be found clearly depicted and specifically listed in Heath's exposition of Polti's law. (Fifth Situation, chap. VIII.)

Regardless of whether similarity or protectibility should be first determined it seems obvious in this case that plaintiff cannot recover. The majority opinion admits that "the basic dramatic core of the plaintiffs' play constitutes the truly original and valuable feature of it * * * [That,] in the present case, the plaintiffs' property rights extend only to the dramatic core * * *" It might as well be claimed on behalf of plaintiffs that they possess a common law copyright to the origination and use of some certain word already in common usage. To see if the claim to originality and proprietorship in such combination of letters could possibly be tenable we should first turn to a dictionary and if we found that combination as a recognized word in the "public domain" of the English language we should go no further in listening to plaintiffs' claim. Here we need only turn to the dramaturgic equivalent of a dictionary—a catalog of plots in the public domain of literature—to find the "central core"—the admittedly sole basis of plaintiffs' claim of a protectible element.

1. "There are only thirty-six fundamental dramatic situations, various facets of which form the basis of all human drama." ("The Thirty-Six Dramatic Situations," by Georges Polti, 1916.)

2. Recognition of the "law" antedates Polti; Goethe relates that "Gozzi maintained that there can be but thirty-six tragic [dramatic] situations. Schiller took great pains to find more, but he was unable to find even so many as Gozzi."

So far as I know, no copyrights or other forms of literary protection have heretofore been granted as to the literary use of madmen, sea-captains or murders, as such. I find nothing of literary novelty in the portrayal, by either plaintiffs or defendants, of dominant and secondary characters; nor in the concept that a ship's captain has supreme authority over his command on the high seas and may demonstrate a mad lust for or brutal exercise of power; nor in the proposition that a paranoiac may captain a ship or be a killer; nor in the manner in which the above elements, or any of them, have been put together by either plaintiffs or defendants. In any event the similarity, if any, between the story by plaintiffs and the picture by defendants lies exclusively in the plots which are in the public domain, not in the treatment thereof which originality could make protectible.

As I view the film, if it possesses any quality at all which may be said to give it character, originality or any element of literary protectibility, that quality would seem to be a combination of details in production, an imprint of the artistries of director and actor. But, insofar as plot or, as the majority denominate it, "central core," is concerned, I am satisfied that neither the story told by plaintiffs nor that pictured in the film, can be said to possess in this decade any element of originality qualifying it to be the subject of exclusive literary property rights and protectibility. In some aspects each plot is at least as old as Shakespeare[3] and, since Polti, the whole substance of each has been but a published formula. And if either work does possess originality in substance, structure or form sufficient to make it protectible as literary property, then, measured by an equal standard, it surely follows that the film is so different from plaintiffs' story as to preclude plaintiffs' recovery for plagiarism.

The Ghost Ship sailed but I think neither it nor its author was engaged in piracy; and I think upholding the judgment in this case supports a result which approaches closer to piracy than did any act of the defendants. Certainly the individual writer should have ample protection for his literary enterprise but zeal to protect him should not lead to strait-jacketing producers against what appears here to have been but a legitimate exercise of their own freedom of enterprise in an open field.

For the reasons stated I would reverse both the judgment and the order denying the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

Rehearing denied; TRAYNOR, SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., dissenting.

3. See MacBeth, Hamlet, Othello, King Lear; see also the works listed by Polti under examples of the Twenty-Fourth Situation, sub-classification A(9).

99 Cal.App.2d 56

KOVACS v. MUTUAL BROADCASTING SYSTEM, Inc. et al.
Civ. 17228.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.
Aug. 18, 1950.

Action by Edward Kovacs against the Mutual Broadcasting System, Inc. and others, to recover for the alleged appropriation by defendants of a radio program and format which plaintiff allegedly originated. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Stanley Mosk, J., entered judgment in favor of plaintiff for $25,000 and the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that evidence sustained finding that plaintiff's program was original and novel and finding of similarity was sufficient to support award of damages.

Affirmed.

1. Literary property ⇐2

If a format for a radio program is original and novel, it may constitute a protectible product of the mind. Civ.Code, § 980.

2. Literary property ⇐9

The question of originality and novelty of literary property is one of fact for jury.

3. Literary property ⇐9

In action to recover for alleged appropriation by defendants of a radio program and format allegedly originated by plaintiff, evidence sustained finding that plaintiff's program was original and novel.

4. Literary property ⇐8

Access to a literary property may be proved indirectly and a charge of piracy does not fail merely because infringer was not caught in act of copying.

5. Literary property ⇐9

Access to a literary property may be inferred from surrounding circumstances or it may be found from similarities in plan, arrangement and combination of materials, or from identity of phraseology, or from other evidentiary facts.

6. Literary property ⇐9

Proof of substantial similarities between original literary property and that allegedly pirated gives rise to an inference of both access and copying.

7. Appeal and error ⇐1008(1)

The weight to be given inference of both access and copying of an original idea as against direct evidence of nonaccess and noncopying is a question for trier of fact.

8. Appeal and error ⇐1010(1)

The implied finding of a jury of similarity between original idea and that allegedly copied is binding on a reviewing court when supported by substantial evidence.

9. Literary property ⇐9

In action by writer of radio program called "Your Hearts Desire" for infringement of common law copyright by producers of radio program called "Your Hearts Desire" evidence sustained finding that there was a substantial similarity to plaintiffs protectible property right in radio program produced by defendants.

10. Appeal and error ⇐197(3)

Where implied findings of jury are supported by evidence and it appears that case was decided correctly on merits, objection to a variance between complaint and proof which might have been obviated by an amendment of complaint cannot be urged for first time on appeal.

11. Literary property ⇐9

In action based on alleged appropriation by defendant of a radio program and format which plaintiff claimed to have originated, testimony of plaintiff as owner that value of program was $100,000 and that after defendant's use thereof it had no value was sufficient to support award of damages to plaintiff of $25,000.

Crider, Runkle & Tilson, Clarence B. Runkle, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Herzbrun, Chantry & Oleis, Allen M. Singer, all of Beverly Hills, for respondent.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal by defendants from a judgment in favor of plaintiff for $25,000 entered upon a verdict of a jury in an action based upon the alleged appropriation by defendants of a radio program and format which plaintiff claims to have originated.

The complaint contains two causes of action. The first, based upon the alleged plagiarism of a commonlaw copyright, alleges that: during 1944 plaintiff "originated and caused to be prepared and composed and written an original script and radio program format for a radio program entitled 'Your Heart's Desire,'" and caused the script to be transcribed upon records for the purpose of submission to prospective sponsors, advertising agencies and broadcasting companies; since 1944 defendants have been fully informed of the nature of plaintiff's radio program, and about September 9, 1946, "sold, produced and presented a radio program substantially copying, embodying and using plaintiff's radio program and radio format without the knowledge, authority and consent of the plaintiff" under the title "Heart's Desire," which program was and is being broadcast nationally over the radio stations of Mutual Broadcasting System, Inc.; defendants appropriated the benefits and profits to which the plaintiff is solely and exclusively entitled; the amount of such profits and benefits received by defendants is unknown to plaintiff and he is entitled to an accounting for said profits and benefits alleged on information and belief to amount to more than $200,000.

The second cause of action is based on the theory of breach of an implied contract. The prayer sought an injunction, an accounting, and the reasonable value of the use of the radio program.

The principal defendant is Raymond R. Morgan, called Morgan, who is the sole owner of, and doing business as, Raymond R. Morgan Company. Defendant Mutual Broadcasting System, Inc., called Mutual, operates a national radio network. Defendant Thomas S. Lee Enterprises, Inc., called Don Lee, is the western outlet for Mutual. Defendant Ben Alexander was the master of ceremonies employed and furnished by Morgan. Morgan sold his radio program, "Heart's Desire," to Mutual as a package program, i. e., Morgan to provide everything connected with the program. It was broadcast over Mutual nationally five days a week for one-half hour. Originally it was a sustaining program, i. e., solely at the expense of Mutual. Later, half of each broadcast, or fifteen minutes, was sold to defendant Phillip Morris & Co., Ltd. The program was on the air for approximately two years. It was discontinued about the time of trial.

Plaintiff conceived the idea for his radio program in 1942 or 1943. At his request, Maurice Lawrence, a writer, wrote a script for a sample broadcast of the idea, entitled "Your Heart's Desire." A recording of this sample broadcast was made in Hollywood on September 21, 1944.

Plaintiff testified that shortly after the recording he played his transcription "to the head of KGFJ, and he liked it and called Mrs. Kershner. She liked it and sent the program to the head of the sales department, a man by the name of McCrillis. He played the program. He liked the show and he told me that the show is only good for coast to coast. Therefore he will take the show personally to the Mutual Broadcasting Company because he thought that would be the best bet, and he has the best entre there. * * * I got it back about four weeks later." McCrillis testified he took the transcription to Leon Wray, an account executive of Don Lee and Mutual. Wray had formerly worked for KGFJ and McCrillis knew him "real well * * * I just took it to him and told him I would like to have him listen to it and see what he thought of it; see if he could do anything with it." McCrillis was unable to say how long he left it with Wray—"it might have been a week, two weeks, three weeks."

Plaintiff then delivered the transcription to James Strain, program director of station KMTR. At that time KMTR was changing its call letters to KLAC. Strain liked the show and played it for Don Fedderson, the head of the station. Defendant Morgan at that time was handling the publicity and advertising for KMTR in connection with the change of the radio call letters, and his contact man, a Mr. Raisback, was at KMTR on several occasions during this period. The transcription remained at KMTR about five months, when it was sent to plaintiff who was in New York. He took it to Kenny Delmar (Senator Claghorn on the Fred Allen show), who at that time was looking for a radio show to be broadcast over the CBS network. While he was negotiating with Delmar in the fall of 1946 he first learned of defendants' program "Heart's Desire" being broadcast over Mutual. Thereafter he made no attempt to sell his radio program and format because it was "worthless."

Plaintiff's script and transcription start with the following announcement to the radio audience: "Your hearts desire program * * * Have you a desire that lies secretly within your heart * * * something that you have always dreamt about or wanted to do * * * of course, you have, who Hasnt—Well, on this new thrilling and amazing program, the makers of Champion cigarettes [a fictitious sponsor] may make that very wish come true * * * simply write in and tell us about [it] * * * sing with a leading band * * * dance with Fred Astaire or Ginger Rogers * * * perhaps you would like to play a love scene with Robert Young or Hedy Lamarr * * * have a dinner and dancing date with a well known personality who knows perhaps these and any other desires may be yours for the asking." The writers of the winning letters are then introduced separately. The master of ceremonies reads the letter of each (supposedly written in response to a previous solicitation as indicated in the announcement) in which he or she has expressed his or her heart's desire. The heart's desire of each is then gratified either on stage or in such manner as may be necessary to gratify it. The introduction of each letter writer is preceded and followed by humorous comments by the master of ceremonies. Each person whose letter is selected and who participates in the show is given a carton of Champion cigarettes and a war bond.

Defendants' program is as follows: It begins with the following announcement: "What's Your Heart's Desire? I'm asking you thousands of listeners at home * * all over this big network. This is your program: Would you like to have a vacuum cleaner? A pressure cooker? A mattress? A box spring? An electric stove? An automatic ironer? A percolator? It's yours for the asking * * * all you have to do is write me a letter * * * just tell me * * * What Is Your Heart's Desire? * * * This is Ben Alexander, folks, starting a new week doing everything I can to make your dreams come true * * * to get you your Heart's Desire! And don't forget, all you listeners at home, this is your program! That's why we're on the air * * * this show was designed for you * * * the great listening audience at home! It's a pleasure for me to grant you your Heart's Desires but you've got to do your part. And you know what that is? Just simply write me a letter telling me what you want. But write in an interesting way * * * not just an ordinary letter like * * * well, say, like you want a stove * * * tell me why you want a stove * * * are you cooking over a camp fire? Is it funny? Or is it tragic? Get the idea? It's so simple to write an interesting letter. Now I'll give you the idea of how this show works. The studio here in Hollywood is crammed full of swell people who are willing to help me out. You realize I couldn't begin to read all of your letters myself, so these nice folks are going to open and read your letters for me. They're ready and anxious to start to act for you, to help you get Your Heart's Desire!" The studio audience is then asked whether there are any letters among those they have opened and read asking for a certain item mentioned by the master of ceremonies. If so, the member of the studio audience is asked to explain the letter over the microphone. If there are several letters requesting the same item, the winning letter is chosen on a contest basis through audience applause. The writer of the letter is then granted his or her heart's desire, and the one explaining the winning letter receives a gift. Interspersed throughout the program are humorous and ad lib comments by the master of ceremonies. Defendants' program was first broadcast on September 9, 1946.

Defendants claim their program was originated by Ray Maypole and Charles Morin; that Morin suggested Morgan as the man to see to exploit it; and that they explained the program idea to Morgan about the first of August, 1946. Morgan testified that the program idea outlined to him was "based on the radio audience sending in letters that had things they wanted to get, in which the hero of the program, as I saw it * * * would not be the person, the hero would be the letter," and the persons who received the gifts "would not be the comparatively few people in the studio audience, but the great unlimited audience that we had out in the homes. They had the chance to participate in these gift give-aways * * * and that to my knowledge was something that had never happened before in radio. That was almost the exact opposite of what we were doing on the Queen For A Day program. In Queen For A Day, in order to become Queen, or in order to get a gift, you must be a member of the audience; but the poor little lady in the house listening to the program would have no chance to receive anything, or get a present. That was the great difference," and the idea of having the studio audience open the mail was a "great idea." (Italics added.) Shortly thereafter Morgan went to New York and brought the program idea to the attention of Mutual. Maypole and Morgan had no script for the program at this time. Morgan testified that even up to the time of the trial broadcast they had no script for the program. "We had nothing except the idea that the letters would be good performers * * * we had nothing—hardly a scrap of paper, hardly a few notes."

Appellants' contentions are: 1. Plaintiff has no protectible interest in his radio program and format because it lacks originality and novelty. 2. The evidence is insufficient to justify the jury's implied finding of similarity or access from which an inference of copying may be drawn. 3. The evidence fails to prove any damages or recovery pleaded in the first cause of action. 4. The evidence fails to sustain plaintiff's second cause of action based upon an implied contract.

In support of their first contention, defendants argue that plaintiff cannot assert ownership in the program methods, devices, or combinations thereof, used in his program because they were already in the public domain. They point out that the practice of soliciting letters from the listening public for use in connection with a radio program, the element of contest between letter writers or the letters themselves, the device of gratifying desires (commonly known as the give-away type of radio program), and the idea of audience participation, had been used in radio prior to plaintiff's use of them, and are similar to such previous programs as "Help Thy Neighbor," "Chan Du, the Magician," "Adventures of Black and Blue," "What's on Your Mind," "Do You Want To Be An Actor," and "Queen for a day." Plaintiff asserts his combination of materials and ideas in a format for a radio program is original and novel.

[1] If a format for a radio program is original and novel, it may constitute a protectible "product of the mind." Civ.Code, sec. 980; Stanley v. Columbia Broadcasting System, 35 Cal.2d 653, 221 P.2d 73; Yadkoe v. Fields, 66 Cal.App.2d 150, 159, 151 P.2d 906; Barsha v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 32 Cal.App.2d 556, 561, 90 P.2d 371. "An author who takes existing materials from sources common to all writers, arranges and combines them in a new form, giving them an application unknown before, is entitled to a copyright, notwithstanding the fact that he may have borrowed much of his materials and ideas from others, provided they are assembled in a different manner and combined for a different purpose, and his plan and arrangement are a real improvement upon existing modes; for the labor of making these selections, arrangements and combinations has entailed the exercise of skill, discretion and creative effort. Edwards & Deutsch Lithographing Co. v. Boorman, 7 Cir., 15 F.2d 35. 'If the author has accomplished a unique and useful result through the application of intellectual labor and literary or artistic skill, his work is entitled to a copyright which will protect the plan, arrangement and combination of the materials therein, even though all the materials of such work, or some parts of its plan, or the arrangement and modes of illustrating the subject matter thereof, may be found separately, or in a different form or setting, or in a different combination in other distinct works.' Ball, The Law of Copyright and Literary Property, p. 247. Barsha v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 32 Cal.App. 2d 556, 90 P.2d 371." Stanley v. Columbia Broadcasting System, 35 Cal.2d 664, 221 P.2d 79.

[2] The question of originality and novelty is one of fact for the jury. Stanley v. Columbia Broadcasting System, 35 Cal. 2d 665, 221 P.2d 80.

[3] This issue having been determined by the jury in favor of plaintiff, the question is whether there is any substantial evidence to support its implied finding that the program was original and novel. Plaintiff's radio program is based on: 1) soliciting letters from the radio-listening public expressing their heart's desires, with no limitation as to the desires to be expressed; 2) using the letters as the foundation of the program; 3) choosing winning letters on a contest basis; 4) granting and broadcasting of the heart's desires of the winners; 5) using the catch phrase "your heart's desire"; and 6) some of the audience participating therein. Concededly, there is nothing new or novel in the practice of soliciting letters on a radio program, or in having an element of contest between letter writers, or in the give-away type of program, or in audience participation; yet the combination of these basic elements, with the additional innovation of soliciting letters from the listening public expressing the writer's heart's desire, and having those letters constitute the very basis of the program—the material for the show—was original and novel and had never before been done on a radio program. Morgan testified (which testimony is important in this connection because of the substantial similarities appearing in the two programs as hereinafter shown) that defendants' program was different from any other program; it was "something that had never happened before in radio." Walter H. Lourie, an executive producer for Mutual, testified that Morgan said defendants' program was one "with a tremendous mail pull and heart appeal"; the idea of fulfilling somebody's wish was "one of the things that we liked" about the program; the idea of fulfilling someone's heart's desire was "warm and friendly"; it had "heart * * * zilch, appeal, warmth." Ben Alexander testified that the defendants' program was different from the average give-away show in that a member of the listening public won, instead of a member of the studio audience. The foregoing evidence, in and of itself (in view of the substantial similarity of the programs), supports the jury's implied finding that plaintiff's program was original and novel. The programs cited by defendants as being similar were shown to be distinguishable in that they merely included one or two elements which were already in the public domain and not the combination of ideas originated by plaintiff.

It is next contended that the evidence is insufficient to justify an implied finding a) of any similarity between the two programs, and b) of access, from which an inference of copying may be drawn.

[4, 5] There was no direct evidence of access. Defendants denied access and copying. Access may, however, be proved indirectly. A charge of piracy does not fail merely because the infringer was not caught in the act of copying. Access may be inferred from the surrounding circumstances or it may be found from similarities in the plan, arrangement and combination of materials, or from the identity of phraseology, or from other evidentiary facts. Ball, Law of Copyright and Literary Property, 601, sec. 263; Wilkie v. Santly Bros., 2 Cir., 91 F.2d 978, 979; Dam v. Kirk La Shelle Co., 2 Cir., 175 F. 902, 907, 41 L.R.A.,N.S., 1002, 20 Ann.Cas. 1173; Christie v. Harris, D.C.N.Y., 47 F. Supp. 39, 40; Simonton v. Gordon, D.C. N.Y., 12 F.2d 116, 123.

In Wilkie v. Santly Bros., supra, 2 Cir., 91 F.2d 978, although there was no direct evidence of access, it was held that access could be inferred, the court saying, 91 F.2d at page 979: "Where similarities or identities are relied upon, they must do more than engender a suspicion of piracy; they must establish piracy with reasonable certainty. There was some evidence here of the possibility of physical access by the appellants; the court below did not so find. But the charge of infringement does not fail merely because the infringer is not caught in the act, for access may be inferred or found circumstantially from the plan, the arrangement, and the combination of materials contained in the composition. Edwards & Deutsch Lithographing Co. v. Boorman [7 Cir.], 15 F.2d 35, certiorari denied 273 U.S. 738, 47 S.Ct. 247, 71 L.Ed. 867. * * * Internal proof of access may rest in an identity of words or in the parallel character of incidents or in a striking similarity which passes the bounds of mere accident. General Drafting Co. v. Andrews [2 Cir.], 37 F.2d 54; W. H. Anderson Co. v. Baldwin Law Pub. Co. [6 Cir.], 27 F.2d 82; Simonton v. Gordon, D.C.S.D.N.Y., 12 F.2d 116 * * * [91 F.2d p. 980] We need not consider the sufficiency of the claim that the appellant Petkere had opportunity to acquire information as to appellee's composition, since it was played and sung at exhibitions when she visited the Sound Studio, because upon analysis there is ample evidence of identities and similarities justifying the claim of plagiarism."

Plaintiff sought to prove access through several probable sources. One was through Don Lee-Mutual radio station where his transcription had been left with Wray "for a week, two weeks, three weeks." Another source was through radio station KMTR where plaintiff's transcription was left for a period of about five months and where Raisback, a Morgan employee, was in and out of the studio handling publicity and advertising.

[6-8] Proof of substantial similarities gives rise to an inference of both access and copying. Sarkadi v. Wiman, 2 Cir., 135 F.2d 1002, 1003; Wilkie v. Santly Bros., 2 Cir., 91 F.2d 978, 979. The weight to be given the inference as against direct evidence of nonaccess and noncopying is a question for the trier of fact. There can be no copying in the absence of similarity. Whether there are substantial similarities sufficient to give rise to an inference of access and copying is one of fact to be determined by a comparison of the two programs upon the basis of the "impression received by the average reasonable man." Stanley v. Columbia Broadcasting System, 35 Cal.2d 661, 221 P.2d 73; Harold Lloyd Corporation v. Witwer, 9 Cir., 65 F.2d 1, 18; Nichols v. Universal Pictures Corporation, D.C.N.Y., 34 F.2d 145, 147; Hirsch v. Paramount Pictures, D.C.S.D.Cal., 17 F.Supp. 816, 818; Frankel v. Irwin, D.C.N.Y., 34 F.2d 142, 144; Dymow v. Bolton, 2 Cir., 11 F.2d 690, 692; Ball, Law of Copyright and Literary Property, p. 344, sec. 159. The implied finding of the jury of similarity is binding upon a reviewing court if supported by substantial evidence. Golding v. R. K. O. Pictures, 35 Cal.2d 690, 221 P.2d 95.

[9] Plaintiff's transcription and several of defendants' transcriptions were heard by the jury. The jury compared plaintiff's written script and the written script of one of defendants' broadcasts. Upon such comparison the average reasonable man could readily determine that both radio programs are substantially similar in that they are both based on material written by the listening audience expressing their heart's desires (the new and novel innovation originated by plaintiff), revolve around the idea of gratifying "heart's desires," selecting winning letters on a contest basis, and broadcasting the gratification of the heart's desires. The average reasonable man could also readily observe substantial similarity not only in the phraseology employed in the scripts but in the general arrangement and combination of ideas. The evidence "in the form of the two programs alone, shows that there is substantial similarity to support the verdict." Stanley v. Columbia Broadcasting System, 35 Cal.2d 663, 221 P.2d 79. The proof of opportunity of access together with the proof of substantial similarities is sufficient to support the implied finding of access and copying.

There are, of course, certain differences in the two programs. As said in Nichols v. Universal Pictures Corp., 2 Cir., 45 F.2d 119, 121 (quoted with approval in Stanley v. Columbia Broadcasting System, 35 Cal. 2d 662, 221 P.2d 78: "It is of course essential to any protection of literary property, whether at common-law or under the statute, that the right cannot be limited literally to the text, else a plagiarist would escape by immaterial variations. That has never been the law, but as soon as literal appropriation ceases to be the test, the whole matter is necessarily at large, so that, as was recently well said by a distinguished judge, the decisions cannot help much in a new case. Fendler v. Morosco, 253 N.Y. 281, 292, 171 N.E. 56." Defendants point out that the principal differences in their program from that of plaintiff are 1) the studio audience read, select and advocate the winning letters written by the listening audience (there being an additional contest between these studio advocators, the winners of which are determined by the volume of studio applause), and 2) those who send in the winning letters remain at home where they receive their gifts; while on plaintiff's program the letter writers themselves are produced at the broadcast. The first item is but the addition of another basic element already used in radio, a contest among the members of the studio audience. Having the studio audience open the letters, defendants concede, is but a "mechanical phase of the production," unimportant insofar as the essence of the program is concerned but important to a sponsor or producer because of the problem and expense attached to the handling of a large volume of mail. With regard to the second claimed difference, it may be said that irrespective of whether the writer of the winning letter remains at home or is brought to the studio to receive his heart's desire, the important feature, originated by plaintiff, is that in both programs the winner is a member of the listening audience.

[10, 11] Appellants' contention that the evidence fails to prove any damages or recovery pleaded in the first cause of action is another way of stating that there is a variance between the pleading and the proof. Where the implied findings of the jury are supported by the evidence and it appears that the case was decided correctly on the merits, objection to a variance between the complaint and the proof which might have been obviated by an amendment of the complaint cannot be urged for the first time on appeal. 2 Cal. Jur. 279, sec. 89. Plaintiff, as owner, testified that the value of his program was $100,000 and that after defendants' use thereof it had no value. This testimony is sufficient to support the award of damages. Golding v. R. K. O. Pictures, 35 Cal.2d 690, 221 P.2d 95; Yadkoe v. Fields, 66 Cal.App. 150, 160–161, 151 P.2d 906; Universal Pictures Co. v. Harold Lloyd Corporation, 9 Cir., 162 F.2d 354, 369; 10 Cal.Jur. 1023, sec. 278; 3 Wigmore on Evidence, p. 48, sec. 716.

Our conclusion renders it unnecessary to consider appellants' contention that the evidence fails to sustain the second cause of action.

Affirmed.

SHINN, P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 266

SOREL v. SMITH et al.
Civ. 14321.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 30, 1950.

Certiorari-mandamus proceeding by Ethel Sorel against Joseph Edward Smith and others to review an order of respondent pension trustees denying plaintiff a pension for the death of her fireman husband. The Superior Court in and for the County of Alameda, Donald K. Quayle, J., held that death had not occurred as a result of injury sustained in course of duty, or arising out of deceased's employment, and petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, P. J., held that the evidence supported findings that the injury had not occurred in course of duty or arisen out of deceased's employment.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Mandamus ⇐187(9)

In mandamus proceeding to review order of pension trustees denying fireman's widow a pension, the sole function of the reviewing court was to determine whether the trial court's findings were supported by the evidence.

2. Mandamus ⇐168(4)

In proceedings to review order of pension trustees denying fireman's widow a pension for death of husband due to occlusion of the right coronary artery, evidence supported findings that heart injury had not occurred in course of duty or arisen out of deceased's employment.

Reynald J. Bianchi, San Francisco, for appellant.

John W. Collier, City Attorney, Oakland, for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff sued in certiorari-mandamus to review the order of respondent pension trustees denying plaintiff a pension for the death of her deceased husband, a battalion chief in the Oakland City fire department. The cause was heard by the superior court on the transcript of proceedings before the pension board and on new evidence taken at the trial. Judgment went for defendants.

[1] On the appeal from this judgment no question of law is presented—the sole question is whether the pension board correctly interpreted the evidence and whether the superior court's findings are supported by competent and substantial evidence. Having had two trials of the issue of facts petitioner is not entitled to a third trial of the facts on this appeal. The sole function of the reviewing court under these circumstances is to determine whether the trial court's findings are supported and there our function ends. Moran v. Board of Medical Examiners, 32 Cal.2d 301, 308, 196 P.2d 20.

[2] The trial court found (and we emphasize that the finding was made on conflicting evidence) that it was not true that deceased "sustained injury to his heart in the course of his duties" or that death resulted from any injury arising out of his employment in the fire department.

To prove her case appellant called two medical witnesses. To disprove it the respondents called the same number. Appellant says her witnesses were heart specialists and better qualified. Respondents say those witnesses were but "internists" and did not meet the learning and experience of the two called for the defense. The trial court believed the testimony of these two and rejected that of appellant's witnesses. That ends the controversy over "qualifications".

One witness testified that in his opinion the work of deceased as a fireman did not play a contributory role in his death. He gave an extensive analysis of his reasons for the opinion. He also testified that the autopsy revealed no occlusion prior to the fatal one. The claim of the applicant was based on an occupational injury in 1942. The deceased died in 1947. Two or three days before his death he was engaged in enameling his kitchen. He was visited by a friend who found the kitchen excessively hot, said to be necessary to make the paint run properly. Deceased was seated in a chair and appeared to be distressed. A day later he was found dead on the kitchen floor with a paint brush and opened can of paint nearby. The autopsy showed a heart occlusion occurring a day or less before the death.

The other witness called by respondents testified that he did not believe that the activities as a fireman recited in previous testimony had anything to do with the death. Asked to give his reasons he stated "he obviously had extensive arteriosclerosis and he had this occlusion of the right coronary artery of a few days duration. I think it has been demonstrated that there is no single occupation which predisposes to coronary arteriosclerosis and as far as I have been able to ascertain through reading the literature and through personal experience, I have seen no occasion that itself singled out men who participated in the occupation of fireman, and I think that this man had this arteriosclerosis of his coronary vessels which developed in him for whatever reason I don't know because I don't think the reason for developing arteriosclerosis is well understood medically. This man had it; I don't think his work had anything to do with it. I think that he had enough reserve to get along fairly well until he had this final occlusion which was found on autopsy, and I believe that that occlusion of the right coronary artery was the final event which precipitated death. And I further believe that there is no evidence in medical literature to indicate that exertion necessarily causes coronary occlusion. In other words, it appears to be an evolutionary process and I don't think it has been shown to be the result of exertion or strain."

This evidence is sufficient to support the findings under attack and it would serve no purpose to recite that which is in conflict or to cite the long list of authorities holding that the conflict in the evidence heard in the trial court is a matter for decision by that court alone.

Judgment affirmed.

GOODELL and DOOLING, JJ., concur.

PEOPLE v. POWELL et al.

Cr. 2191.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 22, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 6, 1950.

Hearing Denied Sept. 21, 1950.

Ernest Powell and Harold Powell were jointly accused by information in two counts charging a violation of statute making it a crime to wilfully resist, delay or obstruct any public officer in discharge of his duty. The cause was tried to a jury in the Superior Court, Sonoma County, Hilliard Comstock, J., and Ernest Powell was convicted on one count and his codefendant was acquitted on both counts. From the judgment of conviction and an order denying motion for new trial, Ernest Powell appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, J., held that verdict of guilty on one count was properly received and recorded, notwithstanding announcement of court's intention to discharge jury in belief that they were unable to agree on either count, and that evidence sustained conviction.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Criminal law ⇐1144(13)

On appeal from conviction, reviewing court must take the facts as impliedly found by jury, disregarding conflicting testimony favorable to appellant.

2. Criminal law ⇐872

Where trial judge, after announcing his intention to discharge jury as unable to agree upon a verdict, but before jury had been permitted to leave the box, discovered that there had been a misunderstanding and that jury had in fact agreed upon a verdict finding defendant guilty on one of two counts of information, trial court was bound to receive and record such verdict.

3. Obstructing justice ⇐7

One who physically attacks a police officer while engaged in quieting a public disturbance and arresting active disturbers of the peace is guilty of "obstructing a public officer" in performance of his duty. Pen.Code, § 148.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Obstructing a Public Officer".

4. Criminal law ⇐878(4)

Conviction on one count charging defendant with obstructing a police officer in discharge of his duty was not necessarily inconsistent with failure of jury to agree as to another count of information arising out of the same transaction and charging the same offense with respect to another officer. Pen.Code, § 148.

5. Criminal law ⇐877

Conviction of one defendant on one count of information jointly charging two defendants with obstructing a public officer in discharge of his duty was not necessarily inconsistent with acquittal of co-defendant on both counts of information. Pen.Code, § 148.

6. Criminal law ⇐1175

Defendant convicted on one of two counts of information jointly charging him and another with obstructing a police officer in discharge of his duty could not complain of acquittal of codefendant or jury's failure to agree as to his own guilt on the other count of information. Pen.Code, § 148.

7. Obstructing justice ⇐16

Evidence of assault upon a police officer while engaged in quieting a public disturbance sustained conviction of obstructing a public officer in discharge of his duty. Pen.Code, § 148.

Martin J. Jarvis, San Francisco, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, By Gail A. Strader, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Justice.

The appellant, Ernest Powell, and his brother Harold were jointly accused by information in two counts charging violation of Penal Code Section 148. That section makes it a crime for anyone to wilfully resist, delay or obstruct any public officer in the discharge or attempt to discharge any duty of his office. By Count I the two brothers were charged as having committed the crime with respect to one George Wagner, and by Count II the same charge was made with respect to one Rudy Schinkel, both of whom were police officers. The cause was tried to a jury which returned verdicts of not guilty as to Harold Powell on both counts. As to Ernest Powell the jury found him guilty as to Count II, but failed to agree as to Count I. Ernest Powell moved for a new trial which was denied by the court and after judgment was pronounced he took this appeal from the order denying his motion for a new trial and from the judgment.

[1] The testimony produced at the trial was sharply in conflict on many matters, but under the well-known rule we are to take the facts as impliedly found by the jury, disregarding conflicting testimony which favored the appellant. So considered, the record shows the following: In the early morning hours of Sunday, April 17, 1949, the two police officers arrived at the Petaluma Cafe in Petaluma in answer to a police radio call regarding a disturbance at the cafe. Before they had arrived an altercation had taken place between two men in the cafe, but this altercation had died down by the time they reached the scene. There was a goodly number of people in the cafe and as the officers entered two women were then engaged in a second altercation. One of the women was making threatening gestures toward the other and Officer Wagner moved into separate the contestants, at which time the other woman struck a blow, felling her antagonist. Wagner picked up this woman and, after stating she was under arrest, took her to the police car and placed her in it. Officer Schinkel took hold of another woman who seemed to be participating in the affray, and, following Officer Wagner, placed her in the car with Wagner's prisoner. He then observed that Officer Wagner had been struck by a bystander, later ascertained to be appellant, and he pulled appellant away from Wagner. He then started to return to the cafe, and as he turned away appellant struck him, knocking him partially to the ground. Appellant then grabbed the officer's tie, pulled it around to his back, and the two men scuffled around for some time, until two other officers arrived and the altercation ended. Wagner and Schinkel were in uniform and wore badges. Appellant had been in the cafe when the first altercation started, was there when the officers entered, was in a position to observe what occurred and followed Wagner and his prisoner to the car. The jury were justified in finding that he knew the officers were there for the purpose of quelling the disturbance and that they were so engaged at the very moment when he struck Officer Schinkel and continued to scuffle with him, thus, for the time being at least, impeding him in the performance of his duty. There was a considerable crowd at the location of the trouble. They were "milling around" and a general state of excitement prevailed. The situation was plainly one where the soothing presence of uniformed peace officers was desirable.

The jury deliberated over their verdicts for some time and on several occasions were called into court and questioned as to their progress in reaching verdicts. When first called into court the jury stated that they had arrived at a verdict as to one defendant, but as to the other they had not. They were sent back for further deliberations and after some time were again called before the court, took their places in the box, and the foreman told the court it did not seem possible that the jury could agree as to the charges against one of the defendants, but that they had arrived at a verdict as to the charges against the other. The court then said: "I think I will discharge the jury as to the other defendant and you may hand the verdict you have agreed upon to the clerk." The court then stated that as to the matters concerning which the jury had not agreed it considered that they had made a sincere effort, but would ask if there were any of the jurors in the box standing in the majority who thought there was reasonable possibility of reaching a verdict as to such matters. There was no response from the jury box. The court then stated that apparently it would be impossible for the jury to reach a verdict and that therefore the verdict which had been agreed upon would be read and recorded. This was done and the court then said: "In respect to the issues as to the other defendant in this case, this jury will be discharged as unable to arrive at a verdict." The court then requested that the unused forms of verdict be handed to the clerk, and the foreman then said: "What do we do with this, Your Honor? I have one signed here. Shall I destroy that one?" The court said: "Yes, if it not voted or agreed upon." The foreman replied: "This one has been voted on but it is only on one count." The court thereupon announced its intention to inquire further into the matter and since it appeared there might be an agreement on some issues the court would rescind and revoke what had been said about there being a deadlock as to issues outside the verdict that had been received. Thereupon the following occurred:

"The Court: Now, as to the defendant Ernest Powell in this case, have you agreed on a verdict, ladies and gentlemen, as to either count of the information?

"Foreman: Yes, Your Honor.

"The Court: Now, again, have you agreed as to the defendant Ernest Powell, as to the state of his guilt or innocence on one count?

"Foreman: Yes, Your Honor.

"The Court: As contained in the information?

"Foreman: That's right, Your Honor."

The court then instructed the foreman to hand the verdict as to Ernest Powell to the clerk. It was then read and by that verdict the jury found Ernest Powell guilty of the crime charged in Count II of the information, that is, the resisting and obstructing of Officer Schinkel. At the request of Ernest Powell, through his counsel, the jury was polled and it appeared that the verdict was unanimous. The court then again asked the jury if they had been unable to agree on Count I with respect to Ernest Powell and was informed they had so failed to agree and the court thereupon caused the one verdict as to Ernest Powell to be recorded and discharged the jury. During all the time the foregoing was transpiring the jury were in the box and under the control of the court. They had not separated nor been permitted to leave the box.

[2] Appellant Ernest Powell first contends that the verdict rendered against him was void because received after the jury had been discharged. In support of his contention he cites People v. Lee Yune Chong, 94 Cal. 379, 29 P. 776, and other cases, but the situations under which the verdicts successfully attacked in those cases were received differed materially from the situation in the case before us. For instance, in the Chong case the jury had left the box, had separated, had engaged in conversation with various persons, deeming they had been discharged and might therefore discuss the case, and it was held under such circumstances reversible error had been committed in thereafter re-assembling them and proceeding to receive and record a verdict. While it is true here that the court, laboring under the belief that the jury had not agreed on any verdict as to appellant, preliminarily announced its intention to discharge them, nevertheless the error was discovered before they had been permitted to leave the box and the court was therefore fully justified in rectifying, and, indeed, in the performance of its duties was required to rectify, the misunderstanding and receive the verdict which the jury had unanimously agreed upon. It often happens, due to the reluctance of jury members to speak out, that such misunderstanding as existed here will arise, and a trial court would be remiss in its duties if, before it lost control of a jury, it discovered that such a situation had developed and did not correct it. A fair interpretation of what occurred impels the conclusion that there had, in fact, been here no such discharge of the jury as would prohibit the court from receiving its verdict as to appellant. We find no error in the court's procedure upon this point.

[3] Appellant next contends that the verdict as to him was inconsistent with the acquittal of his brother on both counts and with the failure of the jury to agree on a verdict with respect to Count I. We think it is unnecessary to follow appellant in his argument, although we have read his briefs with care. We think appellant misconceives the situation. As has been noted, the scene of action was a liquor-dispensing cafe; the hour was late and a goodly crowd had gathered; some tempers were high; insults had been exchanged; two fights had occurred, and, as some witnesses put it, the crowd was "milling. around". Peace officers arriving on call at such a time and place and under such circumstances are continuously in the performance of their duty. A part of that duty consists in moving about among those present, arresting active disturbers of the peace, if such there be, and as to others letting their mere presence have its salutary effect. Anyone who then physically attacks one of them obstructs him in the performance of his duty.

[4] There is no necessary inconsistency in the jury having held appellant on one count while disagreeing as to the other. The evidence was sharply conflicting and some of them may have believed him and others who testified that Wagner made an unjustifiable attack upon him and had been unjustifiably rough in handling the woman he arrested. Others may have believed the opposing testimony that Wagner was struck by appellant while properly and lawfully going about his work as a peace officer. And on the other hand the jury may all have believed that his subsequent attack on Schinkel was an unprovoked and vicious assault done with obstructive purpose.

[5-7] Neither is there anything necessarily inconsistent in the jury's having held appellant as to one count while freeing his brother Harold as to both. Here again, concerning the actions of Harold, the evidence was in conflict and the jury may have concluded that he believed from what he saw that the officers were acting without the law and that he lacked the necessary intent to impede or obstruct them in the performance of duty. All these matters were for the jury. And even if it could be said that they ought to have convicted Harold and appellant on all counts and did not do so, it is still something of which appellant cannot complaint. As for him the question is whether or not the conviction which the jury did impose upon him is supported by substantial evidence. We hold that it was.

The judgment and the order denying motion for new trial are affirmed.

ADAMS, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 91

KING v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR SAN MATEO COUNTY.

Civ. 14538.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 21, 1950.

Proceeding by Rowland R. King against the Superior Court of the state of California, in and for the County of San Mateo, Alta P. King, real party in interest, for a writ of prohibition to stay the enforcement of the provisions of an interlocutory decree entered by the Superior Court in a divorce action instituted by petitioner's wife. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that prohibition would not be granted to prevent the Superior Court from proceeding in the contempt matter merely on ground that court erred in the proceeding out of which the alleged contempt grew and that petitioner's remedy as to provisions of the original decree was an appeal from order denying a motion to strike those portions of the decree on grounds that the court had no jurisdiction.

Alternative writ of prohibition discharged and petition denied.

1. Divorce ⇐78

In a divorce action personal service on a defendant outside of state does not give jurisdiction over person and does not give greater jurisdiction than any other substituted service.

2. Divorce ⇐202, 289

In a divorce action, personal service on defendant outside state brings marital status before court but not person of defendant so that court lacks jurisdiction to award alimony or any allowance for support of children.

3. Prohibition ⇐3(1, 2)

Prohibition will not be granted in an appellate court to prevent superior court from proceeding in a contempt matter merely on ground that court erred in proceeding out of which alleged contempt grew and remedy of petitioner is to first present defense on hearing of contempt proceeding and then if found guilty of contempt, to apply to a higher court for a writ of certiorari or habeas corpus.

4. Prohibition ⇐3(1, 3)

Where husband had been personally served in divorce action with process in another state and thereafter appeared specially in divorce proceeding and challenged jurisdiction of trial court as to certain portions of decree with regard to items of property, and contested jurisdiction of court to make further order as to support and maintenance but motion was denied, and support order issued and thereafter an order to show cause in recontempt for alleged noncompliance, petitioner's remedy was by appeal from an order denying motion and if found guilty of contempt to apply for writ of certiorari or habeas corpus and prohibition would not be granted to stay enforcement of provision of the original decree.

5. Prohibition ⇐3(2)

The existence of a remedy by appeal ordinarily precludes resort to an extraordinary writ.

6. Prohibition ⇐5(1)

Completed judicial action cannot be reviewed by prohibition.

Winston Churchill Black, San Francisco, for petitioner.

Howe & Finch, Palo Alto, for respondent and real party in interest.

DOOLING, Justice.

[1, 2] Petitioner's wife instituted an action for divorce. Pursuant to an order for publication of summons of May 9, 1949 personal service was made on petitioner in the State of Nevada on June 27, 1949. Such personal service outside the state does not give greater jurisdiction than any other substituted service. First National Bank of Riverside v. Eastman, 144 Cal. 487, 490–491, 77 P. 1043, 103 Am.St.Rep. 95, 1 Ann. Cas. 626. It does not give jurisdiction over the person. Frey & Horgan Corp. v. Superior Court, 5 Cal.2d 401, 404, 55 P.2d 203. In divorce matters it brings the marital status before the court but not the person of the defendant so that the court lacks jurisdiction to award alimony or any allowance for the support of children. De La Montanya v. De La Montanya, 112 Cal. 101, 44 P. 345, 32 L.R.A. 82, 53 Am.St. Rep. 165; Comfort v. Comfort, 17 Cal.2d 736, 751, 112 P.2d 259. After default the court granted an interlocutory decree in which it disposed of community property and gave custody of the children to the mother but did not grant any alimony, support of children or attorneys' fees and costs. The decree contains the following final provision: "(T)he Court reserves the further right to adjudge and assess further costs, attorneys' fees or other amounts in this or any further proceeding or proceedings which may be taken." On November 4, 1949 the court upon affidavit of the wife issued an order to show cause why petitioner should not be ordered to pay to the wife moneys for the support and maintenance of herself and the minor children of the parties and on account of attorneys' fees and costs. Petitioner was personally served with that order on November 5, 1949 within the State of California. At the time indicated in the order, November 28, 1949, petitioner, appearing specially, moved to vacate certain parts of the decree as to the disposition of community property and the above-quoted reservation solely on the ground of lack of jurisdiction and also contested the jurisdiction of the court to make a further order. The court denied the motion to vacate and by order of February 3, 1950 ordered petitioner to pay $200 a month for the support of the wife, $200 a month for the children and $500 on account of fees and $100 on account of costs. The order recites the reservation of determination of the matter of support and fees and costs in the interlocutory decree. On March 20, 1950 the court issued an order to show cause in re contempt based on an affidavit of the wife stating that the above order had been personally served on petitioner in the State of California on February 16, 1950 but that he had not paid any amount in compliance. Petitioner now prays for a writ of prohibition.

Petitioner argues that jurisdiction of the person of defendant to enter a personal judgment for alimony and support could not be obtained by service of an order to show cause since the only method of obtaining personal jurisdiction for the entry of a judgment provided by our law is by service of summons. Code Civ.Proc. secs. 406–416; Hutton v. Dodge, 58 Utah 228, 198 P. 165, 166; Bernard v. Bernard, 79 Cal.App.2d 353, 179 P.2d 625; Nevin v. Pacific Coast & Norway Packing Co., 105 Wash. 192, 177 P. 739; Williams v. Board of Education of Trenton, 124 N.J.L. 380, 12 A.2d 127; Second Nat. Bank v. Prichard, 172 Ky. 190, 189 S.W. 14. Respondent counters with the claim that in his motion to strike portions of the decree petitioner made a general appearance and so submitted his person to the jurisdiction of the court. Raps v. Raps, 20 Cal.2d 382, 385, 125 P.2d 826; Judson v. Superior Court, 21 Cal.2d 11, 13, 129 P.2d 361; Security Loan & Trust Co. of Southern California v. Boston & S. R. Fruit Co., 126 Cal. 418, 58 P. 941, 59 P. 296; Olcese v. Justice's Court, 156 Cal. 82, 87, 103 P. 317.

[3] We need not decide these questions because the recent decisions of our Supreme Court make it clear that prohibition is not the proper remedy. Before the hearing the petitioner might by prohibition have attacked the jurisdiction of the court to proceed. Jardine v. Superior Court, 213 Cal. 301, 2 P.2d 756, 79 A.L.R. 291; Tolle v. Superior Court, 10 Cal.2d 95, 73 P.2d 607. Here however the action of the trial court has proceeded to the making of a judgment and it is the attempted enforcement of that judgment which is under attack. "The courts of this state have repeatedly held that prohibition will not be granted in an appellate court to prevent the superior court from proceeding in a contempt matter merely upon the ground that the court has erred in the proceeding out of which the alleged contempt grew. The remedy of the petitioner in such a case is to first present his defense upon the hearing of the contempt proceeding, and then, if found guilty of contempt, to apply to a higher court for a writ of certiorari or habeas corpus." Monjar v. Superior Court, 12 Cal.2d 715, 717, 87 P.2d 694, 695; C. S. Smith Metropolitan Market Co. v. Superior Court, 16 Cal.2d 226, 228–229, 105 P.2d 587; State Board of Equalization v. Superior Court, 20 Cal.2d 467, 471, 127 P.2d 4.

[4-6] The attempt to stay by prohibition the enforcement of the provisions of the original decree with regard to certain items of property over which it is claimed that the court had no jurisdiction must likewise fail. There is a plain remedy by appeal from the order denying the motion to strike those portions of the decree on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction over the property, Luckenbach v. Krempel, 188 Cal. 175, 204 P. 591, and the existence of a remedy by appeal ordinarily precludes the resort to an extraordinary writ. Phelan v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 363, 217 P.2d 951. Furthermore completed judicial action cannot be reviewed by prohibition. Big Jim Mines, Inc. v. Superior Court, 9 Cal.2d 503, 71 P.2d 67.

The alternative writ of prohibition is discharged and the petition denied.

NOURSE, P. J., and GOODELL, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 186

GILMORE v. GILMORE.

Civ. 17572.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Aug. 23, 1950.

Amy Lucille Gilmore sued Benjamin Marion Gilmore for a divorce. From an interlocutory judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Ray P. Brockmann, J. Assigned, granting plaintiff a divorce, defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that the trial court's failure to make fact findings and conclusions of law constituted reversible error.

Judgment reversed.

1. Trial ⇐388(1)

The code provision, requiring fact findings by trial court on all material issues raised by pleadings and evidence, is mandatory, and judgment cannot be rendered until such findings are made and filed with court clerk. Code Civ.Proc. § 632.

2. Appeal and eror ⇐1071(1)

The trial court's failure to find on all material issues raised by pleadings and evidence is ground for reversal of judgment, unless such findings are waived. Code Civ. Proc. § 632.

3. Divorce ⇐150(2), 184(12)

Where wife's divorce complaint alleged and husband's answer denied that he was guilty of extreme cruelty, conflicting evidence on such issue would have warranted decision in either party's favor, and there was no waiver of fact findings and conclusions of law by trial court on all material issues raised by pleadings and evidence, court's failure to make such findings and conclusions constituted error requiring reversal of interlocutory judgment granting wife divorce. Civ.Code, § 131; Code Civ.Proc. § 632.

Willedd Andrews, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jefferson & Jefferson, Bernard S. Jefferson, Martha Malone Jefferson, Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

The defendant appeals from an interlocutory judgment of divorce which, in addition to granting a divorce to plaintiff wife, adjudged that certain community property should be divided between the parties in the manner provided therein.

Plaintiff wife sued for divorce charging extreme cruelty on the part of defendant, praying for support, assignment to her of the community property, and incidental relief. Defendant's answer denied all allegations of the complaint.

On this appeal defendant makes no complaint concerning the division of the community property but contends that the evidence is insufficient to establish that he was guilty of extreme cruelty.

A review of the record shows that no findings of fact and conclusions of law were made, signed or filed by the trial court. In addition to making provision for the division of community property and the payment of attorneys fees, the interlocutory judgment of divorce recites merely that plaintiff is entitled to a divorce from the defendant but does not specify the grounds on which it was granted. Section 632 of the Code of Civil Procedure requires findings and conclusions on all material issues raised by the pleadings and evidence, unless they are waived in the manner provided for by the section. Section 131 of the Civil Code provides that in actions for divorce the court must file its decision and conclusions of law as in other cases. The judgment and record in this case are silent as to any waiver and we can conclude from this and the fact that defendant requested that the findings and conclusions be included in the record on appeal that there was no such waiver.

[1, 2] The code provision requiring findings is mandatory and there can be no rendition of the judgment until they are made and filed with the clerk. Brownell v. Superior Court, 157 Cal. 703, 109 P. 91;

Easterly v. Cook, 140 Cal.App. 115, 35 P.2d 164; Crim v. Kessing, 89 Cal. 478, 26 P. 1074, 23 Am.St.Rep. 491; In re Estate of Dodds, 52 Cal.App.2d 287, 126 P.2d 150; Cuneo v. Cuneo, 40 Cal.App. 564, 181 P. 229. The rule appears to be well settled that the failure to find on all material issues raised by the pleadings and evidence is ground for reversal unless findings have been waived. James v. Haley, 212 Cal. 142, 147, 297 P. 920; Parker v. Shell Oil Co., 29 Cal.2d 503, 512, 175 P.2d 838; Fairchild v. Raines, 24 Cal.2d 818, 830, 151 P.2d 260; Krum v. Malloy, 22 Cal.2d 132, 136, 137 P.2d 18; Petroleum Midway Co. v. Zahn, 62 Cal.App.2d 645, 652, 145 P.2d 371; Hamburger v. Hamburger, 60 Cal.App.2d 530, 141 P.2d 453.

[3] In view of the allegations of the complaint, the denial thereof, the fact that the conflicting state of the evidence on the issue of extreme cruelty would have warranted a decision in favor of either party, and the fact that there was no waiver, we cannot say that the failure of the trial court to make findings of fact and conclusions of law did not constitute reversible error.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

PARKER, WOOD and VALLÉE, JJ., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 38

GOMES v. BORBA.
Civ. 7731.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 17, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 16, 1950.

Hearing Denied Oct. 16, 1950.

Action by Frank J. Gomes against Mary Borba, also known as Mary Borba Azevedo, for specific performance of contract to sell realty and damages for loss of rents, profits and issues. The Superior Court, Stanislaus County, B. C. Hawkins, J., entered a judgment decreeing specific performance and awarding damages and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that the findings were sufficiently responsive to issue as to fairness and justness of contract to support judgment, that evidence sustained finding that consideration was adequate and that determination as to reasonable value of rents, issues, and profits found support in the record and was binding on appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Pleading ⇐182

In action for specific performance of contract to sell realty, affirmative allegations of answer which put in issue the fairness and justness of contract were deemed denied by plaintiff, though complaint did not allege facts to show that contract was just and reasonable. Civ.Code, § 3391; Code Civ.Proc. § 462.

2. Appeal and error ⇐193(1)
Pleading ⇐403(3)

Failure to allege in complaint facts to show that contract to sell realty was just and reasonable did not justify reversal of judgment decreeing specific performance of contract, where no demurrer was filed and no objection made at trial to sufficiency of complaint, any deficiencies of complaint were supplied by affirmative allegations of answer which put in issue the fairness and justness of contract, and record disclosed that such issues were vigorously contested. Civ.Code, § 3391; Code Civ.Proc. § 462.

3. Appeal and error ⇐931(1)

Trial court's findings and the reasonable inferences deducible therefrom must be liberally construed in support of judgment.

4. Trial ⇐396(1)

Finding that affirmative allegations of answer which put in issue the fairness and justness of contract to sell realty were untrue was sufficiently responsive to the issue so raised and litigated to support a judgment decreeing specific performance of contract, since court thereby inferentially found that contract was fair and just as to vendor. Civ.Code, § 3391.

5. Appeal and error ⇐1008(1)

Findings of fact which are adequately supported by the record are conclusive on appeal.

6. Specific performance ⇐121(8)

In action for specific performance of contract to sell realty, evidence sustained finding that the consideration was adequate. Civ.Code, § 3391.

7. Appeal and error ⇐1008(1)

In action for specific performance, adequacy of consideration is peculiarly a question of fact for trial court to determine in light of all the facts and circumstances of the particular case, and reviewing court will not disturb such a determination, unless trial court's conclusion finds no adequate support in the evidence. Civ.Code § 3391.

8. Specific performance ⇐129

Purchaser entitled to specific performance of contract to sell realty was also entitled to damages for loss of rents, issues and profits.

9. Appeal and error ⇐1013
Specific performance ⇐129

In action for specific performance of contract to sell realty, trial court properly considered both rental paid vendor under lease to her son and rental paid son under sublease in determining reasonable value of rents, issues and profits recoverable by purchaser, and trial court's determination thereof, based upon amount of rental paid under sublease, found support in the record and was binding on appeal.

10. Vendor and purchaser ⇐128

A contract to sell realty contained a condition implied as a matter of law that vendor would transfer to purchaser a title unencumbered and without defect, such as a lease.

J. W. Ehrlich, Roy A. Sharff, and Macklin Fleming, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

John H. Machado, San Jose, Nathan B. McVay, Modesto, for respondent.

PEEK, Justice.

Defendant Mary Borba prosecutes this appeal from a judgment decreeing specific performance by her of a contract to sell real property situated in Stanislaus county to plaintiff Gomes.

Plaintiff's complaint alleged defendant's ownership of the real property involved; the execution of the contract of sale on or about February 2, 1946 whereby defendant agreed to sell and plaintiff agreed to buy the real property involved for a consideration of $53,000.00; the payment of $1,000.00 by plaintiff to defendant upon the execution of the agreement as provided therein and defendant's acceptance thereof; the subsequent tender of the balance of the purchase price by plaintiff in compliance with the agreement and defendant's refusal thereof; the adequacy of the consideration in that "the sum of $53,000.00 mentioned in said agreement as the total purchase price of said property and as the consideration for said agreement is and at all times since the execution of said agreement has been a fair and reasonable value of said property"; the making of a demand by plaintiff upon defendant that she perform in accordance with the agreement, and lastly, that plaintiff was ready, willing and able to perform the contract. The foregoing complaint was subsequently amended to include a cause of action for the recovery of damages for the loss of rents, issues and profits from the time plaintiff was entitled to possession under the contract of sale.

Except for her admission of ownership of the property at the time of the execution of the contract of sale defendant's answer generally denied the allegations of the complaint, and affirmatively alleged that no sum less than $70,000.00 was a fair and reasonable value of the property at the time of said sale. In addition, the amended answer contained several separate and distinct defenses as follows: First, that defendant's consent was induced by means of alleged fraudulent representations made by plaintiff to her and her son; second, that she was a widow over the age of sixty years, without business experience and in ill health and by reason thereof was subject to domination by her son, Frank Borba; that plaintiff persuaded Frank Borba to coerce his mother's signature by falsely representing to him that $53,000.00 was a high price for the property, and third, that she was not of sound mind at the time of the execution of the contract.

Subsequent to the filing of her answer Mary Borba was adjudged an incompetent person and the foregoing amended answer was filed by her guardians who were her son Frank Borba and her daughter Florence Killian.

Upon the issues thus raised the cause was tried by the court sitting without a jury, and upon the conclusion thereof the court adopted general findings that the allegations of plaintiff were true and specifically that each of defendant's separate defenses were untrue.

Defendant's appeal from the judgment, which was entered accordingly, raises three contentions:

(1) That the judgment is defective for failure of the court to find the contract to be just and reasonable and not the result of harsh practices, (2) that the court applied an erroneous standard in determining the adequacy of the consideration and the consideration was not adequate, and (3) that the court erroneously computed the damages allowed respondent for loss of rent, issues, and profits.

Appellant's first contention is premised upon section 3391 of the Civil Code, which provides that:

"Specific performance cannot be enforced against a party to a contract in any of the following cases:

"1. If he has not received an adequate consideration for the contract;

"2. If it is not, as to him, just and reasonable;

"3. If his assent was obtained by the misrepresentation, concealment, circumvention, or unfair practices of any party to whom performance would become due under the contract, or by any promise of such party which has not been substantially fulfilled; * * *."

[1-5] Defendant specifically states that she is not attacking the sufficiency of the pleadings but what she contends to be the failure of the court to find upon the question of the fairness and reasonableness of the contract as to her, from which she concludes that the judgment must be reversed under the general rule requiring a plaintiff in an action for specific performance to both plead and prove that the contract was just and reasonable. George v. Weston, 26 Cal.App.2d 256, 79 P.2d 110; Joyce v. Tomasini, 168 Cal. 234, 142 P. 67. The rule does not apply to the instant case. Although the complaint did not allege facts to show that the contract was just and reasonable, Civil Code, section 3391; Joyce v. Tomasini, supra, no demurrer was filed and no objection was made at the trial to the sufficiency of the complaint. Moreover, the deficiencies of the complaint were supplied by the affirmative allegations of the answer previously mentioned which put in issue the fairness and justness of the contract. These affirmative allegations were deemed denied by plaintiff under the provisions of section 462 of the Code of Civil Procedure. See Remmers v. Ciciliot, 59 Cal.App.2d 113, 138 P.2d 306. An examination of the record discloses that such issues were the main issues litigated and were vigorously and exhaustively contested. Thus, the judgment may not be reversed on account of the mere defect in pleading. Bonney v. Petty, 125 Cal.App. 527, 13 P.2d 969; Drullinger v. Erskine, 71 Cal.App.2d 492, 163 P.2d 48. Liberally construing, as we must, the findings and the reasonable inferences deducible therefrom in support of the judgment, 2 Cal.Jur. pages 870, 871; Cushing v. Levi, 117 Cal.App. 94, 3 P.2d 958, it is apparent that they are sufficiently responsive to the issues so raised and litigated. Although there is no specific finding that the contract was fair and just the court did find the affirmative matters alleged in defendant's answer to be untrue, thereby inferentially finding the contrary to be true, that is, that the contract was fair and just as to the defendant. Such findings are adequately supported by the record and cannot be disturbed by this court on appeal.

[6, 7] Appellant's attack upon the finding that the consideration was adequate is likewise devoid of merit. Her contention in this regard is that respondent's expert witnesses based their opinions as to the value of the land on general trends extending over a period of years and did not consider the inflation in land values at the date of execution of the contract to sell. Such contention is not sustained by the record. One of the experts called by defendant testified the value of the property to be $70,000.00, the other testified the fair value was $65,000.00. Against this testimony was that of one of the guardians, Frank Borba, that he believed $53,000.00 was a good price; of another witness, a banker, real estate broker and farmer for many years in Stanislaus county, as well as presently acting as appraiser for the Veterans' Administration and a large life insurance company, who testified that on the date of sale not over $500.00 per acre would be a fair value or $52,500.00, and another witness, an inheritance tax appraiser for many years, who testified that on said date $52,500.00 was the fair market value. Additionally the record shows that approximately a month prior to the date of the contract here in issue, defendant attempted to sell the property for $55,000.00. As stated in Helbing v. Helbing, 89 Cal.App. 2d 224, 200 P.2d 560, since adequacy of consideration is peculiarly a question of fact for the trial court to determine in light of all the facts and circumstances of each particular case, a reviewing court will not disturb such a determination unless it can be said that a trial court's conclusion thereon finds no adequate support in the evidence.

[8-10] In contending that the trial court erroneously computed respondent's damages, appellant does not dispute, nor could she, repondent's right to recover damages for the reasonable value of the rents, issues and profits. 23 Cal.Jur. 508, sec. 64. Rather she contends that the rental reserved in the lease to her son conclusively established the amount thereof and that the trial court erred in considering the rental paid her son under the terms of the sublease. We do not agree. It was proper for the trial court to consider the rental paid under both the lease and the sublease in determining the reasonable value of the rent, issues and profits and hence its determination thereof, based upon the amount of rental paid under the sub-lease, finds support in the record and is binding upon this court on appeal. To hold that the rental paid appellant by her son conclusively established the reasonable value of the rents, issues and profits would deny full effect to appellant's contract to sell the property since such contract contained a condition implied as a matter of law that appellant would transfer to the respondent a title unencumbered and without defect, 25 Cal.Jur. 623, sec. 123, such as appellant's lease. See 57 A.L.R. 1376.

The judgment is affirmed.

ADAMS, P. J., and VAN DYKE, J., concur.

Hearing denied; SCHAUER, J., dissenting.

99 Cal.App.2d 77

ELLIS v. NATIONAL CASUALTY CO.
Civ. 7710.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 18, 1950.

Action by Charles Melville Ellis against the National Casualty Company, to recover moneys allegedly due under an insurance contract. The Superior Court, Solano County, Harlow V. Greenwood, J., entered an order denying the defendant's motion for change of venue, and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that a foreign corporate insurer sued in Solano County on group health and accident policy was entitled to have cause transferred to county of insurer's principal place of business, where complaint did not allege that contract of insurance was made or was to be performed or was breached in Solano County, and did not incorporate the insurance contract by reference.

Order reversed.

1. Corporations ⇐503(1)

The constitutional provision relating to county in which corporation may be sued, rather than statute providing that all actions must be tried in county in which some of the defendants reside, is applicable to corporations in transitory actions. Code Civ. Proc. § 395; Const. art. 12, § 16.

2. Corporations ⇐666

The venue rules applicable to domestic corporations also apply to foreign corporations. Const. art. 12, § 16.

3. Corporations ⇐503(3)

While a plaintiff has a choice among forums enumerated in constitutional provision relating to county in which corporation may be sued, the propriety of plaintiff's choice is to be determined from pleadings of record at time motion for change of venue is filed. Const. art. 12, § 16.

4. Pleading ⇐45

A plaintiff is required to frame his complaint to establish his right to retain trial of action in county in which action is commenced. Const. art. 12, § 16.

5. Insurance ⇐618

A foreign corporate insurer sued in Solano County on group health and accident policy was entitled to have cause transferred to county of insurer's principal place of business, where complaint did not allege that contract of insurance was made or was to be performed or was breached in Solano County and did not incorporate the insurance contract by reference. Const. art. 12, § 16.

Peart, Baraty & Hassard, George A. Smith, Alan L. Bonnington, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Millard Smith, Vallejo, for respondent.

PEEK, Justice.

The defendant National Casualty Company, a Michigan corporation, authorized and qualified to transact business in this state prosecutes this appeal from an order denying its motion for a change of venue from the Superior Court in and for the County of Solano to the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco. The foregoing motion was interposed in an action instituted by plaintiff Charles M. Ellis by which he sought to recover moneys allegedly due him under an insurance contract issued by appellant. The grounds specified in defendant's motion were that the contract was not made or entered into, to be performed, nor breached in Solano county and therefore that appellant was entitled to have the cause transferred to the city and county of San Francisco, its principal place of business.

Turning first to the pleadings, as we must, at the time the motion for change of venue was made (25 Cal.Jur. 907, 909, and cases cited) it appears that respondent's complaint is based upon a group health and accident policy entered into between California State Dental Association and defendant on December 15, 1946, a certificate of which policy was annexed to the complaint and incorporated therein as Exhibit A; that subsequent to the issuance of said policy respondent sustained a total disability resulting from an injury to his spine and that appellant has failed to make payments called for by the policy. Exhibit A, above referred to, which is entitled "Group Disability Policy Certificate", states that the National Casualty Company, Detroit, Michigan, "Has issued Group Disability Policy 998P No. 2010 effective December 15, 1946 Insuring the members of California State Dental Association" and recites therein that respondent "is insured under and subject to all the provisions and limitations of said Group Disability Policy" and further that "This certificate is furnished in accordance with and subject to the terms of the Group Disability Policy, which policy together with the Insured's application therefor and the Member's application, if any, constitute the entire contract of insurance. This certificate is merely evidence of the insurance and contains the essential provisions provided under said Group Disability Policy, * * *". The complaint contained no allegation that the contract of insurance was made, to be performed, or breached in Solano county nor does the certificate of insurance annexed to the complaint as Exhibit A contain any provisions relating to such matters. The Group Disability Policy, under which the certificate of insurance was issued, was not introduced at the hearing on appellant's motion for change of venue. Thus, in the record before this court, there is nothing to indicate where the Group Disability Policy was entered into, to be performed, or breached.

[1-4] Section 16, Article XII of the California Constitution provides that "A corporation or association may be sued in the county where the contract is made or is to be performed, or where the obligation or liability arises, or the breach occurs; or in the county where the principal place of business of such corporation is situated, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as in other cases." The foregoing provision, rather than the provisions contained in section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is applicable to corporations in transitory actions. Cook v. W. S. Ray Manufacturing Co., 159 Cal. 694, 115 P. 318; De Campos v. State Comp. Ins. Fund, 75 Cal.App.2d 13, 170 P.2d 60. The rules applicable to domestic corporations also apply to foreign corporations. Bohn v. Better Biscuit Inc., 26 Cal.App.2d 61, 78 P.2d 1177, 80 P.2d 484. Thus under the foregoing constitutional provision a plaintiff has a choice among forums enumerated therein. Clark v. Policy-Holders Life Ins. Assn. 138 Cal. App. 505, 32 P.2d 653; Walker v. Wells Fargo Bank etc. Co., 8 Cal.2d 447, 65 P. 2d 1299. However the propriety of plaintiff's choice is to be determined from the pleadings of record at the time the motion for change of venue is filed. 25 Cal. Jur. 907; Modlin v. Walter's Fur Shop, 83 Cal.App.2d 384, 188 P.2d 805. Necessarily therefore the plaintiff is required to frame his complaint to establish his right to retain the trial of the action in the county in which it is commenced. Neet v. Holmes, 19 Cal.2d 605, 122 P.2d 557.

[5] Applying the foregoing rules to the instant appeal, it is readily apparent that the court erroneously denied appellant's motion for a change of venue. Respondent's complaint did not allege that the contract of insurance was made, to be performed, or breached in Solano county. It did not incorporate by reference the insurance contract but rather the certificate of insurance thereunder. Under such circumstances the appellant was entitled to have the cause transferred to the county of its residence.

The order is reversed.

ADAMS, P. J., and VAN DYKE, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 80

HANCOCK et al. v. WILLIAMS et ux.
Civ. 4202.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 18, 1950.

H. H. Hancock and Mayme W. Hancock sued John H. Williams and Laura E. Williams for damages for fraudulent representations allegedly made by defendants when defendants sold realty to plaintiffs. The Superior Court of San Diego County, L. N. Turrentine, J., rendered a judgment adverse to defendants and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that evidence sustained findings that specifications of fraud relating to value of crop from avocado trees on realty, the income received from cabins on realty, and availability of the realty for trailer park purposes, were true, and that plaintiffs had suffered damages in amount of $8,000.

Judgment affirmed.

I. Fraud ⇐58(2)

In action for damages for fraudulent representations allegedly made by defendants when defendants sold realty to plaintiffs, evidence sustained findings that specifications of fraud relating to value of crop from avocado trees on the realty, income received from cabins on realty, and availability of realty for trailer park purposes, were true and that plaintiffs had suffered damages in amount of $8,000.

2. Husband and wife ⇐25(2)

Where wife entrusted her husband with negotiations for sale of realty owned by them as joint tenants, and confirmed acts of husband by joining in deed and escrow when realty was sold to plaintiffs, and wife claimed a portion of proceeds of sale, trial court in action for damages for fraudulent representations properly found that husband acted as agent for wife and that wife was bound by acts of husband as agent of wife, as against contention that judgment adverse to defendants should be reversed as to defendant wife because alleged fraudulent acts and statements were made by husband without knowledge or consent of wife.

3. Fraud ⇐59(3)

The out-of-pocket loss rule is rule of damages to be applied when purchaser of realty suffers damages because of fraudulent representations concerning realty made by vendor. Civ.Code, § 3343.

4. Fraud ⇐59(1)

Damages suffered by purchaser of realty as result of fraudulent representations concerning realty made by vendor are to be assessed as of date of fraudulent transaction. Civ.Code, § 3343.

5. Fraud ⇐59(1)

Where part of purchase price of realty consisted of assumption by purchasers of a trust deed then on realty, and purchasers paid trust deed at a discount, and purchasers suffered damages as result of alleged fraudulent representations by a vendor, amount of discount would not be deducted from amount of damages purchasers suffered in determining amount of damages vendors were required to pay. Civ.Code, § 3343.

Fogarty & Vaughn, Don P. Fogarty, San Diego, for appellants.

H. G. Sloane, San Diego, for respondents.

MUSSELL, Justice.

Action for damages for fraud.

The defendants, John H. Williams and Laura E. Williams, husband and wife, were the owners as joint tenants of certain real property located at Solana Beach in San Diego County, consisting of approximately two acres, improved with seven cabins, a residence and about 135 avocado trees. On January 23, 1948, plaintiffs purchased the property from the defendants, through escrow, for the sum of $50,000. The escrow was closed on or about February 15, 1948, and plaintiffs thereupon took possession. On December 31st plaintiffs commenced this action for damages based upon fraudulent representations made by the defendants by which the plaintiffs were induced to purchase the property.

[1] The trial court found that the specifications of fraud relative to the value of the crop of avocados, the income received and the availability of the property for trailer park purposes were true, and found that the plaintiffs had suffered damages in the amount of $8,000. The evidence was sufficient to support these findings.

The plaintiffs had resold the property prior to the trial of the action for $42,000 and the trial court found that the $8,000 represented the difference between the actual value of the consideration which plaintiffs parted with and the actual value of the real property which they received.

Defendants do not here contend that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding as to the amount of damages but contend

1. That the judgment should be reversed as to the defendant Laura E. Williams because the evidence was that all of the alleged fraudulent acts and statements were made by defendant John H. Williams and without her consent or knowledge.

2. That the amount of damages awarded against defendant John H. Williams should have been reduced by the sum of $3,500.

[2] As to the first contention, the record shows that the defendant Laura E.

Williams did not personally make any representations to plaintiffs with respect to the property. However, it conclusively appears that she entrusted her husband with the negotiations for the sale and confirmed his acts by joining in the deed and escrow and that she now claims a portion of the proceeds of the sale. We conclude that the evidence was sufficient to support the implied finding of the trial court that under the circumstances her husband acted as her agent and that she was bound by his acts as such. Stegeman v. Vandeventer, 57 Cal.App.2d 753, 759, 135 P.2d 186, and cases there cited.

Defendants second contention is likewise without merit. In this connection, it appears that the $50,000 purchase price consisted of the assumption by plaintiffs of a first trust deed for $18,464.75 and a second trust deed for $11,500, then on the property; the execution of another trust deed to the defendants for $12,035.25, and the payment of $8,000 in cash. On or about March 29, 1949, plaintiffs paid the second trust deed at a discount of $3,500 and it is defendants contention that this sum should be deducted from the $8,000 damages allowed. The argument is that the Hancocks never parted with the $3,500 and were never "out of pocket" in that amount.

The amount of damages suffered in cases of this kind is to be computed under section 3343 of the Civil Code, which provides:

"One defrauded in the purchase, sale or exchange of property is entitled to recover the difference between the actual value of that with which the defrauded person parted and the actual value of that which he received, together with any additional damage arising from the particular transaction.

"Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to deny to any person having a cause of action for fraud or deceit any legal or equitable remedies to which such person may be entitled."

[3, 4] The measure of damages set forth in this statute, referred to as the "'out-of-pocket loss' rule", is the rule in this state. Bagdasarian v. Gragnon, 31 Cal.2d 744, 759, 192 P.2d 935, 945. It is also the rule that damages are to be assessed as of the date of the fraudulent transaction. Hines v. Brode, 168 Cal. 507, 511, 143 P. 729; Carter v. Turner, 90 Cal.App. 193, 200, 265 P. 870; Garstang v. Skinner, 165 Cal. 721, 726, 134 P. 329.

[5] The plaintiffs were clearly obligated to pay the full amount of the $11,500 trust deed. The mere fact that they were able to obtain a reduction in the amount of the indebtedness does not mean that the consideration paid by the plaintiff for the property was reduced by that amount. Defendants should not be permitted to be unjustly enriched after the consummation of the fraud by them. Baffa v. Johnson, 35 Cal.2d 36, 39, 216 P.2d 13.

The judgment is affirmed.

MUSSELL, J.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concur.

STONE et al. v. YELLOW CAB CO. OF CALIFORNIA.
Civ. 17317.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 25, 1950.

Hearing Granted Oct. 23, 1950.*

Acquanetta Stone, a minor, by her guardian ad litem, Jewel Stone, and Jewel Stone, sued Yellow Cab Company of California, a corporation, for injury to the minor which resulted when defendant's taxicab in which the minor was a passenger made a sudden stop. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Charles E. Haas, J., rendered a judgment adverse to plaintiffs and denied plaintiffs a new trial and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J.,

* Dismissed March 22, 1951.

held that inquiry as to whereabouts of father of minor was irrelevant and prejudicial to interests of minor.

Judgment reversed and attempted appeal from order denying motion for new trial dismissed.

1. Infants ⇐90

Where minor is party to an action he must appear either by his personal guardian or by a guardian ad litem appointed by court for that purpose. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 373, 376.

2. Parent and child ⇐7(1)

The parent entitled to services of child has cause of action for injuries to child, and he may recover value of child's services during period of minority and expenses of medical care. Code Civ.Proc. § 376.

3. Infants ⇐72(2)

An injured child, unless emancipated, has a cause of action only for general damages for physical and mental suffering, and for future loss of earning power after majority. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 373, 376.

4. Infants ⇐77

The statutes regarding appointment of guardians ad litem were enacted to protect minors and not to preclude minors from their legal rights.

5. Infants ⇐77

A mother who as guardian ad litem of minor sued for injuries to minor was not a "party" to action, the court being in effect the guardian and the guardian ad litem being but an officer and representative of court. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 373, 376.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Party".

6. Infants ⇐105

Where mother as guardian ad litem of minor brings action for injuries to minor, court should look to best interests of minor and render a decree establishing and preserving rights of minor. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 373, 376.

7. Trial ⇐125(1)

Where action for injury was brought in name of injured child by mother of child as guardian ad litem, inquiry by defendant as to whereabouts of father of child was irrelevant and was prejudicial to interests of child where inquiry elicited information that father was in prison. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 373, 376.

8. Parties ⇐88(1)

Where action for injuries was brought in name of injured child by mother of child as guardian ad litem, and mother was joined in her individual capacity, any question regarding impropriety of joinder of mother in her individual capacity was waived by defendant when it was not objected to by special demurrer or answer.

9. Appeal and error ⇐110, 782, 870(6)

An attempted appeal from order denying motion for new trial would be dismissed since such order is reviewable upon appeal from judgment.

Morris Lavine, Los Angeles, for appellants.

James L. Ronnow and Harry B. Ellison, Los Angeles, Glenn R. Seavey, Los Angeles, of counsel, for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

The minor plaintiff, Acquanetta Stone, was injured when defendant's taxicab in which she was a passenger made a sudden stop on Wilshire Boulevard near LaBrea in the City of Los Angeles. Her mother, Jewel Stone, individually, and as guardian ad litem for the child, instituted this action to recover damages for such alleged injuries.

The cause was tried with a jury which brought in a verdict for defendant. Plaintiffs appeal from the judgment based thereon and from the order denying their motion for a new trial.

It appears from the record that about two o'clock in the afternoon of July 12, 1947, Mrs. Stone accompanied by her 3½ year-old child and a woman friend (since deceased) boarded defendant's cab at Wilshire and LaCienega. The child entered first and sat directly behind the driver, with the friend in the middle and Mrs. Stone on the right. The latter was feeling ill and so advised the driver. The cab proceeded easterly on Wilshire Boulevard in heavy traffic which was controlled by automatic light signals.

Mrs. Stone testified that the driver "would just barely make the signal. We would get it on the light. * * * We were going from one lane to the other and we were passing cars." And had to stop from time to time. Just before they reached LaBrea, the driver "threw the brakes on * * *. We were all thrown forward. * * * My child went out of the seat and her head hit the seat that turns up in back. Then she slumped down. * * * I reached and picked my child up. * * * She had a cut over the eye * * *. She came to and started to cry. The blood was all over my clothes. * * * She was semiconscious."

They proceeded easterly to a medical center at Wilshire and Muirfield. The driver stopped and gave Mrs. Stone his handkerchief to "catch part of the blood" ran around the cab and said "You are ill. Let me carry the child."

Mrs. Stone also testified that the speed of the cab at the time of the accident was 45 miles per hour; that just before it occurred the driver "ran one red light and he caught two signals on the change."

On cross-examination, she stated that as the cab traveled in the middle lane about half a block west of LaBrea, she observed a car ahead stopped at the signal; that she "looked up and saw the red light and saw the car in front of us and I knew we were going to have an accident * * * because of the rate of speed we were traveling"; that the driver "threw the brakes on and made a sudden stop"; that her child was leaning against the back of the seat with her feet straight out and all three passengers were thrown out of the seat.

The witness, Mrs. Diamond, stated that at the time in question she was riding in an automobile proceeding easterly on Wilshire within five blocks of LaBrea; that she observed a Yellow cab go "through a red light as he passed us. We stopped at the red light and he went through"; that later the car in which she was riding caught up with the taxi; that she glanced into the cab and saw the injured child; that her car stopped near the medical center where she saw the cab driver carrying the child into the medical building.

The driver of the Yellow cab here involved testified that at the time of the accident he was traveling twenty or twenty-five miles per hour easterly "on Wilshire Boulevard in very heavy traffic. I stopped at stop and go signs and continued behind a car to LaBrea, and applied the brakes and the child went forward"; that when he first applied his brakes to make the stop at LaBrea, he was twenty-five or thirty feet behind the car ahead of him; was then going about twenty miles per hour, and stopped in ten feet. That when the sign changed to "go" he proceeded to a medical center about twelve blocks east of LaBrea; that when he carried the child into the doctor's office she was bleeding over the left eye, but was conscious and crying.

Dr Yonchar testified that the minor plaintiff was brought to his office about three o'clock in the afternoon of July 12, 1947, suffering from a straight-line laceration in the area of the left brow extending slightly beyond the hair margin; that the laceration was sutured "using two deep sutures and two superficial sutures"; that the child was given a general anesthetic and remained in his office for about three hours. A subsequent examination of the child showed a normal recovery insofar as the cut over the eye was concerned.

There is also evidence to the effect that after the accident the minor plaintiff would arouse from sleep crying aloud and apparently terror stricken; that she complained of headaches and pain around the eye; that her appetite was disturbed; and that she had a fear of intersections, of yellow taxicabs and of the color yellow.

Dr. Sonneland, a neuropsychiatrist who examined her, testified that in his opinion the child was suffering from a traumatic or fright neurosis which might continue indefinitely; that she would require observation and treatment twice a week for eighteen months to free her from these obsessions.

Appellants predicate prejudicial error upon the following inquiry during the cross-examination of Mrs. Stone over the objection of their counsel:

"By Mr. Ellison: Q. Where do you live? A. Now?

"Q. Yes. A. 731 South Crenshaw.

"Q. And what is your business or occupation? A. Manager of a private school and teaching.

"Q. Are you married? A. Yes.

"Q. What is your husband's name? A. William Stone.

"Q. Are you living with him? A. No.

"Q. Are you divorced? A. No.

"Q. Is he alive? A. Yes.

"Q. Does he live here in Los Angeles? A. No.

"Q. Where does he live?

"Mr. Lavine: Object to that as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

"The Court: Cross examination.

"Mr. Lavine: Nothing asked about it on direct examination.

"Mr. Ellison: Section 376 vests in the father—

"The Court: She is a minor.

"Mr. Lavine: Only one guardian ad litem appointed.

"The Court: May be both involved. Objection overruled.

"Q. By Mr. Ellison: Where does your husband live? A. My husband is in San Quentin.

"Q. Then you are separated from your husband, is that right?

"(Witness cries.) The Court: Don't show any emotion.

"Mr. Ellison: Do you want to stop for a few minutes? (Mr. Lavine gives witness a drink of water.)

"Q. By Mr. Ellison: Are you feeling better now or do you want to take a little recess. A. I am all right.

"Q. I want to ask you a few questions. Don't want to embarrass you. A. I am all right.

"Q. All right. Where were you living at the time of this accident in July, 1947? A. July 12, 1947 I was living at 921 North Central, El Monte.

"Q. Were you living with your husband at that time? A. No."

It is here urged that the prejudicial effect of such inquiry constituted a denial of the fair trial guaranteed by the state and federal constitutions.

Respondent argues that since Mrs. Stone sued "in her capacity as mother of the child as well as guardian ad litem" the questions asked were justified under section 376 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which at that time provided:

"A father of a minor, or if the father is dead or the parents of said minor are living separate or apart and the mother of the minor then has care or custody of said minor, then the mother, may maintain an action for the injury or death of said minor child, and a guardian for the injury or death of his ward, when such injury or death is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another. Such action may be maintained against the person causing the injury, or death, or if such person be employed by another person who is responsible for his conduct, also against such other person."

[1] Here the action was prosecuted in the name of the injured child, and as held in Hughes v. Quackenbush, 1 Cal.App.2d 349, 362, 37 P.2d 99, 105: "It is elementary that, when a minor is a party to an action, he must appear either by his general guardian or by a guardian ad litem appointed by the court for that purpose. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 372."

Section 373 of the Code of Civil Procedure details the procedure for appointment of guardians ad litem, to-wit: "1. When the infant is plaintiff the appointment must be made before the summons is issued, upon the application of the infant, if he be of the age of fourteen years, or if under that age, upon the application of a relative or friend of the infant." The foregoing makes no mention as to which relative shall be given preference in such appointment, but the order of right to appointment of general guardian outlined in sections 1407 and 1408 of the Probate Code, gives priority to "a parent" and "if the child is of tender years, it should be given to the mother".

The complaint herein alleges that "Jewel Stone has been appointed guardian ad litem of Acquanetta Stone, a minor, for the purposes of this action." Said allegation is admitted by the answer.

Section 376, Code of Civ.Proc., hereinbefore quoted, gives a right of action to the father, or under certain conditions to the mother, for injuries sustained by a minor child. It also gives a right of action to a guardian for the injury or death of his ward.

Said section clearly contemplates that such action may be maintained by a parent or by the child through his guardian. In this connection see Witkin's Summary of California Law, Vol. 1, page 700, sec. 133:

[2, 3] "Personal Injury to Child. (a) Action by parent. The parent entitled to the services of the child (i. e., usually the father) has a cause of action for injuries to the child. He may recover (1) the value of the child's services during the period of minority, and (2) the expenses of medical care. C.C.P. § 376; Bauman v. San Francisco, 1940, 42 Cal.App.2d 144, 160, 108 P.2d 989; Edgar v. Citraro, 1931, 112 Cal.App. 183, 297 P. 653; Finnerty v. Cummings, 1933, 132 Cal.App. 48, 22 P.2d 37; Durkee v. C. P. R. R. Co., 1880, 56 Cal. 388, 38 Am.Rep. 59; 6 So.Cal.L.Rev. 170; Rest., Torts, sec. 703. (b) Action by Child. The child, unless emancipated, has a cause of action only for 'general damages' for physical and mental suffering, and for future loss of earning power after majority. See Rest., Torts, sec. 703, Comment h. However, it has been held that where the parent sues as guardian ad litem of the child, recovery may be had for loss of earnings or services and medical expenses, on the theory that the parent is thus giving the right to the child. Bauman v. San Francisco, 1940, 42 Cal.App.2d 144, 160, 108 P.2d 989; McManus v. Arnold Taxi Corp., 1927, 82 Cal.App. 215, 223, 255 P. 755; Girard v. Irvine, 1929, 97 Cal.App. 377, 386, 275 P. 840."

[4] When a guardian ad litem is appointed and brings an action in the name of the ward, it must be assumed that the guardian has qualified as such. Consequently, any preference given to the father of the minor under section 376, supra, can have no further application to the situation. As was stated in Doyle v. Loyd, 45 Cal.App.2d 493, 497, 114 P.2d 398, 400: "The statutes regarding the appointment of guardians ad litem were enacted for the purpose of protecting the minors and not for the purpose of precluding them from their legal rights."

[5, 6] Also, the mother here as guardian is not a party to the action. Ocean Acc. & Guar. Corp. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 88 Cal.App. 369, 372, 263 P. 823; O'Shea v. Wilkinson, 95 Cal. 454, 456, 30 P. 588. "The court is, in effect, the guardian of the minor and the guardian ad litem is but an officer and representative of the court. Cole v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 86, 89, 49 Am.Rep. 78. In such a case it will be presumed that the court will look to the best interests of the child and will render a decree that will establish and preserve her rights." Serway v. Galentine, 75 Cal. App.2d 86, 89, 170 P.2d 32, 34.

[7] It follows that the inquiry in the presence of the jury as to the whereabouts of the father was completely irrelevant and out of place. Appellants' objection thereto should have been sustained. There is little doubt that this immaterial but harmful evidence created such a prejudice in the minds of the jurors that they failed to fully consider the material issues presented for their determination, i. e., (1) negligence of the taxicab driver, and (2) the extent of the injuries sustained by the little girl. In the words of appellants' opening brief: "Unquestionably the asking of this question and the answer to the question was a controlling factor in bringing about a verdict which otherwise never would have been rendered."

[8] Any question regarding the impropriety of the joinder of the mother in her individual capacity was waived by respondent when it was not objected to by special demurrer or answer. Barnett v. Garrison, 93 Cal.App.2d 553, 557, 209 P.2d 426, citing House v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 35 Cal. App.2d 336, 343, 95 P.2d 465.

In addition to the contention that the evidence established negligence of the taxicab driver as a matter of law, there are several claims of error in connection with (1) the admission and exclusion of evidence; (2) instructions given and refused; (3) conduct of the trial. Since these errors may not again arise upon retrial, it would serve no useful purpose to pass upon them at this time.

[9] The attempted appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial is dismissed for the reason that such an order is reviewable upon an appeal from the judgment. The judgment is reversed and the cause is remanded for a new trial.

WHITE, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

98 Cal.App.2d 733

HARRIS et al. v. NATIONAL UNION OF MARINE COOKS & STEWARDS et al.

Civ. 14359.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 1, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 31, 1950.

Hearing Denied Sept. 25, 1950.

Alex Harris and others, brought suit against National Union of Marine Cooks and Stewards, an unincorporated association, and others to recover damages for loss of earnings resulting from their expulsion from the union and for a writ of mandate to compel the defendants to reinstate the plaintiffs in the union. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Thomas M. Foley, J., entered an order granting the writ and awarding damages, and the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that the expulsions were made in violation of the union's constitution, and that therefore the plaintiffs were entitled to reinstatement and to recover damages for loss of earnings.

Affirmed.

1. Trade unions ⇐4.9

Where constitution of unincorporated labor union provided that members could be expelled only by vote of supreme quorum "after such action has been recommended by trial committee" and majority of trial committee had not recommended expulsion, expelled members were entitled to reinstatement after expulsion by supreme quorum which accepted recommendation of minority report of trial committee, notwithstanding that under Rules of Order, which had been adopted under by-laws as standard of procedure by union, adoption of minority report was provided for.

2. Trade unions ⇐3, 4.7

Constitution of unincorporated labor union constitutes contract with members and is measure of authority conferred upon organization to expel or otherwise discipline its members.

3. Trade unions ⇐4.10

Provision of constitution of unincorporated labor union stipulating under heading "Fines and Punishments" that expelled members could be reinstated only by referendum vote, could not properly be considered remedy within meaning of rule that member must exhaust his remedies within association before appealing to courts.

4. Associations ⇐7

Where organization has violated its own laws and arbitrarily violated members' property rights, rule of exhaustion of remedies by appeal to higher body within organization need not be adhered to before direct resort to judicial tribunal.

5. Trade unions ⇐4.9

Where constitution of unincorporated labor union in prescribing procedure for expulsion of members provided that charges should be investigated by trial committee elected by membership, members who were expelled on recommendation of trial committee drawn by lot were entitled to reinstatement, notwithstanding custom of union to choose committees other than by election by membership.

6. Administrative law and procedure ⇐496 Associations ⇐5

Clearly erroneous administrative construction of definite and unambiguous provision of constitution of unincorporated association cannot operate to change its meaning.

7. Mandamus ⇐187(4)

In suit by former members of union for writ of mandate to compel their reinstatement in union, where defendant union did not raise in its answer the defense that the former members had waived their right to trial by properly constituted trial committee of union membership by their failure to object during expulsion proceedings, defense of waiver was not thereafter open to union on review of order granting writ.

8. Estoppel ⇐110

Waiver is affirmative defense which is itself waived if not pleaded in answer.

9. Trade unions ⇐4.12

Members who are wrongfully expelled from trade union are entitled to recover damages for loss of anticipated earnings because of wrongful interference with their right to work.

10. Trade unions ⇐4.12, 9

In action by former members of unincorporated trade union to recover damages for loss of earnings resulting from wrongful order expelling them from the union, union was in no position to complain that evidence did not clearly establish that plaintiff members would have been continuously employed even if not expelled from union.

11. Damages ⇐6

One whose wrongful conduct has rendered difficult ascertainment of damages cannot escape liability because damages cannot be measured with exactness.

12. Trade unions ⇐4.12, 9

In action by former members to recover damages for loss of earnings resulting from wrongful expulsion from union, where expulsion occurred and action was filed before adoption of Taft-Hartley Act, there was no merit to suggestion that trial court lacked jurisdiction to award damages for period after effective date of Taft-Hartley Act. Labor Management Relations Act 1947, § 1 et seq., 29 U.S.C.A. § 141 et seq.

Gladstein, Andersen, Resner & Sawyer, George R. Andersen, Ewing Sibbett, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Aaron Sapiro and G. C. Ringole, Los Angeles, for respondents.

DOOLING, Justice.

Plaintiffs were members of defendant union and were purportedly expelled. The trial court issued a writ of mandate commanding their restoration to the union and awarding them damages for their loss of earnings which resulted from the orders expelling them. From this judgment the defendants have appealed.

Plaintiffs were members of a minority group in the union who opposed the adoption of a new constitution. They joined with an expelled member of the union to publish a paper which was extremely outspoken in its criticism of the union's officers and its activities. Written charges were filed against them which resulted in their expulsion by vote of the members.

The constitution of the union then in effect contained the following pertinent provisions:

"Article VIII, Section 1. In case of an accusation brought by one member against another, the membership shall elect a committee of five (5) members, two (2) of whom, in so far as possible, shall be of the same classified grade as the accused, the balance to be selected at large, whose duty it shall be to investigate and try such charges and report their findings together with recommendations for disposition of the case at the next regular meeting of the Headquarters or Branch electing such committee. The punishment to be administered shall be finally determined by the decision of such meeting at Headquarters or at Branches except as otherwise provided in this Constitution.

* * * * * *

"Article XIV, Section 5. Members may be expelled from this Union only by vote of a Supreme Quorum, after such action has been recommended by a Trial Committee. To expel a member requires a two-thirds majority of the Supreme Quorum."

[1] As to three of the plaintiffs, Harris, Kaplan and Antons, we need go no further than the first sentence of Art. XIV, sec. 5 above quoted to find ample support for the judgment. A majority of the Trial Committee did not recommend the expulsion of these three. Their expulsion was recommended in a minority report signed by only two of the committee's five members. The provision quoted is clear: "Members may be expelled from this Union only * * * after such action has been recommended by a Trial Committee."

The union voted to substitute the minority report for the majority report and to concur therein. That this was a violation of the rule making the recommendation of a Trial Committee a condition precedent to expulsion is so clear that further comment is unnecessary. The fact that under the by-laws Roberts' Rules of Order were adopted as the standard of procedure and that those rules provide for the adoption of a minority report cannot change the plain requirement of the constitution nor convert by procedural sleight of hand the minority report into the recommendation of the committee which the constitution requires.

[2] The constitution of the union constitutes a contract with the members and is the measure of the authority conferred upon the organization to expel or otherwise discipline them. Smetheram v. Laundry Workers' Union, 44 Cal.App.2d 131, 136–137, 111 P.2d 948; Dingwall v. Amalgamated Ass'n etc., 4 Cal.App. 565, 569, 88 P. 597; Bush v. International Alliance, 55 Cal.App.2d 357, 364, 130 P.2d 788; Weber v. Marine Cooks' & Stewards' Ass'n, 93 Cal.App.2d 327, 334–335, 208 P.2d 1009.

[3] Appellants argue that plaintiffs did not exhaust their remedies within the union before appealing to the courts. They rely on section 7, Article XIV of the constitution, which reads: "No member expelled from this Union shall be reinstated to membership except by a referendum vote of Headquarters and Branches taken at three (3) consecutive regular meetings."

Rather than supplying a remedy for a wrongful expulsion this section imposes a strict limitation on the manner in which a member who has been once expelled may thereafter be reinstated to membership. It offers no relief to the wrongfully expelled member, but seems designed instead to make it difficult for a rightfully expelled member to regain his lost membership. In order to avail themselves of this section the expelled members must recognize the validity of their expulsion and ask for reinstatement. We agree with plaintiffs that this section provides a penalty (it appears in an Article headed "Fines and Punishments") and may not properly be considered a remedy within the meaning of the rule that a member must exhaust his remedies within the association before appealing to the courts.

[4] Furthermore this case falls within the rule announced in Weber v. Marine Cooks' & Stewards' Ass'n, supra, at p. 338 of 93 Cal.App.2d at page 1016 of 208 P.2d, that "where an organization has violated its own laws and arbitrarily violated a member's property rights the rule of exhaustion of remedies by appeals to a higher body within the organization need not be adhered to before direct resort to a judicial tribunal."

The suggestion that the expulsion must be upheld, however much the procedure violated the rights guaranteed to the members by the constitution, under the rule of Neto v. Conselho Amor etc., 18 Cal.App. 234, 122 P. 973, is answered by the fact that in the Neto case a member was forbidden to belong to a rival society under express penalty of expulsion and the plaintiff even at the trial in which she sought reinstatement persisted in her intention to retain her membership in the rival organization. There the only penalty provided was expulsion and plaintiff's persistence in violating the rule being clear the court saw no purpose to be served in reinstating her. Here, conceding but not deciding, that plaintiffs' conduct justified discipline that discipline might be less drastic than their expulsion. Indeed under section 5, art. XIV it must needs be something less drastic than expulsion as to the three plaintiffs because the Trial Committee did not recommend expulsion in their case as required by the express language of that section.

[5, 6] As to the other two plaintiffs it is admitted that the Trial Committee which heard the charges against them was not elected by the union as expressly required by section 1 of art. VIII above quoted. The original members of that committee were drawn by lot and later some members were succeeded on the committee by others who were selected by a single officer of the union. The provision of the constitution that "the membership shall elect a committee" is too clear to need construction and was as clearly violated. No custom of the union to choose the committee in another fashion can alter the plain meaning of the plaintiffs' contract right to be tried by a committee elected by the membership. A clearly erroneous administrative construction of a definite and unambiguous provision of the constitution cannot operate to change its meaning. See Trabue Pittman Corp. v. County of Los Angeles, 29 Cal.2d 385, 399, 175 P.2d 512; Twaits v. State Board of Equalization, 93 Cal.App.2d 796, 801, 210 P.2d 40; Connell v. Stalker, 21 Misc. 609, 48 N.Y.S. 77, 79.

[7, 8] The claim that plaintiffs waived the right to trial by a properly constituted Trial Committee by failure to object, and in the case of one plaintiff to appear, is not now open to appellants. Waiver is an affirmative defense which is itself waived if not pleaded in the answer. Pohle v. Christian, 21 Cal.2d 83, 90, 130 P.2d 417; Mitchell v. Cheney Slough Irr. Co., 57 Cal.App.2d 138, 144–145, 134 P.2d 34; Wood v. Jotham Bixby Co., 29 Cal.App.2d 294, 299, 84 P.2d 204; Wienke v. Smith, 179 Cal. 220, 225, 176 P. 42.

[9-11] Plaintiffs' right to damages for loss of anticipated earnings is clear. Dotson v. International Alliance, etc., Employes, 34 Cal.2d 362, 374–375, 210 P.2d 5; Smetheram v. Laundry Workers' Union, supra, 44 Cal.App.2d 131, 139, 111 P.2d 948. Appellants are in no position to complain that it is not certainly established by the evidence that if plaintiffs had not been expelled from the union their employment would have been continuous. "One whose wrongful conduct has rendered difficult the ascertainment of the damages cannot escape liability because the damages could not be measured with exactness." Zinn v. Ex-Cell-O Corp., 24 Cal.2d 290, 297–298, 149 P.2d 177, 181.

[12] We find no merit in the suggestion that the court was without jurisdiction to award damages for the period after August 22, 1947, the effective date of the Taft-Hartley Act, 29 U.S.C.A. § 141 et seq. The damages were the result of a completed wrong, the illegal expulsion of the plaintiffs, and incidental to the court's admitted jurisdiction to give judicial relief for that wrong. The expulsions occurred, the wrong was complete and the action was filed all in 1945, long before the adoption of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Judgment affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and GOODELL, J., concur.

98 Cal.App.2d 723

PEOPLE v. SMITH.
Cr. 2652.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 1, 1950.

George E. Smith was convicted in the Superior Court, Santa Clara County, William F. James, J., of burglary in the second degree, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Wood, J., held that evidence sustained the conviction.

Judgment and order appealed from affirmed.

1. Burglary ⇐41(1)

Evidence sustained conviction of burglary in second degree.

2. Criminal law ⇐761(13)

In burglary prosecution, instruction correctly defining crime of burglary, discussing elements of entry and of intent to commit theft and concluding with statement that it was up to jury whether defendant entered building "with intent of stealing, committing larceny" was not erroneous on alleged ground that instruction assumed guilt of defendant.

3. Burglary ⇐46(7)
Criminal law ⇐1186(4)

In burglary prosecution, instruction which failed to advise jury as to evidentiary significance of possession of defendant of stolen property was erroneous, but in view of record was not prejudicial error. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

4. Criminal law ⇐1186(4)

Where evidence of guilt is clear and convincing and it appears that a different verdict would not otherwise have been probable, ordinarily a judgment of conviction will not be reversed solely for error in or failure to give an instruction. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

5. Criminal law ⇐1186(4)

An incomplete instruction is not deemed ground for reversal if on examination of entire record it appears to court improbable that jury would have given a different verdict but for error. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

6. Criminal law ⇐824(1)

It is duty of trial court in a criminal case to instruct jury of its own motion, charging it fully and fairly on law relating to facts of case.

7. Criminal law ⇐824(8)

In burglary prosecution, where only testimony in any way bearing on a prior conviction was that voluntarily given by defendant, and he was not cross-examined as to any of his statements, failure of trial court on its own motion to instruct jury that evidence of defendant's prior conviction should be considered only as affecting defendant's credibility and not for other purposes did not constitute error, certainly not prejudicial error.

8. Criminal law ⇐1144(10)

In burglary prosecution, where only testimony bearing on a prior conviction was that voluntarily given by defendant, on which testimony he was not cross-examined, and there was no reference to a prior conviction except that information charged a prior conviction, and upon arraignment defendant admitted prior conviction, and record disclosed that after jury was impaneled information was read to jury and jury was informed defendant entered a plea of not guilty, it would be presumed, in absence of anything in record to contrary, that in reading information to jury clerk observed statutory requirements and omitted all thereof that related to previous conviction. Pen.Code §§ 1025, 1093.

9. Criminal law ⇐1144

There is a presumption of regularity in criminal proceedings.

Van H. Pinney, San Francisco, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, David K. Lener, Deputy, N. J. Menard, District Attorney, Allan P. Lindsay, Deputy, County of Santa Clara, San Jose, for respondent.

WOOD, Justice.

Defendant was convicted of burglary in the second degree,—entry of a building, the office of the Santa Clara County Building Inspector, Hall of Records, San Jose, with intent to commit theft therein. A charge of a prior conviction of a felony was found to be true. The appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Two points are made upon this appeal: (1) Insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict and (2) error in the giving of instructions to the jury.

As to the Sufficiency of the Evidence.

A typewriter belonging to the county and used in the county building inspector's office was removed, without permission, sometime between 5:30 p. m. of May 18, 1949, and 8:00 a. m. of the next day.

At about 7:30 p. m. of May 18, defendant took this typewriter to a tavern at 13 South Market Street, San Jose, offered it for sale, and sold it to the tavern proprietor for $28, stating that he was selling it for a finance company that had repossessed it, selling it for the balance due. He executed a receipt therefor in the name of "Russell Eggert," but did at the time exhibit identification cards which showed his true name, and on the witness stand he said he signed Eggert's name because it was Eggert's typewriter.

At about 5:20 p. m. of May 18, defendant went to this tavern, spoke to an employee there, offered a typewriter for sale, was told to telephone the proprietor at his house about the typewriter, apparently did telephone him, and then returned with the typewriter about 7:30 of that evening.

The proprietor, suspecting that the typewriter may have been stolen, called the police department and asked if it was all right if he bought it, and was told it would be, so long as he got a receipt for it.

In response to a call, two city police officers arrived at the tavern about 8:00 p. m. The receipt for the sale of the typewriter had already been executed. They asked defendant where the typewriter came from and he stated he got it from Russell Eggert, that Russell was parked opposite a firehouse about 100 yards from the tavern, in a '37 Dodge coupe, with Washington license plates; that Russell was parked there waiting for defendant; that it was Russell's typewriter—it had come from Dohrman's in Seattle; that defendant could prove it if he could get hold of Russell; that it was in the car when Russell was driving; that they left San Francisco that afternoon around 4:00 o'clock; that they were in need of money; that Russell asked defendant if he would go and sell it, and was waiting for defendant on the street; that the typewriter was in the car when they left San Francisco—in Russell's car, in the back.

The officers took defendant around in their car in an attempt to locate Eggert. Defendant stated that if Russell was not there he could locate him at the De Anza Hotel. After they made a tour of the district in the vicinity of the tavern looking for Eggert and were unable to find him, they went to the De Anza Hotel and checked, but no one by that name had signed up for a room. They again checked, but nobody had signed in at the hotel under the name of Eggert. The officers testified that they checked at the hotel as late as 2:00 a. m. of the following morning and could not find Russell Eggert or the Dodge coupe.

After they were unable to locate Eggert, defendant told the officers he did not come down with Eggert that afternoon, but came down on a bus. When asked when he last saw Eggert, he told the officers "yesterday," which would be May 17, and that he had not seen him since. Defendant testified that he did not tell anyone that the typewriter was in the automobile that he came down in, and that so far as he knew he did not tell the officers he came down in the car. He testified that he left San Francisco on a bus at 3:00 p. m., or a little after, and must have arrived at San Jose after 5:00 p. m.

The officers found but $26.02 upon the person of the defendant, aside from some loose change which was upon the bar and which, at their suggestion, he put in his pocket; defendant had told them he was broke and this was why he was selling the typewriter. Defendant testified that on that day, about four hours before he was put in jail, he drew $47 from his employer in

Daly City, paid about $15 of it for his board at Daly City, in advance, retaining the balance thereof; that he thought the policeman gave it back to him at the bar; that he received $28 from the tavern proprietor; that he did not know how much the proprietor gave him; that he did not give him any; that when the police took defendant the proprietor took the money; that defendant had the money in his hands; that beside that defendant did not have $30 or $35; that he had just what he turned over to the police, $26.02; that he laid it on the bar; that he had all of his paycheck except what he paid for board.

Concerning his possession and sale of the typewriter, defendant testified upon direct examination that Eggert was in the business of buying and selling service stations, including the equipment; that Eggert had this and another typewriter and an adding machine, told defendant he purchased them legitimately, and otherwise than this defendant did not know. Asked, upon cross-examination, if he told them at the tavern that he was repossessing the typewriter for a finance company, defendant said "That was all the information I had."

When defendant was apprehended by the officers at the tavern, there were two pencils found on his person, of the same kind as those used by the county building inspector's office, though not identified as having come from that office. At the trial, defendant stated he stole those pencils from San Quentin; that he did not steal them, that he took them with him, that they had a whole batch and he filled his pockets up.

The officers testified that defendant hold them the evening he was arrested that he had been earlier that evening to the county jail in an attempt to locate Charles Hambaugh, to ask him a favor. Hambaugh, the county jailor, testified that a few days before the trial defendant said he was down that way at possibly 5:30 in the evening, that he came with the possibility to stay all night, to sleep in the jail, and that defendant spoke to Deputy Sheriff King, who was the jailor at midnight. Defendant, on direct examination, referring to Officer Cannell's statement with reference to Hambaugh, said that Cannell got it turned around; that defendant came down to see the district attorney's office; that he did not come down to see Mr. Hambaugh, and that he came to ask if they would recommend that defendant go back to Carolina. But upon cross-examination defendant stated that shortly after he first went to the tavern to offer a typewriter for sale he went to the county jail, talked with Mr. King, deputy sheriff, asked if Hambaugh was working; that defendant wanted a place to spend the night, and told King he had the money but could not afford to spend it. The jail was situated about 25 feet from the county building inspector's office.

There is testimony that defendant had knowledge of means of access to the room where the typewriter was kept and used. The county building inspector's office was in a group of four rooms in the basement of the Hall of Records: an anteroom, the deputy building inspector's office, the building inspector's office, and a central equipment room. The anteroom had a door to the street which contained a small sliding panel which could be opened from the street side, an arm put through and the door unlocked. The deputy's office was next to the anteroom. The door from the anteroom to the deputy's office was never locked. The inspector's office was next to the deputy's office. The door between them was locked, but the key to it was kept in the top drawer of a desk near the door in the deputy's office. Another door from the anteroom opened into the central equipment room.

From about January 1 to March 11, 1948, defendant, a trusty in the county jail, worked for the county superintendent of buildings in the central equipment room. They worked the whole room, putting in counters and refinishing desks. One week-end the superintendent asked the defendant if he wanted to come in and work, and asked defendant if he needed a key, and defendant said no, he could get in. When asked how, he said, "I have a way to get in there." The superintendent did not know how defendant actually got in there; nevertheless, on week-ends defendant did work in the place and the superintendent was not there.

[1] The evidence amply supports the verdict. That a burglary was committed by someone appears without conflict. Defendant's possession and sale of the stolen property soon after its taking, while not sufficient of itself for a conclusion by the jury that he entered the building with intent to commit theft, is a circumstance which, taken with the corroborating evidence of defendant's offer to sell a typewriter shortly before the taking, his presence near the building thereafter and early in the two-hour period during which the building was entered, and his knowledge of the means of access to the office from which the property was taken; his conflicting statements concerning his movements on the day of the entry, the manner in which he acquired possession, for whom and for what purpose he sold the property, and what funds if any he had in addition to the money paid him for the property; and the nonavailability of the person from whom he said he obtained the property though search was made for that person, constituted evidence before the jury sufficient to connect defendant with the crime, amply sufficient in law to support the verdict of guilty. People v. Machabie, 33 Cal.2d 67, 69, 198 P.2d 681; People v. Russell, 34 Cal.App.2d 665, 669, 94 P.2d 400; People v. McCann, 34 Cal. App.2d 376, 377, 93 P.2d 643; People v. Golembiewski, 25 Cal.App.2d 115, 117, 76 P.2d 717; People v. Morris, 124 Cal.App. 402, 404, 12 P.2d 679; People v. Russell, 120 Cal.App. 622, 625, 8 P.2d 209; and cases therein cited.

As to Asserted Errors in Instructing the Jury.

Defendant claims that by instruction No. 9 the trial court erroneously told the jury that proof of possession of the stolen property by defendant was sufficient evidence that he entered the building with intent to commit theft, and assumed the guilt of defendant; and that error occurred in the asserted failure of the court upon its own motion to give instructions (1) to the effect that unexplained possession of stolen property soon after the taking, is not sufficient to justify conviction, and (2) that the evidence of defendant's prior conviction should be considered only as affecting defendant's credibility and not for other purposes.

Instruction No. 9 was as follows:

"The charge made against the defendant is that of burglary. Burglary is defined in Section 459 of the Penal Code of this State as follows, at least in so far as it refers to this particular case:

" 'Every person who enters any house, room, apartment, tenement, shop, warehouse, store, mill, barn, stable, outhouse, or other building, tent, vessel, railroad car, mine, or any underground portion thereof, with intent to commit grand or petit larceny, or any felony is guilty of burglary.'

"In other words, in so far as this particular case is concerned, the element necessary to be proved is the defendant entered a building with intent to commit larceny. Larceny is stealing. This defendant in this case is not charged with stealing anything. Larceny is an entirely different offense. Burglary does not involve stealing at all. The principal charge of burglary is the unlawful entering of a building with that intent. If a person intending to steal breaks into a house, or building, whatever structure it may be, with intent, the minute he enters he is guilty of burglary, even if he does not take anything at all. Intent is a thing that exists in the mind of course is not susceptible of direct proof. There is no way of putting a witness on the stand, saying this man intended this or that, because that is in his mind, we can't open his skull and read it like a book, intent has to be proved, but may be proved by circumstances. You see every crime consists of an act and intent.

" 'The intent or intention,' says Section 21 of the Penal Code, 'is manifested by the circumstances connected with the offense, and the sound mind and discretion of the accused.' You determine what a man intends to do by what he does. If, for instance, a man breaks into your house and takes your money, there is no way of proving what was in his mind as to intent, but if proven he broke in the house and is caught with money, he hasn't any right to it, you have a right to draw the inference when he went in he intended to steal, because after he went in he did steal. As I say, we are not charging this man with stealing this typewriter, but with entering the office of the Santa Clara County Building Inspector, located in the Hall of Records in the Court house of Santa Clara County with the intent to commit theft. And the basis, the method by which the People undertake to prove it is by showing from their testimony that this typewriter was in that building at a certain time, and that thereafter was in the defendant's possession, was sold by him, at least disposed of, and under the various circumstances shown in the evidence of this case. It is up to the jury to determine whether or not the defendant entered this building with the intent of stealing, committing larceny. I think that is about as clear a definition as I can give you."

[2] We do not derive from this instruction an assumption of guilt upon the part of the defendant. It correctly defines the crime of burglary, discusses the elements of entry and of intent to commit theft, and concludes with the reminder that "It is up to the jury to determine whether or not the defendant entered this building with the intent of stealing, committing larceny." The court had by other instructions properly advised the jury on such matters as the function of the jury as exclusive judges of the facts, the presumption of innocence, and the burden and degree of proof required.

[3] We consider this instruction uncertain and inadequate concerning possession of stolen property by a defendant. It tells the jury that the "method by which the People undertake to prove" entry by defendant with intent to commit theft is by testimony that this "typewriter was in that building at a certain time," and "thereafter was in the defendant's possession, was sold by him, at least disposed of, and under the various circumstances shown in the evidence of this case." This was a statement, in effect, that evidence of possession and "the various circumstances shown in the evidence of this case," were for the consideration of the jury in determining whether or not defendant entered the building and did so with the intent of stealing. This was not an instruction that mere possession of the stolen property by the defendant was sufficient to prove that he committed the burglary, but it did fail to advise the jury as to the evidentiary significance of such possession. There should have been an instruction framed upon the principle, expressed in People v. Russell, supra, 120 Cal.App. 622, at page 625, 8 P.2d 209, at page 210, that possession of stolen property "is a circumstance which may be considered by the jury in connection with other evidence," that there must be in addition to such possession "shortly after the commission of the crime, corroborating circumstances, acts, conduct, or declarations of the defendant tending to show his guilt," and that "failure of the accused to account for such possession upon a theory inconsistent with his guilt of the offense charged, or to show that the possession was honestly obtained, is itself a circumstance tending to show guilt." See, also, People v. Johnson, 85 Cal.App.2d 240, 244, 245, 192 P.2d 483; People v. Arbaugh, 82 Cal.App.2d 971, 987, 988, 187 P.2d 866; People v. Azbill, 134 Cal.App. 616, 619, 25 P.2d 1010.

[4, 5] But it does not necessarily follow that error in this regard requires a reversal of the trial court. The Constitution declares that "No judgment shall be set aside, or new trial granted, in any case, on the ground of misdirection of the jury, * * * unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice." Const., Art. VI, § 4½. Where the evidence of guilt is clear and convincing and it appears that a different verdict would not otherwise have been probable, ordinarily a judgment of conviction will not be reversed solely for error in or the failure to give an instruction. People v. Kelso, 25 Cal.2d 848, 853, 155 P.2d 819. Similarly, an incomplete instruction is not deemed ground for reversal if upon examination of the entire record it appears to the court improbable that the jury would have given a different verdict but for the error. People v. Bender, 27 Cal.2d 164, 177, 163 P.2d 8; People v. Koenig, 29 Cal.2d 87, 93, 173 P.2d 1. We have examined the entire record, including the evidence, in the instant case and are convinced that no prejudicial error occurred, and that the same verdict would have been returned had the instruction been complete, clear, and correct in every respect.

The failure of the trial court upon its own motion to instruct the jury that evidence of defendant's prior conviction should be considered only as affecting defendant's credibility and not for other purposes, did not constitute error, certainly not prejudicial error.

[6] It is the duty of the trial court in a criminal case to instruct the jury of its own motion, charging it fully and fairly upon the law relating to the facts of the case. People v. Warren, 16 Cal.2d 103, 116, 104 P.2d 1024; People v. Putnam, 20 Cal.2d 885, 890, 129 P.2d 367.

[7-9] It does not appear that the facts of the instant case required the giving of any such cautionary instruction. The only testimony in any way bearing upon a prior conviction was that voluntarily given by the defendant. Upon direct examination he said, "they will bring it up, the prosecution will, pertaining to, we will say, a record from San Quentin. I doubt if I am the first one that ever went, or the last one. I was there for using a car without the owner's consent." Prior to taking the witness stand, he volunteered an explanation of his possession of certain pencils, stating, "I stole them from San Quentin, I know where they come from, I didn't steal them, took them with me, they had a whole batch, I filled my pockets up * * *." He was not cross-examined as to either of these statements, nor do we find elsewhere in the entire record any comment concerning or any reference to a prior conviction except that (1) the information charged a prior, and (2) upon arraignment defendant admitted the prior conviction. The record discloses that after the jury was impaneled the information was read to the jury and the jury was informed that the defendant entered a plea of not guilty. It is presumed, in the absence of anything in the record to the contrary, that in reading the information to the jury the clerk observed the requirements of sections 1025 and 1093 of the Penal Code and omitted all thereof that related to the previous conviction. There is a presumption of regularity of the proceedings. People v. Hickok, 96 Cal.App.2d 621, 216 P.2d 140; People v. Gonzales, 88 Cal.App. 245, 247, 262 p. 1115.

This is quite unlike People v. Blanks, 67 Cal.App.2d 132, 153 P.2d 449, upon which defendant relies. In that case the defendant, while on the witness stand, was asked as to certain prior convictions and admitted that he had been convicted of burglary and of receiving stolen property in other states. He requested, and was refused, an instruction that the admission of testimony with reference to prior convictions was for the sole purpose of impeachment and that such evidence was to be considered only in relation to the credibility of the defendant as a witness and as to the weight which should be given to his testimony. This request was made after a juror stated he did not understand a certain instruction "about the testimony being impeached, if they had been convicted of a felony previously." 67 Cal. App.2d at pages 136-137, 153 P.2d at page 452. The appellate court deemed the giving of the requested instruction "an important matter in view of the appellant's admissions as to prior convictions and the meager nature of the evidence connecting him with the crime." 67 Cal.App.2d at page 137, 153 P.2d at page 452. The instant case is more like People v. Owens, 79 Cal.App.2d 290, 299, 179 P.2d 401, in which no request was made for such an instruction and the evidence of prior conviction was offered by defendant as a part of his case in chief, in view of which it was held that the defendant should not be heard to complain. It cannot be the law that when a prior conviction is charged in the information, admitted upon arraignment, and never mentioned in the presence of the jury by the prosecution or the court, a defendant by voluntarily testifying or commenting concerning it can cast a duty upon the court of its own motion to give an instruction concerning it.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and BRAY, J., concur.

98 Cal.App.2d 755

WESTWOOD TEMPLE et al. v. EMANUEL CENTER.

Civ. 17563.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 1, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 16, 1950.

Hearing Denied Sept. 25, 1950.

Westwood Temple, a corporation, and another sued Emanuel Center, a corporation, also known as Temple Emanuel of Beverly Hills and Westwood, for specific performance of a contract to convey five lots to plaintiff corporation. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Henry M. Willis and Arnold Praeger, JJ., for plaintiffs, defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that the consideration passing to defendant for the deed was adequate, that the contract was not void as made for the purpose of distributing a substantial portion of defendant's assets to a small minority of the members of its congregation in an illegal manner, and that proof of allegations of an amendment to defendant's answer for the purpose of establishing that defendant held the lots in trust for all such members was properly excluded.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and error ⇐1009(2)

In suit for specific performance of contract to convey realty, trial court's findings, supported by substantial evidence, that contract was just and reasonable, that its purpose was good, and that defendant received adequate consideration for realty cannot be upset on appeal from decree for plaintiffs.

2. Specific performance ⇐49(2), 121(2)

In suit for specific performance of contract to convey realty, necessity of adequate consideration for deed does not mean that value of things be given in exchange for realty must measure up to defendant's appraisement, but merely requires that consideration be just and fair under all circumstances and that its sufficiency be addressed solely to trial court's sound discretion and be supported by substantial evidence.

3. Specific performance ⇐49(2)

Adequacy of consideration for contract to convey realty, as required to authorize decree for specific performance thereof, must be determined as of date of contract.

4. Religious societies ⇐29

Compromise settlement of controversies between a rabbi's followers and adversaries in his congregation by dismissal of action, brought by some of such followers against incorporated synagogue and certain directors and members thereof for judgment declaring parties' rights, was a valid consideration for corporation's contract to convey city lots owned by it to another ecclesiastical corporation to be organized by rabbi and his adherents.

5. Religious societies ⇐12(5)

Dismissal of action, brought by some members of incorporated synagogue against corporation and certain directors and members thereof, for judgment declaring parties' rights, pursuant to compromise settlement of controversies between its rabbi's followers, including plaintiffs, and adversaries in congregation, was act of corporation, though signed by its attorney, and conclusive against collateral attack in suit for specific performance of corporation's contract to convey lots owned by it to another religious corporation to be organized by rabbi and his adherents. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 283, 1908.

6. Religious societies ⇐29

An incorporated synagogue, taking over and retaining all benefits awarded it under its contract to convey certain lots to another such corporation as consideration for settlement of all controversies between followers and adversaries of promisor's rabbi and making no offer to restore such benefits to rabbi, waived all claims of inadequacy thereof as consideration for deed.

7. Appeal and error ⇐169

An argument first made on appeal is not entitled to consideration.

8. Religious societies ⇐29

While plaintiff in derivative suit on corporation's behalf stands in relation of guardian ad litem and disposal of suit must be approved by court, plaintiffs' attorney's dismissal of action by members of incorporated synagogue against corporation and divers directors and other members thereof for judgment declaring parties' rights constituted consideration for corporation's contract to convey realty to another such corporation, pursuant to compromise settlement of controversies between followers and adversaries of promisor's rabbi, as against contention that plaintiffs could not effect dismissal and compromise of action by their ex parte act without court's approval, where judge, participating as member of three-judge court in hearing of one plaintiff's application for receiver, ordered dismissal.

9. Religious societies ⇐29

Compromise settlement of controversies between rabbi's followers and adversaries in his congregation by resolution of conference of incorporated congregation's directors, committee of Jewish community council, such rabbi, and lawyers of parties to action by some members of congregation against corporation directors and other members for judgment declaring parties' rights, that corporation should keep its synagogue and transfer certain lots to council for conveyance to nonprofit corporation for religious purposes and that rabbi should resign and release all his claims against corporation and its members, constituted adequate consideration for corporation's contract to convey lots.

10. Religious societies ⇐29

A religious corporation's contract to convey city lots to nonprofit corporation, to be organized by promisor's rabbi and his adherents among members of his congregation, as consideration for settlement of all controversies between his followers and adversaries therein, was not void as made for purpose of distributing substantial portion of promisor's assets to small minority of its members in manner forbidden by law, as no dissolution was involved, contract was not a distribution of assets, and transfer was to be made to another religious corporation for conduct of worship according to same faith. Corporation Code, §§ 5000, 9800.

11. Pleading ⇐258(4)

In suit for specific performance of religious corporation's contract to convey city lots to nonprofit corporation, to be organized by promisor's rabbi and his adherents in its congregation, for religious purposes, in consideration of settlement of all controversies between his followers and adversaries in congregation, court properly refused promisor's request to file, and offer of proof under, amended answer, alleging that promisor held lots in trust for all members of congregation and hence had no power to convey them, after plaintiffs had introduced their evidence and defendant had made progress in making its proof.

12. Appeal and error ⇐959(3)
Pleading ⇐236(3)

Allowance or rejection of amended pleading, offered during trial, is within discretion of trial court, whose ruling disallowing amendment will not be disturbed on appeal, in absence of showing that it thwarted justice.

13. Religious societies ⇐20

A nonprofit ecclesiastical corporation has power, under statute, to dispose of all real property held by it in fee ownership. Corporation Code, § 9501.

14. Religious societies ⇐20
Trusts ⇐63¾

A nonprofit ecclesiastical corporation, purchasing city lots, to which title was taken in name of one who executed personal note secured by trust deed and transferred title to corporation, which reduced balance due on purchase price by monthly payments and discount to sum which certain members of congregation borrowed to pay off trust deed, after which note was liquidated with sums taken from building fund and corporation's general fund, held lots in outright ownership, not in resulting trust for all members of its congregation, and hence had power to convey them to another such corporation. Civ.Code, § 593; Corporation Code, § 9501.

Harry G. Sadicoff, Los Angeles, Henry S. Dottenheim, Beverly Hills, of counsel, for appellant.

Zuckerman, Edmunds & Francis, Arthur E. Edmunds, all of Los Angeles, Myron

W. Curzon, Los Angeles, and Norman Pittluck, Beverly Hills, of counsel, for respondents.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Appeal from a decree of specific performance of a written agreement made by an ecclesiastical body with its retiring rabbi. The contract was executed December 19, 1947. By its terms appellant agreed to convey five lots situate on Comstock Avenue in Westwood, a residential area of Los Angeles, as a consideration for the settlement of all controversies between the two factions in Emanuel and for the dismissal of a lawsuit which had been instituted by one Cytron and others in the superior court against appellant and certain of its members for a declaration of the rights of the parties. It was provided also that a nonprofit corporation should be organized on behalf of the rabbi and his adherents; that it should take title to the Comstock lots as soon as 150 members of Emanuel had resigned and joined the ranks of the Westwood congregation.

In order to reconcile the factions of Emanuel and to effect a settlement of the Cytron case, the Community Relations Committee of the Los Angeles Jewish Community Council[1] participated in the conference of the Cytron litigants and their attorneys. Although a settlement was agreed upon and was embodied in the contract here involved appellant refused to perform. All efforts of respondents and the Community Relations Committee to induce performance having been rejected, this action was commenced and resulted in a judgment against Emanuel, whence this appeal.

As grounds for reversal appellants assert:

(1) Respondents did not prove that the consideration for the contract was just and reasonable;

(2) The contract was illegal and void, having been made for the purpose of distributing a substantial portion of the assets of the corporation to a small minority of its members in an illegal manner;

(3) The court erred in excluding proof of the allegations of the "Amendment to the Answer" for the purpose of establishing that Emanuel held the Westwood property in trust for all members of the congregation.

Contract Was Just

[1] The trial court found the contract to be just and reasonable; its purpose good; its means of adjusting the several involved controversies to be reasonable and appellant to have received adequate consideration for the property. Such finding being abundantly supported by substantial evidence cannot be upset except by a repudiation of long established usages in appellate procedure. Haddock v. Knapp, 171 Cal. 59, 62, 151 P. 1140; Wilson v. White, 161 Cal. 453, 465, 119 P. 895. Conceding the property to be conveyed was worth $75,000, the rights surrendered by the rabbi were of no mean value. Their potential worth exceeded the last named sum. Had the plaintiffs prevailed in the Cytron case Mr. Trattner would have been made secure in his life tenure as rabbi of Emanuel at an annual salary of $15,000 with privileges that supplemented his income and opened a wider field for service. Also, he might have recovered by appropriate action the value of the slanderous utterances of his assailants. He would have been enabled to prosecute his spiritual and intellectual pursuits in peace and would have had to endure no more the taunts and resentments of his enemies at the altar. Even though the Cytron case was a representative suit instituted on behalf of Emanuel, none of the foregoing advantages to the rabbi would have been depreciated by reason thereof.

[2–6] The necessity for an adequate consideration in a specific performance action does not mean that the value of the things to be given in exchange for the property to be conveyed must measure up to the appraisement placed upon them by the defendant. The doctrine merely requires that such consideration be just and fair under all the circumstances and that its sufficiency be addressed solely to the sound discretion and determination of the trial court and be supported by substantial evidence. Cushing v. Levi, 117 Cal.App. 94, 102, 3 P.2d 958. Its adequacy must be determined as of the date of the contract. O'Connell v. Lampe, 206 Cal. 282, 285, 274 P. 336; Baran v. Goldberg, 86 Cal.App. 2d 506, 510, 194 P.2d 765. Even the dismissal of the Cytron action was a compromise of the controversies between the rabbi and his followers on the one hand and Emanuel and the rabbi's adversaries on the other. Such settlement was a valid consideration for the contract. Rohrbacher v. Aitken, 145 Cal. 485, 488, 78 P. 1054; Silver v. Shemanski, 89 Cal.App.2d 520, 531, 201 P.2d 418; Hart v. Kanaye Nagasawa, 218 Cal. 685, 695, 24 P.2d 815. Moreover, the dismissal, though signed by its attorney, was the act of Emanuel (Code Civ.Proc. sec. 283) and is conclusive against collateral attack. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1908; Woodward v. Superior Court, 95 Cal. 272, 30 P. 535; Lieberman v. Superior Court, 72 Cal.App. 18, 34, 236 P. 570. But since appellant took over all the benefits awarded it by the contract it thereby waived all claims of their inadequacy. Peters v. Binnard, 219 Cal. 141, 150, 25 P.2d 834. Moreover, it has retained them all, made no offer to restore them to the rabbi and by reason of their nature restoration is impossible.

1. The Council is composed of representatives of over 300 Jewish organizations —as an overall Jewish group to carry on certain activities for the general good of Los Angeles Jewery. It maintains as its public relations arm "The Community Relations Committee of the Los Angeles Jewish Community Council," referred to herein as C R C.

More About the Consideration

Temple Emanuel is a conspicuous center of Jewish worship in Beverly Hills on Wilshire boulevard, the main thoroughfare leading westward from the heart of the city of Los Angeles. It was organized in 1939 by 25 families with Mr. Trattner as its rabbi. He was then employed for the duration of his life to devote his entire time to the welfare of Emanuel to the exclusion of all other matters except literary, academic and lecture pursuits when not occupied with the labors of his pastorate. Such employment was pursuant to a section of Emanuel's by-laws which gave Trattner life tenure. Smooth sailing and pacific seas attended the course of the good ship Emanuel for about seven years. Then a tempest rose. Critics of the rabbi were emboldened to denounce him as not qualified. Discontent grew apace with the congregation which by 1947 was comprised of 650 families. The directors attempted to remove their pastor and the entire Jewish community of Los Angeles was disturbed. Some questioned the validity of the synagogue's agreements with their rabbi; some accused him of having accepted gifts from members, forbidden by his contract of employment; others challenged his authority and denied his right to act as Rabbi of Emanuel. Upon such issues the congregation became divided into hostile camps with his opponents bending every effort to discourage and discredit him. False charges were circulated against the rabbi by officers of the congregation to the pastor's detriment. They accused him of being insulting and domineering to some members; of having been gracious to those he thought wealthy; of having ignored those he thought poor; of having solicited members for gifts; of having fought a member; of having failed to perform his duty as rabbi; of having required some members to pay more dues than were required of others; of having caused 50 per cent of the members to resign. Some asserted that he had never been ordained pursuant to the canons of any branch of the Jewish faith. And for the purpose of effectuating their endeavors to remove him from his position at the head of the congregation in October, 1947, certain members employed private detectives to prevent the rabbi from attending the regular services and by physical force undertook to prevent him from entering the Temple. Failing thus to bar his entrance, they changed the locks on the doors and thereby prevented his entering until interrupted by an order of court in the Cytron action.

Basing their complaint upon such words and acts of those who had participated in the opposition to the rabbi, one Samuel D. Cytron and five other members instituted their action in the superior court for a declaration of their rights in the premises.

The settlement and compromise of that controversy formed the consideration for the contract here in suit. The Los Angeles Jewish Community Council having attempted a mediation of the internecine strife, brought about a meeting of Emanuel's directors at which the president presided, a committee of the Community Council were present as well at Trattner and the lawyers of the litigants in the Cytron case. The purpose of the meeting was to effect a settlement of all controversies which had agitated the Jewish community of Los Angeles and which had culminated in the Cytron case to the dismay of Trattner's enemies. The contract was the fruitage of such conference. Those participating seemed to have striven with a unanimity to silence forever the hostile contest which had raged. In the course of the deliberations one of the C R C committee in an attempt to establish a basis for compromise asked the attorney for Emanuel whether the latter would give the Temple to Trattner. The definite and emphatic negative was followed by an offer to give the Comstock lots to Trattner for the new synagogue and its communicants. Upon the acceptance of such offer, a resolution was unamimously adopted by the conference that (1) Emanuel keep the Wilshire synagogue; the Comstock lots be transferred to the Community Council to be by it conveyed to a nonprofit corporation to be used solely for religious purposes; (2) Trattner resign from Emanuel and release every conceivable claim against it and its members for libel and slander or for any other cause; (3) Emanuel's attorney prepare a draft of the contract with the assistance of Trattner's counsel, all points of disagreement to be referred to a committee of three specified members of the conference; (4) the completed draft be submitted to the directors of Emanuel for approval and authorization to execute the contract and any other document necessary to "carry out the letter and spirit of the agreement."

The adoption of that resolution was the effectual settlement of all controversies. However, in the course of the preparation of the draft the parties agreed that as a condition precedent to the final transfer of the Comstock lots a minimum of 150 members of Emanuel must resign and join Westwood Temple prior to April 1, 1948. The filing of the articles of incorporation of Westwood Temple on December 30, 1947, had been preceded by the execution of the final draft of the contract by all the necessary officers, by Trattner and Westwood and by the attorneys of the parties. That ceremony was followed by the formal dismissal of the Cytron case. The C R C of the Community Council having certified that 150 members had withdrawn from Emanuel and joined Westwood, respondents demanded conveyance of the Comstock lots. A deed was refused by Emanuel on the grounds that its officers were not authorized to execute the contract "as drafted" and it had never been approved by Emanuel's directors.

[7, 8] Appellant contends that inasmuch as the Cytron case was a derivative suit, instituted by members of the Emanuel congregation against the corporation and divers directors and members thereof the filing of the dismissal of the action by the plaintiffs' attorneys was meaningless and constituted no consideration for the contract. The basic theory of such contention is that by virtue of its derivative nature the plaintiff's could not by their ex parte act effect a dismissal and a compromise of the action without the court's approval, citing Whitten v. Dabney, 171 Cal. 621, 630, 154 P. 312; Spellacy v. Superior Court, 23 Cal.App.2d 142, 147, 72 P.2d 262; Russell v. Weyand, 5 Cal.App.2d 259, 260, 42 P.2d 381. Such argument appears for the first time on appeal and therefore is not entitled to consideration. However, in order that all claims may be disposed of, answer is now made to appellant's proposition. While it is true, as the last cited cases hold, that the plaintiff in a derivative suit on behalf of a corporation stands in the relation of a guardian ad litem and that a disposal of the action must be protected by the court's approval, there is no ground for complaint on that account. Pursuant to the order for dismissal signed by the attorneys of the parties, Judge Mosk ordered the dismissal. As a member of a three-judge court he had participated in the hearing of the application of Cytron for a receiver and was therefore cognizant of the significance of the issues and of the meaning of a dismissal of the action.

[9] The foregoing narrative should suffice to establish the adequacy of the consideration passing to Emanuel for a deed to the Comstock lots. It is manifest that from the recited facts appellant's advantages were enlarged by its undisturbed occupancy of Temple Emanuel. The happiness of its members has necessarily increased by a riddance of their chief annoyance. They are freed forever from his claims for damages and from the unsavory notoriety created by the prosecution of the Cytron action.

On the other hand, what did respondents under the contract receive for their releases and their dismissal of the Cytron case? By agreement duly authorized and executed they were to get the Comstock property to be held in trust for religious uses. If used otherwise it must revert to Emanuel. The value of the lots so held was not by any means equivalent to the value of their unrestricted use. Their ownership and improvement of the lots by Westwood Temple is itself a benefit to every sincere follower of Israel for as a result of the conveyance a vacant property in one of the choicest communities on earth will be transformed into a center for Hebraic culture for the spread of rabbinical influences and for the extension of the morality and teachings of Moses and Elijah. The charters of both Emanuel and Westwood declare identical purposes.

The court below found on all issues as contended by respondents. Also, it determined that all the charges made by the members of Emanuel against the rabbi were false and slanderous. Such finding enhances the value of the concessions and releases made by the rabbi for the contract.

The Contract Is Not Void

[10] Appellant contends that the contract is void in that it was made for the purpose of distributing a substantial portion of Emanuel's assets to a small minority of its members in a manner forbidden by law. There is no basis, factual or legal, for such contention. A dissolution is not involved. The agreement to convey the Comstock lots is based upon a valid consideration advanced on behalf of an entirely separate corporate entity. In no sense is it a distribution of assets; hence neither section 9800 [2] nor section 5000 of the Corporation Code is in point. Neither is section 824 of the same code applicable. That statute inhibits the distribution of its assets among its shareholders except as provided by law. The transfer to be made by appellant is not only for an adequate consideration but it is to go to another religious corporation to be used for the conduct of worship according to the Jewish faith and in harmony with the program of appellant. Thereby the transferor itself gained the advantage of converting its waste places into a center of light and learning. The case of O'Dea v. Hollywood Cemetery Association, 154 Cal. 53, 97 P. 1, is not pertinent. It involved an attempt to divide and distribute the corporate capital. Such act was forbidden by Civil Code section 309.

No Error in Excluding Proof of the Amendment to the Answer

[11] After the trial had proceeded several days appellant offered an amendment to its answer for filing. The tardy pleading in substance alleged: defendant is a nonprofit corporation; it is not within its powers to enter into a contract to convey the Comstock lots; it purchased the lots for $73,750, paid it all except $45,000 which amount it requested its members and friends to pay so that appellant might build a synagogue wherein to engage in the ministration of Jewish rites and to teach the Jewish faith; to accomplish such purpose appellant established a "building fund" with which to pay the balance on the Comstock lots and erect an edifice; many persons paid money into the fund to be used as promised; a special bank account was opened for the purpose of receiving and

2. "A nonprofit corporation may dispose of all or substantially all of its assets, or may be wound up or dissolved, or both, in the same manner and with the same effect as a stock corporation, under the General Corporation Law."

holding the building fund to which was subscribed in excess of $50,000 and prior to December 18, 1947, the sum of $36,000 had been paid into the fund; such sum was used by defendant in paying the balance on the Comstock lots; the persons who subscribed to the building fund would not have done so except for the purposes announced by defendant; the money was subscribed and paid for the sole and exclusive purpose of clearing the Comstock property and erecting a building thereon and not for the purpose of obtaining a dismissal of the Cytron action or of settling any litigation against defendant; therefore the conveyance of such lots to Westwood would constitute a breach and violation of the purposes for which payments to the "building fund" were made.

The trial judge allowed the amendment to be filed solely "for the purpose of judicially acting upon it * * * of testing out its validity."

In the first place appellant by such a pleading attempted to intervene on behalf of other unnamed parties who evidently were not concerned about the disposition of the Comstock lots, or if so, cared too little to present their grievances. But, conceding the right of a defendant to file such a plea, the court was, under the circumstances disclosed, warranted in refusing a request to file it or in denying the offer of proof under it. The respondents had introduced their own evidence and rested and appellant had made progress in making its proof. To allow appellant under the circumstances to raise an utterly new issue such as that contained in its "amendment to the answer" could justifiably have been charged as an abuse of discretion. The complaint was filed July 9, 1948, after appellant had provoked the action by a flagrant repudiation of its promises while holding on to the entire consideration it had received. It must be deemed already to have researched the problems to be presented by the threatened suit. The trial commenced on March 15, 1949, and the amendment was not offered until seven days had passed. No valid reason is proposed and none has been ascertained why appellant should have been so favored. Diligence is a duty of one who creates a controversy and readiness to go forward at all times is an indispensable virtue.

[12] The allowance or rejection of an amendment offered in the midst of a trial is within the discretion of the trial court. Its ruling thereon will not be disturbed in the absence of a showing that the disallowance of the pleading thwarted justice. Neher v. Kauffman, 197 Cal. 674, 686, 242 P. 713; Salmon v. Rathjens, 152 Cal. 290, 296, 92 P. 733; Burr v. Pacific Indemnity Company, 56 Cal.App.2d 352, 360, 133 P.2d 24; Sullivan v. Richardson, 119 Cal.App. 367, 370, 6 P.2d 567; Estate of Goldman, 86 Cal.App. 125, 129, 260 P. 586; Johnson v. Johnson, 134 Cal.App. 460, 461, 25 P.2d 538.

The Amendment Is Considered

[13] There is nothing sacrosanct in the proposed amendment. It makes the archaic claim that Emanuel held the Comstock lots in trust for all the members of its congregation; that by virtue of the nature of an ecclesiastical corporation it is a trustee and each member is a beneficiary, citing Wheelock v. First Presbyterean Church, 119 Cal. 477, 483, 51 P. 841; Bomar v. Mount Olive M. B. Church, 92 Cal.App. 618, 628, 268 P. 665; Baker v. Ducker, 79 Cal. 365, 373, 21 P. 764; Los Angeles Holiness Band v. Spires, 126 Cal. 541, 545, 58 P. 1049. The cited authorities do not apply. They were all decided when former section 598, Civil Code, forbade a religious corporation to sell its property without first having obtained an order of court authorizing the sale. Giffen v. Christ's Church, 48 Cal.App. 151, 154, 191 P. 718.[3] In 1931 the General Non-profit Corporation Law was enacted providing that every corporation may buy, sell, lease, mortgage and deal in real and personal property in the same manner that a natural person may. See Civ. Code, sec. 593. At the time of the Wheelock decision section 593 provided for the administration of the temporalities and for the management of the property and estate of any church; any church may become an incorporation. The court held that, 119 Cal. at page 483, 51 P. at page 843, "incorporation [of religious bodies] is only permitted as a convenience to assist in the conduct of the temporalities of the church." Such limitation upon the powers of the nonprofit corporation was removed by the corporation act of 1931. Section 9501 of the Corporation Code (1947) authorizes every nonprofit corporation to "convey, exchange, lease, mortgage, * * * transfer upon trust, or otherwise dispose of all property, real or personal." That statute leaves no doubt of the power of a nonprofit corporation to dispose of all real property held in fee ownership.

3. "The nonprofit corporation law as enacted in 1931 * * * extended and made more general the provisions for incorporation and increased flexibility of organization by optional provisions which were permitted to be included in the articles or in the by-laws. It provides that nonprofit corporations may amend their articles, sell their assets, and be dissolved or wound up in the same manner and with the same effect as stock corporations under the General Corporation Law. * * *" Ballantine & Sterling, California Corporation Laws, 1949 edition, section 418.

[14] Reverting now to appellant's contention made by the offer of the "Amendment to the Answer," the facts otherwise developed show that the Comstock lots were purchased by Emanuel in February, 1946, the title taken in the name of one Gold. The sum of $28,750 was the down payment, and a trust deed secured Gold's note for $45,000. The latter transferred title to Emanuel which by monthly payments and a discount reduced the balance due to $40,000 in August, 1946. At that time certain members of the congregation borrowed $40,000 on their personal note and paid off the trust deed. A drive was then made for a building fund whereby $36,245 was collected. This was supplemented with sums taken from the Temple's general fund and thereby the personal note of $40,000 was liquidated. The only document signed by the contributors to the building fund contained their agreement to subscribe the designated sum and these words: "in consideration of the subscription of others." In making its offer of proof of that writing and the names of the persons who subscribed, appellant's counsel stated that they "were told that their money would be used in connection with" the Comstock lots. Thus there was no proof made and none was offered that the Comstock lots were held on an express trust. No writing of Emanuel appears anywhere promising to hold the property in trust. No transfer was shown to have been made conveying it in trust. On the contrary the proof is clear that the lots were held in outright ownership by Emanuel which fact appellant had already admitted by its answer. As proof that the lots were not held in a resulting trust they were purchased with Emanuel's money and subsequent contributors made unconditional gifts.

Judgment affirmed; also order denying motion to disallow costs affirmed.

McCOMB and WILSON, JJ., concur.

98 Cal.App.2d 605

KERRIGAN v. MALOOF.
Civ. 14217.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

July 26, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 25, 1950.

Hearing Denied Sept. 21, 1950.

John F. Kerrigan, as referee in partition, brought action under statute against Zerefa Maloof, a defaulting bidder, to recover difference between the sale price as bid by defendant and confirmed by the court, and the price obtained on a second partition sale, wherein the defendant cross-complained for the amount of her deposit. An order granting a new trial upon insufficiency of evidence and errors in the law after entry of a judgment for plaintiff on a directed verdict was entered by the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, Melvyn I. Cronin, J., and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that trial court was in error when it struck the defenses involved from defendant's pleadings on ground that such issues were res judicata and properly granted the new trial because of an error in law at the trial.

Order affirmed.

1. Judgment ⇐619, 713(2)

Defenses and causes of action between same parties once presented and considered cannot be again asserted in another action without a violation of the principles of "res judicata", and such rule includes not only all matters directly decided in the first action but also all matters in issue that could have been or might have been decided.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Res Judicata".

2. Partition ⇐104(2)

A defaulting purchaser at a partition sale cannot be held for the loss occasioned by a resale at a lower price when the conditions of the resale are different from those prevailing at the original sale. Code Civ.Proc. § 785.

3. Judgment ⇐735

Prior adjudications that original partition sale was valid, that successful bidder was bound by terms of that sale, that resale after bidder wrongfully refused to carry out her contract was properly noticed and conducted, and that any legal loss caused by the resale should be recovered from successful bidder, were not "res judicata" of issue as to whether terms of the two sales were substantially identical, so as to render successful bidder liable for difference in amount of her bid and amount received on the resale. Code Civ.Proc. § 785.

4. Partition ⇐35

The statute providing that no deficiency judgment shall lie in any event after any sale of real property for failure of purchaser to complete his contract of sale, or under a deed of trust, or mortgage, given to secure payment of balance of purchase price of real property does not impliedly repeal specific provisions of statute directly authorizing referees to bring action against defaulting purchaser in a partition proceeding for loss occasioned on the resale. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 580b, 785; Pol. Code, §§ 4481, 4482.

5. Statutes ⇐158

Repeals of statutes by implication may occur under certain circumstances, but such repeals by implication are never favored.

6. Partition ⇐35

The evils sought to be remedied and purposes sought to be effected by statute providing that no deficiency judgment shall lie in any event after any sale of real property for failure of purchaser to complete his contract of sale, or under a deed of trust, or mortgage given to secure payment of balance of purchase price of real property must be considered in determining whether such statute impliedly repealed specific provisions of statute directly authorizing referees to bring action against a defaulting purchaser in a partition proceeding for loss occasioned on the resale. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 580b, 785; Pol.Code, §§ 4481, 4482.

7. Mortgages ⇐375, 559(2)
Vendor and purchaser ⇐291

The purpose of statute providing that no deficiency judgment shall lie in any event after any sale of real property for failure of the purchaser to complete his contract of sale, or under a deed of trust, or mortgage, given to secure payment of balance of purchase of real property was to prevent creditors from buying in property for a nominal sum, after debtor has defaulted, and then holding the defaulting debtor for a large deficiency judgment. Code Civ.Proc. § 580b.

Knight, Boland & Riordan, F. Eldred Boland, John H. Riordan, F. J. Kilmartin, Burton L. Walsh, Oswald A. Hunt, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Leo R. Friedman, San Francisco, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

This is an action brought under section 785 of the Code of Civil Procedure by Kerrigan, referee in partition, against Zerefa Maloof, a defaulting bidder, to recover the difference between the sale price as bid by Maloof and confirmed by the court, and the price obtained on a second partition sale. Maloof cross-complained for $8,000, the amount of her deposit. At the close of the trial before a jury the trial court directed a verdict in favor of Kerrigan on all issues, and judgment was entered accordingly. Thereafter, on motion of Maloof, a new trial was granted "on insufficiency of evidence and errors in law." By the same minute order the court provided: "Orders striking out certain defenses and portions of cross-complaint set aside." From this minute order Kerrigan appeals.

The motion for a directed verdict and the motion to strike out certain defenses and a portion of the cross-complaint were granted on the theory that the basic issues involved were res judicata by reason of this court's decision in Hirschberg v. Oser, 82 Cal.App.2d 282, 186 P.2d 53. Maloof was the appellant in that action. The facts of that case, as set forth in the opinion, are as follows, 82 Cal.App.2d at page 283, 186 P.2d at page 54:

"Appellant was the successful bidder at the referee's sale of certain real property in the above entitled partition action. After the property had been sold to her, she refused to pay the purchase price, claiming misrepresentations to her by her own attorney. The validity of the sale is in nowise attacked. She contends that the proceedings for confirmation and subsequent proceedings are invalid.

"The sale took place July 3, 1946. On July 10 a 'Return and Account of Sale of Referee in Partition' was filed. After reciting the notices given of the sale, the proceedings at the time of sale the fact that the bid of appellant in the sum of $75,000 was the highest and best bid, that appellant deposited with the referee the sum of $8,000 of such bid, the fact that the property which is therein described was sold to appellant as the highest and best bidder, the return prays that after hearing the court, 'if it so determines, approve said sale and order said Referee to make a deed conveying said property upon the payment of the balance of the purchase price.' "

The opinion then points out that, in the manner provided by law, on July 20, 1946, the sale to Maloof was confirmed; that "Up to this point, the appellant was apparently satisfied with the sale and proceedings, and made no objections thereto. In fact, her attorney was present at the hearing, evidently for the purpose of making certain that the sale was confirmed to her." 82 Cal.App.2d at page 284, 186 P.2d at page 54. The opinion continues 82 Cal.App.2d at page 284, 186 P.2d at page 54: "On August 29 appellant filed a 'Petition to Vacate Sale and Relieve Bidder and Return Money' in which she asked that the sale be vacated because of alleged misrepresentations by her own attorney. The hearing of this petition was had on September 11 and denied by the court. The same day appellant filed a 'Dismissal Without Prejudice' of that petition."

On October 8, 1946, there was filed by the trial court a combination order confirming sale and a final decree in partition. The order recites that the property was sold to Maloof for $75,000, that the sale was legally made and conducted, and then confirmed the sale and ordered the referee to convey the property to Maloof upon receiving the balance of the purchase price.

The opinion continues, 82 Cal.App.2d at page 285, 186 P.2d at page 55:

"On October 25 there was filed a 'Supplemental Report of Referee and Petition for Instructions.' Notice of its filing and the date set for hearing was given to all parties, including appellant. This report set forth the fact that the referee on October 11 had tendered to appellant a properly executed deed of the property purchased by her at the sale and that she had refused to accept it and had notified him that she did not intend to complete the sale. It asked the court to order a resale, and to authorize the referee to recover from appellant any loss that might be occasioned by the resale, and asked for further instructions.

"At the hearing of this petition the court instructed the referee to resell and to retain appellant's deposit, and institute suit to collect from her any loss from the resale. On November 18, after notice given, appellant moved the court to 'Vacate and/or Modify Order of Resale.' This motion was denied by minute order on November 27.

"After reselling there was filed a 'Report and Return of Referee in Partition on Resale of Premises,' in which the referee set forth the proceedings by which he resold the property for $55,000. Notice of motion to confirm this report was given to appellant and all the parties. On December 18 appellant filed 'Objections to Confirmation of Resale of Real Estate.' On December 20 the court made and entered its order overruling appellant's objections and confirming the resale of the real estate. On December 27 the court signed and on December 28 filed an 'Order Denying Objections to Confirmation of Resale of Real Estate.'

"Appellant has appealed from (1) the final decree in partition; (2) the order denying the motion to vacate and/or modify the order of sale; (3) the order denying the objections to confirmation of the resale; and (4) the order confirming the resale."

This court affirmed all the orders appealed from. Among other things, it was held that the sale to Maloof had been validly confirmed, and that she was in default when she failed to pay the purchase price and to carry out the terms of the contract.

As pointed out above, Maloof's bid was $75,000, while on the resale the referee was able to secure but $55,000. Maloof had made an $8,000 deposit. Thus, the loss, occasioned by Maloof's default, was $12,000, plus $43 costs. The present action was commenced by the referee on April 22, 1948. The complaint sets forth the history of the case substantially as set forth above and asks for judgment for $12,043, with interest from the date of default. Maloof answered, denying the material allegations of the complaint, set forth some affirmative defenses, and cross-complained for the $8,000 deposit. On motion of the referee the trial court struck from Maloof's answer certain paragraphs which denied that the terms of the second sale were the same as those of the original sale, and further denied that the referee had suffered any damage by the failure of Maloof to pay the price bid by her. Certain paragraphs of the cross-complaint were also stricken on motion. These paragraphs alleged that Maloof's attorney was unauthorized to make a bid of $75,000 at the original sale, that no loss was incurred by the owners of the property by reason of the default because those who bid at the resale were part owners of the property sought to be partitioned, and because at the time of resale the property was reasonably worth $75,000 and should not have been sold for $55,000, and because the conditions and terms of the resale differed from those of the original sale. These motions to strike were granted on the theory that all such defenses already had been determined adversely to Maloof in the prior actions.

What issues are res judicata?

There can be no doubt but that, by the prior decision of this court, most of the issues sought to be raised by Maloof, and stricken by the trial court, have already been decided adversely to Maloof. The prior decision adjudicated the validity of the first sale, determined that that sale had been legally made and conducted, determined that Maloof had been the highest bidder at that sale and had bid $75,000, and deposited $8,000 on the purchase price, and that this bid had been validly confirmed by the court. It also finally determined that a proper tender of a deed had been made by the referee, but that Maloof had refused to accept it and defaulted in the purchase. It also finally determined that upon petition of the referee the court instructed the referee to resell, to retain the $8,000, and to institute suit to collect from Maloof any loss from the resale. The validity of the resale has also been adjudicated.

[1] The point need not be labored that defenses and causes of action between the same parties once presented and considered cannot be again asserted in another action without a violation of the principles of res judicata. This includes not only all matters directly decided in the first action, but also all matters in issue that could have been or might have been decided. 2 Freeman on Judgments (5th Ed.), p. 1646, § 774; Servente v. Murray, 10 Cal. App.2d 355, 364, 52 P.2d 270; In re Estate of Clark, 190 Cal. 354, 360, 212 P. 622; Sutphin v. Speik, 15 Cal.2d 195, 202, 99 P.2d 652, 101 P.2d 497; Borland v. Borland, 56 Cal.App. 638, 641, 206 P. 478; Crew v. Pratt, 119 Cal. 139, 149, 51 P. 38.

It follows, of course, that all matters heretofore litigated are res judicata. They have been enumerated above. The only serious question is whether the issue as to whether the terms of the second sale were the same as those of the first sale was decided in the prior proceedings.

In the instant case, in her answer, Maloof alleged that the sale was not made upon the same terms and conditions as the original sale "in that said sale was made subject to whatever rights the said defendant [Maloof] may or might have had by virtue of an appeal filed prior to the date of said sale." In her cross-complaint Maloof alleges that the offer of resale "contained the condition that said property was resold subject to her [Maloof's] rights, which may or might accrue by virtue of her appeal * * *; that [on the resale] no independent bidders bid on said property and that * * * the only bidders * * * were A. Hirschberg and Dwight Gaylord, attorney for the estate of Amelia Waterland, deceased, both of whom were co-owners of the property under the original sale." The cross-complaint also contains an averment very similar to the one contained in the answer and quoted above. In addition, at the trial, Maloof made an offer to prove that the referee at the resale "announced to the assembled persons that the sale was made subject to any right existing in the defendant and cross-complainant by reason of the appeal then pending before the District Court of Appeal. * * * that the consensus of opinion at that assembled gathering was that the purchasers of the property, they were purchasing a lawsuit; and that the bid of Mr. Hirschberg in the sum of $55,000, as compared to his partner and co-plaintiff at the previous sale, which proof will show that the said David at the previous sale bid $74,000, was—the bid of $55,000 was made due to the fact that there was an appeal pending that had not been determined as to whether the property would have any cloud on its title, or just exactly what the purchaser was buying." The trial court, on motion, struck the quoted paragraphs from the pleadings, denied the offer of proof, and also refused to allow Maloof to prove that the purchasers at the resale were the owners of a four-fifth's interest in the property purchased by them. These rulings were based on the theory that all of these issues were res judicata.

Of course, without now considering the doctrine of res judicata, the mere fact that Maloof had an appeal pending when the resale was had, would not make the terms and conditions of the resale different from those of the original sale, because, as a matter of law, that appeal could have had no effect upon the title to the property. Maloof, on that appeal, was not claiming title, but was seeking to avoid the transaction. Certainly, a defaulting purchaser cannot, by simply appealing from the confirmation of the sale, prohibit a resale until the appeal is decided, or prohibit a judgment against him for the loss occasioned, on the ground that because of an appeal, in no way affecting title, the terms of the resale are different from those of the original sale. But here the pleadings, and particularly the offer of proof, went further than merely to offer to prove that an appeal was pending—the offer was that the referee represented to the prospective bidders, and the bidders believed, they were buying a lawsuit that would be a cloud upon the title. If the referee made any such representations, then, the resale would have been held under conditions radically different from those prevailing at the original sale. It must be remembered that the original sale was had in July, 1946, and the resale was made on December 2, 1946. At the original sale Maloof bid $75,000, and there was an offer to prove that a man by the name of David was a partner of Hirschberg and that he bid $74,000 at that sale. Yet, less than six months later, Hirschberg bid but $55,000, and apparently David made no bid. It is a possible inference that the difference between the bids was caused by reason of the fact, if it be a fact, as Maloof offered to prove, that the referee represented that the purchaser at the resale was purchasing a lawsuit, and that the appeal was a cloud on the title.

[2] Considering this point on its merits, there can be no doubt that, if the referee represented that the appeal constituted a cloud on the title and that the bidder at the resale was purchasing a lawsuit, then the referee would be barred from successfully maintaining this action. Ever since the decision of the Supreme Court in Hammond v. Cailleaud, 111 Cal. 206, 43 P. 607, 52 Am.St.Rep. 167, it has been the law that a defaulting purchaser at a partition sale cannot be held for the loss occasioned by a resale at a lower price when the conditions of the resale are different from those prevailing at the original sale. In that case, the defendant purchased at the original sale for $7,500, paying in cash ten per cent of the purchase price as a down payment. He subsequently defaulted, claiming that the title to the property was defective. Over his objections on this ground the sale was confirmed. He defaulted. Thereafter, at a resale, the highest bid was $5,000. The plaintiff instituted the action for the amount of the loss occasioned by the resale. The defense was that at the resale the referee made it clear to all bidders that they had to take title as it stood, and that there was no warranty of title, while at the original sale, every one thought that a clear title was offered. The court refused to allow defendant to prove these facts. This was held to have been error. At page 219 of 111 Cal., at page 610 of 43 P. the court stated: "These authorities clearly show that for any error, irregularity, or misrepresentation of the officer, whether intentional or otherwise, whereby the purchaser has been misled to his prejudice to such extent as to make it unconscionable that his contract of purchase should be enforced against him, the sale will not be confirmed. But in this case, as here presented, it is not necessary to go further than to hold that if, by the alleged terms and conditions of the sale to appellant, he was led to bid more for the property—to any material extent, at least—than he would if he had been informed, as the purchaser was, at the second sale, that he must take the title as it was, whether defective or not, it is obvious that the resale did not furnish any just measure of damages. No fact or circumstance is disclosed by the record, other than the different conditions under which these sales were made, which tends in any degree to account for the difference between the final bids at these two sales; and, under such circumstances, we must conclude that all above the amount of the second sale which was bid at the first was induced by the condition that the purchaser took no risk as to the title. The owners are estopped from saying that the price obtained upon the second sale was inadequate, since they are not shown to have opposed confirmation upon that ground, and therefore the presumption is strengthened that the higher price obtained at the first sale was secured by the more favorable conditions given to appellant."

Under the rule of this case it is quite clear that, in the instant case, the trial court should have permitted Maloof to prove, if she could, that the terms of the two sales were substantially different. If she could prove that such was the fact, she had a complete defense to the action for the claimed loss. The referee does not attack the rule of Hammond v. Cailleaud, supra, and does not deny that, if it was permissible to raise the point, the trial court was in error in striking this defense from the pleadings and in refusing to permit the offer of proof, but simply contends that the issue was decided adversely to Maloof in the prior proceedings.

This claim of res judicata is based upon the following facts: After the resale Maloof objected to its confirmation on the ground that the resale had been made subject to the appeals in the Hirschberg case. Over these objections the court, on December 20, 1946, confirmed the resale, on December 28th filed an "Order Denying Objections to Confirmation of Resale of Real Estate," and also entered an order denying the motion to vacate or to modify the order of resale. Thus, so it is claimed, there were three separate adjudications of the very issue here involved.

[3] We do not think that by these orders the court was passing upon, or could then pass upon, the amount of the loss that could be recovered from Maloof occasioned by the resale. The court did adjudicate that the original sale was valid, that Maloof was bound by the terms of that sale, that the resale was properly noticed and conducted, and was valid, and that any legal loss caused by the resale should be recovered from Maloof. But at that time there was and could be no issue as to whether the terms of the two sales were substantially identical. Whether they were or were not identical did not affect the validity of the sales, nor did it determine the amount of the loss that could be recovered. That issue was appropriately raised for the first time in the present action.

Thus, the trial court was in error when it struck the defenses involved from Maloof's pleadings, and when it denied the offer of proof. The verdict was improperly directed, and the trial court properly granted the new trial because of an error in law at the trial. For this reason the order granting the new trial must be affirmed.

[4] It is necessary for the guidance of the court on the retrial, to pass on another question raised by the parties. Maloof contends that, under present law, under no circumstances may a court grant a judgment against a defaulting purchaser at a partition sale for the loss occasioned by the resale, because, so it is argued, such is a deficiency judgment "for failure of the purchaser to complete his contract of sale" within the meaning of section 580b of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that such deficiency judgments are prohibited by that section. This presents a most interesting problem.

Section 580b was first added to the code in 1933, Stats.1933 p. 1673, Chap. 642, as part of the depression relief legislation. As then passed, the section provided: "No deficiency judgment shall lie in any event after any sale under a deed of trust or mortgage given to secure payment of the balance of the purchase price of real property." The section was re-enacted in 1935, Stats. of 1935, p. 1806, Chap. 650, and also amended in that year, Stats. of 1935, p. 1869, Chap. 680. As finally enacted in 1935, and as the section now reads, it is provided: "No deficiency judgment shall lie in any event after any sale of real property for failure of the purchaser to complete his contract of sale, or under a deed of trust, or mortgage, given to secure payment of the balance of the purchase price of real property." (Italics added.) Maloof vigorously argues that, by this 1935 amendment, the Legislature put all contracts for the purchase and sale of real property on precisely the same footing as mortgages or deeds of trust given to secure the balance of the purchase price, and that a resale in a partition proceeding and a suit for the loss is an attempt to recover a deficiency judgment in violation of this section. It should be mentioned that section 580b is found in Title VIII, Pt. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, entitled "Trial and Judgment in Civil Actions."

The referee relies upon the specific provisions of section 785 of the Code of Civil Procedure, directly authorizing referees to bring an action against a defaulting purchaser in a partition proceeding for the loss occasioned on the resale. This section is found in Title X of that Code entitled "Actions in Particular Cases," and in Chap. IV of that title entitled "Actions for Partition of Real (and Personal) Property." The section reads as follows: "If the sale is confirmed by the court, an order must be entered directing the referees to execute conveyances and take securities pursuant to such sale, which they are hereby authorized to do. Such order may also give directions to them respecting the disposition of the proceeds of the sale. If the purchaser, after the confirmation of the sale, refuses to pay the amount of his bid the referees may again sell the property at any time to the highest bidder, and if any loss is occasioned thereby the referees may recover the amount of such loss and the cost from the bidder so refusing, or the referees, without making a resale, may maintain an action against the purchaser for the amount of his bid." (Italics added.) This section was originally enacted in 1872 and was amended in 1907.

The basic premise of Maloof's argument is that, insofar as section 785 authorizes the referee to obtain a judgment against a defaulting purchaser at a partition sale for the amount of the loss occasioned by the resale, it has been repealed by implication by the 1935 amendment to section 580b. According to this argument, the only remedy now available to the referee against a defaulting purchaser at a partition sale is to maintain an action against him for the full amount of his bid. If this argument is sound it also prohibits such actions in sheriff's sales, § 695, Code of Civ.Proc., probate sales, § 788, Probate Code, and other types of judicial sales.

The argument of Maloof is interesting and ingenious, but unsound. Section 4481 of the Political Code provides that, in construing the various provisions of the Code, "If the provisions of any title conflict with or contravene the provisions of another title, the provisions of each title must prevail as to all matters and questions arising out of the subject matter of such title." Section 4482 extends the same rule to conflicts between chapters of the codes. See 23 Cal.Jur. p. 792, § 170; In re Kennerly, 190 Cal. 774, 776, 214 P. 857. Maloof tries to avoid the obvious application of this statutory rule of construction by the contention that this is not an action brought under the partition provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, but is a simple action for damages brought under the provision of code relating to money judgments, and is therefore controlled by section 580b. The point need not be labored that the present action was brought under and by virtue of section 785. The Political Code section quoted requires that the provisions of each title must control "all matters and questions arising out of the subject matter of such title." Thus, the particular provisions of section 785 must be held to control the general language of section 580b.

[5] That this is the proper interpretation of the section is demonstrated by several other rules of construction. While repeals by implication may occur under certain circumstances, Assets Reconstruction Corp. v. Munson, 81 Cal.App.2d 363, 184 P.2d 11, such repeals by implication are never favored. Fay v. District Court of Appeal, 200 Cal. 522, 254 P. 896; Rexstrew v. City of Huntington Park, 20 Cal.2d 630, 128 P.2d 23.

[6, 7] Moreover, the evils sought to be remedied and the purposes sought to be effected by the emergency legislation of 1933 and 1935 must be considered in construing section 580b. That section, and the related sections passed at the same time, were intended to prevent creditors from buying in property for a nominal sum, after the debtor had defaulted, and then holding the defaulting debtor for a large deficiency judgment. See 22 Cal.L.Rev. 170, 180; Hatch v. Security-First Nat. Bank, 19 Cal.2d 254, 259, 120 P.2d 869; Winklemen v. Sides, 31 Cal.App.2d 387, 409, 88 P.2d 147. The 1935 amendment extended this protection to purchasers under a contract of sale. Undoubtedly, in private transactions, under this section there can be no deficiency judgment involving purchase money deeds of trust or mortgages, or contracts of sale. Mortgage Guarantee Co. v. Sampsell, 51 Cal.App.2d 180, 185, 124 P.2d 353; Peterson v. Wilson, 88 Cal.App.2d 617, 631, 199 P.2d 757, 6 A.L.R.2d 258. But none of the evils sought to be overcome by section 580b existed in the case of partition or other types of judicial sales. The natural and normal construction of section 580b is that it only applies to contracts of sale where credit is involved. In the instant case the order confirming both the original and second sales provided the sale was for cash. It would require a strained construction indeed to hold that section 580b, obviously aimed at private credit sales, was applicable to a cash judicial sale. It is significant, although not conclusive, that since 1935 no court, so far as our research discloses, has ever held that section 580b applies to judicial sales.

For these reasons we are of the opinion that section 580b of the Code of Civil Procedure has no application to sales held by virtue of section 785 of that code.

The order granting the new trial is affirmed.

BRAY and SCHOTTKY, J. pro tem., concur.

PEOPLE v. VINSON.
Civ. 17370.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Aug. 21, 1950.

Hearing Denied Oct. 19, 1950.

Action in eminent domain by the People of the state of California, acting by and through the Department of Public Works, against Alice Vinson to acquire a parcel of realty owned by defendant, for highway purposes. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Stanley Mosk, J., awarded the defendant $70,000 and the defendant appealed from the judgment and from an order denying her motion for a new trial. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that defendant's testimony and offer of proof as to reasons why defendant purchased the property, were properly excluded.

Judgment affirmed. Attempted appeal from order denying motion for new trial dismissed.

1. Appeal and error ⇐110

Order denying motion for a new trial is not appealable. Code Civ.Proc. § 963.

2. Evidence ⇐558(8)

In eminent domain proceeding by state to acquire realty for highway purposes, permitting state's counsel to cross-examine defendant's expert witness as to price paid by defendant for property some three years previous was proper.

3. Eminent domain ⇐201

In eminent domain proceeding by state, excluding defendant's testimony as to reason for her purchase of the realty involved and sustaining of objection to defendant's offer of proof as to her purpose in acquiring realty was not error.

4. Eminent domain ⇐134

The value of realty taken in eminent domain proceeding is determined by taking into account highest possible use to which realty is or may be reasonably put, and what a purchaser would be willing to pay for it in view of such highest possible use.

5. Eminent domain ⇐201

In eminent domain proceeding by state to acquire realty for highway purposes, rejection of defendant's offer of proof that she purchased realty at a time when both she and owner knew that freeway would take at least a portion of it, which offer was made to prove both defendant's purpose in buying realty and other facts which she claimed would tend to prove that price she paid was less than market value was not error.

6. Eminent domain ⇐219

In eminent domain proceeding by state to acquire realty for highway purposes, interruption of defendant's counsel during course of his argument to jury when he sought to argue defendant's purpose in buying realty and use for which it was to be put, evidence of which had been excluded by trial court, was not error.

7. Eminent domain ⇐202(1)

In eminent domain proceeding by state to acquire realty for highway purposes, evidence of an oral agreement by state to purchase her realty at a value to be fixed by two or three named appraisers would not have been admissible.

8. Evidence ⇐142(1)

In eminent domain proceeding by state to acquire realty for highway purposes, evidence with respect to offers and purchases made by division of highways of other realty in vicinity would not have been admissible.

9. Appeal and error ⇐977(5)

An order denying a motion for new trial may not be reversed in absence of a clear showing of abuse of discretion.

Russell E. Parsons, Morris Lavine, Los Angeles, for appellant.

George C. Hadley, Hodge L. Dolle, Thomas G. Baggot, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

[1] This is an action in eminent domain instituted by plaintiff State to acquire a parcel of property owned by defendant. The property is to be used for highway purposes. The only issue involved was the fair market value of the property on March 11, 1948. After a trial by jury, appellant was awarded $70,000 which was subsequently deposited with the clerk of the court and the State took possession of the real property. Defendant appeals from the judgment and purports to appeal from the order denying her motion for a new trial. No appeal lies from an order denying a motion for a new trial, Code Civ.Proc. sec. 963, and the purported appeal therefrom must be dismissed.

[2] Defendant was ably represented at the trial. She has additional counsel on the appeal. She complains that the court erred in permitting plaintiff's counsel to cross-examine her expert witness as to the price of $57,500 paid by her for the property some three years before. No authority is cited which furnishes even slight support for this proposition and we find it to be devoid of merit. It is established practice on cross-examination to inquire of an expert witness the prices which are asked or have been paid for other similar lands, for the purpose of testing his knowledge and the weight to be given his opinion. In re Estate of Ross, 171 Cal. 64, 151 P. 1138; Palladine v. Imperial Valley Farm Lands Ass'n, 65 Cal.App. 727, 756, 225 P. 291; City of San Luis Obispo v. Brizzolara, 100 Cal. 434, 437, 34 P. 1083; City of Los Angeles v. Deacon, 119 Cal.App. 491, 7 P.2d 378. Such cross-examination as we have here was held permissible in East Bay Municipal Utility Dist. v. Kieffer, 99 Cal. App. 240, 251, 278 P. 476, 481, 279 P. 178, where it was said: "For the purpose of testing the knowledge of such witnesses and impeaching their opinions as to values, the court permitted the plaintiff to ask them, on cross-examination, to state their knowledge of other sales of land in the vicinity and of prices recently paid by the defendant for the lands taken. This was not error." Both reason and common sense support the view that if selling prices of comparable property are properly taken into account in forming expert opinions as to value, a recent purchase of the identical property would be of first importance. If, as in the present case, a witness has given consideration to a purchase which took place three years before, the time element goes merely to the weight of his opinion. It is scarcely necessary to add that the widest latitude is allowed in such cross-examination. City of Los Angeles v. Deacon, 119 Cal.App. 491, 7 P.2d 378.

Defendant sought to testify as to the circumstances under which she bought the property, in explanation of the purchase price disclosed in the cross-examination of her expert, Mr. Freeman. After plaintiff's objection had been sustained, defendant made an offer of proof. The offer was to prove by her testimony that at the time she purchased the property she knew the freeway was going through, examined the map in the office of the Division of Highways, believed that only a portion of the property would be taken, and that she intended to erect a hotel on the remainder of the property. Another phase of the offer was stated as follows: "She bought the property from the owner, the owner having knowledge that the freeway was going through and would take a portion of the property * * * that the property was sold not at its fair market value but was sold by the seller under threat of condemnation; he the seller knowing that at least a portion of the property would be taken by the freeway." Objection to the offer of proof was sustained.

[3, 4] Defendant had testified to having purchased several other properties in the vicinity upon which she had made extensive hotel and apartment improvements and which she had later sold. She was questioned by her counsel as to the purpose she had in acquiring the instant property; plaintiff's objection to the question was sustained. This was not error, nor was it error to sustain objections to the offer of proof as to her purpose in acquiring the property. She had given her opinion that the fair market value of the property at the time it was taken was $150,000. The offer to prove her purpose in buying the property was wholly unrelated to the opinion she expressed as to its value. It would have served no purpose whatever other than to prove that her purpose had been frustrated. The criterion is not the value of the use of the property to the owner. Central Pacific Ry. Co. v. Feldman, 152

Cal. 303, 92 P. 849; 10 Cal.Jur. 358. The value is determined by taking into account the highest possible use to which the land is or may be reasonably put, and what a purchaser would be willing to pay for it in view of such highest possible use. City of Napa v. Navoni, 56 Cal.App.2d 289, 132 P.2d 566; People v. Ricciardi, 23 Cal.2d 390, 401, 144 P.2d 799. The fact that defendant's plan to improve the property for hotel purposes had been frustrated would have presented to the jury a false element of compensation.

[5] We discover no error in the rulings which rejected defendant's offer of proof that she had purchased the property at a time when both she and the owner knew that the freeway would take at least a portion of it. Although the offer was to prove both her purpose in buying the property and other facts which she claimed would tend to prove that the price she paid was less than the market value, she did not make separate offers of proof. Her purpose in buying the property, as we have seen, was not a proper subject of proof. The offered testimony, insofar as it was an attempt to prove the price paid was below market value, was inadmissible because of its insufficiency. Defendant's offered testimony as to the knowledge of the seller of the proposed condemnation would have been hearsay and a mere guess as to the motive of the owner in making the sale. The jurors should not have been asked to speculate as to what he may have been thinking. The court did not err in sustaining an objection to the offer of proof.

[6] Defendant also contends that the trial court committed error when it interrupted the argument to the jury made by her counsel. Defendant's counsel sought to argue defendant's purpose in buying the property and the use for which it was to be put. This was an attempt to argue matter not in evidence, and which we have held was properly excluded. There was no error.

[7] In an affidavit filed in support of a motion for a new trial defendant alleged acts which she contended amounted to an agreement by the State to purchase her property at a value to be fixed by two of three named appraisers. She claimed that after she was served with summons an employee in the Division of Highways gave her a list of appraisers and promised that the State would pay her the value of her property agreed to by any two of the appraisers; that an appraisement was made of $102,000, and that the employee informed her that the State would not pay that sum. Although defendant argues the matter as if the State had entered into a valid agreement to purchase her property, she says in her brief: "When the price was not that suitable to the agents of the State they backed out, but the facts and circumstances of the transaction—like any other transaction—were surely properly admissible before the jury for whatever weight the jury wished to give to it." Even on a retrial this evidence would have been inadmissible. The printed argument on the point cites wholly irrelevant cases, discusses the powers of the State in eminent domain and complains that defendant has been deprived of equal protection of the law. The insincerity of the argument is manifested by the fact that it ignores the following matters: The so-called agreement consisted only of an alleged oral promise for the purchase of real estate; it was not claimed to have been made by one who had authority to contract for the State; the alleged agreement was not pleaded by defendant and there had been no effort made to prove it at the trial; the matters alleged were obviously not newly discovered, and no excuse was offered for the delay in asserting claims founded upon them.

[8, 9] Other affidavits were filed on the motion stating in detail information alleged to have been received by defendant, some of it after the trial of the case, with respect to offers and purchases made by the Division of Highways of other property in the vicinity. Such evidence would have been inadmissible under the rules we have stated. It is insisted in defendant's brief that this court can take judicial notice of the fact that property on Vine Street, in Hollywood, where defendant's property is located, is more valuable than that on Argyle where plaintiff made some of its purchases. The record discloses no abuse of discretion in the denial of the motion. The ruling evidences the trial judge's belief that the verdict was a just one and that, even if the facts stated in the affidavits would have been admissible upon a retrial of the case, the evidence would not have brought about a different result. The order may not be reversed in the absence of a clear showing of abuse of discretion. Montaldo v. Hires Bottling Co., 59 Cal.App. 2d 642, 139 P.2d 666; Buckhantz v. R. G. Hamilton & Co., 71 Cal.App.2d 777, 163 P. 2d 756; Dry v. City and County of San Francisco, 83 Cal.App.2d 790, 189 P.2d 761.

A large part of defendant's brief is devoted to a discussion of the conflicting testimony of the witnesses as to value, and we are requested to reverse the judgment with directions to the trial court to enter judgment in favor of defendant for the sum of $102,000. The argument does not present any question of law.

The judgment is affirmed. The attempted appeal from the order denying motion for new trial is dismissed.

WOOD and VALLÉE, JJ., concur.

Hearing denied; CARTER and SCHAUER, JJ., dissenting.

99 Cal.App.2d 86

JOHNSON v. SNYDER.
Civ. 14319.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.
Aug. 21, 1950.

Action by Les Johnson against Bella Snyder for damages resulting from alleged constructive eviction of plaintiff from premises rented by plaintiff in building owned by defendant. The Superior Court, Contra Costa County, Benjamin C. Jones, J., entered a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that the evidence supported a finding of constructive eviction.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Landlord and tenant ⇐172(2)

Where tenant operated restaurant business in stall of owner's market building and other tenants quit building and building was allowed to become dirty and unsanitary, as a result of which city health inspector ordered tenant to close restaurant business and tenant closed business and removed fixtures, there was a "constructive eviction".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Constructive Eviction".

2. Landlord and tenant ⇐172(2)

Any interference by the landlord by which the tenant is deprived of the beneficial enjoyment of the premises amounts to a "constructive eviction" if the tenant so elects and surrenders possession.

3. Landlord and tenant ⇐134(1), 172(2)

Where landlord leased part of building and permitted unsanitary conditions amounting to nuisance to exist in portion of building remaining under his control, which operated to deprive tenant of his beneficial enjoyment, tenant could treat such condition as a constructive eviction, and covenant of tenant to comply with requirements of municipal, state and federal authorities pertaining to premises, referred only to premises and not to tenant, and put on him no duty to enter stalls to which he had no right of occupancy to abate nuisance, and fact that landlord expressly covenanted to furnish janitor service in aisles and passageways did not excuse maintenance of nuisance in other parts of building under landlord's exclusive control.

4. Landlord and tenant ⇐190(1)

Where landlord leased part of building and permitted unsanitary conditions amounting to nuisance to exist in portion of building under his control, which deprived tenant of his beneficial enjoyment of leased premises, upon eviction, tenant was entitled to recover amount advanced for future rent, under doctrine of unjust enrichment.

5. Landlord and tenant ⇐180(4)

Where landlord leased part of building and permitted unsanitary conditions amounting to nuisance to exist in portion of building under his control which deprived tenant of his beneficial enjoyment, upon eviction, tenant was entitled to recover for loss of good will.

6. Damages ⇐6

One whose wrongful conduct has rendered difficult the ascertainment of damages cannot escape liability because damages cannot be measured with exactness.

7. Landlord and tenant ⇐180(5)

Where landlord leased part of building and permitted unsanitary condition amounting to nuisance to exist in portion of building under his control, which deprived tenant of his beneficial enjoyment, and there was no direct evidence of value of good will of business, but business had been netting tenant $200 per month, including compensation for his own labor, award therefor of $500 was not an abuse of discretion.

8. Trial ⇐367

For services of a common-place or non-technical character, the trial judge can call on his own general knowledge of their value, in determining amount of tenant's damages by way of cost of removal of fixtures upon eviction.

9. Landlord and tenant ⇐180(5)

Award of $400 to tenant as cost of removing fixtures of restaurant business after eviction by landlord was not excessive.

Gladstein, Andersen, Resner & Sawyer, Lloyd E. McMurray, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Hoey, Hoey & Fenstermacher, Sam W. Hall, Jr., all of Martinez, for respondents.

DOOLING, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment for plaintiff based on a finding of constructive eviction. Defendant is the owner of a building in Pittsburg designed as a market building for the occupancy of several tenants. Plaintiff rented a stall in this building for the conduct therein of the restaurant business. The other tenants of the building, except a retail liquor dealer, for reasons undisclosed quit the building. The building was allowed to become dirty and unsanitary and as a result the city health inspector ordered plaintiff to close his restaurant business which plaintiff did, removing his fixtures from the premises. A brief excerpt from the testimony of the city inspector will point up the discussion of the case. The inspector testified:

"They moved out and left everything just as it was. That is what I mean. They left their vegetables and bread and everything contained in a grocery store in the building. I asked Mrs. Snyder several times if she couldn't clean up the building, because after all, if it stood very long and stayed in the building very long, it would attract flies and rodents and gnats, etc., and being there is a restaurant in the building where they serve food, we had to keep the entire building clean. Mr. Johnson's restaurant itself, we found, was always in a satisfactory condition, that is, his little corner of it. But, as time went on, day to day, these vegetables started to decay, and each day that we visited the place we found it in a worse condition than it was the day before, and this went on for about a week. The dust in the building was getting terrible. You could rub your hand over any fixture in there and your hand would come out black. And the floor was in a horrible condition. I tried to prevail upon Mrs. Snyder many, many times, and every time I went to the building I made it a point to take Mrs. Snyder with me, and her answer was the same every time. * * * She had no interest in the restaurant. She didn't care how the building was. And if Mr. Johnson didn't like the condition he would have to move or not. It was immaterial to her whether they had a restaurant in the building or not. So, they went on for about four or five days, and the flies and gnats got so terrible we just had to take drastic steps and close the restaurant."

[1, 2] We are satisfied that this evidence supported the finding of a constructive eviction. "Any interference by the landlord by which the tenant is deprived of the beneficial enjoyment of the premises amounts to a constructive eviction if the tenant so elects and surrenders possession * * *." Kulawitz v. Pacific, etc., Paper Co., 25 Cal.2d 664, 670, 155 P.2d 24, 27; Aaker v. Smith, 87 Cal.App.2d 36, 46, 196 P.2d 150; 15 Cal.Jur. 679.

[3] Where the landlord leases part of a building and permits unsanitary conditions amounting to a nuisance to exist in the portion of the building remaining under his control which operate to deprive the tenant of his beneficial enjoyment the tenant may treat this as a constructive eviction. Ray Realty Co. v. Holtzman, 234 Mo.App. 802, 119 S.W.2d 981 and cases cited at pp. 984–985; Washington Chocolate Co. v. Kent, 28 Wash.2d 448, 183 P.2d 514 and cases cited at pp. 516–517; Everson v. Albert, 261 Mich. 182, 246 N.W. 88; Blaustein v. Pincus, 47 Mont. 202, 131 P. 1064, Ann.Cas. 1915C, 405; 52 C.J.S. Landlord and Tenant, § 458, p. 175; and cf. Riechhold v. Sommarstrom Invest. Co., 83 Cal.App. 173, 256 P. 592; McDowell v. Hyman, 117 Cal. 67, 48 P. 984.

The fact that the nuisance occurred in a portion of the building over which (after the other tenants departed) the landlord had exclusive control distinguishes the cases relied upon by appellant having to do with conditions arising in the premises occupied by the tenant himself under his lease. The covenant of plaintiff in the lease to comply with all the requirements of Municipal, State and Federal authorities "pertaining to said premises" referred only to the premises let to him and put on him no duty to enter stalls as to which he had no right of occupancy to abate the nuisance which his landlord was there permitting to exist. Nor did the fact that the appellant had expressly covenanted to furnish janitor service in the aisles and passageways operate to excuse the maintenance of a nuisance in other parts of the premises which were under appellant's exclusive control. The wilfulness of appellant's conduct is attested by her statement, as testified to by the inspector that "if Mr. Johnson didn't like the condition he would have to move."

The court allowed three items of damages: $450 advance payment of rent; $400 for the cost of removing the fixtures of the restaurant; and $500 for loss of good will.

[4] Upon eviction plaintiff was entitled to recover the $450 advanced for future rent, under the unjust enrichment doctrine. Everson v. Albert, supra, 261 Mich. 182, 246 N.W. 88, 90; Henry Rahr's Sons Co. v. Buckley, 159 Wis. 589, 150 N.W. 994, 996; Schienle v. Eckels, 227 Pa. 305, 76 A. 15.

[5] Loss of good will is a proper item of damage. Schuler v. Bordelon, 78 Cal. App.2d 581 and cases cited at p. 585, 177 P.2d 959. There was no direct evidence of the value of the good will of the business, but it had been netting the plaintiff $200 per month and as said in Schuler v. Bordelon, supra, 78 Cal.App.2d at p. 586, 177 P.2d at p. 962, "In determining the amount of damages * * * the jury was entitled to estimate as best they could from the evidence before them * * * the good will * * *." That court added: "Undoubtedly, in cases like this entire accuracy is impossible, and some difficulty is encountered in accurately assessing the damages * * * but it must not be forgotten that such difficulty would have been avoided had appellant taken care that no occasion should arise through his tort requiring such assessing of damages."

[6] "One whose wrongful conduct has rendered difficult the ascertainment of the damages cannot escape liability because the damages could not be measured with exactness." Zinn v. Ex-Cell-O Corp., 24 Cal.2d 290, 297–298, 149 P.2d 177, 181.

[7] It might be difficult to get opinion evidence of the value of the good will of a small restaurant netting the owner $200 per month including compensation for his own labor, but the court certainly did not exceed the bounds of discretion in fixing a value of $500 for that item, a value upon which a purchaser would recoup his investment in two and one-half months. Cf. Elsbach v. Mulligan, 58 Cal.App.2d 354, 365, 367, 136 P.2d 651.

[8] There is no express testimony of the cost of removing the fixtures but for services of a common-place or nontechnical character the trial judge can call on his own general knowledge of their value. In re Estate of Reinhertz, 82 Cal.App.2d 156, 160, 185 P.2d 858, 186 P.2d 755, and cases cited.

[9] The trial judge filed a memorandum in which he stated concerning this item: "Being evicted he had to get out with no opportunity to dispose of his fixtures in the place. The lease being ended he had to remove and is entitled to a reasonable award for this purpose. From the facts proved it is not an unwarranted inference that the sum of $400 is reasonable in this respect."

Judgment affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and GOODELL, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 218

Ex parte PAGE.
Cr. 2211.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 25, 1950.

Henry E. Page filed an application for a writ of habeas corpus. The District Court of Appeal, Adams, P. J., held that since petitioner had been convicted of burglary and had been adjudicated an habitual criminal, but one of the prior convictions was not available to support an adjudication of habitual criminality, petitioner was entitled to have his sentence corrected to eliminate adjudication of habitual criminality.

Writ of habeas corpus previously issued discharged and petitioner remanded to custody.

Habeas corpus ⇐112

Where petitioner had been convicted of burglary, and had admitted two prior convictions and had been adjudicated an habitual criminal, but one prior conviction was not available to support adjudication of habitual criminality because prior offense charged as grand larceny had involved taking of goods valued at but $25, petitioner was entitled on petition for writ of habeas corpus to have sentence corrected to eliminate adjudication of habitual criminality. Pen.Code, § 644.

Thomas W. Olson, Jr., Assistant Public Defender, of Sacramento, for petitioner.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Doris H. Maier, Deputy, for respondent.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

On August 9, 1943, an amended information was filed against petitioner in Riverside County, charging him with burglary, and with two prior convictions, to-wit, assault with a deadly weapon and grand larceny, committed in North Carolina. He was found guilty of the substantive offense, admitted the two prior convictions, was adjudicated an habitual criminal and sentenced to life imprisonment. No appeal was taken.

In this proceeding it is urged by petitioner that the judgment against him, in so far as it adjudges that he is an habitual criminal should be amended, because at least one of the two prior convictions was not within the provisions of Section 644 of our Penal Code. In re McVickers, 29 Cal. 2d 264, 176 P.2d 40.

In support of petitioner's claim there have been filed in this court properly authenticated copies of the records of the North Carolina court in which his prior convictions were had, and upon these records it is conceded by respondent that one of the prior convictions was not available to support an adjudication of habitual criminality, the prior offense charged as grand larceny having been shown to involve the taking of goods valued at but $25.00, and the sentence to have been to the county jail to work on the road.

It therefore follows that petitioner is entitled to have his sentence corrected to eliminate the adjudication of habitual criminality, and to be accorded the rights of one not so adjudged; and it is so ordered.

It does not follow, however, that petitioner is entitled to his present discharge nor does he so claim. The writ of habeas corpus heretofore issued is accordingly discharged, and petitioner is remanded to custody.

VAN DYKE and PEEK, JJ., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 170

BOGART v. BOARD OF MEDICAL EXAMINERS et al.

Civ. 17867.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 22, 1950.

Mandamus proceeding by Esther P. Bogart against the Board of Medical Examiners of the State of California and others, to review revocation of license to practice medicine. From judgment of the Superior Court, the petitioner appealed. Her petition for writ of supersedeas pending the appeal was denied by the District Court of Appeal of California, Second Appellate District. Petitioner was granted a rehearing and the District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that possible loss of practice would not justify granting the writ of supersedeas.

Petition denied on rehearing.

1. Appeal and error ⇐458(1)

Purpose of writ of supersedeas is to preserve to appellant the fruits of a meritorious appeal where they might otherwise be lost to him.

2. Appeal and error ⇐479(2)

Supersedeas is writ resting in discretion of appellate court.

3. Appeal and error ⇐478

Applicant for writ of supersedeas must show that substantial questions will be presented upon appeal.

4. Supersedeas ⇐1

Writ of supersedeas is, like other original writs, to be made use of only in those cases where some unusual situation is presented which cannot well be handled otherwise.

5. Mandamus ⇐187(6)

Where physician was found guilty by state board of medical examiners of committing abortion and her license was revoked, fact that she might suffer possible injury through loss of practice while appeal from denial of mandamus to review the administrative order was pending, did not entitle her to writ of supersedeas. Code Civ.Proc. § 1094.5(f).

Sidney W. Kaufman, Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Bayard Rhone, Deputy Attorney General, for respondents.

DORAN, Justice.

As set forth in the petition, on December 17, 1945 the respondent Board issued a Physician's and Surgeon's Certificate to petitioner; on July 8, 1949 complaint was filed charging petitioner with having committed an abortion upon the person of one Gayle Rubin, and on August 16, 1949 said Board, after a hearing, found petitioner guilty and revoked the license to practice medicine in the State of California.

On September 28, 1949 petitioner filed in the Superior Court a petition for Writ of Mandate to review the administrative order hereinbefore mentioned, which writ was denied on May 10, 1950. From this judgment petitioner has appealed, alleging that "the accusation and complaint failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause for disciplinary action", and that "said accusation was so indefinite and uncertain * * * as to the alleged means or method of conduct of petitioner that she was unable to properly prepare her defense; that a demurrer to the accusation was overruled by said respondent Board". Petitioner further claims that the Board's finding of guilt "is not supported by any evidence whatsoever * * * and is contrary to law".

It is alleged that "The issuance of a writ of supersedeas or stay, pursuant to Section 1094.5(f) C.C.P. is necessary to protect petitioner's rights to bring this appeal". In this connection it is averred that since the Board's order revokes petitioner's certificate to practice medicine which order will become effective before the appeal can be heard and determined, petitioner "will suffer great financial detriment" by reason of a loss of patients, "even though this Court may see fit to reverse the trial Court". It is further stated "That it is not against the public interest to permit the petitioner to continue to practice, pending the outcome of this appeal".

Objecting to the issuance of supersedeas as prayed for by petitioner, respondents point out that since petitioner is also licensed to practice medicine and surgery by the State Board of Osteopathic Examiners, which license has not been revoked, petitioner can still continue practice, and hence that there is no necessity for a writ of supersedeas.

Petitioner filed no answer to the objections of respondent; the petition for Writ of Supersedeas was denied by the appellate court. A petition for a rehearing was then filed explaining that no answer to the objections had been filed because "this petitioner was under the belief that there was no provision in law to answer said objections of respondents".

A rehearing having been granted, petitioner now contends that the respondents' statement that no writ of supersedeas was necessary for the reason that petitioner could continue to practice as a physician and surgeon under the unrevoked license of the State Board of Osteopathic Examiners, and hence would suffer no deprivation of rights pending the appeal, is incorrect. It is then alleged that "petitioner has always practiced as a doctor of medicine (M. D.)"; and all of her patients know her as a doctor of medicine and consult her for treatment as a doctor of medicine; all of her business cards, stationery, and office lettering bear the designation of 'M. D.' In the event petitioner is unable to practice as a doctor of medicine, * * * she will undoubtedly lose her patients who consulted her, not as an osteopath but as a doctor of medicine; any explanation she might make to said patients to the effect that she had lost her license would destroy the confidence of her patients in her and would result in her loss of livelihood".

[1-3] As stated in West Coast Home Improvement Co. v. Contractors' State License Board, 68 Cal.App.2d 1, 5, 155 P.2d 863, 866, the purpose of a writ of supersedeas "is to preserve to an appellant the fruits of a meritorious appeal, where they might otherwise be lost to him." However, "supersedeas is not a writ of right, but is one resting in the discretion of the appellate court to be issued in proper cases * * *. Since issuance of a writ of supersedeas is discretionary, it is incumbent upon the applicant therefor to show that substantial questions will be presented upon the appeal; that such special reason exists, differing from the ordinary case revoking a contractor's license, why the decree of the registrar and the judgment of the trial court sustaining it should be stayed pending the appeal." Moreover, "It will always be presumed that another court acting within its jurisdiction has acted with judicial discretion."

[4, 5] Nothing is presented by way of the instant petition for rehearing which entitles petitioner to issuance of the writ of supersedeas. As set forth in the West Coast case cited above and other cases, the writ is "one resting in the discretion of the appellate court". It is, like other original writs, to be made use of only in those cases where some unusual situation is presented which cannot well be handled otherwise. If supersedeas is to issue in every case where an appeal is pending and where appellant might possibly suffer injury due to the lapse of time or other reason, its use would become well nigh universal. That such is not the legitimate purpose of the writ is made clearly evident from a reading of the cases and all pertinent text passages. The writ is in no sense a matter of right.

Without in any manner passing upon the merits of the appeal from the order denying a writ of mandate to review the proceedings which resulted in a revocation of petitioner's license to practice medicine, it need only be said that the showing on rehearing is again deemed insufficient to warrant issuance of supersedeas pending the appeal.

The petition is denied.

WHITE, P. J., and DRAPEAU, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 47

JEWELL et al. v. NEW HOTEL U. S. GRANT et al.
Civ. 3980.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 17, 1950.

Action by Arthur C. Jewell and Anna C. Jewell against The New Hotel U. S. Grant and others for injuries allegedly sustained by plaintiff wife when she fell on stairway leading from lobby to basement. The Superior Court, San Diego County, Robert B. Burch, J., entered judgment for plaintiffs, and the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that giving of instruction that every stairway should have at least one handrail and if a stairway was five feet or more in width it should have one handrail on each side, if error, was not prejudicial error.

Judgment affirmed.

Appeal and error ⇐1066

Where hotel guest fell on stairway leading from lobby to basement and action against hotel for injuries was brought and tried entirely on question whether there was negligence in permitting certain conditions at bottom of stairway to exist at time and whether guest acted properly in view of existing conditions, and there was no dispute as to existence of handrail, giving of instruction regarding necessity of handrail, if improper, was not prejudicial.

James C. Henderson, San Diego, Sidney A. Moss, Henry F. Walker, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Bodkin, Breslin & Luddy, S. V. O. Prichard, all of Los Angeles, John Coker, San Diego, for respondents.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

The plaintiffs were guests at the U. S. Grant Hotel in San Diego. A banquet room, some rest rooms, and a bar in the basement were reached by a stairway from the lobby. This stairway had a handrail on each side which stopped two steps from the bottom. A covered chain was kept across the entrance "when the management did not want people to go down." At the time here involved the bar was not open and the full lights were not on, but the chain was not in place.

About 1:00 o'clock P. M. on January 31, 1947, Mrs. Jewell inquired for a rest room and was directed down this stairway by an employee of the hotel. She fell just before reaching the bottom and was injured. In this action for damages, the complaint alleged that this stairway was carelessly maintained in that the handrail did not extend all the way but stopped two steps from the bottom; and that the area around the foot of the stairway was so dimly lighted that the precise situation could not be discerned by a person passing from the stronger light above into this dimmer area. The answer denied these allegations and alleged contributory negligence. There was ample evidence supporting the allegations of the complaint. Mrs. Jewell testified that she passed down the stairway hanging onto one rail; that "it was dark there and it seemed like the carpets and everything all ran together"; that "where the banister stopped" she thought she was on the last step; and that believing she had reached the bottom she stepped out and fell. A jury returned a verdict for the plaintiffs, and the owners of the hotel have appealed from the judgment.

The only point here raised is that one instruction was prejudicial. It reads: "Every stairway shall have at least one handrail and if a stairway is five feet or more in width it shall have one handrail on each side." It is argued that no statutory provision requiring handrails existed when this building was erected; that while such a provision was later adopted and subsequently became section 16413 of the Health and Safety Code, it was not retroactive and was not applicable; that the court thus told the jury, as a matter of law, that the defendants were required to have "certain handrails"; and that this was prejudicial since the issue as to the manner in which the handrail was "maintained" was a question of fact.

Assuming that this instruction should not have been given, we are unable to see how it could have been prejudicial. There is nothing in the statutory provision, whether applicable or not, as to the length or extent of such a handrail. There is nothing about this in the instruction, and it did not tell the jury, as a matter of law or otherwise, that the defendants were required to have any "certain handrails." This handrail was admittedly there, whether required or not, and the action was brought and tried entirely on the question as to whether or not there was negligence in permitting certain conditions at the bottom of the stairway to exist at the time, and whether Mrs. Jewell had acted properly in view of the existing conditions. The defendants having furnished this handrail, whether or not it was required by law is immaterial and could have no effect either way on the issues involved.

There being no dispute as to the existence of the handrail the only question for the jury was as to whether the accident happened through the fault of Mrs. Jewell or was caused by the defendants' negligence in permitting an improper and dangerous condition to exist. The instruction complained of had nothing to do with this question, in no way confused the issue or misled the jury, and could have had no effect, prejudicial or otherwise, on the verdict.

The judgment is affirmed.

GRIFFIN and MUSSELL, JJ., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 204

SCHMIDT v. SEARS et al.
Civ. 7725.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 25, 1950.

John Richard Schmidt, a minor, by and through his guardian ad litem, Virgil Schmidt, sued John B. Sears and others for personal injuries sustained as the result of being struck by a semi-tractor truck driven by named defendant. From a judgment of the Superior Court, San Joaquin County, R. M. Dunne, J., on a jury's verdict for defendants, plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Adams, P. J., held that certain instructions to the jury were not erroneous as implying that plaintiff was negligent and assuming, contrary to evidence, that plaintiff was in the roadway, rather than on sidewalk, at street intersection, at the time of the accident.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Negligence ⇐138(2)
Trial ⇐191(7), 296(9)

In personal injury suit, instruction that contributory negligence presupposes plaintiff's failure to exercise due care for his own safety, thereby proximately contributing to his injuries, that such negligence is affirmative defense and must be proved by preponderance of evidence, unless shown or inferable from plaintiff's evidence, and that jury must find against plaintiff, if they found him guilty of negligence proximately contributing to accident, was not erroneous as implying that plaintiff was negligent and placing burden on him to establish lack of contributory negligence, especially when considered with preceding and following instructions.

2. Trial ⇐191(7)

In action for injuries to boy struck by defendants' truck, alleged to have been negligently driven across sidewalk in making right turn at street intersection, instruction to find for defendants, if jury found from evidence that accident might have been caused in several different ways, but could not determine proximate cause thereof, was not erroneous as assuming, contrary to evidence, that there might have been more than one cause, in view of evidence warranting inference that plaintiff was in roadway, not on sidewalk, at time of contact. Vehicle Code, § 83.

3. Trial ⇐260(1)

The trial court's refusal of proposed instruction, adequately covered in other instructions given jury by court, was not error.

4. Appeal and error ⇐1005(3)

Where jury apparently resolved conflicts in evidence in defendants' favor and trial court denied plaintiff's motion for new trial, based partly on alleged insufficiency of evidence to justify verdict for defendants, District Court of Appeal is bound by such conclusions on plaintiff's appeal from judgment on verdict.

Joseph C. Tope, Harry C. Stanley, Stockton, for appellant.

Neumiller, Ditz, Beardslee & Sheppard, Stockton, for respondents.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

This action was brought by John Richard Schmidt, a minor about eleven years old, by his father as guardian ad litem, to recover damages for injuries sustained by said minor, when, as he alleges, he was struck, hit and run over by a semi-tractor truck owned by defendants Ben and John F. Vogel, and driven by defendant John B. Sears, their employee. The accident occurred about 7:45 P. M., October 24, 1944, when the semi-tractor was making a right turn from East Lindsay Street onto Eugenia Street in Stockton. Plaintiff alleged and contended at the trial that he was walking in the space provided for pedestrians at the southwest corner of the intersection, and that in making the turn the driver of the truck negligently operated his vehicle and caused it to run over his left foot and leg, crushing the foot and also injuring his right leg and hip.

Defendants denied negligence on their part, and alleged contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff. Trial of the issues before a jury resulted in a verdict for defendants, a new trial was denied, and plaintiff has appealed from the judgment which followed.

[1] Appellant's first assignment of error is that the trial court erred in giving the following instruction:

"In this case the answer of the defendants denies negligence and sets up the defense of contributory negligence. Contributory negligence presupposes that the plaintiff did not exercise due care for his own safety and that his failure so to do proximately contributed to his own injuries. It is an affirmative defense and must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence, unless it can be shown or inferred from the evidence given in support of plaintiff's case. But when it has been established it is a complete defense to the action. If you find, therefore, that the plaintiff in this case was negligent and that his negligence proximately contributed in any degree to the accident, then and in that event, you must find against the plaintiff. And this is true even though you should find that the defendant was also negligent, or that he was more negligent than the plaintiff."

Appellant argues that the word "presupposes" in such instruction carried the implication that plaintiff was negligent, and that the jury were in effect told by the court that he was negligent, that it placed the burden of establishing lack of contributory negligence upon plaintiff and did not state that such an affirmative defense must be proven by defendants.

While not commending the instruction as a model, we do not think that it implied that the boy was negligent, especially when considered in connection with the instructions which preceded and followed it. The court had previously stated that in applying the law to the facts of the case it was necessary that the jury fully understand certain legal terms and definitions. It then advised them that before a plaintiff could recover damages for the negligence of another he must show, not only that the other was negligent, but that such negligence proximately caused his injuries; what constitutes proximate cause; the necessity that plaintiff prove negligence by a preponderance of the evidence; the meaning of preponderance of the evidence, and that of negligence and ordinary care. Then followed the paragraph which appellant attacks. Apparently the court there was defining or attempting to define "contributory negligence." It is obvious that there could not be contributory negligence without negligence, or, as the court said, a failure to exercise due care for his own safety; but the instruction then continued to assert, in effect, that to constitute contributory negligence such failure to exercise due care must have proximately contributed to his own injuries. It was then stated that contributory negligence is an affirmative defense which must be proven by a preponderance of the evidence, unless shown or inferred from evidence given for plaintiff. Then the court, by what followed in the paragraph, left it to the jury to find, first whether the boy was negligent, and second whether his negligence proximately contributed to the accident. We cannot assume that the jurors did not know the meaning of affirmative defense, or that it must be shown by the defendants, especially since the words "unless it can be shown or inferred from the evidence given in support of plaintiff's case," so indicated. Furthermore, the jury were instructed immediately thereafter that where negligence is not predicated upon the violation of a statute it devolves upon a party asserting it to show that the other party failed to act as a reasonably prudent person would have acted, and that failure to do so proximately caused or contributed to the accident; also that if defendant obeyed the law applicable and did all that an ordinarily prudent person would have done in the circumstances to avoid the accident, he was not chargeable with negligence; and that "the same rule applies to plaintiff with reference to the charge of contributory negligence."

[2] Such instruction was then followed by further instructions as to the duties of persons driving motor vehicles upon public streets, the right of one, himself upon a highway and proceeding in a lawful manner, to assume that others will obey the law, and what constitutes a highway, a roadway, a sidewalk and an intersection. The jury were then advised that if they found that plaintiff was a pedestrian on the sidewalk, and using due care, and that the driver of the truck drove his vehicle upon the sidewalk and struck and injured plaintiff, it would be their duty to find for plaintiff; that "If, after considering all the evidence in this case, you find that the accident might have been caused in several different ways but you cannot determine what was the proximate cause of said accident and the resulting injuries, if any, to plaintiff, then your verdict must be in favor of defendants." It also stated that the instructions should not be understood as conveying any intimation whatever that in the opinion of the court plaintiff had or had not made out a case.

Appellant also purports to find reversible error in the latter above quoted language, saying that it assumes that there may have been more than one cause of the accident, and that the evidence showed but one cause, to wit, that Sears drove his vehicle across the sidewalk as "the only other possible cause would have to be the doubtful inference based on the assumption that plaintiff was in the roadway as defined by Vehicle Code Section 83 at the time the contact occurred." But we cannot say that such an inference could not have been drawn from the evidence. It was not contended by plaintiff that the front end of defendants' equipment crossed the sidewalk, but only that the semi-trailer portion did so. Sears testified that he made the turn so as to bring the rear end of his equipment out so it would clear the curb or the corner; also that there were trucks parked on both sides of the street into which he turned, which made it more necessary for him to "hit the center" than it would have been otherwise. He drew upon the map introduced in evidence the position of his equipment when it came to rest, and stated that the truck could not have been turned as plaintiff contended or he could not have got through the street, and gave his opinion that the right rear wheels were five or six feet from the sidewalk when he made the turn.

Plaintiff's own evidence showed that at the time of the accident he and his father were returning from a trip to a market on Lindsay Street, that the boy was proceeding some 10 or 12 feet in front of his father, and that they were bound for their home on the opposite side of Eugenia Street when Sears made his turn into that street. All that the criticised instruction advised was that if the jury were satisfied that there was no negligence on the part of defendant Sears, and that the accident did not result from his negligence, and they were satisfied that there was an accident but could not determine the proximate cause of same, under such circumstances they must find for defendants. This was but another way of saying that under such circumstances plaintiff had not met the burden cast upon him of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that Sears was negligent. We cannot see how the giving of such instruction caused injury to plaintiff's cause.

[3] Appellant's next assignment of error is that the court failed to give the following instruction proposed by him: "You are instructed that contributory negligence is not based upon a possibility of avoiding an accident. The plaintiff, John Richard Schmidt, cannot be charged with contributory negligence simply because he might have avoided the accident had he acted differently. If said John Richard Schmidt did all that an ordinarily prudent person would have done under the circumstances to avoid the accident, then I instruct you that the plaintiff, John Richard Schmidt, was not guilty of any contributory negligence." The matter stated in said proposed instruction was adequately covered in other instructions given by the court, particularly by the following:

"If you find from the evidence presented in this action by a preponderance thereof that plaintiff herein, John Richard Schmidt, was a pedestrian on the sidewalk of East Lindsay Street in the City of Stockton, County of San Joaquin, State of California, on the 24th day of October, 1944, and while he was such a pedestrian, and using due care, the defendant herein, John B. Sears, did then and there drive and operate a semi tractor truck from the roadway on said Lindsay Street to and upon the sidewalk on which said John Richard Schmidt was at said time a pedestrian and thereby said semi tractor truck struck and injured said John Richard Schmidt, then it will be your duty to find for the plaintiff and against the defendants."

This stated the exact contention of appellant and his father, that Sears drove his vehicle over the sidewalk, and there struck and injured plaintiff. We think that the instructions as a whole fairly and adequately instructed the jury.

And as to plaintiff's contention that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment it is inferable that the jury did not accept the testimony of plaintiff and his father as to how the accident occurred, and that they found no negligence on the part of the driver. There was evidence regarding the nature of the boy's injuries which rendered his story of how they were sustained doubtful. The medical report showed that injuries to his foot, the left one, were fractures of three small bones on the outside thereof; that there was no fracture of the big toe nor of the ankle. The equipment and its load weighed approximately 31 tons, and had same run over the boy's foot undoubtedly it would have severely crushed same and broken his ankle. Also originally no complaint was made to the doctor about any injury to the right hip, nor did that doctor note any, though he made a thorough examination to determine the extent of plaintiff's injuries. Some months later there was complaint of pain in the right knee, but it was not until April, 1946, that plaintiff told a different doctor that he had been struck a blow on the right hip in the accident; but that doctor stated that pain in that leg may well have been attributable to the extra burden imposed upon it because of the injuries to the left foot.

[4] The jury apparently having resolved conflicts in the evidence in favor of defendants, and the trial court having denied plaintiff's motion for a new trial, which was based in part on alleged insufficiency of the evidence, we are bound by those conclusions.

The judgment is affirmed.

VAN DYKE and PEEK, JJ., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 35

HURT v. BASALT ROCK CO., Inc., et al.
Civ. 7694.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 17, 1950.

Action by E. P. Hurt against Basalt Rock Company, Inc., a corporation, and A. B. Streblow. The Superior Court, Napa County, Mervin C. Lernhart, J., entered an order vacating a judgment entered by the clerk of the Superior Court of Napa County, and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that, where defendant was granted new trial conditioned on plaintiff's acceptance of $300 damages in lieu of $12,500 award, the reviewing court's decision on former appeal affirming order and holding that appeal did not convert original conditional order into unconditional order granting new trial but that order required performance of conditions on demand, became law of case, and when, after the going down of the remittitur, the plaintiff refused on demand to elect to accept the reduction, the order granting new trial became operative as an unconditional order to that effect, and clerk of trial court could not enter judgment on $12,500 verdict.

Order affirmed.

Appeal and error ⇐1195(3)

Where defendant was granted new trial conditioned on plaintiff's acceptance of $300 damages in lieu of $12,500 award, reviewing court's decision on former appeal affirming order and holding that appeal did not convert original conditional order into unconditional order granting new trial but that order required performance of conditions on demand, became law of case, and when, after the going down of the remittitur, plaintiff refused on demand to elect to accept the reduction, the order granting new trial became operative as unconditional order to that effect, and clerk of trial court could not enter judgment on $12,500 verdict. Code Civ.Proc. § 660.

King & Ghidella, Napa, Fink & Keyston, San Francisco, for appellant.

Coombs, Dunlap & Blanckenburg, Clarence N. Riggins, all of Napa, for respondents.

PEEK, Justice.

On a former appeal this court confirmed an order of the Superior Court of Napa County conditionally granting the motion of defendant Basalt Rock Company for a new trial. See Hurt v. Basalt Rock Co., 84 Cal.App.2d 81, 190 P.2d 240, 241. The present appeal is a sequel to the former, presenting issues arising out of events transpiring subsequent to our decision in the former appeal and in particular from an order of the trial court vacating a judgment entered by the clerk of the Superior Court of said county.

The facts pertinent to a determination of the issues presented herein are that on October 26, 1946 a jury verdict in the sum of $12,500.00 was entered in favor of plaintiff Hurt. The motion of defendant Basalt Rock Company for a new trial, above referred to, was granted by an order dated December 20, 1946, wherein it was stated: "* * * the motion for a new trial is denied, but conditionally nevertheless that plaintiff file appropriate legal documents herein effectuating his consent that he take judgment in the sum of $300.00 or in lieu of $12500.00 and that the judgment may be reduced from $12500.00 to $300.00 * * * otherwise and in the event plaintiff does not exercise the option hereby extended to him the motion for a new trial is hereby granted * * * upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence." Plaintiff on December 31, 1946, took an appeal from said conditional order granting defendants' motion for new trial and the order was affirmed by this court by its decision filed March 1, 1948. On March 30, 1948, a petition for rehearing was denied, and on May 1, 1948 the remittitur was filed in the Superior Court. On September 29, 1948, defendants gave written notice to plaintiff requesting him to elect whether or not he would exercise the option extended to him in the trial court's order of December 20, 1946. Plaintiff made no response to this demand. On November 15, 1948, plaintiff caused the clerk of the trial court to enter a judgment on the verdict filed in October, 1946. On November 30, 1948 plaintiff served defendants with a notice of motion to direct the clerk to issue on execution on said judgment. On December 3, 1948 defendants served plaintiff with a notice of motion for an order vacating, annulling and striking from the files said judgment upon the ground that making an entry thereof was unauthorized and that the judgment was void. On December 13, 1948 the trial court denied the motion of plaintiff for the execution and granted defendants' motion to vacate, annul and strike from the files said judgment.

Plaintiff now appeals from the order denying his motion for issuance of an execution on the judgment entered by the clerk, and from the order granting defendants' motion to strike said judgment from the files. His contention is that since the conditional order for a new trial entered December 20, 1946 specified no time limit for him in which to make an election "The whole matter of the disposition of the motion for a new trial was arrested, suspended and held in abeyance, during the election to be made by the plaintiff without limitation as to time." In other words he argues that as the "trial court made no final ruling whatsoever on the motion for a new trial, inasmuch as no time whatsoever was specified wherein the plaintiff was to file such consent if he so elected", and as said motion was not determined within the sixty day period provided for in section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it must be considered as denied, and hence it was proper to enter judgment on the verdict.

At the outset appellant is confronted with the effect of this court's decision on the former appeal. There this court held that by reason of the appeal having been taken the original conditional order of the trial court had not been converted into an unconditional order granting a new trial and that the order should be construed as requiring performance of the conditions on demand. We there said, after referring to the holdings of Holtum v. Grief, 144 Cal. 521, 526, 78 P. 11: "It necessarily follows that by reason of the appeal herein the original conditional order of the trial court has not been converted into an unconditional order granting a new trial by failure of plaintiff to accept the conditions thereof, and therefore by reason of our conclusion herein said conditional order of December 20 is to be construed as requiring performance of the conditions on demand." Whereupon this court determined that the order made was supported by substantial evidence, and being therefore within the proper exercise of discretion by the trial court, the order was affirmed. The petition for a rehearing was denied and thereafter a petition for hearing by the Supreme Court was denied. This court's holding became the law of the case and, as a result, when, after the going down of the remittitur, plaintiff and appellant herein refused on demand to elect to accept the reduction the order granting new trial became operative as an unconditional order to that effect. When in the face of such an order the clerk of the trial court presumed to enter a judgment upon the verdict originally rendered his act was completely without authority of law and was a nullity.

The orders appealed from are affirmed.

ADAMS, P. J., and VAN DYKE, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 175

PEOPLE v. PASCALE.

Cr. 4464.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Aug. 22, 1950.

Joe L. Pascale was convicted in the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Charles W. Fricke, J., of violating the Health and Safety Code by possessing heroin and his motion for new trial was denied, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Wood, J., held that the evidence sustained the conviction.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal law ⇐260(11)

In prosecution for violation of Health and Safety Code by possession of heroin, where defendant contended that he had admitted that heroin was his in order to keep his girl friend from getting into trouble, and there were certain contradictions in testimony of police officer as to whether defendant had asked officer if girl had been arrested, such contentions raised question of fact for determination of trial court. Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

2. Criminal law ⇐260(11)

In prosecution for violation of Health and Safety Code by possession of heroin, where defendant, who was in jail on suspicion of robbery at time heroin was found in his hotel room, testified that at time of his arrest officers had searched everything in his room and had not found heroin, whether it was fair inference from evidence that heroin was planted in defendant's room while he was in jail was question of fact for determination of trial court. Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

3. Criminal law ⇐260(11)

In prosecution for violation of Health and Safety Code by possession of heroin, where defendant was in custody on suspicion of robbery at time hotel management and defendant's girl friend searched his room and discovered heroin, and defendant contended that he had admitted that heroin was his in order to keep his girl from getting into trouble after police officer had informed him that girl friend was going to be booked on heroin charge, whether it was fair inference that defendant was entrapped into admission that heroin was his was question of fact for trial court. Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

4. Poisons ⇐9

Evidence sustained conviction for violation of Health and Safety Code by possession of heroin. Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

Everett W. Leighton, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Gilbert Harelson, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

WOOD, Justice.

Defendant was charged with violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code in that on September 11, 1949, he unlawfully had in his possession a preparation of heroin. Trial by jury was waived. Defendant was convicted, and he appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant asserts that the evidence was insufficient to support the judgment. On September 11, 1949, appellant was a tenant of room 111 of a hotel in Los Angeles and he had occupied that room since July 7, 1949. The manager of the hotel went to that room on September 11th to make an investigation regarding a complaint that there was a disturbance in the room the night before. A girl by the name of Lupe, who said she knew the appellant, was with the manager when he went into the room. The room, in which there was some of appellant's clothing, was in an upset condition. While the manager was making a search therein he noticed a slit in the end of the mattress and he found therein a finger stall containing 18 grams of heroin. The finger stall and contents will be referred to as exhibit A. Lupe asked the manager if she could have exhibit A. He handed it to her and then, without having left her presence, he took it from her and went downstairs to the hotel desk and called the police. On September 11, 1949, at the time the heroin was found, and also on September 10th, appellant was in jail at a police station "on suspicion of robbery."

Police Officer Hansford testified as follows: On September 11th he took appellant from the jail to said hotel room. The hotel manager gave exhibit A to the officer. While the exhibit was in front of the officer he said to appellant, "What about this stuff, Joe?" Appellant shrugged his shoulders and did not say anything. The officer said, "Well, come on, what is the deal, is this yours or isn't it? It was found here in your room." Appellant said, "Yes, it is mine, I put it there. I bought it two days ago. I hid it there and I was picked up for robbery last night, and when I was going to get out of the robbery beef, I was going to cap it up and peddle it." The officer asked him if he was still going with Lupe. Appellant replied, "Yes."

Appellant testified as follows: When he was arrested on suspicion of robbery on September 10th he was in said hotel room and at that time the officers searched the room thoroughly and looked at everything. He did not put exhibit A in the bed. He told Officer Hansford that the exhibit was not his (appellant's). When the officer said he had Lupe in jail and was going to book her too (on the heroin charge), then he (appellant) said exhibit A was his so that she would not get in trouble.

[1-4] Appellant argues that his explanation of the events, and certain contradictions in the testimony of Officer Hansford as to whether the appellant had asked the officer if a girl had been arrested, raise grave doubts as to appellant's guilt. He also argues that since, according to his testimony, the officers searched everything in his room on September 10th and did not find the heroin, it is a fair inference from the evidence that it was planted in his room while he was in jail. He argues further that it is a fair inference that he was entrapped into an admission that the heroin was his. The matters involved in these arguments were question of fact for the determination of the trial court. The judgment is supported by ample evidence.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

SHINN, P. J., and VALLÉE, J., concur.

98 Cal.App.2d 787

NIEMANN v. DEVERICH et al.
Civ. 17648.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 7, 1950.

Charles Niemann, Jr., brought action against Marilyn Deverich and another on a note, wherein named defendant alleged as an affirmative defense that she was a minor at time she signed the note and that after reaching her maturity she disaffirmed the obligation. A judgment that plaintiff take nothing as against named defendant was entered by the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Ben Rosenthal, J., and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Wilson, J., held that where marriage of minor female over age of 18 years was not a lawful marriage because purported husband was lawful husband of another when ceremony took place, minor female would not be deemed an "adult person" under statute, and note signed by her after purported marriage ceremony could be disaffirmed by her after reaching her maturity.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Infants ⇐99

In an action on note, where defendant alleged affirmative defense that she was a minor at time she signed note and that after reaching her maturity she disaffirmed the obligation, California decree annulling defendant's marriage, which occurred before defendant signed note, on ground that defendant's husband had another lawful wife when marriage ceremony between him and defendant was performed because Idaho divorce decree secured by him from his then wife was void was admissible for purpose of showing that defendant was still under legal disability of minority when she signed note. Civ.Code, §§ 25, 86.

2. Infants ⇐10

The statute providing that any female who has reached age of 18 years and thereafter contracts a lawful marriage shall be of age of majority and be deemed an adult person for purpose of entering into any contract refers to a lawful marriage, and, hence, a marriage, in order to accomplish adulthood of a minor female, must be lawful. Civ.Code, § 25.

3. Infants ⇐10, 58(1)

Where marriage of minor female over age of 18 years was not a lawful marriage because purported husband was lawful husband of another when ceremony took place, minor female would not be deemed an "adult person" under statute, and note signed by her after purported marriage ceremony could be disaffirmed by her after reaching her maturity. Civ.Code, §§ 25, 86.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Adult Person".

4. Infants ⇐47

One deals with infants at his peril.

5. Infants ⇐58(1)

The law shields minors from their lack of judgment and experience and under certain conditions vests in them the right to disaffirm their contracts. Civ.Code, § 25.

6. Infants ⇐58(1)

It is policy of law to protect minor against himself and his indiscretions and immaturity as well as against the machinations of other people and to discourage adults from contracting with an infant. Civ.Code, § 25.

7. Infants ⇐47

A person deals with a minor at his peril whether or not he has notice, actual or constructive, of minor's disability. Civ. Code, § 25.

John M. Dvorin, A. L. Abrahams and Henry B. Ely, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Francis B. Cobb, Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILSON, Justice.

Action on a promissory note dated November 1, 1946, for the sum of $6,950 signed by Marilyn Deverich and Albert Deverich. Defendant Marilyn filed an answer admitting her signature on the note and alleging as affirmative defenses that she was a minor at the time she signed the note and that after reaching her maturity she disaffirmed the obligation; that she received no consideration for the purported obligation; that the same was incomplete and was never executed or delivered by her to plaintiff; that prior to the date of the purported note a guardian of her person and estate had been appointed, guardianship proceedings had never been terminated, and the purported obligation was not executed or approved by her guardian, was not approved by the court and no claim thereon had been filed in the guardianship proceedings. She further alleged that at the time of her marriage to defendant Albert he had a wife living from whom he had not been legally divorced; that she was nineteen years of age when she married him and subsequently procured a decree of annulment of the marriage.

The evidence is not before us, the appeal having been taken on the judgment roll and a statement of the case which merely set forth the points plaintiff desired to present on the appeal.

The facts as recited in the findings are as follows: Defendant Marilyn was born on April 25, 1926, and her twenty-first birthday was the twenty-fifth day of April, 1947; on August 4, 1933, in the superior court of Los Angeles County, Alzoa Garland Scott was appointed guardian of her person and estate; the guardianship has never been terminated; no order of the court was obtained permitting the transaction with plaintiff or the execution of the promissory note which is the subject of the action.

On January 3, 1946, Albert Deverich filed a complaint for divorce in the district court of the state of Idaho against his then wife Marjorie May Deverich; on January 4 the defendant entered her appearance in the action, admitted service of summons and complaint, waived time to answer, notice of motion to set, notice of trial, and all further proceedings and consented that the action be heard as a default. On the same date the default of defendant Marjorie was entered, the action was tried, the court found that the plaintiff had been a resident of the state of Idaho for the statutory jurisdictional period immediately preceding the commencement of the action and adjudged that the marriage be dissolved.

On January 8, 1946, four days after the entry of the decree of divorce, defendants in the instant action, Marilyn and Albert, entered into a marriage ceremony in Yuma, Arizona, and until February 28, 1947, lived together as man and wife and held themselves out to be such, which fact was known to and relied upon by plaintiff Niemann in accepting the note sued upon.

On April 8, 1947, defendant Marilyn, by her guardian ad litem, filed a complaint in the superior court of Ventura County for the annulment of her marriage, alleging the same was void for the reason that defendant Albert, ever since December 10, 1937, had had a wife living, and the purported decree of divorce obtained by him in Idaho was void. Defendant Albert consented that his default be entered and the court adjudged the marriage void from the beginning and annulled the same.

On April 25, 1947, defendant Marilyn delivered to plaintiff a written disaffirmance of the promissory note which is the subject of this action. The court found that Marilyn did not receive any consideration from plaintiff and was not required to return any consideration to him.

Prior to October, 1946, Marilyn signed the promissory note sued on herein. The date, name of payee and the amount of the note were blank when she signed it. The blanks were filled by Albert Deverich before the note was delivered to plaintiff.

The foregoing is a statement of facts as found by the trial court. Appellant does not contend that any finding is not sustained by the evidence.

As conclusions of law the court declared that the promissory note was signed by Marilyn in blank when she was under twenty-one years of age; she was entitled to give the notice of disaffirmance and having received no consideration she was not required to restore anything to plaintiff; at the time of the signing of the note she was under the legal disability of a guardianship proceeding pending in the superior court of Los Angeles County; her affairs were under the control of her guardian, and no consent of the court was obtained with respect to the note or to any of the transactions above mentioned.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact and conclusions of law the court adjudged that plaintiff take nothing as against defendant Marilyn Deverich. From this judgment plaintiff has appealed.

[1, 2] When the Ventura decree of annulment of the marriage of defendants Marilyn and Albert was offered in evidence plaintiff objected to the introduction of the proceedings on the grounds that by reason of the fact that he was not a party to the action the decree was not binding on him, citing sections 25 and 86 of the Civil Code; that the evidence of such proceedings was an impairment of the obligation of his contract, denied him due process of law, and denied full faith and credit to the Idaho decree of divorce, citing Sherrer v. Sherrer, 334 U.S. 343, 68 S.Ct. 1087, 1097, 92 L.Ed. 1429, 1 A.L.R.2d 1355, and Coe v.

Coe, 334 U.S. 378, 68 S.Ct. 1094, 92 L.Ed. 1451, 1 A.L.R.2d 1376. Plaintiff maintains that the Idaho decree of Albert from his former wife determined his marital status and since that decree purported to dissolve his marriage to Marjorie he was free to marry defendant Marilyn. The answer to this contention is that the Ventura decree annulled the marriage of Marilyn and Albert on the ground that the Idaho decree was void and that Albert was the lawful husband of Marjorie when the marriage ceremony between him and Marilyn was performed. The evidence offered (1) in the Idaho case, (2) in the Ventura trial, and (3) in the trial of the instant case is not before us and we are not called upon to review any one of those proceedings. We cannot go behind the Ventura decree since it has become final and it must be presumed that (1) the Ventura court heard evidence with reference to Albert's former marriage and to his purported residence and divorce in Idaho; (2) the evidence sustained the Ventura decree that his marriage to Marjorie still subsists and in consequence thereof his purported marriage to Marilyn was and is void.

The case of Daut v. Daut, 98 Cal.App.2d 375, 220 P.2d 63, is not in conflict with our conclusions. That action was between the same persons who had been parties to a former divorce action in Maryland in which the plaintiff in the California case had submitted to the jurisdiction of the Maryland court by filing an answer to the complaint. The defendant wife in the California case, plaintiff in Maryland, contested the action and based her defense on the Maryland decree. In the instant case a stranger to the Idaho divorce action is involved and she was the plaintiff in the Ventura annulment case wherein the decree is final. Her putative husband was defendant in the latter action and made no defense thereto.

Plaintiff relies on section 25 [1] of the Civil Code to sustain his position. That section provides that "any female who has reached the age of 18 years and thereafter contracts a lawful marriage * * * shall * * * be of the age of majority and be deemed an adult person * * * for the purpose of entering into any contract, * * *" This provision refers to a "lawful" marriage, hence a marriage, in order to accomplish adulthood of a minor female, must be "lawful." If it is not lawful it is not a marriage and her minority status remains unchanged.

The lawfulness of the marriage must be shown. If, as in the instant case, the validity of the marriage is questioned the jurisdiction of the court and the disability of the guardianship remain in effect until the validity of the marriage is determined. If it were not so a wilful ward could frustrate the purpose of the guardianship by contracting an illegal marriage and by such marriage free himself from the protection which the law has provided and which the court was endeavoring to give by the appointment of a guardian. In re Guardianship of Jacobson, 30 Cal.2d 312, 322, 182 P.2d 537. Through her guardian ad litem the validity of Marilyn's marriage was attacked in the Ventura court. That court having rejected the Idaho proceedings and the purported decree of divorce therein en-

1. Section 25 reads: "Minors are all persons under 21 years of age; provided, that this section shall be subject to the provisions of the titles of this code on marriage and shall not be construed as repealing or limiting the provisions of Section 204 of this code; provided, further, that any female who has reached the age of 18 years and thereafter contracts a lawful marriage, or who has contracted a lawful marriage and thereafter reaches the age of 18 years, shall in the first instance upon contracting such marriage, and in the second instance upon reaching the age of 18 years, be of the age of majority and be deemed an adult person for the purpose of entering into any engagement or transaction respecting property or her estate, or for the purpose of entering into any contract, the same as if she was 21 years of age. Subsequent judgment of annulment of such marriage shall not deprive such female person of her adult status once attained under the foregoing provision, unless such judgment is obtained in an action commenced prior to her reaching the age of 18 years, in which latter event she shall be deemed to have remained a minor at all times notwithstanding such marriage."

tered, we need not look further into this phase of the proceedings since in determining the instant case the trial court and this court on appeal are bound by the Ventura judgment.

[3] The object of the statute is to protect the persons and estates of those who lack capacity to properly care for themselves and to preserve their property from improvident use. Since the marriage of defendants was not a "lawful" marriage, Marilyn is not "deemed an adult person," she was legally incapable of entering into a contract, and the promissory note sued on is therefore void as to her.

[4] Plaintiff further relies on section 86[2] of the Civil Code. As to this contention he is confronted with the "settled principle of law that one deals with infants at his peril." Pollock v. Industrial Accident Comm., 5 Cal.2d 205, 211, 54 P.2d 695, 698. In that case the court remarked that the effect of the opinion would be to compel the insurance carrier to pay the Industrial Accident Commission's award twice—seemingly a harsh and unjust result, but such was the consequence of the carrier's having dealt directly with a minor.

[5, 6] The law shields minors from their lack of judgment and experience and under certain conditions vests in them the right to disaffirm their contracts. Although in many instances such disaffirmance may be a hardship upon those who deal with an infant, the right to avoid his contracts is conferred by law upon a minor "for his protestion against his own improvidence and the designs of others." It is the policy of the law to protect a minor against himself and his indiscretions and immaturity as well as against the machinations of other people and to discourage adults from contracting with an infant. Any loss occasioned by the disaffirmance of a minor's contract might have been avoided by declining to enter into the contract. Flittner v. Equitable Life Assurance Society, 30 Cal.App. 209, 216, 157 P. 630; Tracy v. Gaudin, 104 Cal.App. 158, 160, 285 P. 720.

[7] While a person deals with a minor at his peril whether or not he has notice, actual or constructive, of the minor's disability, plaintiff in the instant case is chargeable with notice of the fact that Marilyn was under the disability of minority when he accepted her note. Her guardianship proceedings were instituted and a guardian of her person and estate was appointed by the superior court of Los Angeles County in 1933. Such proceedings have been at all times a public record, of which plaintiff is presumed to have had notice, and have been notice to the world of the incapacity of the ward to enter into a contract. The guardianship proceedings have never been terminated. The guardian did not join in or consent to the transaction with plaintiff and the court did not authorize or approve it.

Our conclusion that defendant Marilyn is not liable on the promissory note sued on for the reasons above expressed renders it unnecessary to discuss the further defenses presented.

Judgment affirmed.

McCOMB, J., concurs.

MOORE, P. J., deeming himself disqualified does not participate herein.

2. Section 86 reads: "A judgment of nullity of marriage rendered is conclusive only as against the parties to the action and those claiming under them."

COEN v. SUPERIOR OPTICAL CO., Inc.

COEN et al. v. SUPERIOR OPTICAL CO., Inc.

Civ. 17628.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 16, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 1, 1950.

Hearing Denied Oct. 9, 1950.

Action by Franklin Coen against Superior Optical Company, Inc., to recover the agreed price or reasonable value of goods sold and delivered, wherein defendant filed a counterclaim and a cross-complaint for damages against Franklin Coen, Fashion Zyl Company, and Aaron Coen. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Edwin L. Jefferson, J., entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McComb, J., held that substantial evidence sustained every finding of fact upon which the judgment was necessarily predicated and that fact that some immaterial findings were contrary to admissions in pleadings did not constitute ground for reversal.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Sales ⇐359(1)

In action to recover the agreed price or reasonable value of goods sold and delivered, substantial evidence sustained every finding of fact upon which judgment for plaintiff was necessarily predicated.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1071(3)

That some immaterial findings of fact were contrary to admissions in the pleadings did not constitute a ground for reversal of judgment based on findings of fact sustained by substantial evidence.

3. Appeal and error ⇐1011(1)

Trial court's findings of fact based on conflicting evidence are binding on appeal.

4. Appeal and error ⇐1033(7)

Where findings of fact were made on all the material issues raised and they were contrary to defendant's contention, failure to enter judgment on defendant's cross-complaint was not prejudicial to defendant, since any judgment entered on cross-complaint must have been in favor of plaintiff.

Clyde Thomas, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Redmond & Redmond, Los Angeles, for respondent.

McCOMB, Justice.

Plaintiff as assignee of Fashion Zyl Co. brought an action on two common counts, first for goods, wares and merchandise sold and delivered of the reasonable value of $2,046.75, and second, to recover for goods, wares and merchandise sold defendant at the agreed price of $2,046.75.

Defendant filed an answer, a counterclaim, and a cross-complaint for damages. After trial before the court without a jury judgment was entered for the plaintiff for the sum sued for, predicated upon findings of fact and conclusions of law in favor of plaintiff. No judgment was entered on the cross-complaint.

Facts: The evidence disclosed that plaintiff's assignor had sold defendant Superior Optical Company spectacle frames of the value of $2,046.75.

Contention: Defendant claims that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the findings of fact upon which the judgment was predicated and that certain findings are contrary to admissions in the pleadings.

[1–3] This contention is without merit. Examination of the record discloses substantial evidence to sustain each and every finding of fact upon which the judgment was necessarily predicated. There are certain immaterial findings which are contrary to admissions in the pleading. However, since the findings are immaterial they do not constitute a ground for reversal of the judgment. There are numerous conflicts in the evidence which the trier of fact resolved in favor of plaintiff and the court's finding is binding on appeal. Further discussion of the evidence would serve no useful purpose.

[4] Likewise there is no merit in defendant's contention that a judgment was not entered on the cross-complaint. Findings of fact were made on all the material issues raised, and since these findings were contrary to defendant's contention a judgment if entered on the cross-complaint would have been in favor of plaintiff and hence no prejudicial error has been shown by defendant.

Affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., and WILSON, J., concur.

RUINELLO v. MURRAY.
Civ. 17473.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 14, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 8, 1950.

As Modified Sept. 11, 1950.

Hearing Granted Oct. 9, 1950.*

Henry Ruinello sued Dorothy Clune Murray, individually and doing business as Ninth & Broadway Building, for breach of an oral employment contract. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, William B. McKesson, J., for defendant, plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that defendant was not estopped to set up the statute of frauds as a ground of demurrer to plaintiff's third amended complaint.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Frauds, statute of ⇐144

In action for breach of oral contract to employ plaintiff for five years, defendant was not estopped to set up statute of frauds as ground of demurrer to plaintiff's third amended complaint, in absence of allegation of defendant's promise to execute written contract and subsequent failure to do so.

2. Pleading ⇐225(2)

Where three different judges found four complaints filed by plaintiff fatally defective as against demurrers interposing statute of frauds, trial court did not abuse its discretion in sustaining demurrer on such ground to third amended complaint without leave to amend it.

* Subsequent opinion 227 P.2d 251.

Seymour D. Sommer, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, Frederic H. Sturdy, all of Los Angeles, John T. Pigott, Jr., Los Angeles, of counsel, for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

The appeal herein is from a judgment in favor of defendant, entered pursuant to an order sustaining a demurrer to plaintiff's third amended complaint without leave to amend.

Stripped of extraneous matter, the basic allegations of the third amended complaint may be briefly summarized. In October, 1945, defendant entered into an oral employment agreement with plaintiff, whereby in consideration of plaintiff giving up an alleged "permanent lifetime position" with another employer as engineer and superintendent and taking a similar position with defendant, the owner of the Ninth and Broadway Building in Los Angeles, for the term of five years, defendant would pay plaintiff a monthly salary of $350 plus a yearly bonus of 20% of the gross income in excess of $114,000.

As noted in the respondent's brief, "None of the terms or conditions of the alleged employment which plaintiff claims to have given up is pleaded, other than that it was 'oral' and was 'a permanent lifetime job'." It is also alleged that plaintiff had been personally acquainted with defendant for 20 years and was previously employed by defendant and the latter's husband. Finally, the complaint alleges that after having worked for defendant from December 1, 1945 to February 21, 1948, plaintiff was summarily discharged. The complaint seeks recovery of $11,050, which is the sum plaintiff would have been entitled to receive as salary during the balance of said employment agreement. Plaintiff also prays for an accounting as to gross profits and for judgment of 20% of the yearly gross profits in excess of $114,000.

Plaintiff's original complaint, substantially the same as the one now in issue, was attacked by demurrer—"on the ground that the oral agreement, admittedly not to be performed within one (1) year, was invalid under the Statute of Frauds." Demurrer thereto was sustained, as was a demurrer to the amended complaint. Plaintiff's second amended complaint was, by stipulation, followed by a third amended complaint to which demurrer was sustained without leave to amend.

[1] It is argued by appellant that, "based on the facts set forth in his complaint, the respondent is estopped to set up the Statute of Frauds * * * where the appellant acted in good faith upon the statements and representations made to him by the respondent, and in reliance of said representations has changed his position so materially that it would be unconscionable to permit the respondent to set up the Statute of Frauds as a defense." In this connection it is claimed that after inducing appellant to give up a permanent lifetime position, "and when he had so successfully performed his duties that the bonus to which he was entitled reached a figure which was not contemplated by the respondent, she arbitrarily discharged the appellant to avoid her obligation, and now seeks to raise the technical defense of the Statute of Frauds."

The case of Seymour v. Oelrichs, 156 Cal. 782, 106 P. 88, 134 Am.St.Rep. 154 is relied upon by the appellant. The facts in that case are stated as follows at page 797 of the opinion in 156 Cal., at page 95 of 106 P.: "Practically, defendants said to plaintiff: 'We want you to enter our employ at once. We know that to do so you must give up your life position in the police department and that you are not willing to do this unless you are assured of employment for ten years at $300 a month. A written contract is, under our statute, essential to guarantee you such employment. We will execute this contract just as soon as Mr. Fair returns from Europe. Go ahead and resign your position now and commence work with us at once, and it will be all right. The written contract will be given as promised.'" It was there held that subsequent repudiation of the oral contract "would constitute such a manifest fraud as would justify the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel."

The complaint here in question neither alleges nor suggests such a state of facts, nor is any such situation even remotely intimated in any of the four complaints filed. It is further to be noted that the complaint fails to allege any facts connected with the former employment, or "what, if anything, plaintiff gave up by leaving his former position", other than by alleging a previous "permanent lifetime job".

The recent case of Monarco vs. Lo Greco, 35 Cal.2d 621, 220 P.2d 737, has been cited by appellant, where in the language of the headnote, the Supreme Court held that "The doctrine of estoppel to plead the statute of frauds is not rendered inapplicable merely because a change of position * * * did not result from reliance on a representation that a contract would be put in writing * * *. It is the promise that the contract will be performed, rather than such representation, on which a party relies when he changes his position, and the other party would be unjustly enriched by his acceptance of benefits under the contract". The factual situation in the Monarco case, however, was in no respect similar to that of the instant controversy, and the case is of no assistance in maintaining the appellant's position. The present situation is simply one in which the pleader failed to set up requisite facts to justify the application of the principles of estoppel.

[2] It is further contended by appellant that the trial court abused its discretion in sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend. As stated in respondent's brief, "Plaintiff has four times attempted to plead a cause of action, and to each of the complaints put in issue defendant has appeared and interposed the Statute of Frauds. Three different judges found plaintiff's complaint fatally defective."

The right to amend is simply the right to have a reasonable opportunity to plead a cause of action. In the instant appeal the record clearly reveals that appellant has been accorded this opportunity, and that no manifest abuse of discretion has taken place.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., and DRAPEAU, J., concur.

STOCKTON DRY GOODS CO. v. GIRSH.

Civ. 7795.

Sac. 6084.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 11, 1950.

Hearing Granted Oct. 9, 1950.*

The Stockton Dry Goods Company, a California corporation, brought action against Stanley Girsh for a judicial interpretation whereby the plaintiff leased to the defendant space in its department store for a shoe department, and whereby rent was fixed at a sum equal to 10% of all net cash sales and 11% of all net charge sales, with neither a minimum nor maximum rental being specified. The Superior Court of San Joaquin County, George F. Buck, J., rendered a judgment interpreting the lease as permitting the plaintiff to conduct shoe departments in the store, and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, J., held that there was an implied obligation on the part of the plaintiff not to operate a shoe department.

Judgment reversed with directions.

1. Contracts ⇐152, 167, 168
Customs and usages ⇐10

In the interpretation of contracts, stipulations which are necessary to make contracts reasonable, are implied in respect to matters concerning which the contract manifests no contrary intention, and all things that in law or usage are considered as incidental to contracts, or as necessary to carry them into effect, are implied therefrom, unless some of them are expressly mentioned therein, when all other things of the same class are deemed to be excluded. Civ.Code, §§ 1655, 1656.

2. Landlord and tenant ⇐200(1)

Where lease by corporation operating a department store, of space in the store to tenant to conduct a shoe department, provided that rent was a sum equal to 10% of all net cash sales and 11% of all net charge sales, and specified neither a minimum nor maximum rental, corporation was burdened with implied covenant that he would, during term of lease, conduct business of selling shoes in space allotted to him and that he would so conduct such business as to maintain as large a trade as could be done with reasonably active and competent management and that such business would be conducted for mutual benefit of both parties. Civ.Code, §§ 1655, 1656.

3. Landlord and tenant ⇐200(1)

Rule that where a minimum rental is to be paid, of such amount as to justify a conclusion that parties had fixed on such minimum amount as chief consideration moving to lessor, than there is no implied obligation that lessee shall conduct business in leased premises, notwithstanding a stipulation that lessor should share in gross sales returns, has no application where sole rental is a percentage of sales made.

4. Landlord and tenant ⇐200(1)

Where lease by corporation operating a department store, of space in the store to tenant to conduct a shoe department, provided that rent was a sum equal to 10% of all net cash sales and 11% of all net charge sales, and specified neither a minimum nor maximum rental, there was an implied obligation on part of corporation not to operate a shoe department in the store. Civ. Code, §§ 1655, 1656.

5. Landlord and tenant ⇐130(2)

Every grant of right, interest, or benefit in land carries with it an implied undertaking on part of lessor that grant is intended to be beneficial and that so far as the lessor is concerned, lessor will do no act to interrupt the free and full enjoyment of the thing granted, and if lessee's ordinary and lawful enjoyment of demised land is substantially interfered with by acts of lessor or those lawfully claiming under him, though neither title to the land nor the possession thereof is otherwise affected, implied "covenant of quiet enjoyment" is breached.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment".

6. Landlord and tenant ⇐171(1)

There may be a constructive eviction of a tenant by wrongful acts, or failure to act on part of landlord so as essentially to deprive the tenant of beneficial enjoyment of the premises.

* Subsequent opinion 227 P.2d 1.

Willens & Boscoe, Gordon J. Aulik, all of Stockton, for appellant.

Mitchell, Johnson & Bates, Clive W. Johnson, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Justice.

Plaintiff and respondent, a corporation operating a department store in the City of Stockton, brought this action against its tenant, defendant and appellant, Stanley Girsh, for declaratory relief. It sought judicial interpretation of the written lease between the parties. Specifically, it sought to have the court declare that it could operate within its department store one or more shoe departments, notwithstanding the lease gave to its tenant a right to conduct such an enterprise therein. The court by its decree declared that it had such a right and from this judgment Girsh appealed. We will hereafter refer to the appellant as lessee and the respondent as lessor.

The lease in question was entered into between the present lessor's predecessors in interest, and the lessee, and recited that the lessors were conducting and maintaining a "so-called department store" in the City of Stockton and that the lessee was desirous of renting a portion of the store premises for the purpose of conducting a shoe department. The term granted was for five years, with option to renew for an additional five-year term. The rent to be paid was fixed at a sum equal to ten per cent of all net cash sales and eleven per cent of all net charge sales. Neither minimum nor maximum rental was specified. The lessee agreed to live up to the rules of the lessor in conducting its department store and to permit all adjustments to be made by the store manager; the lessee further agreed to submit all advertising copy to the manager and that such must be approved by him before it could be published.

The trial court found to be true all of the allegations of the complaint, including the specific allegation that the lessor had, under the lease, the right to operate and conduct one or more shoe departments in the department store and in competition with the business being conducted by the lessee. The trial court rendered its declaratory judgment as prayed for in the complaint, decreeing that the lessor had rights as above alleged, and that, conversely, the lessee did not have the sole and exclusive right to operate the shoe department.

While the lessee, in support of his appeal from said judgment, advances a number of contentions having to do with rulings made by the court during trial, it is unnecessary, we think, to deal with those matters. The principal contention which the lessee urges concerns the court's construction of the lease; and since we believe the trial court erred therein and that its judgment must, therefore, be reversed, we will proceed in this opinion to discuss that matter only.

[1] It is a basic rule in the interpretation of contracts that stipulations which are necessary to make a contract reasonable are implied "in respect to matters concerning which the contract manifests no contrary intention", and that "All things that in law or usage are considered as incidental to a contract, or as necessary to carry it into effect, are implied therefrom, unless some of them are expressly mentioned therein, when all other things of the same class are deemed to be excluded." Civ.Code, §§ 1655, 1656.

[2, 3] Concerning this lease it is apparent that, because the rental payable thereunder consists of a substantial portion of the gross business done in the shoe department, the lessee is burdened with the implied covenant that he will, during the term of the lease, conduct the business of vending shoes in the space allotted to him and further that he will so conduct such business as to maintain as large a trade as could be done with reasonably active and competent management. This is so because it is the evident purpose of both parties, as gathered from the conditions expressed in the lease, that such business should be conducted. We do not have here a lease under which the lessee is free to either occupy and use the leased premises or leave them vacant and unused, as is the general right of a lessee under the ordinary lease. Selber Bros. v. Newstadt's Shoe Stores, 203 La. 316, 14 So.2d 10; Mayfair Operating Corp. v. Bessemer Properties, 150 Fla. 132, 7 So. 2d 342; Cissna Loan Co. v. Baron, 149 Wash. 386, 270 P. 1022, and Garden Suburbs Golf & Country Club v. Pruitt, 156 Fla. 825, 24 So.2d 898; see, also, annotation to report of same case in 170 A.L.R. at 1107, et seq. In saying that the contract between the parties here, although containing no express statement of an agreement on the part of the lessee that such business would be conducted for the mutual benefit of both parties, nevertheless contained an implied condition to that effect, we are not unmindful of such cases as Cousins Inv. Co. v. Hastings Clothing Co., 45 Cal.App.2d 141, 113 P.2d 878. There it was held that where a minimum rental was to be paid, of such amount as to justify a conclusion that the parties had fixed upon such minimum amount as the chief consideration moving to the lessor, then there was no implied obligation to conduct business in the leased premises, notwithstanding a stipulation that the lessor should share in the gross sales returns. Such a rule has no application where the sole rental is a percentage of the sales made.

[4] But a covenant on the part of the lessee, either express or implied, to conduct a shoe vending business in the leased space within the lessor's store, carried with it the reciprocal implied obligation on the part of the lessor to place no obstacle in the way of the lessee in his performance of that covenant. Competition by the lessor through independently conducted shoe departments, free and unlimited, such as is permitted by the decree of the trial court, is utterly inconsistent with the duty which the lessor under this lease assumed toward the lessee and would be destructive of the relationship intended by the parties. This becomes apparent when we consider what is involved in competition.

Competition means striving for something that is sought by another at the same time; a contention of two or more for the same object or for superiority; rivalry as between aspirants for honors or for advantage in business. Merchants' Nat. Bank of Glendive v. Dawson County, 93 Mont. 310, 19 P.2d 892, 896. Competition is the struggle between rivals for the same trade at the same time. Ferd. Heim Brewing Co. v. Belinder, 97 Mo.App. 64, 71 S.W. 691, 695. It is the effort of two or more parties acting independently to secure the custom of a third party by the offer of the most favorable terms. It is the struggle between rivals for the same trade at the same time. "At common law a trader, * * *, in order to get another man's customers, could use any means not involving violation of the criminal laws, or amounting to 'fraud,' 'duress,' or 'intimidation,' * * *. The trader may boast untruthfully of the merits of his wares, so long as it does not take the form of false statements, amounting to slander or willful misrepresentation of the quality of a rival product, or a libel upon the character, business standing, and credit of his rival, or an effort to induce the public to believe that the product he sells is that manufactured and sold by the rival. He may send out circulars, or give information verbally, to customers of other men, knowing they are bound by a contract for a definite term, although acting upon the expectation and with the purpose of getting the trade of such persons for himself. He may use any mode of persuasion with such a customer, keeping within the limitations stated, which appeals to his self-interest, reason, or even his prejudices. He may descant upon the extent of his rival's facilities compared with his own, his rival's means, his insolvency, if it be a fact, and the benefits which will result to the customer in the future from coming to the solicitor rather than remaining where he is. He may lawfully, at least so far as his rival is concerned, cut prices to any extent, to secure his trade. So long as what he does is done to benefit his own trade, and, in taking over the customers of another, he keeps within the limitations heretofore defined, he is safe from legal restraint at the instance of a competitor in following 'the law of competition,' which takes little note of the ordinary rules of good neighborhood or abstract morality. The person whose customers are thus taken from him cannot complain, for no right of action lies in his favor against him who solicitated his customer, since the solicitor exercised a legal right in a legal way, and the exercise of a legal right in a legal way, for a lawful purpose, will not give a cause of action." Citizens' Light, Heat & Power Co. v. Montgomery Light & Water Power Co., C.C., 171 F. 553, 560.

We have referred to the meaning of the word "competition" in order to emphasize the character of action which the trial court has found respondent may indulge in towards its lessee notwithstanding its lease with him. It appears from the lease that respondent's space is located on the mezzanine floor within the respondent's department store. Within the lawful limits of competition, therefore, when customers enter respondent's store and ask its employees and salesmen where the shoe department is to be found, respondent, if it be competing for that trade, may have such people so answered as to direct them to its own department; it could even have such persons informed that the best bargains in shoes were in its department rather than in that of its lessee; it could place directive and solicitous signs at the entrance to its department store, directing patrons to its own shoe department. Enough has been said to show that this decision that the respondent lessor here can enter into open competition with its lessee is a matter of serious and vital import to the lessee. We hold that under this lease the lessor would violate its own covenant with the lessee by running a competitive shoe vending business within the confines of its department store.

[5, 6] There is yet another reason in law why the trial court's interpretation of the contract between the parties here cannot be upheld. It has been said that every grant of right, interest or benefit in land carries with it an implied undertaking on the part of the grantor that the grant is intended to be beneficial and that so far as the lessor is concerned he will do no act to interrupt the free and full enjoyment of the thing granted, Dexter v. Manley, 1849, 4 Cush. 14, 58 Mass. 14; and that if the lessee's ordinary and lawful enjoyment of the demised land is substantially interfered with by the acts of the lessor or those lawfully claiming under him, although neither the title to the land nor the possession thereof is otherwise affected, this implied covenant is breached. Sanderson v. Berwick [1884], L.R. 13 Q.B.Div. [Eng.] 547-C.A.; 62 A.L.R. 1257; Winchester v. O'Brien, 266 Mass. 33, 164 N.E. 807, 64 A.L.R. 900. These implied undertakings are often called covenants of quiet enjoyment and acts in violation thereof may amount to eviction, actual or constructive. "Not only actual expulsion may amount to an eviction, but there may be constructive eviction by wrongful acts, or failure to act on the part of the landlord which essentially deprives the tenant of beneficial enjoyment of the premises." Williston on Contracts, Sec. 892; see, also, Grinnell Bros. v. Asiuliewicz, 241 Mich. 186, 216 N.W. 388; Civ.Code § 1927; Mills v. Richards, 84 Cal.App. 52, 257 P. 542; Landon v. Hill, 136 Cal.Ap. 560, 29 P.2d 281; Aaker v. Smith, 87 Cal.App.2d 36, 196 P.2d 150.

We hold that, under the terms of this lease, for the lessor to compete with its lessee, as the trial court has decreed that it has the right to do, could well amount to a constructive eviction through violation of the covenant of quiet enjoyment implied in the lease, and hence that the judgment of the trial court cannot be upheld.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter a decree adjudging and declaring that the lessor, respondent herein, does not have the right under the lease in question to conduct a business of selling shoes in its department store in competition with appellant, and that appellant, as lessee of respondent, does have the sole and exclusive right to operate such business in the department store of respondent to the exclusion of all others.

ADAMS, P. J. and PEEK, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 10

PEOPLE v. FIELDS.

Cr. 818.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 10, 1950.

David Harold Fields was convicted in the Superior Court of Kern County, W. L. Bradshaw, J., of murder in the first degree, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that evidence did not establish that defendant was guilty of murder in the first degree.

Judgment affirmed as modified.

1. Homicide ⇐22(2)

Under statutory test for first-degree murder a deliberate and preconceived intent to kill must be satisfactorily shown. Pen. Code, § 189.

2. Homicide ⇐22(2)

The "deliberate and premeditated" intent to kill necessary to render a homicide first-degree murder negatives idea of hurried and thoughtless action and reasonably implies existence of some plan or design in advance of taking action, and true test is not duration of time as much as it is the extent of reflection. Pen. Code, § 189.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Deliberate and Premeditated".

3. Homicide ⇐282

In fixing degree of murder of which a defendant is guilty, considerable discretion must be left to jury, but such discretion must be exercised in accordance with standards fixed by law.

4. Homicide ⇐254

A defendant who shot and killed another person with a rifle was guilty under the evidence only of murder in the second degree and not of first-degree murder. Pen. Code, § 189.

West, Vizzard, Howden & Baker, Bakersfield, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Gilbert Harelson, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

The defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree, with life imprisonment, and he appeals from the judgment.

It was stipulated that Jack Olds was killed on October 29, 1948, by a rifle shot fired by the appellant. They lived in a mountain community in Kern County, had been friends for some years, and had been drinking together late in the afternoon of that day. They arrived at appellant's home about 7:00 o'clock, both showing the effect of liquor but being "friendly and in good spirits." They left half an hour later, ostensibly to take Olds home, and went to Austin's Cafe. The appellant became angry at Austin, who refused to serve him a drink, and a scuffle ensued during which Austin's shirt was badly torn. The appellant then made some uncomplimentary remarks about Austin, and Olds insisted that Austin was right. The appellant then struck Olds with his fist, and Olds clinched with him to keep from having trouble. They scuffled and Olds kept telling him to go home to his wife and children. Olds finally had the appellant on the ground and told him he was going to take him home. With the help of a bystander Olds got him in the car and they drove off.

They reached home about 8:00 o'clock and appellant's wife and sister-in-law, who will be referred to as the sister, came out and all four then entered the house. Between the front room and the kitchen was a bedroom, in which a rifle stood beside a dresser. The appellant stopped in the bedroom and leaned against or over this dresser. The other three went on into the kitchen, and Olds and the sister were talking as the wife started to prepare some coffee. Appellant's wife then saw him at the bedroom door holding the rifle at his hip. As she walked toward him two shots were fired, one of which killed Olds. The sister ran out of the house and the appellant started to follow and fired two shots toward her. He then turned around and fired two shots in the direction of his wife. She ran to a neighbor's home and phoned for help.

The only eyewitnesses were the wife and sister. The sister testified that she and the wife went out when the others returned at 8:00 o'clock; that "Jack had Dave down"; that "Dave told Jack to let him up, and he let him up"; that she could not remember that anything else was said; that they did not appear to be angry; that Olds assisted the appellant into the house; that he "leaned against the dresser" in the bedroom and she and the others went on into the kitchen; that she and Olds were talking, and "Oh, 5 or 10 minutes" elapsed before anything occurred; that two shots were then fired and Olds fell; that nothing had been said by or to the appellant; that she ran past him and out the front door and on to a neighbor's; and that he fired two shots toward her as she ran.

The appellant's wife testified that as a result of a prior accident he suffered pain at times and took sedative pills; that he had been inclined to be irritable and moody since the accident, and would "act differently" when he took the pills and drank at the same time; that he took two of these pills about 7:00 that night; that when they returned about 8:00 the appellant asked her to get Jack "to turn him loose"; that Jack asked him if he would behave if he let him loose; that Jack helped him up and they came in the house with their arms about each other; that as she moved a child from the bed the appellant fell over on the dresser and "sprawled" across it; that she tried to get him to bed but he wouldn't get up; that she and the others went into the kitchen; that she thought she would make some coffee; that she took the top off the coffee pot to empty it and went past the appellant toward the front door; that hearing a noise she turned around and saw him standing in the door holding the gun at his hip and "looking at the wall, right behind Jack"; that neither he nor Olds said anything; that she walked toward him intending to knock the gun aside but as she raised her hand the gun went off twice; that the sister screamed and ran out, and the appellant fired two shots in that direction; that she dropped the coffee pot and he turned and fired twice toward her; that she ran to a neighbor's and called for help; that she then heard appellant "hollering" that he had shot Jack and asking her to call a doctor; and that she ran back and found him leaning over Olds, saying he had shot him, and asking him not to die.

A number of witnesses who arrived later, some within ten minutes, testified as to what they saw and heard. It thus appears that the appellant then spoke clearly and knew what he was doing and saying, but otherwise this evidence is not very material here. He used considerable profane language but this was habitual with him. While he was somewhat angry and abusive toward some of these witnesses, he was friendly toward others whose help he desired. He told one witness that he did not kill Olds but knew who did and would tell at the proper time. Later, he admitted that he had killed Olds and asked if the witness thought he ought to have an attorney. At one time he told a witness that he had killed Olds all right but that he hoped he could "beat this rap."

The appellant first contends that the evidence is not sufficient to show "beyond a reasonable ground of doubt" that this killing was willful, deliberate and premeditated; that the court should have, on its own motion, instructed the jury according to section 1097 of the Penal Code; and that the degree of the crime should be reduced.

[1-3] Under the statutory test for first degree murder something more than an intentional killing is required, and a deliberate and preconceived intent to kill must be satisfactorily shown. People v. Holt, 25 Cal.2d 59, 153 P.2d 21; People v. Bender, 27 Cal.2d 164, 163 P.2d 8, 19. In the latter case, it is pointed out that "deliberate" implies something that is unhurried and arrived at as a result of careful thought and of weighing the reasons for and against a contemplated action; that it means the opposite of hasty, impetuous or impulsive; and that "premeditate" means "To think on, and to revolve in the mind, beforehand; to contrive and design previously." The words "deliberate" and "premeditated" not only negative the idea of hurried and thoughtless action but reasonably imply the existence of some plan or design in advance of taking action. "The true test is not the duration of time as much as it is the extent of the reflection." People v. Thomas, 25 Cal.2d 880, 156 P.2d 7, 18. In defining first degree murder, Penal Code, Sec. 189, the legislature has clearly required substantially more reflection than that involved in a mere intent to kill, and seems to have intended by the "any other kind" clause that such a killing must be one of equal cruelty or aggravation with those specifically described. While considerable discretion in fixing the degree must be left to the jury, this must be exercised in accordance with the standards fixed by law. "Mere conjecture, surmise, or suspicion is not the equivalent of reasonable inference and does not constitute proof." People v. Bender, 27 Cal.2d 164, 163 P.2d 8, 21.

Applying these standards and rules we think the evidence here is not sufficient, beyond a reasonable doubt, to establish first degree murder. The killing was admitted and there was ample evidence that the appellant was not so intoxicated as to be incapable of forming the required intent. The main question here, as at the trial, is as to the degree of the crime. The respondent contends that the evidence sufficiently shows an intent to kill formed as a result of deliberate premeditation, with a preexisting reflection. It is argued that the appellant had time to deliberate during the ride from Austin's Cafe to his home, and that he could have been "pondering" during the time he was in the bedroom.

[4] The evidence indicates that this killing occurred as a result of one of those sudden and unconsidered impulses upon which men in the condition of appellant not uncommonly act, and which they regret after even slight reflection, rather than as a result of any deliberation or premeditation. While it appears that the appellant displayed some anger while at the cafe, mostly against Austin, and that he later objected to being taken home, there is no evidence that he remained angry at Olds and none of any immediate provocation shortly before the shooting. He showed no such anger when they reached home, although he seems to have insisted upon returning to the cafe, and he accepted Olds' help into the house without taking offense. There was no previous enmity and no threats were uttered at any time. The time he spent in the bedroom was short at best, and his condition was not conducive to careful thought or reflection. His wife passed him without observing any changed position and then, before she had crossed the room, heard a noise and saw him with the gun. There is nothing to indicate that his action was planned or thought over, and the evidence rather strongly indicates that he suddenly grabbed the gun, which was kept right there, after he heard someone come into the room. In any event, he acted very quickly after his wife entered the room and any conclusion that he had been "pondering" and had decided to thus act is necessarily based on guess and conjecture. There is no substantial evidence justifying an inference, beyond a reasonable doubt, that he deliberately and with premeditation formed or carried out an intent to kill.

We have not overlooked two other points raised by the appellant, which we regard as without merit.

The judgment is modified by reducing it to murder in the second degree and, as so modified, is affirmed. The cause is remanded with directions to pronounce judgment accordingly.

MUSSELL, J., concurs.

99 Cal.App.2d 83

In re WINDER'S ESTATE.

MARTENS et al. v. CENTRAL BANK.
Civ. 14397.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 21, 1950.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of A. H. Winder, deceased, wherein the Central Bank was appointed special administrator and filed a petition for authorization to take designated actions in handling the estate, to which Beatrice Martens and another objected. The Superior Court for Alameda County, Donald K. Quale, J., entered an order instructing the special administrator and the objectors appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that the order was void in that it purported to authorize special administrator to take actions with respect to conduct of affairs of a corporation which could only be taken by board of directors of the corporation, though estate owned all the outstanding capital stock of corporation.

Order reversed.

1. Executors and administrators ⇐82

Probate court had no jurisdiction to instruct special administrator of estate owning entire outstanding capital stock of a corporation as to how to conduct the affairs of the corporation. Probate Code, § 589.

2. Corporations ⇐1

Death of owner of entire outstanding capital stock of corporation did not deprive board of directors of corporation of power to take corporate action.

3. Corporations ⇐1

In administering estate of deceased owner of entire outstanding capital stock of corporation, it could not be treated as the alter ego of decedent in absence of evidence of the required unity of interest and ownership.

4. Corporations ⇐197
Executors and administrators ⇐93(1)

Decedent's estate owning entire outstanding capital stock of corporation, had power to act as a stockholder by voting the stock, but not to run the corporation. Probate Code, § 589.

5. Executors and administrators ⇐82

Special administrator may properly ask probate court for instructions as to how to vote corporate stock belonging to decedent's estate. Probate Code, § 588.

6. Executors and administrators ⇐82

Order of probate court authorizing special administrator of estate of deceased owner of all outstanding capital stock of corporation to lease on specified terms office owned by corporation and conduct corporate affairs at trust office of administrator and consent to payment by corporation of a corporate debt and fixing terms upon which corporation should sell realty belonging to it was void, since it purported to authorize special administrator to take actions which could only be taken by board of directors of the corporation. Probate Code, §§ 588, 589.

Beatrice Martens, in pro per.

Breed, Robinson & Stewart, Oakland, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

The Central Bank was duly appointed special administrator of the above entitled estate. After its appointment, it filed a petition with the Probate Court requesting authorization and permission to take certain designated actions in the handling of the estate. This petition recites that among the assets of the estate is the entire issued and outstanding capital stock of A. H. Winder Corporation, and that, among the assets of the corporation, is a designated piece of improved real property which, during Winder's lifetime, was used as the office of the corporation. It is alleged that it costs the estate nearly $300 a month to maintain this office, that such expense is unnecessary, and that the special administrator can rent the building for $150 a month. It is also alleged that the corporation owns a large number of vacant lots in Oakland, and owns a large number of contracts of sale on some of these lots upon which monthly payments are being made. In connection with these matters the special administrator requested an order instructing and authorizing it to abandon the existing office of the corporation and to conduct the corporate affairs from the office of the administrator, and for authorization to lease the corporation's office to a designated tenant at a designated rental. The petition also alleged that the corporation, together with one Luella Murray, in 1946, had executed a promissory note to the Central Bank for $20,000; that there was a balance of $7,900, plus interest, due on this note; that the note was secured by a deed of trust covering real property owned by the corporation, and that money was available to pay this note. As to this matter the petition prays for an order authorizing the administrator to pay the balance due on this note.

The appellants, heirs of A. H. Winder, filed certain objections to this petition for instructions. After a contested hearing the Probate Court issued what purports to be an "Order Instructing Special Administrator." The order closely follows the prayer of the petition. It "ordered, adjudged and decreed," that the "special administrator be and it is hereby authorized to conduct the affairs of the A. H. Winder Corporation * * * from its trust department office * * *. That sales of unimproved real property belonging to said corporation be made and approved only where such sales are advantageous to the estate"; that the special administrator "is hereby authorized to lease" the corporate office at a designated rental, and the order prescribes the terms of the lease. The order also "authorized" the special administrator "to consent to A. H. Winder Corporation" paying out of its funds the $7,900, plus interest, owed to the Bank. From this order, on a clerk's transcript, the objectors, in propria persona, appeal.

[1] The appellants urge several reasons why the order must be reversed, among them being that the court had no power to instruct the special administrator as to how to conduct the affairs of the corporation. This point is sound and requires a reversal.

[2, 3] An inspection of the petition and the order discloses that the subject matter of the proceeding concerned only corporate transactions over which the estate and the Probate Court had no power or control. The estate owned the stock of the corporation—it did not own or control the corporation. The death of the sole stockholder did not deprive the board of directors of the corporation of power to take corporate action. Yet the order appealed from purports to dictate corporate policy. Respondent admits that the estate has no power to act in reference to corporate matters, and that the estate does not own the lots or office building, or owe the debt involved. Respondent further concedes that the record does not disclose that the corporation was the alter ego of Winder, as there is no evidence of the required unity of interest and ownership. This concession is in accordance with the law. In re Estate of Greenwald, 19 Cal.App.2d 291, 295, 65 P.2d 70; Judelson v. American Metal Bearing Co., 89 Cal.App.2d 256, 263, 200 P.2d 836.

[4] So far as the record discloses, the estate of Winder is simply the sole stockholder of the A. H. Winder Corporation, but it is the stockholder, not the corporation. The power of the estate is simply to act as a stockholder. Klopstock v. Superior Court, 17 Cal.2d 13, 17, 108 P.2d 906, 135 A.L.R. 318. Its power is to vote the stock, not to run the corporation. Probate Code, § 589; see, 11b Cal.Jur. p. 258, § 848.

[5, 6] Respondent's contention is that what it desired and sought was in reality nothing more than instructions as to how to vote the corporate stock. Undoubtedly, the special administrator could have asked for instructions on this subject. Probate Code, § 588. But the petition and the order cannot be construed as requesting an authorization as to how to vote the stock. Both clearly related to corporate transactions. The order purports to authorize the special administrator to abandon the corporate office and to conduct the corporate affairs at the trust office of the special administrator. It purports to fix the terms of sales of property to be made by the corporation. It purports to authorize the special administrator to lease the corporate office at a specified rental and purports to fix the terms of the corporate lease. It purports to consent to the corporation paying a corporate debt. All these were matters within the power and control of the board of directors. By no reasonable construction can the order appealed from be construed as an order instructing the special administrator how to vote corporate stock so as to elect directors who would carry out the designated policies. The petition requested and the order purported to authorize the special administrator to take actions which could only be taken by the board of directors of the company. As such, the order was void and must be reversed.

The order appealed from is reversed.

BRAY and FRED B. WOOD, JJ., concur.

YOUNG v. HAMPTON et al.
Civ. 17799.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 14, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 8, 1950.

Hearing Granted Oct. 9, 1950.*

H. Young sued W. J. Hampton and others, to enforce a mechanic's lien for the construction of a dwelling house and garage on defendants' lot. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Harry R. Archbald, J., found the balance due on contract, and adjudged a lien accordingly and directed its foreclosure if not paid. Appellants appealed from a judgment thereof and from an order denying motion for a new trial. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that where bank and federal government, through the Veterans' Administration, lent money and credit on basis of a fixed contract between the contractor and the veteran for construction of a home, but contractor and veteran, without advising bank or Veterans' Administration, made a subsequent agreement that home was to be constructed on a cost plus arrangement, contractor could not enforce cost plus contract, but could recover entire credit extended by bank on original contract.

Judgment affirmed as modified.

* Subsequent opinion 228 P.2d 1.

1. Contracts ⇐103, 105

Any bargain is illegal if either formation or performance thereof is prohibited by Constitution or statute. Civ.Code, §§ 1550, 1598, 1667.

2. Army and navy ⇐51

Where bank and federal government, through Veterans' Administration, lent money and credit on basis of fixed fee contract between a contractor and veteran for construction of a home, but contractor and veteran, without advising bank or Veterans' Administration, executed a second contract that home would be constructed on a cost plus basis, contractor could not enforce cost plus contract, but could recover entire credit extended by bank on original contract. Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, § 500 et seq., 38 U.S.C.A. § 694 et seq.

3. Appeal and error ⇐607(1)

Where record on appeal consisted of settled statement of oral proceedings, in lieu of reporter's transcript, District Court of Appeal was required to consider facts therein set forth, especially in view of fact that trial judge who originally tried case retired and work of settling the statement was done by another judge. Rules on Appeal, rules 4(e), 7.

4. Appeal and error ⇐662(4)

Where covenant in contract for construction of a home stated that contractor was to prosecute work diligently and continuously to completion, and statement of case on appeal showed that work was begun and completed on specified dates, trial court did not err in refusing to grant owner rent for contractor's delay in completing home.

Geo. L. Hampton, Van Nuys, for appellants.

Ogden, Crocker & Steelman, Los Angeles, for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

Plaintiff contractor sued to enforce a mechanic's lien for the construction of a dwelling house and garage on defendants' lot. The trial court found that the work had been done on a cost-plus contract, with a balance due of $2,839.00, adjudged a lien accordingly, and directed its foreclosure if not paid.

Settled statement of oral proceedings on appeal, in lieu of reporter's transcript, has been filed. This statement presents the following facts essential to an understanding of the case:

Defendants, husband and wife, were young people. He was just about to become twenty-one years old when discussions were begun between him and his wife, and plaintiff, relative to building a house. The wife was nineteen. The husband was a veteran of the second world war. And they wanted a home of their own.

Plaintiff gave defendants a letter, stating that she would build them a house and garage, for $8,500, on a lot to be purchased by them. This was to enable defendants to apply to a bank for a veterans' loan for the cost of the house, garage and lot.

They all knew that such a loan would be, in part, guaranteed by the federal government. But, they made a side agreement, that defendants would pay plaintiff the actual cost of the improvements, plus plaintiff's contractor's compensation of 10%, with a maximum of $9,000. Thus, the money secured by the veteran on a veterans' loan was to be used, first, to buy the lot, and secondly, to pay the contractor as far as it would go. Then, the veteran and his wife agreed to pay plaintiff the balance of the cost of the home, together with 10% commission.

After appraisals were made for the Veterans' Administration and for the bank, plaintiff and defendants made and executed a writing, by which plaintiff agreed to build the house and garage, and defendants agreed to pay plaintiff $8,283 for the work. This contract was presented to the bank, with defendants' application for the loan, although, as stated, it did not represent the agreement of the parties.

Upon these representations, the loan was made by the bank, and in part guaranteed by the United States government. Then, before construction was begun, and without advising the bank or the Veterans' Administration, these parties made and executed a second writing, evidencing their real agreement—that the work would be done on a cost-plus basis.

Thereupon, the house and garage were built. And it was the cost-plus contract which was enforced by judgment of the Superior Court.

The government guaranty of part of the loan was based upon the representation that the improvements would be completed for the figure named in the first writing. The bank and the government provided the money and credit upon the assurance that the borrowers would not be required to pay to any one more than the represented appraised value of the lot and improvements. Plaintiff and defendants violated the provisions of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, 38 U.S.C.A. § 694 et seq. Young v. United States, 9 Cir., 178 F.2d 78.

[1] "Any bargain is illegal if either the formation or the performance thereof is prohibited by constitution or statute." Rest., Contracts, sec. 580. Also see Sections 598 and 604 of the same work; Civ. Code, secs. 1550, 1598, and 1667; MacRae v. Heath, 60 Cal.App. 64, 212 P. 228; Napa Valley Elec. Co. v. Calistoga Elec. Co., 38 Cal.App. 477, 176 P. 699.

Therefore, the cost-plus contract may not be enforced.

This, then, presents the question whether the entire transaction is illegal and void to the extent that the law will deny relief to all parties. Bank of Orland v. Harlan, 188 Cal. 413, 206 P. 75.

Five progress payments were to be made by the bank from the loan, each to be 20% of $8,283. Plaintiff was paid four of these payments. The last payment has not been made, and presumably, remains to the credit of the defendants. If the parties are left as the law finds them, defendants will have a house built by plaintiff, for which they have paid four-fifths of less than the actual cost. Plaintiff will lose not only the balance due under the first contract but everything additional which she has put into the improvements.

Shakespeare's Portia demonstrated the futility of exact, literal enforcement of any legal rule. In the multitude of situations incident to human relations, no rule has yet been found to exactly fit every one.

In Restatement's comment to Section 598, Contracts, it is said:

"The statement that all illegal bargains are void is not wholly accurate. It is true that many such bargains are entirely without effect on the legal relations of the parties and that a court will only under very exceptional circumstances enforce specifically an illegal agreement, but the rule of public policy that forbids an action for damages for breach of such an agreement is not based on the impropriety of compelling the defendant to pay the damages. That in itself would generally be a desirable thing. When relief is denied it is because the plaintiff is a wrongdoer, and to such a person the law denies relief. * * *

"* * * A rule to that effect would have unfortunate consequences, since in many cases it would protect a guilty defendant from paying damages to an innocent plaintiff, or would otherwise produce undesirable results."

The rule has not been strictly enforced when necessary to prevent a harsh forfeiture, Rest., Contracts, sec. 600; when one of the parties entered into the contract under desperate circumstances, McAllister v. Drapeau, 14 Cal.2d 102, 92 P.2d 911, 125 A.L.R. 800; and in a number of cases when parties have been permitted to recover when the aid of the illegal contract was not required to establish a case. Wayman Investment Co. v. Wessinger & Wagner, 13 Cal.App. 108, 108 P. 1022; Moore v. Russell, 114 Cal.App. 634, 300 P. 479; Welder v. Director, 118 Cal.App. 124, 4 P.2d 793; California Cured Fruit Association v. Stelling, 141 Cal. 713, 75 P. 320; Butler v. Agnew, 9 Cal.App. 327, 99 P. 395.

[2] In this case the plaintiff should recover the remaining 20% of the first contract, and no more. Extras are included in this statement.

Plaintiff urges that the settled statement of oral proceedings, in lieu of reporter's transcript, is insufficient as a substitute for a reporter's transcript on appeal, and that this case must be decided in accordance with the rules applicable to an appeal on the judgment roll alone.

[3] The record complies with Rule 7 and its several sub-paragraphs, and Rule 4(e) of the Rules on Appeal, adopted by the Judicial Council of this state. This Court is, therefore, required to take into consideration the facts therein set forth. While the statement may be fragmentary and uncertain, it represents a sincere effort by the trial court to comply with the rules. The judge who originally tried the case retired, and the work of settling the statement was done by another judge.

Any change in appellate practice which will save the neverending burden of reading thousands of pages of reporter's transcript should be welcomed by reviewing courts. The present method almost universally in use in California, which presents for review a shorthand writer's verbatim report of everything said on a trial, results in loss of brevity in records, exactitude of argument in briefs, and dispatch in deciding an ever-increasing number of appeals.

[4] Defendants contend that they should have rent for plaintiff's delay in completing the house and garage. The covenant in the contract is to prosecute the work diligently and continuously to completion; the only statement in the substitute for the reporter's transcript is that the work was begun and completed on specified dates, and nothing appears from which want of diligence in the construction work may be predicated. Therefore, the trial court's finding in this respect is controlling.

The appeal from the order denying motion for new trial is dismissed, and the judgment is modified that the plaintiff have judgment against the defendants for $1,689.00; and, as so modified, is affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 94

PEOPLE v. DIXON.

Cr. 2651.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 21, 1950.

Jack Ermon Dixon was convicted in the Superior Court for the County of Santa Clara, William F. James, J., of perjury and from the judgment of conviction and order denying a new trial he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that the evidence sustained conviction.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Perjury ⇐34(5)

Direct testimony by at least one witness as to the falsity of a statement made under oath, as distinguished from circumstantial evidence, is necessary to establish perjury. Pen.Code, § 1103a; Code Civ. Proc. § 1968.

2. Perjury ⇐12

If a person willfully swears falsely to a belief in the existence of a fact which he knows does not exist, he is as guilty of perjury as if he had sworn directly to the existence of a fact which he knew did not exist. Pen.Code, § 1103a.

3. Perjury ⇐34(1)

Testimony of one witness directly contradicting the facts as to which a defendant has testified to his opinion or belief, plus corroborating evidence which establishes that such opinion or belief was not in fact held by defendant, is sufficient to sustain conviction of perjury. Pen.Code, § 1103a; Code Civ.Proc. § 1968.

4. Perjury ⇐12, 36

Perjury must be knowingly false, and, since defendant's actual state of mind cannot be directly proved, whether he believed the truth of his testimony when he gave it is a question for jury. Code Civ.Proc. § 1968; Pen.Code, § 1103a.

5. Perjury ⇐34(1)

Testimony of one witness directly contradicting the facts as to which defendant, testifying in action for damages, had given his opinion, corroborated by defendant's affidavit used in such action in support of a motion for new trial and by defendant's admission to officers after arrest, sustained conviction of perjury. Pen.Code, § 1103a; Code Civ.Proc. § 1968.

6. Criminal law ⇐1171(1)

Any misconduct of district attorney in argument to jury was not prejudicial to defendant in view of his obvious guilt.

David S. Lull, San Jose, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Clarence A. Linn, Deputy Attorney General, for respondents.

DOOLING, Justice.

The defendant was convicted on two counts of perjury and from the judgment and order denying his motion for new trial he prosecutes this appeal.

Appellant was the driver of an ambulance which was in an intersection collision resulting in an action for damages. That action was tried twice and in each trial appellant was a witness. He testified as to the speed of the ambulance on the first trial: "I can't—cannot, so I can't give a definite speed because I was not looking at the speedometer, but I would estimate that the car was doing between 20 and 30 miles an hour."

Referring to Frederick, the driver of the other car, he testified: "They were still in the car and didn't seem to be hurt or anything, appeared to be drinking, all seemed awfully happy * * * Yes, I spoke to Mr. Frederick * * * When I got to the hospital he was down there, I could smell, seemed to me I could smell it on his breath."

At the second trial the appellant testified: "I couldn't say the exact speed, I would estimate between 20 and 30 miles per hour."

The second trial resulted in a verdict for defendants and appellant swore to an affidavit which was used by plaintiff in that action in support of a motion for a new trial in which he stated under oath:

"The true facts are that: * * * I did not know whether or not Mr. Frederick was drinking; the ambulance was traveling at better than 50 miles per hour just prior to the accident * * *

"At the second trial of the case I falsely testified to substantially the same facts as in the first trial as above set forth, except that I did not testify in regard to the intoxication of Mr. Frederick * * *."

This affidavit was made the basis of a third count of perjury on which defendant was acquitted.

Frederick was called as a witness and testified that at the time of the accident: "I would estimate it (the speed of the ambulance) at about 50 miles an hour." He gave further testimony that at that time he was not intoxicated, had not consumed any intoxicating liquor for several hours, and had no odor of alcohol about him.

Appellant argues that this did not satisfy the requirements of section 1103a, Penal Code and section 1968, Code of Civil Procedure, in that the testimony of Frederick was not direct and positive evidence of the falsity of appellant's testimony.

[1] The California cases require direct, as distinguished from circumstantial, evidence of the falsity of defendant's testimony by at least one witness. People v. Wells, 103 Cal. 631, 37 P. 529; People v. Porter, 104 Cal. 415, 38 P. 88; People v. Maxwell, 118 Cal. 50, 50 P. 18; People v. De Martini, 50 Cal.App. 109, 194 P. 506. Appellant's position seems to be that since appellant couched his testimony in the form of opinion or belief mere testimony of facts inconsistent with the correctness of that opinion or belief does not supply the direct proof required by the cases. If this is the true rule no defendant could ever be convicted of perjury in California if he was careful to qualify his testimony, no matter how wilfully false, by the words, "In my opinion," "to the best of my belief" or an equivalent, since no witness can testify directly to the state of another's mind.

[2, 3] It has been held in this state that: "If a person willfully swears [falsely] to a belief in the existence of a fact which he knows does not exist he is as guilty of perjury as if he had sworn directly to the existence of a fact which he knew did not exist." People v. Agnew, 77 Cal.App.2d 748, 755, 176 P.2d 724, 729; People v. Phillips, 56 Cal.App. 291, 296, 205 P. 40. In the Agnew case the only direct testimony was of two persons that they had never engaged in the activities with which the defendant Agnew had sworn "on information and belief" that they were connected. We are satisfied that the testimony of one witness directly contradicting the facts as to which a defendant has testified to his opinion or belief plus corroborating evidence which establishes that such opinion or belief was not in fact held by the defendant satisfies the requirements of our code.

[4] In every case perjury must be knowingly false, and in every case the defendant's actual state of mind cannot be directly proved. It is for the jury to say in every case of perjury whether the defendant believed the truth of his testimony when he gave it. People v. Todd, 9 Cal. App.2d 237, 243–244, 49 P.2d 611.

[5] There can be no doubt of appellant's guilt. His own affidavit and the transcript of his admissions to the officers after his arrest furnish ample corroboration of that. People v. Housman, 44 Cal.App.2d 619, 627, 112 P.2d 944; People v. Todd, supra, 9 Cal.App.2d 237, 242, 49 P.2d 611; People v. Albert, 91 Cal.App. 774, 777, 267 P. 587.

[6] Appellant complains of misconduct of the district attorney in his argument to the jury. We do not condone some of the district attorney's language which in a close case might call for a reversal, but appellant's guilt is too obvious for us to hold that he suffered prejudice in this particular case.

Judgment and order affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and GOODELL, J., concur.

KOSTAL et ux. v. PULLEN et al.
Civ. 7762.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 19, 1950.

Hearing Granted Oct. 16, 1950.*

Action by Joe C. Kostal, Jr., and Lenna M. Kostal, his wife, against Robert F. Pullen, an individual doing business under the firm name and style of Larry's Auto Parts, and others, to recover on a note. The Superior Court, San Joaquin County, M. G. Woodward, J., overruled the defendants' demurrer and denied defendants' motion for a change of place of trial, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that as defendants' notice of motion for change of place of trial specified that on May 17, 1950, defendants would move court for an order transferring cause to Los Angeles County, and minutes of court on that day showed that motion was considered and court ordered same denied, motion was regularly noticed and heard, and there was no denial of truth of facts stated in defendants' affidavits, they would be taken as true, and in view of simple grounds on which motion was made no other points of authority need have been cited other than the appropriate sections of the Code of Civil Procedure governing venue.

Purported appeal from order of June 21, 1949, denied and defendant's motion for change of venue dismissed and cause remanded with instructions.

1. Venue ⇐72

Where defendants' notice of motion for change of place of trial specified that on May 17, 1950, the defendants would move court for an order transferring cause to Los Angeles County, and on that date minutes of court showed that motion was considered and that court ordered that same be denied, motion for change of venue was before the court for consideration.

2. Venue ⇐58

Where defendants moved for change of place of trial on ground that residence of moving party was in another county and that obligation sued on was incurred in that county, no other points and authorities were required to have been cited than appropriate sections of the Court of Civil Procedure governing venue, and as such citations were contained in notice of motion, that was sufficient compliance with rule of Superior Court requiring notice of motion be accompanied with points and authorities, and denying motion, was error. Rules for Superior Courts, rule 3(a); Code Civ.Proc. §§ 395, 396.

A. P. Coviello, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Miller & Kroloff, Stockton, for respondents.

PEEK, Justice.

The record herein shows that following the filing of plaintiffs' complaint, defendants on May 9, 1949, demurred, and at the same time filed a "Notice of Motion for Change of Place of Trial", which was accompanied by an affidavit setting forth the facts upon which the motion would be based. Although no "Points and Authorities" as such, were filed, the notice of motion does state that it was made "pursuant to the provisions of Sections 395 and 396 of the Code of Civil Procedure." The minute order of the court, dated May 17, 1949, after sustaining defendants' demurrer, further ordered that the "motion for change of venue be, and the same is hereby denied." Respondents thereafter filed an amended complaint wherein the note, which formed the basis of their action, was set forth in full. The note showed on its face that the obligation therein incurred was made payable in the city of Los Angeles. To this amended complaint defendants, on May 31, 1949, again demurred and again filed a "Notice of Motion for Change of Place of Trial." Accompanying these documents was one entitled "Points and Authorities in Support of Motion for Change of Venue", wherein the same code sections were again set forth, and in addition several citations were also noted. The trial court, by its order of June 21, 1949, overruled the demurrer and denied "defendants' motion for change of place of trial."

* Subsequent opinion 225 P.2d 217.

Defendants' notice of appeal specifies that they are appealing from two orders of the trial court denying said motions for a change of venue, and since it was filed on July 5, 1949, was timely as to both orders.

It is appellants' sole contention that since the venue of the case was shown without dispute to be in Los Angeles county, the court erred in denying both motions.

Respondents concede that upon the face of the record before us defendants were entitled to a change of venue but argues that nevertheless the orders of the trial court were proper, in that (1) the filing of the notices of motion to move for a change of venue and the affidavits in support thereof did not constitute a motion, Hanovia Chemical & Mfg. Co. v. Keller, 82 Cal.App. 499, 255 P. 884, (2) in any event such documents were not accompanied by points and authorities as required by Rule 3 (a) of the Rules for the Superior Courts, and (3) defendants' second motion was merely repetitious and hence was properly denied. Story v. Shristin, 137 Cal.App. 484, 30 P.2d 1016.

Since defendants' appeal from the first order is both meritorious and timely, it becomes unnecessary to discuss the appeal from the second order which, under the rule enunciated in Story v. Christin, supra, would appear to be without merit.

[1] But likewise without merit is respondents' argument that no motion for change of venue was ever before the court. The notice as set forth in the Clerk's Transcript specified that on May 17, 1950, the defendants would move the court for an order transferring the cause to Los Angeles County. The minutes of the court on that day show that said motion was considered and that the court ordered that the same be denied. Therefore it is obvious from the record before us that said motion was regularly noticed, was heard on the date set forth in said notice, and that the court, after due consideration, made its order denying the same.

[2] Turning to the contention that the order of the trial court denying appellant's motion for change of venue must be sustained upon the ground that there was a failure to comply with Rule 3 (a) of the Rules for the Superior Court, we think the contention cannot be sustained. Concededly, the facts stated in the affidavit in support of the motion were sufficient to require the granting of that motion and since there was no denial of the truth of these facts as stated in the affidavit they must be taken as true. The trial court therefore could not have based its order denying the motion on any other ground than a failure to comply with the rule, and under the well-known rule that all presumptions and intendments favor the order or judgment of the court, we must assume that this was the basis for the court's order. So assuming, however, we cannot agree that there was not a sufficient, substantial compliance with the rule. It is true there was no document filed entitled "Points and Authorities in Support of Motion for New Trial", but in view of the simple grounds upon which the motion was made, that is, residence of the moving party in Los Angeles County and the incurring of the obligation sued upon in that county, no other points and authorities need have been cited than the appropriate sections of the Code of Civil Procedure governing venue. Such citation was contained in the notice of motion and we hold that to have been, under the circumstances of this case, a sufficient compliance with the rule to make it error on the part of the trial court to deny the motion under the provisions of that rule.

For the foregoing reasons the purported appeal from the order of June 21, 1949 denying defendants' motion for a change of venue is dismissed, and the cause is remanded with instructions to the trial court to grant defendants' motion of May 9, 1949 for a change of venue.

ADAMS, P. J., and VAN DYKE, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 54

PEOPLE v. STONES.

Cr. 4456.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 18, 1950.

Thomas Jackson Stones, Jr., was convicted in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Clement D. Nye, J., of bookmaking, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeals, Drapeau, J., held that conviction was sustained under the evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

Gaming ⇐98(3)

Evidence that defendant was a shoeshine boy, that arresting officer saw defendant talking to people, making notes, and accepting money, that defendant's hands were clean although defendant told arresting officer he had shined seventeen shoes the morning of his arrest, that defendant had $197.00 in small bills, and that a customer of defendant gave defendant $2.00 and said "two to place" and gave a code symbol for a horse running that day at race track, and that defendant made a notation on memorandum pad which was combination betting marker and owe sheet used in bookmaking, sustained conviction for bookmaking and for recording bet of final result of contest of speed of beast. Pen.Code, § 337a, subds. 2, 4.

G. Vernon Brumbaugh, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Gilbert Harelson, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

After trial by the court, defendant was found guilty of two counts of bookmaking. Pen.Code, sec. 337a. No evidence was presented in his behalf. Application for probation was denied, and he was sentenced to six months in the county jail, sentences on each count to run concurrently.

Defendant was a shoe-shine boy in a barber shop. The arresting officer testified that he saw him talking to people, making notes, and accepting money. The arresting officer asked him how many shoes he had shined that morning, and he said seventeen. But his hands were clean. He had in his possession $197 in small bills.

One of defendant's customers gave him $2 and said "Two to place on Number 449." Number 449 was the code symbol for a horse named Iron Pen, running that day at the Del Mar race track. Defendant made a notation on a memorandum pad, and put the pad into a pocket in his shoe-shine apron. This pad was taken from defendant, and was a combination betting marker and owe sheet used in bookmaking.

Defendant urges that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the conviction.

From the facts stated, the evidence is sufficient. People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 104 P.2d 778; People v. Mason, 37 Cal.App.2d 407, 99 P.2d 567; People v. Pruitt, 55 Cal.App.2d 272, 130 P.2d 767.

People v. Woods, 35 Cal.2d 504, 218 P.2d 981, is not the same as the case against defendant.

Defendant also urges that he was convicted twice for the same offense. This point was not raised in the trial court. In any event, the evidence showed a violation of Subdivisions 2 and 4 of Penal Code, Section 337a. People v. Jerman, 29 Cal.2d 189, 173 P.2d 805.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

98 Cal.App.2d 826

SIMONS et al. v. EDOUARDE et al.
Civ. 17729.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 10, 1950.

Hearing Denied Oct. 2, 1950.

Isabella Simons and Gloria Simons Naylor brought an action against Jane Melville Edouarde and Barbara Melville Hudson to recover damages for fraudulent abuse of process. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, William B. McKesson, J., sustained defendants' demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend, and the plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McComb, J., held that the action had been barred by the statute of limitations and that therefore the trial court had properly sustained the demurrer without leave to amend.

Affirmed.

1. Limitation of actions ⇐31

Action for injury to person is barred within one year after wrongful act is committed. Code Civ.Proc. § 340(3).

2. Limitation of actions ⇐31

Under the one-year statute of limitations, clause "or for injury to or for death of one caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another" embraces all infringements of personal rights as opposed to property rights. Code Civ.Proc. § 340(3).

3. Limitation of actions ⇐31

Action for abuse of process falls within provision of statutes of limitations covering injuries done to the person. Code Civ.Proc. § 340(3).

4. Limitation of actions ⇐104(2)

In absence of confidential relationship between parties, mere failure of defendant to disclose to plaintiff existence of facts does not constitute fraudulent concealment of cause of action such as to toll statute of limitations.

5. Limitation of actions ⇐104(2)

There was no such fiduciary or confidential relationship between landlord and tenant as to impose duty upon landlord to disclose any facts to tenant, and therefore statute of limitations governing action for abuse of process was not tolled by failure of landlord to disclose to tenant existence of facts. Code Civ.Proc. § 340(3).

6. Limitation of actions ⇐55(4)

In action by tenants against landlord to recover damages for fraudulent abuse of process, where it appeared that judgment had been entered against tenants in detainer action on October 2, 1947, that tenants had been forcibly evicted under writ of possession on November 4, 1947, that tenants had moved back into premises and occupied same until adjudged guilty of contempt on May 18, 1948, that husband of one of plaintiff-tenants had continued to occupy premises until December 13, 1948, and that tenants had not filed complaint in action to recover damages for fraudulent abuse of process until November 1, 1949, tenant's action was barred by limitations. Code Civ.Proc. § 340(3).

Robert A. Jarrott, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Francis B. Cobb, Los Angeles, and W. Floyd Cobb, Inglewood, for respondents.

McCOMB, Justice.

From a judgment in favor of defendants predicated upon the sustaining of a demurrer to their complaint without leave to amend in an action to recover damages for fraudulent abuse of process, plaintiffs appeal.

Facts: Plaintiffs filed a complaint seeking to recover damages for an abuse of process alleging (1) that plaintiffs and a cotenant, namely, Edward H. Simons, husband of plaintiff, Isabella Simons, were tenants of defendants, occupying a rent-controlled apartment from and after November 12, 1946; (2) that defendants herein caused an unlawful detainer action to be instituted in the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles against the plaintiffs herein for the recovery of possession of the said rent-controlled apartment; and (3) that in such action defendants alleged as their sole ground for evicting the plaintiffs herein that one of the defendants herein, to wit, Jane Melville Edouarde, "seeks in good faith to recover possession of the said housing accommodations for her own and personal use and occupancy as housing accommodations." Plaintiffs filed an answer in said action denying the above quoted allegation. Thereupon a trial was had upon the issues. A judgment was thereafter rendered and entered in said action for the plaintiffs therein (respondents herein) against the defendants therein (appellants herein) on October 2, 1947. Plaintiffs in said action did not vacate the premises but remained in possession of same, and on November 3, 1947, defendants caused a Writ of Possession to be issued in the aforesaid action and to be placed in the hands of the marshal of the said municipal court for execution. Under and pursuant to the said Writ of Possession, the plaintiffs were, on November 4, 1947, forcibly evicted from the leased premises by said marshal, and plaintiffs on the same day, namely, November 4, 1947, moved back into said premises and continued to occupy the same until May 18, 1948, at which time they were adjudged guilty of contempt of the said municipal court and imprisoned for a period of five days. Plaintiffs' cotenant, husband of plaintiff, Isabella Simons, continued to occupy the aforesaid premises until December 13, 1948. Defendants never intended, in good faith, to use said premises as housing accommodations for their own personal use and occupancy during all of the times therein mentioned but did make a different disposition of said premises by selling the same on November 26, 1948.

The present complaint was filed on November 1, 1949. Defendants demurred to the complaint on the ground that the cause of action was barred by the provisions of section 340(3) of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Question: Was plaintiffs' cause of action barred by section 340(3) of the Code of Civil Procedure?

[1, 2] This question must be answered in the affirmative. An action for injury to the person is barred within one year after the wrongful act is committed. (Sec. 340(3) Code Civ.Proc.)* The clause "or for injury to or for the death of one caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another," in subdivision 3 of section 340, Code of Civil Procedure, embraces therein all infringements of personal rights as opposed to property rights. (Huntly v. Zurich General Accident & Liability Ins. Co., 100 Cal. App. 201, 212, 280 P. 163. Cf. Basler v. Sacramento Electric, Gas & R. Co., 166 Cal. 33, 35 et seq., 134 P. 993; Groff v. Du Bois, 57 Cal.App. 343, 345, 207 P. 59.

[3] Likewise an action for abuse of process falls within the provisions of statutes of limitations covering "injuries done to the person." (Gordon v. West, 129 Ga. 532, 59 S.E. 232, 13 L.R.A.,N.S., 549; McCullough v. Atlantic Refining Co., 50 Ga. App. 237, 177 S.E. 601, 602.)

Appellants' authorities: Merron v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 27 Cal.App.2d 119, 80 P.2d 740; Meigs v. Pinkham, 159 Cal. 104, 112 P. 883, Italiani v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corp., 45 Cal.App.2d 464, 114 P.2d 370, Argyropolus v. Barnes, 28 Cal.App. 254, 151 P. 1156, DeGarmo v. Luther T. Mayo, Inc., 4 Cal.App.2d 604, 41 P.2d 366, Howard v. Security Title Ins. & Guar. Co., 20 Cal.App.2d 226, 66 P.2d 1247, and Lowe v. Ozmun, 137 Cal. 257, 70 P. 87, relied on by appellants were not actions for injuries to the person but involved damages for injuries to property and are therefore not here in point. The statement in Merron v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., supra, 27 Cal.App.2d at page 122, 80 P.2d at page 742, "Undoubtedly it is the law that where the gist of the action is a malicious prosecution, the statute begins to run when the wrongful act is done, and the limitation is two years," was dictum and failed to note that the authority, McCusker v. Walker, 77 Cal. 208, 212, 19 P. 382, cited, was decided

* Section 340(3), Code of Civil Procedure reads: "§ 340. * * * Within one year: * * * 3. An action for libel, slander, assault, battery, false imprisonment, seduction of a person below the age of legal consent, or for injury to or for the death of one caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, * * *."

prior to 1905, the date of the amendment to subdivision 3 of section 340, Code of Civil Procedure which brought within the scope of such section "injuries to the person."

[4] There is likewise no merit in plaintiffs' contention that the statute of limitations was tolled by fraudulent concealment of defendants. Mere failure of a defendant to disclose to a plaintiff the existence of facts in the absence of a confidential relationship between the parties does not constitute fraudulent concealment of a cause of action. (Scafidi v. Western Loan & Building Co., 72 Cal.App.2d 550, 562, 165 P.2d 260.

[5, 6] Clearly in the present case there was no fiduciary or confidential relationship between the plaintiffs and defendants. Hence there was no duty upon defendants' part to disclose any facts to plaintiffs. The cause of action having been barred by the statute of limitations, the trial court properly sustained the demurrer without leave to amend.

Affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., and WILSON, J., concur.

HOLBROOK et al. v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF PALO ALTO UNIFIED SCHOOL DIST. et al.

Civ. 14273.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 21, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 20, 1950.

Hearing Granted Oct. 19, 1950.*

C. Ray Holbrook, also known as C. R. Holbrook, sought a writ of mandate to compel the Board of Education of Palo Alto Unified School District and others, to reinstate and re-employ him in the position which he occupied when discharged in 1947. The Superior Court, County of Santa Clara, M. G. Del Mutolo, J., entered judgment denying petition and petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Goodell, J., held that petitioner failed to sustain the burden of proving that he was entitled to full time tenure as a teacher under the Education Code.

Affirmed.

1. Schools and school districts ⇐133.6

Apart from employing the teacher, assigning his school, fixing his compensation, and re-employment for succeeding years, school board and its members have practically no power by contract, or otherwise, to do anything which affects, one way or the other, question whether such person eventually attains tenure within meaning of Education Code. Education Code, § 13081.

2. Schools and school districts ⇐133.10

Under Education Code, whatever tenure right accrued to a teacher depended entirely on kind and character of services rendered by him, rather than on anything which school board or its members said in conversation, or wrote in formal contracts or informal ones. Education Code, § 13081.

3. Mandamus ⇐174

Evidence presented questions of fact for jury as to which services rendered by teacher were attributable to one distinct set of duties and which to another, for purposes of determining tenure under Education Code. Education Code, § 13081.

4. Appeal and error ⇐996

Where reasonable minds might differ on inferences to be drawn from a particular set of facts, appellate court will not substitute its own conclusions for those reached by trial court.

5. Mandamus ⇐168(2)

In proceeding to compel school board to reinstate and re-employ petitioner in position which he occupied when discharged, burden was on petitioner to convince trial court that he was entitled to full time tenure under Education Code. Education Code, § 13081.

6. Mandamus ⇐168(4)

Testimony established that petitioner failed to sustain burden of proving that he was entitled to full tenure as a teacher under Education Code. Education Code, § 13081.

* Subsequent opinion 231 P.2d 853.

7. Schools and school districts ⇐55, 133.6

School districts possess most limited power known to law and their trustees are special agents without power to represent district, and tenure under Education Code accrues despite any maneuvers by trustees to prevent it. Education Code, § 13081.

8. Schools and school districts ⇐133.11

Where teacher was employed by school district and his duties were designated as business manager for three-quarters of his time and director of adult education for one-quarter of time and teacher was employed by school district for three consecutive years and re-elected for next succeeding year, teacher only acquired tenure under Education Code for one-fourth full time and not a full time tenure, since position of business manager was not a position requiring certification qualifications. Education Code, § 13081.

9. Schools and school districts ⇐133.6

A school board and teacher cannot by contract transfer noncertificated duties into certificated duties within meaning of tenure section of Education Code. Education Code, § 13081.

10. Schools and school districts ⇐135(5)

Where teacher was employed by a school district and his duties were designated as business manager for three-quarters of his time and director of adult education for one-quarter, teacher could not claim that school district was estopped to contend that teacher's employment was by separate contracts and not an integrated contract, and therefore trial court did not err in excluding evidence attempting to prove estoppel. Education Code, § 13081.

11. Schools and school districts ⇐63(1)

Under statute authorizing governing board of a school district to employ janitors and "other employees" of schools, the business manager of a school was one of the "other employees". Education Code, §§ 14001–14027.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Other Employees".

12. Schools and school districts ⇐63(1)

Evidence established that business manager of a school had ample and legal notice that his "noncertificated" employment as business manager had come to an end.

K. R. McDougall, Palo Alto, for appellant.

Hardy, Carley & Brenner, Palo Alto, for respondents.

GOODELL, Justice.

The appellant sought a writ of mandate to compel the respondent board to reinstate and re-employ him in the position which he occupied when discharged in 1947. From a judgment denying the petition this appeal was taken on an agreed statement.

At all times herein involved appellant held a credential and certificate entitling him to teach in any elementary or secondary school in Santa Clara County and a general administrative credential and certificate entitling him to administer any such school.

On August 1, 1940 he was employed by the district as its business manager and principal of the evening high school for the school year 1940–41. In 1941–42 he continued in the same position. In 1942–43 his duties were designated as business manager and director of adult education. The dividing line between appellant's first three years and his fourth year was July 1, 1943, and for the school year 1943–44 his duties were designated as business manager for three-quarters of his time and director of adult education for one-quarter. In each of his fifth, sixth and seventh years (1944–45, 1945–46 and 1946–47) there was the same designation.

In 1947 his services as business manager were discontinued. However, his services as director of adult education for one-quarter time were continued, since the board recognized then and has conceded ever since that his status was that of a permanent employee of the district as director of adult education to the extent of one-quarter time. The court concluded "That * * * petitioner automatically was entitled to classification as a permanent one-fourth time employee of said district, and thereafter to one-fourth time permanent employment in a position or positions requiring certification qualifications."

When appellant entered the employ of the district the teachers' tenure act was codified in § 5.500 of the School Code, St. 1935, c. 690, § 7, which read as follows: "Every employee of a school district of any type or class, who after having been employed by the district for three complete consecutive school years in a position or positions requiring certification qualifications, is reelected for the next succeeding school year to a position requiring certification qualifications shall, except as hereinafter otherwise provided, at the commencement of said succeeding school year, be classified as and shall become a permanent employee of the district * * *." The exceptions therein mentioned have no bearing on this case. In August, 1943 the new Education Code went into effect, see Stats.1943, p. 310, and what had been § 5.500, School Code, became (with a few changes not now material) § 13081, Education Code. During the first three years of appellant's service § 5.500, School Code, was in effect.

Appellant was employed by the district for three consecutive years and re-elected for the next succeeding school year but the question is, whether he was so employed and so re-elected "in a position or positions requiring certification qualifications?"

To say that a person is a "permanent employee of the district" is to say that he has "tenure" therein, and it is clear from the language of the former § 5.500 and the present § 13081 that the legislature was careful to limit the guarantee of tenure to such employees only as occupy positions "requiring certification qualifications."

The Education Code specifies numerous positions wherein the employee, in order to qualify therefor, must hold a certificate, but the position of business manager of a school district is not among them.

Thus for the first two school years, 1940–41 and 1941–42, appellant was duly certificated as principal of the evening high school, but had no credential or certificate as business manager of the district, since none was required by statute. Likewise in his third year, 1942–43, it is conceded that he was certificated to be a director of adult education. From these premises it would seem to follow that the only services of appellant during those first three years which, under § 5.500, now § 13081, could be considered or counted in determining whether he was entitled to tenure would be such fractional part of his combined or total services as were certificated, that is, rendered under either one or both of those two certificates.

The court concluded that such certificated services added up to one-fourth time, and no more, and that appellant "did not acquire the right to permanent employment * * * by virtue of his services in the position of business manager." It concluded, also, that "the positions of business manager, principal of the evening high school, and director of adult education as held by petitioner, were three separate and distinct positions."

Counsel for appellant insists that his client during the seven years occupied but one full-time position and that therefore he is entitled to full-time tenure. He has developed a unique theory on this subject which he repeats and reiterates in various forms throughout his 112 pages of typewritten briefs.

In the agreed statement this theory is set forth as follows: "Appellant does not contend that a person who is employed by a school district solely to manage business affairs need be certificated. Appellant does contend that the duties of managing business affairs may be combined with duties which do require certification qualifications so as to constitute one single position, and that such a position, so long as it involves a substantial amount of duties requiring certification qualifications, is itself a position requiring certification qualifications.

Appellant's major contention is that he was employed in such a position." (Emphasis appellant's.)

In his opening brief appellant says "a full-time position confers full-time tenure if any part of the duties of the position are certificated." (Emphasis ours.)

In his closing brief he says: "The tenure is not, however, tenure in any particular position; it is tenure in the school district." Therein he says further: "Whether the strictly certificated duties imposed upon the employee bulk large or small—that is, whether they occupy all or only a part of his time—depends, of course, upon the assignments of work. But, regardless of whether they require a large proportion or only a small proportion of the total amount of time devoted to the position, it is still the entire position upon which the statute operates; and the extent of the position is to be determined by the contractual terms of the employment, and the duties performed * * *." (Emphasis appellant's.)

In the first place, no authority is produced in support of this novel theory. Secondly, the argument is inconsistent because of the concession that a person employed solely to manage business affairs need not be certificated. Thirdly, and most important, the argument either ignores or directly takes issue with the plain language of the statute which insures tenure only to an employee holding "a position requiring certification qualifications." Appellant's statement that "The tenure is not * * * tenure in any particular position; it is tenure in the school district" (emphasis added) simply discards the language of the statute, which specifies explicitly which "particular position" leads to ultimate "tenure in the school district."

Appellant claims, also, that the intention of the parties that there should be but one integrated position is shown by a series of acts and conduct of the board and its members (fifteen separate items of which are summarized) evidenced by the contracts entered into between the board and appellant, letters exchanged containing designations and characterizations of appellant's position, entries in the board's minutes, and similar matters.

Whether there was but one integrated position or not is but a subsidiary question in this case. The real question is whether appellant was entitled to full-time tenure, or only one-fourth time tenure, or something in between, and the solution of that question depends entirely on whether he comes within the teachers' tenure act as an employee occupying "a position requiring certification qualifications." That is the only test. Appellant concedes that the parties could not by contract "transform non-certificated duties into certificated duties." So conceding, it is difficult to see how he can still argue that there was but one integrated position when his ultimate purpose in doing so is, obviously, to "transform non-certificated duties into certificated duties" and thereby indirectly establish full-time tenure.

"School districts" says the court in Pasadena School District v. Pasadena, 166 Cal. 7, 11, 134 P. 985, 986, 47 L.R.A.,N.S., 892, Ann.Cas.1915B, 1039, "are quasi municipal corporations of the most limited power known to the law. Their trustees have special powers, and cannot exceed the limit." Trustees "are special agents, without general power to represent the district." Skelly v. Westminster School District, 103 Cal. 652, 659, 37 P. 643, 645. "While it is true that the relation between the Board and a teacher is that of employer and employee, and that this relationship is created by contract, the terms of that contract are to be found in the authority granted the Board by law." Fry v. Board of Education, 17 Cal.2d 753, 760, 112 P.2d 229, 234.

[1] The authorities hold that apart from employing the teacher, assigning his school, fixing his compensation, and re-employing him (or not) for succeeding years, the board and its members have practically no power by contract, or otherwise, to do anything which affects, one way or the other, the question whether such person eventually attains tenure. Some of the cases on the subject are Grigsby v. King, 202 Cal. 299, 304, 307, 260 P. 789; Abraham v. Sims,

2 Cal.2d 698, 710, 42 P.2d 1029; Owens v. Board, 68 Cal.App. 403, 229 P. 881; La Shells v. Hench, 98 Cal.App. 6, 276 P. 377; Gastineau v. Meyer, 131 Cal.App. 611, 22 P.2d 31; Sherman v. Board, 9 Cal.App.2d 262, 49 P.2d 350, and La Rue v. Board, 40 Cal.App.2d 287, 293, 104 P.2d 689.

[2] Under the authorities it is clear that whatever tenure rights accrued to appellant, were acquired by what he did—by the services he rendered during the first three years—rather than by anything which the board or its members said in conversations, or wrote in formal contracts or informal ones, (whether such contracts created one position or two), or by reports of the superintendent, or by letters sent or exchanged, or by entries in the minutes, or by any other incidental act or conduct of the board, touching appellant's original employment or any renewal thereof.

[3, 4] The question, then, whether appellant's first three years of service entitled him to full-time tenure, half-time tenure, or only quarter-time tenure, depended entirely upon the kind and character of services rendered by him; in other words, upon how much service was rendered in a certificated capacity and how much in a noncertificated capacity. The agreed statement shows that appellant testified at length with respect to these various services, including those which doubtless went beyond the scope originally contemplated, including the defense training center, the committee planning for a junior college, and as acting superintendent or assistant superintendent. His secretary also testified, and at least one other witness, a former board member. There was documentary evidence as well. See 2 Cal.Jur. p. 932. All this evidence was for the trial court to value, weigh, classify, and put in its proper place, (to determine which services were attributable to one distinct set of duties and which to another) and it presented questions of fact from which different inferences could be drawn. Webster v. Board of Dental Examiners, 17 Cal.2d 534, 539–540, 110 P.2d 992, 996, holds that "where reasonable minds might differ on the inferences to be drawn from a particular set of facts, the appellate court will not substitute its own conclusions for those reached by the trial court [citations]."

[5, 6] The burden was on appellant to convince the trial court that he was entitled to full-time tenure, or at least half-time tenure (appellant's secondary point). The findings and conclusions of law indicate that he did not sustain that burden as to either.

We might add that the record shows that certification was required for all appellant's duties as principal of the evening high school while with respect to those as director of adult education a certificate was required for only part of them. The trial judge not only saw and heard the witnesses but also had the opportunity, by his own questioning of them, to examine minutely into these matters and to reach his own conclusions as to what part of the total services were performed as director and under certification to some extent, and what part as business manager, a wholly noncertificated position. Needless to say we have no such opportunity. It should be added that no section of the Education Code has been cited which expressly requires certification qualifications for a director of adult education, but since no point is made of this we do not inquire into it.

Still pressing his one-integrated-position theory, appellant contends that respondents are estopped to deny that he held such integrated position. This is based on the premise that for the first three years respondents by their acts and conduct led him to believe that during each year he occupied such a position, which (it is claimed) would lead to full-time tenure, and that he relied thereon to his detriment.

[7, 8] We have already seen that school districts possess "the most limited power known to the law" and that their trustees are "special agents without general power to represent the district." We have cited, also, the cases holding that tenure accrues despite any maneuvers of the trustees to prevent it. If the rule works both ways, as it should, then certainly no acts, conduct or representations, of trustees with such limited powers can produce, insure, advance, or at all influence, the attainment of tenure, if such actions do not square with statute law.

[9] Had the respondents attempted to make a contract with appellant pretending or purporting to bring his duties as business manager within the purview of § 5.500 School Code, now § 13081, Education Code it would have been utterly void. This is conceded, since appellant admits that the parties could not by contract "transform non-certificated duties into certificated duties."

"An estoppel in pais can have no more force or effect in binding the parties than would a contract including the very subject-matter urged by way of estoppel." Thompson v. Doaksum, 68 Cal. 593, 598–599, 10 P. 199, 202. See, also, Raisch v. San Francisco, 80 Cal. 1, 6, 22 P. 22; Lukens v. Nye, 156 Cal. 498, 506, 105 P. 593, 20 Ann.Cas. 158, 36 L.R.A.,N.S., 244, and Taylor v. Spear, 196 Cal. 709, 717, 238 P. 1038, 1041. In the latter case the court, (speaking of the plaintiff's "tenure" under a lease made by the Harbor Commissioners) said: "They could not * * * create an estoppel which would have the effect of enlarging the plaintiff's tenure beyond that embraced within the express limitations of the Code section [citations]." The same rule is recognized in McCormick Lumber Co. v. Highland School District, 26 Cal.App. 641, 643, 147 P. 1183, cited and quoted in Briney v. Santa Ana High School District, 131 Cal.App. 357, 361, 21 P.2d 610, a case, by the way, cited by appellant.

Appellant concedes that certification qualifications cannot "be attached to duties by means of estoppel." The estoppel that he seeks to establish is with respect to the "integrated contract", which, as we have already seen, is only a subsidiary question in this case.

[10] There is no merit in appellant's claim of estoppel, and there was no error in excluding the evidence offered in an attempt to prove it.

Appellant's final point is that he was never legally dismissed from the position of business manager. His severance from that part of his employment was a long-drawn-out process, extending over a six-months period. It started with a letter dated February 7, 1947, from the superintendent to appellant addressed to him as business manager of the district advising him to look for "different placement for next year." It refers to "dozens of personal conferences" and "two or three recent conferences involving the entire board and others." It suggested that appellant make his own announcement about the change. The tenor of the letter is friendly and co-operative. However, it concludes with the definite statement "I am not going to be able to recommend your reappointment for next year in Palo Alto." After this letter was received there ensued a number of meetings, at one of which the matter was considered by the board for about two hours and at which appellant appeared and addressed them, presumably presenting his side of the case. As the end of the 1946-47 school year drew near, the question now in litigation, as to the extent of appellant's tenure, became acute and the board sought legal advice.

Appellant's last yearly contract consists of an "Offer of employment" dated June 12, 1946 and an acceptance dated June 27, 1946. It stated that at a meeting on June 6 appellant was elected to serve as "Business Manager (¾ time) and Director of Adult Education (¼ time) for the school year beginning July 1, 1946 and ending June 30, 1947. * * * You are hereby classified by this board as a permanent ¼ time employee, subject to acceptance of this offer." It was signed on behalf of the board, and the acceptance was signed by appellant. By its terms the contract expired on June 30, 1947. It was never renewed, and the parleys which had gone on from as early as February made it clear that it was not to be renewed. The agreed statement shows that one of the board's members had been conferring with appellant respecting the matter, and this member testified that "appellant's employment was extended at appellant's request from July 31st to August 31st; and that the final act done was the adoption of a formal resolution which was drawn by the District Attorney, and which the Board modified to soften somewhat, which was adopted by the Board in August." If the testimony which we have just emphasized was believed by the court—as it apparently was—it would show that appellant had notice that his yearly contract as business manager was not to be renewed. The formal resolution adopted August 21, 1947 just referred to (after the preamble) reads "Be it hereby resolved that the * * * District offer said C. R. Holbrook employment as a permanent employee of this District, for one-fourth full time service only, as Adult School Director at an annual salary of $1245 and that his services as Business Manager of this District be discontinued as of September 1, 1947."

Appellant's request for a renewal of his yearly contract was met with the following action at the board's regular meeting on June 26, 1947, as shown by its minutes:

"C. R. Holbrook the business manager presented a letter calling attention to the fact that the salary of the business manager and director of adult education had not been fixed nor had any contract been issued for the following year. He requested that the Board authorize the secretary to execute such a contract incorporating the $360 increment, plus one annual increment. Mr. Packard moved and Mr. Vanderpool seconded the motion that the superintendent be authorized to take whatever action is necessary to pay Mr. Holbrook at the present rate of salary for the month of July and that it be the understanding that he would be entitled to the usual four weeks' vacation with pay in August."

There can be no doubt that appellant had ample notice that he was not to be reemployed as business manager.

Sections 14001–14027, Education Code deal with non-certificated employees.

[11, 12] The authority to appoint a business manager comes from § 14001 which provides that "The governing board * * * shall employ janitors and other employees of the school." By § 14003 the board is authorized to prescribe the duties of noncertificated employees, and by § 14026 it is authorized to fix their compensation. The duties of appellant, important as they were in all three capacities, are not to be compared or bracketed with those of a janitor, but it just happens that the legislature used the quoted language; it is not ours. It follows that appellant was one of the "other employees" mentioned in § 14001, and as business manager the only legal hold he had on the district was his yearly contracts, the last of which expired on June 30, 1947, and was never renewed as a yearly contract, but only as an expedient for a decent severance allowance with full pay for the month of July and "the usual four weeks' vacation with pay in August." He knew by such action that his "noncertificated" employment had come to an end, wherefore the arguments in appellant's brief that some of the "personnel conferences" held in the homes of the trustees were not open meetings or legal meetings is of no force. These actions of the board constituted substantial notice of termination of appellant's contract as business manager, and there is no merit in the contention that he was not legally discharged, with ample and legal notice, from that position.

The judgment is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and DOOLING, J., concur.

PEOPLE v. STEMBRIDGE.
Cr. 817.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.
Aug. 14, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 28, 1950.

Hearing Denied Sept. 11, 1950.

Otis Stembridge was convicted in the Superior Court of Kern County, W. L. Bradshaw, J., of murder in the second degree, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that trial court did not commit error in failing to give requested instructions.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal law ⇐824(3)
Homicide ⇐309(3)

Where there is sufficient evidence in murder prosecution upon which a jury may return verdict of manslaughter, instruction defining it should be given even if not offered by defendant, but it is not error to fail to give instruction on manslaughter when there is no evidence to support verdict finding defendant guilty of that crime.

2. Criminal law ⇐824(3)

In murder prosecution, where under evidence defendant was guilty of murder or not at all, trial court was not required to give on its own motion a manslaughter instruction.

3. Criminal law ⇐1144(15)

In murder prosecution, where under evidence defendant was guilty of murder or not at all, and jury was fully instructed as to crime of murder and was told that if they were not satisfied that defendant was guilty of that offense they should acquit him altogether, jury would be presumed to have heeded trial court's instruction in such respect and performed their whole duty in accordance with it.

4. Homicide ⇐304

In murder prosecution, refusal to give instruction as to duty of jury to acquit if homicide was found to be accidental or excusable was not error under the evidence.

5. Homicide ⇐151(1)

Where prosecution established killing of deceased by defendant and there was a definite showing that crime committed was murder, burden was on defendant to show circumstances in mitigation.

6. Homicide ⇐300(7)

In murder prosecution, instructions relating to self-defense were sufficient under the evidence.

7. Criminal law ⇐814(17)

In murder prosecution, where evidence of eyewitnesses to homicide was that killing was committed by defendant, trial court did not err in refusal to give defendant's requested instruction relating to circumstantial evidence.

8. Criminal law ⇐863(2)

Where trial court instructed jury that they might convict one or both of the defendants, and thereafter reread the instructions previously given upon jury foreman asking whether jury might return verdict of guilty as to one defendant and not guilty as to the other, defendant who was convicted could not claim that trial court neglected to give responsive answer to query directed to it by jury foreman.

9. Criminal law ⇐814(1)

In murder prosecution, where theory of conspiracy was basis of naming codefendant as a party defendant but conspiracy was not charged in the information, trial court did not err in failing to give instructions relating to conspiracy.

10. Criminal law ⇐1037(1, 2)

Where statement by prosecuting attorney was improper, but the harmful result, if any, could have been obviated by appropriate instruction of trial court, defendant could not predicate error on appeal in regard to such statement in absence of assignment of such alleged misconduct as error and a request to trial court to instruct jury to disregard it.

11. Criminal law ⇐1171(1)

In prosecution of two defendants on charges of murder and burglary, where both defendants were found not guilty of the burglary charge, statement by prosecuting attorney in his closing argument that trial judge had denied motion to dismiss the burglary charge was not prejudicial.

12. Criminal law ⇐1171(1)

In murder prosecution, where defendant was not found guilty of murder in first degree but was convicted of murder in the second degree, reference by prosecutor in his arguments to automatic right of appeal in case of a verdict of murder in the first degree without recommendation was without application but was not prejudicial.

13. Criminal law ⇐1186(4)

Where evidence was conclusive as to defendant's guilt of crime charged, and District Court of Appeal could not hold that there had been a miscarriage of justice, remarks by prosecuting attorney in his closing argument, although somewhat improper, did not constitute grounds for reversal. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

14. Criminal law ⇐877

In prosecution of two defendants on charges of murder and burglary, where there was a marked difference in evidence as to actions of each of the defendants, verdict finding one defendant guilty and the other not guilty on the murder charge and finding both defendants not guilty on the burglary charge was not fatally defective as inconsistent.

15. Criminal law ⇐878(3)

Where defendant was charged with both burglary and murder in information, the offenses were separate and distinct and acquittal of the burglary count did not preclude a conviction on the charge of murder.

Morris B. Chain, Bakersfield, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, William E. James, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

MUSSELL, Justice.

The defendant has appealed from a judgment of conviction of murder in the second degree and from an order denying a new trial.

In an information, the defendant, Otis Stembridge, and his codefendant, Loran Roulain, were accused of the murder of one John L. Isaaks, and in a second count both defendants were charged with the crime of burglary in entering the Oasis Club in Fruitvale, with intent to commit a felony.

A jury found defendant Stembridge guilty of murder in the second degree, not guilty of the charge of burglary, and acquitted Roulain on both charges.

The material facts, summarized briefly, are as follows: The deceased, John L. Isaaks, with his wife and several friends, arrived at the Oasis Club about midnight on December 15, 1949. An hour or so later there was a disturbance across the street. Defendant Stembridge, who was then in the club, with several others rushed out to see what was happening and found that a man and his wife were engaged in a fight. Two of the spectators separated the contestants and Stembridge then came through the crowd, struck the man with his fist, knocked him down and then turned and ran back into the club.

A number of spectators returning to the club noticed that the bartender, Art Schmidt, was talking to a man who was later identified as Roulain. Roulain said he wanted to get in; that his partner was inside, and Stembridge, on the inside, was asking the bartender to let Roulain in. Schmidt told Roulain that he would let his partner out but didn't want anyone else in; that he was not serving any more drinks and was going to close up. He then let Stembridge out and the two men left together. They were heard to say "Well, we will see you" or, as one witness put it, Roulain said either "I will see you Art" or "I will get you Art".

Shortly thereafter, at about ten minutes to 2:00, the occupants of the Oasis Club started to leave. Some of them were outside getting into their cars when they noticed a car driving up and that one man in it, later identified as Stembridge, had a 22 rifle. Stembridge motioned to the crowd and said "Stand back. It is going to be a fair fight". Roulain then went into the club and Stembridge told those gathered outside that he would kill anyone that moved. Mrs. Isaak, the wife of the deceased, walked up to Stembridge and was told by him to stand back. The deceased walked toward his wife and Stembridge said to him "You are within an inch of death". Stembridge said he meant business and fired two shots into the air, looked in the window of the club and made the remark that it was not a fair fight; that there were "two to one in there"; that "there was another man in there and he was going to kill him too". Stembridge fired two shots into the cafe, turned and fired twice at the deceased, who was standing from six to ten feet away. One bullet struck Isaak on the right side and the other entered his back. He fell and died within a few minutes. The medical testimony was that either bullet wound would have caused his death.

None of the witnesses saw anything in the hands of the deceased at the time he was shot, or at any other time, and the uncontradicted testimony is that the deceased was several feet distant from the defendant when the shots were fired.

Mrs. Isaak testified that after the defendant shot her husband, he said "Stand back or I will kill you too"; that Stembridge told her not to take a step or she would get what her husband got.

One of the witnesses, Amanda Jordan, heard the statement made by Stembridge to Mrs. Isaak and also heard the defendant, while at the window with the gun, say "I will kill you, Art".

Alice Hallmark, one of the employees at the Oasis Club, testified that after the deceased was shot, Stembridge made the remark "I will either kill him or them" or "I will kill some more before I leave".

Mrs. Isaak further testified that while Stembridge was trying to see inside the cafe, he was also watching the crowd outside; that the deceased took her around to their car and the defendant said "I see you over there. Don't take another step"; that they stopped and the defendant turned his attention back to the window again; that her husband was in front of his car when she heard the shot. She saw him turn to the left after the first shot and fall to the ground, face down; that she took a step forward toward him and the defendant then said "Don't take a step, or I will give you the same thing he got"; that she heard a crash and saw Roulain coming out of the window of the cafe and heard Stembridge say to him "Come on out of there. I just shot a man".

Stembridge and Roulain then drove away. After they had left, the bartender was found lying unconscious on the floor of the club and a witness, Mrs. Tuckness, in a hysterical condition by the telephone.

Mrs. Tuckness testified that she, with several others, left the cafe at about the time Roulain rushed up to the door to enter it; that Roulain pushed his way in and knocked the bartender down; that she rushed in and stood near the door until the bartender told her to lock it; that the bartender and Roulain were both on the floor and the bartender was "getting the worst of it"; that she picked up a chair or a stool and hit Roulain with it several times; that she heard a shot and then locked herself in the restroom; that she remained there about a minute and a half and then came back out to see how the bartender was "making it"; that both men were lying on the floor in front of the door. She then heard another shot and saw Stembridge break the window out and stick his head in the opening. He pointed at the bartender and said something to Roulain; that Roulain then got up and crawled out of the window and the two men left.

Stembridge and Roulain were arrested shortly thereafter and the 22 rifle used by Stembridge was found in the car in his possession.

After his arrest, Stembridge told a deputy sheriff that he and Roulain got into a fight with Art Schmidt in regard to Schmidt locking the door and that they went back to their car and got the 22 rifle; that they then went back to the front of the Oasis and he grabbed the barrel of the gun, broke out the plate glass window in front with the butt of the gun and then fired two or three warning shots over the heads of the people inside; that then he was struck from behind by Isaak and that he turned and fired one shot at him. In a later statement, Stembridge said that he had been at the Oasis Club; that there had been a disturbance across the street; that he went across to see what was happening and that a man and woman were "having trouble fighting"; that he tried to separate them, took a "poke at the fellow" and knocked him down; that the bartender wouldn't let Roulain into the bar; that after a few seconds of arguing, he and Roulain got in the car, and decided to go to Stembridge's home; that they went there for the purpose of obtaining a gun to take back to the Oasis to see that Roulain had a fair fight with Art Schmidt, the bartender; that after a scuffle, Roulain went in the bar and that he, Stembridge, walked up to the window, saw two people fighting Roulain and that he fired two shots to keep the crowd back because he didn't want "everybody jumping in"; that he fired two shots inside as a warning; that then somebody hit him from behind and he went half way down to his knees and that he remembered the gun going off but not whether it hit anybody.

Stembridge testified in his own behalf in the trial and there claimed that he lost consciousness after the alleged blow on the head and that he did not recall firing the shots which killed the deceased.

The defendant contends: (1) That the court committed error in failing to give certain requested instructions; (2) That the district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct; and (3) That the verdict of the jury was inconsistent.

[1, 2] The defendant first argues that the court erred to his prejudice in failing to give an instruction on manslaughter. This argument is based upon the claim that the shooting of John Isaak resulted either from defendant's acts of self-defense or as a result of accident or misfortune in the heat of passion upon sudden and sufficient provocation and without malice and without premeditation. However, there is no evidence in the record before us that the defendant was acting in self-defense at the time he shot the deceased and there is no evidence of sudden or any provocation to justify the homicide.

Appellant's defense was based on the claim that he was rendered unconscious as the result of a blow on the head. In this connection the court instructed the jury to the effect that they should find the defendant not guilty of murder if there was any reasonable doubt that at the time of the firing of the fatal shots at John Isaak the defendant, Otis Stembridge, was not conscious of his act by reason of a blow on the head suffered immediately preceding the firing of the shots. Although there was no evidence that the defendant acted in self-defense, the court gave an instruction upon that subject. No instruction on the subject of manslaughter was offered by the defendant. While it is the rule that where there is sufficient evidence upon which a jury may return a verdict of manslaughter, an instruction defining it should be given even if not offered by the defendant, it is not error to fail to give an instruction on manslaughter when there is no evidence to support a verdict finding the defendant guilty of that crime. People v. Manzo, 9 Cal.2d 594, 598, 72 P.2d 119; People v. DuBois, 16 Cal.App.2d 81, 86, 60 P.2d 190. The record before us discloses no possible theory upon which to rest an argument that the defendant was guilty of manslaughter. Under the evidence he was guilty of murder or not at all and an instruction on manslaughter was inapplicable. People v. Shannon, 203 Cal. 139, 143, 263 P. 522.

[3] The jury was fully instructed as to the crime of murder and were told in effect that if they were not satisfied that the defendant was guilty of that offense they must acquit him altogether. It is to be presumed that the jury heeded the court's instruction in this respect and performed their whole duty in accordance with it; that if they were not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty of murder, under the instructions they would have acquitted him. People v. Watts, 198 Cal. 776, 796, 247 P. 884.

The evidence shows that Stembridge was guilty of murder, and murder alone. He left the Oasis Club, went to his home, concealed a 22 rifle in his car and returned with his codefendant to the club with the admitted intent to see that there was a "fair fight". In order to carry out his intent and design when Roulain entered the club, Stembridge remained outside, and, raising the rifle, threatened all of the bystanders that they were within an inch of their lives, that they were not to move, that if they moved, he would kill them and that it was to be a "fair fight". He was heard by some of the witnesses to shout a threat to kill the bartender; he fired two shots outside of the cafe in a general direction and above the heads of the bystanders, and two shots into the club. He fired one shot at the deceased, John Isaak, and as Isaak, who was within about five feet, turned, he fired a second shot into his back. He told the wife of the deceased that she would get the same as her husband got; he shouted inside to Roulain that he "had killed a man". This evidence is entirely insufficient upon which to base a verdict of manslaughter and fails to show any facts which would warrant a belief that the defendant shot Isaak "upon any sudden quarrel or heat of passion". Under the facts shown, the court was not required to give, on its own motion, a manslaughter instruction.

[4] The defendant claims error in the court's refusal to give an instruction as to the duty of the jury to acquit if the homicide was found to be accidental or excusable. However, there was no evidence adduced to justify the giving of the requested instruction.

[5, 6] It is also claimed that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury as to the burden of proof required to be produced by the prosecution to overcome the claimed self-defense.

The prosecution established the killing of the deceased by the defendant and there was a definite showing that the crime committed was murder. The burden was then on the defendant to show circumstances in mitigation. People v. Jones, 160 Cal. 358, 371, 117 P. 176. This burden he did not attempt to assume, but merely raised the defense that he was unconscious. This was fully covered by the instructions. The instructions given by the trial court relating to self-defense were sufficient under the evidence.

[7] The court did not err in its refusal to give defendant's instruction relating to circumstantial evidence since there was no circumstantial evidence in the case to which this instruction could apply, as the evidence of the eyewitnesses to the homicide was that the killing was committed by the defendant.

We have examined the other offered and refused instructions and conclude that no error resulted in the court's failure to give them.

[8] It is next claimed that the court erroneously failed and neglected to give a responsive answer to a query directed to it by the foreman of the jury as to whether the jury might return a verdict of guilty as to one defendant and not guilty as to the other. The court had instructed the jury that they might convict one or both of the defendants. When the question was asked by the foreman of the jury, the court reread the instructions previously given and told the jury, in effect, that if they so interpreted the facts, they could convict one and acquit the other. The defendant's contention as to this point is entirely without merit.

[9] The contention that the court erred in not giving instructions relating to conspiracy is likewise without merit. This was one of the theories of the prosecution and was the basis of naming the codefendant, Roulain, as a party defendant to the murder charge. However, conspiracy was not charged in the information and the court did give an instruction requested by the defendant sufficiently covering the subject.

[10] Several statements of the prosecuting attorney are assigned as constituting prejudicial error. The first statement was in reference to the testimony of a defense witness who claimed to have found a broken bottle at the scene of the crime. The prosecutor stated that it was very strange to him that defense counsel could find a man who would testify that he had found a whiskey bottle on the scene the next day and referred to the conduct of an attorney in another criminal case. Defendant's counsel made no objection to the statement and at the time apparently did not consider it prejudicial to him. While the statement was improper, the harmful result, if any, could have been obviated by appropriate instruction of the trial court and the defendant may not predicate error in this court in the absence of assignment of such alleged misconduct as error and a request to the trial court to instruct the jury to disregard it. People v. DuBois, supra, 16 Cal.App.2d page 87, 60 P.2d 190.

[11] Defendant contends that the prosecutor's statement in his closing argument that the judge had denied a motion to dismiss the burglary charge constituted prejudicial misconduct. No prejudice can be attributed to the statement inasmuch as both defendants were found not guilty of the burglary charge.

[12] Defendant complains of the argument of the prosecutor referring to the automatic right of appeal in the case of a verdict of murder in the first degree without recommendation. This objection is without merit as the defendant was not found guilty of murder in the first degree and the reference to the automatic appeal in cases calling for the death penalty has no application in the instant case.

The jury was properly instructed that statements made by counsel in the course of the trial, not as stipulations, were not to be taken by them as evidence of any facts in the case.

[13] The remarks made by the prosecuting attorney in his closing argument, while somewhat improper, do not constitute grounds for reversal. As was said in People v. Hadley, 84 Cal.App.2d 687, 693, 191 P.2d 517, 520: "In determining the prejudicial effect of errors occurring in the trial of a case an appellate court, by the mandate of Article VI, section 4½ of the California Constitution, must review the entire case for the purpose of determining whether a miscarriage of justice has resulted or the ends of justice subserved. It is only '"in a close case where the evidence is sharply conflicting, substantial, and serious errors vital to defendant that may have resulted in a miscarriage of justice must be regarded as prejudicial and grounds for reversal."' People v. Reese, 65 Cal. App.2d 329, 337, 150 P.2d 571, 576." And as was said in People v. Cabaltero, 31 Cal. App.2d 52, 62, 87 P.2d 364, 369: "It is held, however, that where the evidence clearly supports the conviction and it appears that the jury in all probability would have rendered a verdict of guilty even in the absence of any dereliction on the part of the district attorney, a reversal is not justified."

The evidence before us is conclusive as to the defendant's guilt of the crime charged and we cannot hold that there was a miscarriage of justice. People v. Godsey, 71 Cal.App.2d 82, 93, 162 P.2d 46; People v. Kizer, 22 Cal.App. 10, 20, 21, 133 P. 516, 521, 134 P. 346; People v. Cassidy, 86 Cal.App. 45, 53, 260 P. 313; People v. Green, 96 Cal.App.2d 283, 215 P.2d 127.

[14, 15] As a final ground for reversal of the judgment, the defendant contends that the verdict of the jury was inconsistent in that both defendants were not convicted. There was no inconsistency in the verdict as it was within the jury's province to find one defendant guilty and the other not guilty. Both defendants were found not guilty of the burglary charge. As to the murder charge, the evidence shows that Stembridge fired the fatal shots. There was a deliberate intention on his part to kill, evidenced by statements made by him at the time of the killing and subsequent thereto. There was a marked difference in the evidence as to the actions of each of the defendants. Burglary and murder are two separate and distinct offenses and the acquittal of the burglary count did not preclude a conviction on the charge of murder. As was said in People v. Taylor, 88 Cal.App.2d 983, 987, 199 P.2d 751, 754: "The fact that certain defendants may escape conviction for their crimes is not any legal or logical reason why another defend ant, where substantial evidence has been introduced to sustain his conviction, should be exonerated and be permitted to escape punishment for his crime."

Judgment and order affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., concurs.

98 Cal.App.2d 811

M. H. GOLDEN CONST. CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF STATE, IN AND FOR IMPERIAL COUNTY et al.

EL CENTRO PROPERTIES, Inc. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF STATE, IN AND FOR SAN DIEGO COUNTY et al.

Civ. 4216, 4220.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 8, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 5, 1950.

Hearing Denied Sept. 25, 1950.

M. H. Golden Construction Company, a corporation, brought proceedings in prohibition to restrain the Superior Court in Imperial County from taking further proceedings in an action filed in said county, and the El Centro Properties, Inc., a corporation, brought a counter-proceeding to restrain the Superior Court of San Diego County from further proceeding with an action filed therein. The District Court of Appeals, Mussell, J., held that since the two tribunals had concurrent jurisdiction over the same parties and subject matter the tribunal in which jurisdiction first attached was entitled to retain it exclusively, and therefore, since the summons in the San Diego action had been served prior to that issued in Imperial County, the writ of prohibition would lie to restrain the Imperial County Superior Court from taking any further proceedings pending the complete exercise of the San Diego County Superior Court's jurisdiction.

Order in accordance with opinion.

1. Courts ⇐4

Jurisdiction is ordinarily determined by nature of case as made by complaint and relief sought, and nature of action is fixed by allegations of complaint.

2. Venue ⇐4

Action by creditor to recover money alleged due under building contract and for confirmation of creditor's authority under proxy agreement to have corporate assets of debtor corporation sold to satisfy such indebtedness was transitory in character since it did not turn on title to property as distinct from personal obligation.

3. Pleading ⇐45

Plaintiff is required to frame its complaint so as to show that it is entitled to retain trial of action in county in which action was commenced.

4. Corporations ⇐503(1)

Verified complaint which contained allegation that principal office of defendant corporation was located in county where action was brought and that contract upon which action was brought was made and entered into in that county plead sufficient jurisdictional facts. Const. art. 12, § 16.

5. Courts ⇐474

Where construction company brought action in San Diego county against another corporation to recover money due under construction contract, and other corporation brought action in Imperial county against construction company to recover damages for failure of construction company to properly carry out construction contract, but summons in San Diego County action was served prior to that issued in Imperial county, San Diego County Superior Court first acquired jurisdiction of the controversy involved in the two actions and therefore could dispose of the whole thereof. Code Civ. Proc. § 416.

6. Courts ⇐475(1)
Prohibition ⇐10(1)

Where two tribunals have concurrent jurisdiction over same parties and subject matter, tribunal in which jurisdiction first attaches is entitled to retain it exclusively, and prohibition lies to restrain other tribunal from taking any further proceedings pending complete exercise thereof.

7. Courts ⇐30

In action by creditor against debtor corporation, where debtor sought declaration of its rights under proxy agreement with stockholders of debtor corporation, trial court was not deprived of jurisdiction to proceed merely because makers of proxy were not joined as defendants, since trial court had jurisdiction to bring in all necessary parties.

H. G. Sloane, San Diego, for petitioner M. H. Golden Const. Co.

Horton & Knox, El Centro, Martin & Mahedy, San Diego, Sanner, Fleming & Irwin and Thomas J. Madden, Los Angeles, for petitioner El Centro Properties, Inc.

Clarence B. Smith, El Centro, for receiver, Aage Kaiser.

Horton and Knox, San Diego, Martin and Mehedy, San Diego, Sanner, Fleming & Irwin and Thomas J. Madden, Los Angeles, for Superior Court of Imperial County and others.

H. G. Sloane, San Diego, for Superior Court of San Diego County and others.

MUSSELL, Justice.

On April 17, 1950, Golden Construction Company, as plaintiff, filed an action in San Diego County in which a money judgment and declaratory relief was sought against El Centro Properties, Inc. Summons was issued and served on the defendant corporation on the following day. El Centro Properties, Inc. appeared in the action, filed a demurrer and various motions. The demurrer was overruled, the motions were denied and the defendant then filed an answer and cross-complaint. After an answer was filed to the cross-complaint, the matter was set for trial before a jury in the Superior Court of San Diego County.

On March 20, 1950, an action was filed in the County of Imperial by certain stockholders of El Centro Properties, Inc. against the Golden Construction Company in which the plaintiffs alleged that the corporation had failed to take court action for the protection of itself and its stockholders and that such action was filed as a derivative action in behalf of the corporation. The summons was issued at the time the action was filed but was not served on the defendant, Golden Construction Company, until April 21, 1950, three days after the service of the summons in the San Diego action.

On May 5, 1950, the Superior Court in Imperial County appointed a receiver, who took charge of certain real property in that county belonging to the El Centro Properties corporation.

On May 20, 1950, plaintiff in the Imperial County action filed a third amended complaint to which the defendants interposed their demurrer, setting up therein the pendency of another action between the said parties for the same cause, namely: the action then pending in San Diego County. At the same time the Golden Construction Company filed notice of motion to abate the proceedings in Imperial County and to discharge the receiver. Defendants' demurrer was overruled and the motion to abate the proceedings and to discharge the receiver was denied.

The Golden Construction Company then on June 27, 1950, filed its petition herein for a writ to prohibit the Superior Court in Imperial County from taking any further proceedings in the action in that county. El Centro Properties on July 10, 1950, filed its petition herein to restrain the Superior Court in San Diego from taking any further proceedings in the action therein pending.

[1] The primary question for our determination is whether the Superior Court in San Diego has jurisdiction to proceed with the action filed in that county. Jurisdiction is ordinarily determined by the nature of the case as made by the complainant and the relief sought. Ransome-Crummey Co. v. Martenstein, 167 Cal. 406, 408, 139 P. 1060. The nature of the action is fixed by the allegations of the complaint. Becker v. Superior Court, 151 Cal. 313, 317, 90 P. 689.

The action in San Diego County is primarily one to recover moneys alleged to be due plaintiff on a building contract providing for the construction by plaintiff of houses, sewers, roads, curbs and paving on property owned by the defendant corporation in El Centro. In a second cause of action, an account stated was set forth and it was further alleged, among other things, that in order to induce plaintiff not to take action against the defendant and not to record claims of lien on defendant's property, all the directors and stockholders of the defendant corporation agreed to place the control of the corporation in plaintiff; that this was done in order that there might be no dispute or delay in using defendant's assets in discharge of its obligations to plaintiff; that a proxy agreement was executed by all of defendant's shareholders, pursuant to which three nominees of Golden Construction Company were elected to defendant's board of directors; that in subsequent meetings of the new board, actions were taken to liquidate the indebtedness, including a resolution of March 20, 1950, to sell sufficient of the assets of defendant corporation as might be required to discharge the indebtedness to plaintiff; that at this meeting a resolution was adopted amending the articles of incorporation so as to state that the principal office for the transaction of the business of the corporation is located in San Diego County; that on March 29, 1950, the minority directors of defendant corporation delivered to plaintiff a purported revocation of the proxy agreement; that stockholders in defendant corporation then attempted to elect a new board and to conduct the business of defendant corporation; that the confusion resulting from this conflict of asserted authority makes it impossible for either set of officers to conduct the business of the corporation.

In its prayer for relief, plaintiff seeks a declaration of its rights under the proxy agreement, a money judgment, and confirmation of the authority of the directors to sell the corporate assets of defendant corporation to satisfy the indebtedness due the plaintiff.

[2, 3] It is apparent that the action is transitory in character. It is predicated on contract and a money judgment is sought. The action does not turn on the title to the property as distinct from the personal obligation. The plaintiff, as required, framed its complaint to show it was entitled to retain the trial of the action in the county in which it was commenced. Neet v. Holmes, 19 Cal.2d 605, 610-614, 122 P.2d 557.

[4] The verified complaint contains an allegation that the principal office of the defendant, El Centro Properties, Inc., is located in San Diego County, California, and that the contract upon which the action was brought was made and entered into at San Diego.

Under Article XII, section 16, of the California Constitution, a corporation may be sued in the county where the contract is made * * * or in the county where the principal place of business of such corporation is situated, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as in other cases.

We conclude that sufficient jurisdictional facts were pleaded in the complaint.

The action in Imperial County was brought by stockholders of the El Centro Properties, Inc. in behalf of the corporation and is an action for damages, an accounting, and for the appointment of a receiver of the corporation properties in El Centro. The damages claimed are alleged to have been occasioned by the failure of the Golden Construction Company to properly carry out the terms and conditions of the building contract, which is the subject of the suit in San Diego.

The complaint alleges, among other things, that the stockholders of El Centro Properties, by agreement, permitted the Golden Construction Company to gain control of the board of directors of the corporation by electing three directors thereon, and in this connection it is alleged that this action was taken in order to protect the defendant and was in lieu of giving security for an indefinite amount of the indebtedness owed to the Golden Construction Company. A part of the indebtedness was admitted. An accounting was sought, as well as the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the properties in El Centro owned by the El Centro Properties, Inc.

[5] Section 416 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides in part as follows: "[When the court acquires jurisdiction.] From the time of the service of the summons and of a copy of the complaint in a civil action, or of the completion of the publication when service by publication is ordered, the court is deemed to have acquired jurisdiction of the parties, and to have control of all the subsequent proceedings * * *."

The summons in the San Diego action having been served prior to that issued in Imperial County, the San Diego court first acquired jurisdiction of the controversy involved in the two actions before us and may dispose of the whole thereof. De Brincat v. Mogan, 1 Cal.App.2d 7, 10, 36 P.2d 245; Gorman v. Superior Court, 23 Cal.App.2d 173, 177, 72 P.2d 774.

[6] The rule is that where two tribunals have concurrent jurisdiction over the same parties and subject matter, the tribunal in which jurisdiction first attaches is entitled to retain it exclusively, and prohibition lies to restrain the other tribunal from taking any further proceedings pending the complete exercise thereof. Myers v. Superior Court, 75 Cal.App.2d 925, 929, 172 P.2d 84.

[7] The contention is made that since the plaintiff in the San Diego action seeks a declaration of its rights under the proxy agreement and argues that the makers of the proxy, not having been joined as defendants, the San Diego court was thereby deprived of jurisdiction to proceed. However, the Superior Court of San Diego County has jurisdiction to bring in all necessary parties. Myers v. Superior Court, supra, 75 Cal.App.2d 931, 172 P.2d 84.

We are not here deciding on the effect of motions for change of venue which have been or may hereafter be made to change the place of trial of the actions herein. This decision is confined to the question of jurisdiction as presented by the petitions before us.

Let the peremptory writ issue as prayed for in the petition of plaintiff Golden Construction Company, a corporation. The alternative writ issued on the petition of El Centro Properties Inc. is discharged.

BARNARD, P. J., concurs.

99 Cal.App.2d 97

PEOPLE v. HAYDEN.

Cr. 2679.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 21, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 5, 1950.

Hearing Denied Sept. 13, 1950.

Albert Hayden was convicted in the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Albert C. Wollenberg, J., of conspiracy to commit abortion and was placed on probation for five years on condition that he serve one year in the county jail. Before the year had expired and on court's own motion proceedings were instituted to revoke probation during which defendant admitted that he had left custody of deputy sheriff to go with wife to his home, and thereafter court revoked the order of probation and pronounced sentence and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that since the defendant had admitted his violation of probation and probation officer had submitted written report recommending revocation of probation, revocation and sentencing of defendant without allowing him to examine report or refute it by witnesses was not an abuse of discretion.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal law ⇐982

Where probation officer was present in court on original hearing and at request of court made an investigation and report in which he recommended that probation be revoked, notice in writing to probation officer of court's intention to revoke probation was not necessary prior to revocation and sentencing of accused to penitentiary, since requirement of written notice to probation officer, if it applies to an order of revocation, is to give probation officer opportunity to be heard before court acts. Pen.Code, § 1203.3.

2. Criminal law ⇐982

Where accused pleaded guilty to charge of conspiracy to commit abortion and was placed on probation for five years on condition that he serve one year in county jail, and before year expired, proceedings were instituted to revoke probation and accused appeared at hearing with counsel and admitted that he left custody of sheriff and went with wife to his home, and at later hearing probation officer submitted written report recommending revocation of probation, revocation and sentencing of accused without allowing accused to examine report or refute it by witnesses was not an abuse of discretion. Pen.Code, § 1203.3.

3. Criminal law ⇐982

A proceeding to revoke probation is not a formal trial and is not governed by the rules governing such trial. Pen.Code, § 1203.3.

Arthur D. Klang, Morris M. Grupp, San Francisco, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, David K. Lener, Deputy Attorney General, Edmund G. Brown, District Attorney, Frank Brown, Assistant District Attorney, San Francisco, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice.

Defendant appeals from the judgment of the Superior Court sentencing him to the state penitentiary after an order revoking his probation. Appellant pleaded guilty to a charge of conspiracy to commit abortion and was placed on probation for five years on condition that he serve one year in the county jail. Before the year had expired on the court's own motion proceedings were instituted to revoke his probation.

Appellant was brought before the judge on March 16, 1950 and requested a continuance until his attorney could be present which was granted to a later time the same day. With counsel representing him present appellant was interrogated by the judge and answered freely without any legal objection being interposed by his counsel. It developed from his own admission that on at least one occasion while working in the custody of a deputy sheriff he persuaded the deputy to allow him to leave his custody and drive from San Bruno to San Francisco in an automobile with his wife for a visit to his home.

The court then continued the matter for the investigation and report of the adult probation officer. At a later hearing the probation officer submitted a written report in which he recommended that probation be revoked and appellant sentenced. At that hearing counsel for appellant asked for an opportunity to read the probation officer's report and to interview certain witnesses. The judge stated: "Let me say this: On the statement that Mr. Albert Hayden made here on the stand, in open court, there is sufficient—and we don't have to go beyond that—to verify and back up the recommendations of the Probation Officer in the matter, and to convince the Court that in this case such was the situation."

The court without further hearing revoked the order of probation and sentenced appellant.

[1] Appellant urges for reversal that no notice in writing of the intention to revoke probation was given to the probation officer as required by section 1203.3, Penal Code. The law does not require idle acts. The probation officer was present in court on the original hearing and at the request of the court made an investigation and report in which he recommended that probation be revoked. The purpose of the requirement of written notice to the probation officer, if it applies to an order of revocation, see In re Walden, 92 Cal.App.2d 861, 864, 208 P.2d 441, is to give the probation officer the opportunity to be heard before the court acts. He had and exercised that opportunity in this case.

[2, 3] There is nothing in the point that appellant was compelled to testify against himself. Appellant was not compelled to testify. With counsel representing him present he answered the court's questions without any objection. Nor can appellant show prejudice from the fact that he was not allowed to examine the report or refute it by witnesses. The court chose to act, not on the report, but on the defendant's own admission that in violation of the condition of his probation he took a trip from San Bruno to San Francisco and back without being in the custody of any officer. Nothing that appellant might produce could alter this fact. We can find no abuse of discretion in the court's action in revoking his probation and sentencing appellant. A proceeding to revoke probation is not a formal trial and is not governed by the rules governing such trials. People v. Fields, 131 Cal.App. 56, 20 P.2d 988; People v. Silverman, 33 Cal.App.2d 1, 92 P.2d 507; In re Dearo, 96 Cal.App. 2d 141, 214 P.2d 585.

The fact that appellant had spent nearly a year in jail is a matter for the exclusive consideration of the Adult Authority. People v. Tibbits, 60 Cal.App.2d 335, 338, 140 P.2d 726.

Judgment affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and GOODELL, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 173

PEOPLE v. EMERY et al.
Cr. 4403.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 22, 1950.

Theodore Emery and Dr. Samuel D. Collins were convicted of abortion. Thereafter Dr. Samuel D. Collins petitioned for writ of error coram nobis. From an order of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Thurmond Clarke, J., denying a writ, the petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that where conviction depended upon testimony of young woman who claimed that she was pregnant at time involved, testimony by two doctors, if it had been admitted, that young woman victim was not then pregnant, would only have raised a question as to weight of testimony, and alleged negligence of counsel in not calling the two doctors as witnesses was not ground for granting writ of error coram nobis.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal law ⇐997

Where doctor was convicted of abortion on the testimony of young woman who claimed that she was pregnant at time involved, testimony by two other doctors, if it had been admitted, that young woman victim was not then pregnant, would only have raised a question as to weight of testimony, and alleged negligence of counsel in not calling the two doctors as witnesses was not ground for granting writ of error coram nobis.

2. Criminal law ⇐997

Where doctor was convicted of abortion, subsequent evidence that young woman victim was not then pregnant would not require issuance of writ of error coram nobis.

3. Criminal law ⇐997

Writ of error coram nobis will not be granted for newly discovered evidence going to merits of issues tried, and issues of fact, once adjudicated, even though incorrectly, cannot be reopened except on motion for new trial.

Frederic H. Vercoe, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Dan Kaufmann, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

In 1946 defendant was tried by court and jury, and convicted of abortion. He admitted a prior conviction of the same offense. Motion for new trial was made and denied, and he was sentenced to state's prison for the term prescribed by law. The judgment and order were affirmed by this Court. People v. Emery, 79 Cal.App.2d 226, 179 P.2d 843.

In January, 1949, defendant petitioned the Superior Court for writ of error coram nobis. The petition was heard and denied. From this order defendant appeals.

Only one ground in support of the petition needs attention. Other grounds in the petition (which was prepared by defendant himself) are palpably insufficient, and are so conceded by his counsel.

At the jury trial the young woman victim of the defendant testified that she was pregnant, and that she went to defendant's office. She described at length what was done to her on two occasions. A synopsis of her testimony may be read in People v. Emery, supra.

In his petition here defendant avers that two doctors would have testified that they examined the young woman at the time in question and that she was not then pregnant. Defendant asserts that it was negligence on the part of his then counsel not to have called these two doctors as witnesses in his behalf.

A counter affidavit was filed by counsel, denying negligence, stating that defendant himself told him that the woman was pregnant, and asserting that he did all in his power in the defense of his client. The trial court indicated that he believed this affidavit. However, as stated by defendant, professional conduct of his counsel is collateral to the question here involved, and should not in any way be determinative of it.

Many California cases have considered and discussed the writ of error coram nobis, its application, its scope and its effect.

In People v. Adamson, 34 Cal.2d 320, 210 P.2d 13, 15, it is said: "In this state a motion to vacate a judgment in the nature of a petition for coram nobis is a remedy of narrow scope. (Citing cases.) Its purpose is to secure relief, where no other remedy exists, from a judgment rendered while there existed some fact which would have prevented its rendition if the trial court had known it and which, through no negligence or fault of the defendant, was not then known to the court. (Citing cases.)"

And in People v. Tuthill, 32 Cal.2d 819, 198 P.2d 505, 506, it is said: "Defendant recognizes the following settled rule: 'The office of the writ of coram nobis is to bring the attention of the court to, and obtain relief from, errors of fact, such as * * * a valid defense existing in the facts of the case, but which, without negligence on the part of the defendant, was not made, either through duress or fraud or excusable mistake; these facts not appearing on the face of the record, and being such as, if known in season, would have prevented the rendition and entry of the judgment questioned.' (Citations.) * * * It is a general rule that the writ will not be granted for newly discovered evidence going to the merits of the issues tried; issues of fact, once adjudicated, even though incorrectly, cannot be reopened except on motion for new trial. (Citing cases.)"

[1] The effect of the testimony of the two doctors, if it had been taken, could only have been to raise a question of the weight of their opinion and that of the woman herself. The fact that she was not pregnant, if it had been brought to the attention of the court and jury, would not have compelled a verdict of not guilty. It would not have prevented the rendition of the judgment. People v. Emery, supra. Speculation as to what the jury might have done had these witnesses testified is not within the reach of this inquiry.

[2, 3] Nor would the fact that the woman was not pregnant brought now without dispute to the attention of this court compel the issuance of the writ of error coram nobis. The rule to be here applied is that set forth in People v. Tuthill, supra: "* * * that the writ will not be granted for newly discovered evidence going to the merits of the issues tried; issues of fact, once adjudicated, even though incorrectly, cannot be reopened except on motion for new trial."

The order is affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 43

YEOMAN v. SAWYER et al.

Civ. 7738.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 17, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 16, 1950.

Action by Anna Marie Yeoman, administratrix of the estate of Carl Heckart, deceased, against Edith Sawyer, also known as Edith Heckart, and others, to quiet title to certain realty, in which defendant Edith Sawyer cross-complained to quiet title in herself. The Superior Court, Butte County, Harry Deirup, J., entered a judgment quieting title in defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that where husband contributed community funds toward one-half purchase price of property to which title was taken by joint tenancy deed designating husband and a person, not his wife or partner, who had contributed one-half purchase price as joint tenant, interest created was that of tenants in common, and upon husband's death undivided one-half interest in property became a separate descendible interest, was subject to administration and husband's administratrix could maintain action on behalf of husband's estate to quiet title to undivided one-half interest in property.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded with instructions.

1. Deeds ⇐136

Where a husband contributes community funds toward the purchase of property to which title is taken under a joint tenancy deed designating the husband and a person other than his wife as joint tenants, the interest thereby created is not that of joint tenants but rather of tenants in common.

2. Deeds ⇐136
Descent and distribution ⇐11
Executors and administrators ⇐39, 129(3)

Where husband contributed community funds toward one-half purchase price of property to which title was taken under a joint tenancy deed designating husband and a person, not his wife or partner, who had contributed one-half purchase price as joint tenants, interest created was that of tenants in common, and upon husband's death undivided one-half interest in property became a separate descendible interest, was subject to administration and husband's administratrix could maintain action to quiet title to undivided one-half interest in property. Civ.Code, §§ 161a, 682, 686; Probate Code, §§ 202, 573; Code Civ.Proc. § 369.

Clewe, Deahl & McClarrinon, Robert V. Blade, all of Oroville, for appellant.

Charles H. Andrews, Chico, for respondents.

PEEK, Justice.

Anna Marie Yeoman, as administratrix of the estate of Carl Heckart, deceased, commenced this action to quiet title to certain real property situated in Butte County, the complaint containing the usual allegations of such an action. Defendant Edith Sawyer, also known as Edith Heckart, filed an answer denying the principal allegations of the complaint, and in addition cross-complained to quiet title in herself, alleging that she and the deceased, Carl Heckart, had taken title to the property as joint tenants by a deed dated January 2, 1947; and that by a decree of the Superior Court of Butte County dated August 30, 1948 terminating said joint tenancy, she became the sole owner and entitled to the possession of said property. The cause proceeded to trial, at the conclusion of which the court found that the defendant and cross-complainant was the owner of the land in question and that plaintiff had no interest therein. Judgment was accordingly entered quieting title in defendant and cross-complainant, from which plaintiff administratrix prosecutes this appeal.

It appears from the record that the decedent was a married man whose spouse was an inmate of a mental institution in the state of Missouri, which facts were known to defendant. Decedent came to California and first met respondent in September, 1937. After a lapse of some two or three months, decedent and respondent commenced living together as man and wife in Butte County and continued to do so until decedent's death. During this time they purchased and sold several parcels of real property. The property here in dispute was the last parcel so purchased. Decedent contributed one-half of the purchase price from funds derived from his earnings and respondent contributed the other half from her separate property. A deed was executed and delivered in the names of deceased and respondent as joint tenants.

Appellant's sole contention is that since decedent contributed community funds and respondent contributed separate funds toward the purchase of the property, a valid joint tenancy was never created. As a consequence, appellant asserts, deceased and respondent were tenants in common, each holding an undivided one-half interest separately descendible, and that appellant, as administratrix of decedent's estate, is entitled to quiet title to such one-half interest.

Respondent does not argue that a valid joint tenancy resulted but in support of the judgment argues that decedent's wife, and not appellant, is the only person authorized to maintain an action on the theory that the decedent had made an unauthorized gift of community funds voidable only at the suit of decedent's wife.

The court did not find, nor does the record contain, any evidence of a gift of community funds by decedent to respondent. Therefore the sole question for decision is whether a valid joint tenancy existed between decedent and respondent since the judgment quieting respondent's title to the entire property and the consequent right of survivorship is necessarily dependent thereon.

[1] We have found no case directly passing on the question involved herein. However, we are satisfied that where a husband contributes community funds toward the purchase of property, to which title is taken under a joint tenancy deed designating the husband and a person other than his wife as joint tenants, the interest thereby created is not that of joint tenants but rather of tenants in common. This is true, since, "For the creation of a joint tenancy, four unities are required, namely, unity of interest, unity of title, unity of time, and unity of possession, and the absence of any one of these elements ordinarily will change the nature of the estate." Hammond v. McArthur, 30 Cal.2d 512, 514, 183 P.2d 1, 2. Thus it has been held that where husband and wife, with community funds, take title to property as joint tenants, the form of the conveyance is such as to destroy the statutory presumption that the property is community and the joint tenancy stands as such, the interest of each spouse being separate property unless the spouses intended that it should remain community property. Siberell v. Siberell, 214 Cal. 767, 7 P.2d 1003; Tomaier v. Tomaier, 23 Cal.2d 754, 146 P.2d 905.

[2] This must follow for, under the provisions of section 161a of the Civil Code, the respective interests of the husband and wife in community property "are present, existing and equal interests." Hence, as the court stated in the Siberell case, supra, by applying the presumption that property standing in the name of the wife is her separate estate and that in the name of the husband is community property "it will be at once noted that there can be no unity of interest present, for the interest of the wife would be unequal to and more than that of the husband." [214 Cal. 767, 7 P.2d 1005.] More recently it has been held that "It is, of course, the law that one joint tenant cannot, as to the joint tenancy interest involved, own a greater share than any of the other joint tenants. * * * The theory is, that joint tenants together have but one estate and hence their interest must be equal. * * * See 2 Tiffany on Real Property 3d Ed. p. 196 at P. 198, § 418; 2 Jones' Blackstone, p. 955, § 254; 2 Reeves Real Property, p. 959, § 677." Estate of Galletto, 75 Cal.App.2d 580, 171 P.2d 152, 156.

Turning to the reference to Tiffany on Real Property, noted in the Galletto case, the following statement is found: "Since joint tenants in theory have together but one estate, they both necessarily have the same amount of interest. For instance, one joint tenant cannot have a one-fourth interest and the other a three-fourth's interest." Sec. 419. This is the precise situation presented in the instant case, for, if the defendant Sawyer held her interest as her separate estate and if that of the decedent was the community interest of himself and his wife in which each had a present existing interest, then Sawyer's interest amounted to one-half and the decedent's and his wife's to a one-quarter interest, respectively.

If, then, a valid joint tenancy was not created under the situation herein presented, the only estate which could have been created was that of a tenancy in common, since decedent and defendant were neither husband nor wife nor were they partners. Section 682, 686, Civil Code; See also McDonald v. Morley, 15 Cal.2d 409, 101 P.2d 690, 129 A.L.R. 810.

Therefore as the parties held the property here in question as tenants in common, and as it is conceded that each party contributed equally to the acquisition thereof, upon the death of decedent the undivided one-half interest standing in his name became a "separate descendible interest." McDonald v. Morley, supra, 15 Cal.2d at page 412, 101 P.2d at page 692. It necessarily follows that since decedent's interest was descendible it thus was subject to administration under the provisions of section 202 of the Probate Code, Estate of Coffee, 19 Cal.2d 248, 120 P.2d 661, and hence plaintiff, as administratrix thereof, was entitled to maintain her action on behalf of said estate to quiet title to said undivided one-half interest therein. Probate Code, section 573; Code of Civil Procedure, section 369; Rehart v. Klossner, 48 Cal.App.2d 40, 119 P.2d 148.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded with instructions to the trial court to enter judgment quieting title in plaintiff as administratrix of decedent's estate as to an undivided one-half interest, and to enter a like judgment in favor of defendant as to the remaining undivided one-half interest.

ADAMS, P. J., and VAN DYKE, J., concur.

98 Cal.App.2d 782

PEOPLE v. SHEVETTE et al.
Cr. 4419.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.
Aug. 7, 1950.

Floyd E. Shevette and others were convicted in the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, W. Turney Fox, J., of conspiracy to commit forcible rape, of forcible rape and attempted forcible rape, and of violating the statute making it a crime to participate in copulating the mouth of another person, and they appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that the evidence supported the convictions.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal law ⇐1144(13)

On criminal appeals, evidence must be viewed most favorably to conviction.

2. Criminal law ⇐1160

In criminal prosecution, weight of evidence is for jury in the first instance, and for trial court after verdict in the second, and if circumstances reasonably justify verdict, opinion of reviewing court that those circumstances might also reasonably be reconciled with innocence of defendant will not warrant interference.

3. Conspiracy ⇐47

Evidence supported convictions of conspiracy to commit forcible rape.

4. Rape ⇐51(4)

Evidence supported convictions of forcible rape.

5. Rape ⇐53(1)

Evidence supported conviction of attempted forcible rape.

6. Sodomy ⇐6

Evidence supported conviction of violation of statute prohibiting person from participating in act of copulating mouth of another. Pen.Code, § 288a.

7. Rape ⇐57(1)

In prosecution for rape, whether acts of intercourse, if they occurred, were forcible was a question for the jury.

8. Criminal law ⇐553

Evidence which discloses circumstances that are unusual is not inherently improbable.

9. Criminal law ⇐742(1)

In prosecutions for rape or conspiracy to commit rape and for violating the statute prohibiting person from participating in copulation of the mouth of another, whether complaining witness' testimony was inherently improbable was a matter for the jury. Pen.Code, § 288a.

10. Criminal law ⇐1159(4)

Reviewing court cannot reject statements of witness that have been believed by trier of facts unless it is a physical impossibility that they be true or their falsity be apparent without resorting to inferences or deductions.

11. Criminal law ⇐380

Testimony of character witness, based not upon what had been heard but upon something witness personally knew about prosecuting witness, was properly excluded.

12. Witnesses ⇐337(5)

Prosecuting attorney could properly cross-examine defendant concerning previous arrests after he testified that he had no prior record, solely for purpose of testing credibility on that issue.

13. Witnesses ⇐277(3)

In criminal case, it is proper to cross-examine defendant upon any relevant and material matter elicited on direct examination to show conduct or statements inconsistent with direct testimony. Pen.Code, § 1323.

Gladys Towles Root, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Stanford D. Herlick, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

In a trial by jury the defendants Floyd E. Shevette, Richard Janeway, Frank M. Williams and Raymond A. Slavens were each convicted of conspiracy to commit forcible rape, of forcible rape and attempted forcible rape, and of violating Section 288a of the Penal Code. The defendants' motions to have case referred to the California Youth Authority, and for a new trial, were denied, as was an application for probation. Each defendant was sentenced to the state prison for the term prescribed by law as to each count, the sentences to run concurrently.

The grounds of appeal, as stated in appellants' brief, are that, "I. The Court committed errors of law during the trial of the action. II. The judgment is contrary to the law and to the evidence. III. The evidence is not sufficient to sustain the verdict."

It appears from the record that Patricia McAuley, aged 17 years, complaining witness herein, accompanied by a friend, Lois Wycoff, left the Wycoff home about 7:00 P.M. on February 9, 1949, and by public conveyance went to the "Roller Center", a skating rink in South Gate, California. The two girls left the rink about 10:45 P.M. and while waiting for a bus, the four defendants and two other boys drove up in a two-door sedan. The defendant Williams, whom Patricia had known before, asked for a match which Patricia supplied. The girls were then invited to ride home, and upon being told that two of the boys would be dropped off at a hot dog stand, got in the car. Patricia sat on Williams' lap in the back seat; Lois sat on another occupant's lap in the front seat.

The defendant Shevette, who owned the car, was then driving; later, after leaving the two boys at the hot dog stand, the defendant Janeway drove the car in the general direction of the girls' home. Against protests that the girls had to go home the car was driven past the proper street and into a cemetery at 162nd Street and Central Avenue. It was then stated that the car would not start, and it was here that the alleged crimes were committed.

Slaven then suggested that he wanted to have sexual intercourse; Lois refused and Janeway said "that they would beat me up if I didn't do it." Lois Wycoff testified, "I told them I was sick. * * * then Shevette said I would have to prove it", otherwise "they would slap me around." Shevette then accompanied Lois a short distance away, and after being shown proof of menstruation, "He said he was sorry." Miss Wycoff desired to return to the car for the purpose of ascertaining whether the complaining witness was all right but was discouraged from so doing, and was kept at a distance by Shevette until the various assaults had been completed.

Patricia McAuley testified that after Lois had left the car, the defendants Slaven, Williams and Janeway each had intercourse while Patricia was struggling in the back seat; that these defendants kept hitting the complaining witness in the face. Williams and Janeway held the girl's arms and legs while Slaven had intercourse; the other two defendants likewise had intercourse while Patricia was being held. Slaven performed the act twice, and one Berardini, originally one of the party who had been let out at the hot dog stand earlier in the evening and who had arrived in another car, also had intercourse. In addition to these acts the complaining witness testified that while another defendant was having intercourse, defendant Janeway and Slaven had each copulated with complainant's mouth.

The complaining witness further testified: "I was crying. I said I was going to go to the police as soon as I got home, and he (Williams) said it wouldn't do any good * * * that they would get guys to come into court to testify against me". Upon returning to the car Lois Wycoff found Patricia "kind of crying and biting her lip"; later Lois observed that Pat's face was swollen and black and blue, "She was shaking, her hands were shaking, and she could hardly even talk."

The defendant Shevette drove the car back to Lois' home where the two girls got out. Patricia told Lois what had happened. Patricia then walked a short distance home, arriving there about 2:30 A.M. Mrs. McAuley found Patricia in a crying and hysterical condition. At that time the daughter made no complaint but the next afternoon informed Mrs. McAuley what had occurred at the cemetery. Patricia was examined by a physician the day after the assaults; "She was crying, very nervous, emotionally upset." The examination revealed tears or breaks in the hymen which "seemed to be not of recent origin"; the relaxed condition of the vagina could "probably, possibly" have resulted from the acts of intercourse which occurred on the preceding day.

A few days after the occurrence, Patricia's mother interviewed the defendant Williams who stated that what Patricia had said about the cemetery episode was true but denied having intercourse; "that he had faked it but had to go through with it to show the other boys that he wasn't a sissy or wasn't going to back out". Williams gave to Mrs. McAuley the names of the other defendants.

At the trial each defendant denied the charges in toto, and also introduced character witnesses who testified that the reputation of Patricia McAuley for morality and chastity was bad. Police officers testified to incriminating statements made by the defendants and to admissions that the complaining witness had been forced into the acts of intercourse. There was evidence indicating that the defendant Shevette did not have intercourse with Patricia but kept the other girl from returning to the automobile until the various acts by the other defendants had been completed. Shevette told an officer that "he thought he did" know what was going on in the car; that upon returning to the car Patricia was crying; that Shevette then returned the girls home.

[1,2] Viewing the evidence most favorably to the convictions as must be done in criminal appeals, the events related by the prosecuting witness, together with the surrounding circumstances disclosed by the record, must be deemed sufficient to support the judgments herein. In the language of the headnote to People v. Newland, 15 Cal. 2d 678, 104 P.2d 778, "the weight of the evidence is for the jury to determine in the first instance and the trial court after the verdict in the second instance; and if the circumstances reasonably justify the verdict of the jury, an opinion of the reviewing court that those circumstances might also reasonably be reconciled with the innocence of the defendant will not warrant interference."

[3-6] Both in reference to the conspiracy counts and those charging rape and the other offences involve, the verdicts must be upheld. It is conceded in appellants' brief that the agreement necessary to a criminal conspiracy "need not be formal". As respondent has pointed out, there is evidence that in violation of a promise to take the girls home, "appellants employed trickery to get the girls to the cemetery. There were four men to two girls at all times. * * * Once at the cemetery, the defendants did not waste time. Their avowed purpose was immediately announced." In reference to Shevette, who had no intercourse with either girl, it is pointed out that this defendant provided the vehicle in which the crimes were committed, and not only allowed these acts to be committed without protest, but prevented Lois from going to the aid of the prosecuting witness. That from first to last Shevette aided and abetted the other defendants cannot well be denied. The existence of a criminal conspiracy and each defendant's participation in the crimes, were questions of fact. It cannot be said that the jury's findings as to these matters are without evidentiary support or contrary to law.

[7] "It is appellant's contention that the character testimony as presented by the defense showed that she (Patricia) did not have a good general reputation for morality and chastity", and "proved that, if an act of sexual intercourse occurred on the night in question, it was not a forcible act; it was one with her full consent." But, as pointed out in the respondent's brief, the jury may have felt that the attempt to prove that the bad character of complaining witness lacked conviction, and that the opinions of the character witnesses were predicated upon weak foundation. Again it may be said that such evidence and the inferences to be drawn therefrom, were matters for the jury's consideration.

[8-10] The appellants have attacked the testimony of the complaining witness as "inherently improbable", referring particularly to the latter's statement that while one defendant was having intercourse, another defendant violated Section 288a of the Penal Code. But, as was said in People v. Klinkenberg, 90 Cal.App.2d 608, 204 P.2d 47, 58, 613, "Evidence which discloses circumstances that are unusual cannot be said to be inherently improbable." Again, "A reviewing court cannot reject statements of a witness that have been believed by the trier of facts unless it is a physical impossibility that they be true or their falsity be apparent without resorting to inferences or deductions." Such is the present situation. The jury had before it all the circumstances bearing upon the matter and as respondent's brief points out, "undoubtedly concluded that the * * * offense was not only possible but was in fact perpetrated as related."

[11] It is also contended by appellants that the trial court erred in excluding the testimony of a character witness. However, the record discloses that the witness' opinion was not based upon what had been heard but upon something the witness "personally knew about her." Under such circumstances there was no error in excluding the testimony.

[12, 13] Error is likewise predicated upon the trial court's act in permitting the prosecutor to question the defendant Williams concerning a previous arrest. In reference to this matter the trial court stated: "He (Williams) testified to the fact that he had not had any prior record or prior charge. The questions on cross examination were solely for the purpose of testing his credibility on that issue." As stated in People v. Westek, 31 Cal.2d 469, 476, 190 P.2d 9, 14, "it is proper in a criminal case to cross-examine a defendant upon any relevant and material matter elicited on his direct examination, for the purpose of showing conduct or statements inconsistent with his direct testimony. Pen. Code, sec. 1323."

The record herein discloses substantial evidence in support of the jury's findings; no reversible error has been pointed out; each of the defendants apparently received a fair and impartial trial. There is no merit in any of the appellants' contentions.

The judgments are affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., and DRAPEAU, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 49

ARROW FLYING SERVICE, Inc., v. UNIVERSAL FLYERS GROUND SCHOOL et al.
Civ. 17275.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.
Aug. 18, 1950.

Arrow Flying Service, Inc., brought action against Universal Flyers Ground School, a copartnership, and others, for alleged breach of contract whereby defendant partnership agreed to furnish ground school instructions for students at flying school conducted by plaintiff. A judgment for defendants was entered by Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Charles S. Burnell, J., and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that where defendant partnership entered into contract to furnish ground school instruction for students at flying school conducted by another partnership, upon corporation being formed to take over operation of the flying school, corporation was entitled to show that it had ratified the contract and to further show that the contract, though signed by only one of the defendant partners, represented a valid and subsisting agreement.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

1. Contracts ⇐10(1)

Lack of mutuality is tantamount to want of consideration, and where sufficient consideration is otherwise apparent mutuality is not essential, becoming essential only when its absence would leave a party without a valid or available consideration for his promise.

2. Corporations ⇐448(2)

Where defendant partnership entered into contract to furnish ground school instruction for students at flying school conducted by another partnership, upon corporation being formed to take over operation of the flying school, corporation was entitled to show that it had ratified the contract and to further show that the contract, though signed only by one of the defendant partners, represented a valid and subsisting agreement. Civ.Code, §§ 1636, 3388.

Charles C. Morrison, West Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jesse A. Hamilton, Los Angeles, for respondents.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

Demurrer to plaintiff's second amended complaint was overruled, defendants filed their answer, and the case was called for trial. Objection was sustained to the introduction of evidence on the ground that the complaint failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. From the judgment which followed plaintiff appeals.

The complaint alleges that on March 28, 1947, plaintiff and defendants entered into an agreement by which defendants were to furnish to plaintiff ground school instruction for plaintiff's students; that on August 16, 1947, defendants refused to proceed further under the terms of the contract, and ever since that time have refused to comply with it; that nineteen of plaintiff's students required ground school instruction, which defendants refused to give, to the damage of plaintiff in the sum of $205 for each student; that if said students had been so taught plaintiff would have received $196 additional for each of them—all to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $5,463.

At the time the contract was entered into the plaintiff corporation was not in existence. The contract was between Arrow Flying Service, a partnership, and defendants. The corporation was formed ten or twelve days afterwards; but the parties complied with its terms for a time.

The contract was signed only by one person, Mr. John E. Monroe for the defendants.

The reporter's transcript indicates that the trial judge sustained the demurrer primarily because he felt that on its face it showed lack of mutuality.

The contract reads as follows:

"Arrow Flying Service, herein known as the first party, and Universal Flyers Ground School herein known as the second party, enter into the following agreement:

"The first party agrees to pay the second party 70¢ (seventy cents) per student hour for the number of hours of ground school instruction prescribed by the curriculum of the course in which their students are enrolled.

"The second party shall be the exclusive source for textbooks, supplies and equipment needed in the conduct of the course. The cost of which is not to be included in the above mentioned figure.

"In consideration hereof the second party agrees to maintain and conduct the ground school in accordance with the directives set forth by the approving agencies.

"This contract is to remain in effect for so long as the first party shall be designated an authorized flying school by the Veteran's Administration.

"28 March, 1947

"For Arrow Flying Service

"For Universal Flyers G/S

John E. Monroe

_____"

The contract speaks for itself. Defendants agree to maintain and conduct a ground school; plaintiff agrees to pay for students enrolled.

[1, 2] A contract is to be interpreted to give effect to the mutual intention of the parties as it existed at the time it was made. Civ.Code, sec. 1636. As was said in Brawley v. Crosby Research Foundation, Inc., 73 Cal.App.2d 103, at page 113, 166 P.2d 392, 397; "Lack of mutuality is tantamount to want of consideration, and where, as in this case, sufficient consideration is otherwise present, mutuality is not essential. It becomes essential only when its absence would leave a party without a valid or available consideration for his promise."

Plaintiff had the right to show that the corporation ratified the contract. Smith v. Glo-Fire Co., 94 Cal.App.2d 154, 210 P.2d 286.

Plaintiff also had the right to show that even though the writing was signed by only one party, it nevertheless represented a valid and subsisting agreement. Civ. Code, sec. 3388; Gelfan v. Bessolo & Gualano, 125 Cal.App. 214, 13 P.2d 793.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

WHITE, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 210

STOCKTON MORRIS PLAN CO. v. MARIPOSA COUNTY et al. (two cases).
Civ. 7755, 7789.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 25, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 19, 1950.

Hearing Denied Oct. 23, 1950.

Action by the Stockton Morris Plan Company against Mariposa County, Mariposa County District No. 5 and S. A. Milton to recover possession of a piece of road equipment called a road maintainer. From an order of the Superior Court, San Joaquin County, Thomas B. Quinn, J., granting the county's and the defendant Milton's motion for judgment on pleadings and merits respectively, the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, J., held that complaint alleging assignment of conditional sales contract stated cause of action in replevin against county, which was in possession of road maintainer but that complaint did not state cause of action against the defendant Milton because he was not in possession.

Reversed as to county; affirmed as to defendant Milton.

1. Pleading ⇐345(1), 350(3)
Stipulations ⇐14(10)

Only where there is entire absence of some essential allegation may motion for judgment on pleadings be properly granted, and hence neither stipulation of facts nor testimony, nor issues raised by answer could be considered on such motion.

2. Replevin ⇐57

Complaint which alleges title in plaintiff to property demanded, right to possession thereof when action was begun, actual possession of property by defendant, demand for possession and refusal to deliver alleges cause of action in replevin.

3. Pleading ⇐345(1.4)

Complaint alleging conditional sale of road maintainer, assignment of contract to plaintiff, default by buyer and possession by county, stated cause of action against county in replevin, as against motion by county for judgment on the pleadings based on alleged invalidity of the conditional sale contract.

4. Sales ⇐479(2)

Replevin by assignee of conditional vendor of road maintainer could not be maintained against defaulting vendee who was not in possession.

5. Replevin ⇐10

Nonpossession, with some exceptions, is a complete defense against action of replevin.

Lafayette J. Smallpage, Harold J. Willis, Stockton, for appellant.

Robert Owen Curran, District Attorney, Mariposa, for respondents.

VAN DYKE, Justice.

The Stockton Morris Plan Company, plaintiff and appellant here, brought suit against Mariposa County and one S. A. Milton to recover possession of a piece of road equipment called a maintainer. The complaint alleges the corporate status of plaintiff, the political status of Mariposa County, and concerning Milton, that at the time of the execution of a certain contract referred to in the pleading he was doing business under the fictitious name and style of "Mariposa County District No. 5". Further it is alleged that on March 31, 1947, California Tractor and Equipment Company by a conditional sale contract containing the usual reservation of title in itself sold and delivered the maintainer to Milton for a price of something over $7,000, upon which a balance remained unpaid; that on the same day California Tractor and Equipment Company transferred to plaintiff all its title to the maintainer and all its rights arising under the conditional contract of sale; that the contract provided that if Milton failed to pay the required installments upon the unpaid balance of the purchase price the plaintiff, as such assignee, could take immediate possession of the property; that no payments had been made and that plaintiff had elected to take such possession. Further, as to Mariposa County, it was alleged that it was in possession of the maintainer and, written demand therefor having been made, had refused and still refused to deliver it to plaintiff, detaining the same from plaintiff's possession without right, to plaintiff's damage; that the property had not been taken for taxes, assessment or fine, pursuant to a statute, or seized under execution or an attachment against plaintiff's property and that plaintiff was entitled to immediate possession. The prayer was for judgment against the two defendants for the recovery of the maintainer, or if that could not be had then for the market value thereof.

When the case was called for trial defendant Mariposa County moved the court for judgment on the pleadings as to it. No such motion was made by Milton. The trial court did not immediately rule upon the motion and certain stipulations of fact were entered into and the parties having thus progressed as far as they could by agreement, several witnesses were sworn and their testimony taken. The matter was then submitted and the trial court issued an order granting the county's motion for judgment on the pleadings and thereafter caused such judgment to be entered, decreeing that plaintiff take nothing as against the county. As to Milton the court made findings of fact, drew conclusions of law and gave judgment that plaintiff take nothing as to him. Plaintiff has appealed from both judgments. The parties have presented their contentions upon a single record on appeal and we shall render but one opinion.

Treating first the appeal from the judgment on the pleadings in favor of the respondent Mariposa County, it must be said at the outset that the sole question is whether or not the complaint stated a cause of action. As the Supreme Court said in Rannard v. Lockheed Aircraft Corp., 26 Cal.2d 149, 151, 157 P.2d 1, 2:

[1] "In considering whether the judgment on the pleadings was properly granted, it is but necessary to determine the sufficiency of the complaint upon the same principle as though it had been attacked by general demurrer. In other words, it is only where there is an entire absence of some essential allegation that a motion for judgment on the pleadings may be properly granted."

See also Bates v. Escondido Union High School District, 133 Cal.App. 725, 727, 24 P.2d 884, 885, in which the court, after stating the foregoing principle, said: "This court cannot consider anything outside of the complaint itself and must disregard any defect that might be reached by a special demurrer."

Applying the foregoing rule, we must, therefore, disregard the stipulation of facts and the testimony appearing in the record, for nothing contained therein can be looked to in support of the judgment on the pleadings. If that judgment cannot stand solely upon deficiencies in the complaint, the proper course would have been the determination of the cause upon the merits. Nor are issues raised by the answer to be considered, nor the validity of any theory of defense to the action which may be therein set forth.

[2] We think it is apparent from our statement of the allegations contained in the complaint that the action as against the county at least was the simple one of replevin, since the complaint contains all the essential allegations in such a suit and nothing in addition thereto, which in any wise could change the character of the proceeding. Summarized, the complaint alleges title in plaintiff to the property demanded; right to possession thereof when the action was begun, actual possession of the property by the county, demand for possession and refusal to deliver. These allegations have so often been held to sufficiently state a cause of action in replevin that extensive citation of authority could be made, but is unnecessary. It will suffice to quote the following from 5 California Jurisprudence 185:

"The ultimate fact which must be pleaded in an action for the recovery of the possession of personal property is, that plaintiff was at the time the action was commenced the owner of * * * the chattel, coupled with a right to the immediate possession thereof, and that the property was at that time wrongfully in the possession of defendant. If these are alleged, it is not necessary to state the grounds on which the allegations are based."

[3] Counsel for the respondent county have by permission of this court filed herein as their brief on appeal the same brief which they filed in the trial court. An examination thereof discloses that their sole contention in the trial court was based upon the claimed invalidity of the conditional sale contract referred to in the complaint and the asserted legal effects flowing therefrom, but, as we have said, the complaint did not go upon allegations of contractual relations between the plaintiff and the county and no such contractual relations are alleged ever to have existed and no invalidity appears on the face of the contract. The conditional sale contract referred to, copy of which is attached to the complaint, does not purport to be a contract with Mariposa County nor does it anywhere appear therein that it was the intention of those who did execute the contract that the county should be a party thereto. Apparently the pleader thought best to refer to the contract as showing not only the ownership of the legal title to the chattel by its assignor and the transfer of that title to itself, but also the ground of its right to immediate possession thereof so far as defendant Milton was concerned, to whom the complaint alleges the chattel had been conditionally sold. It is apparent that as far as the complaint is concerned—and that is all we are now considering—it stated a cause of action against the county in replevin, and therefore the judgment on the pleadings in favor of the county must be and it is reversed.

The judgment in favor of defendant Milton rests upon different grounds. It purports to be a judgment on the merits at the trial, preceded by findings of fact and conclusions of law found and drawn by the trial court. Milton answered the plaintiff's complaint. Summarized, he admitted the possession by the county of the maintainer, and denied that he possessed the same or claimed any interest therein or had refused to deliver possession in response to plaintiff's demand. He admitted that he had executed the contract referred to in plaintiff's complaint, although alleging that he had done so with the intention that the maintainer should become the property of Mariposa County. In short, in an action of replevin brought against him he disclaimed all interest in the property sought to be recovered and denied that he possessed the same. These matters were found to be true by the trial court and it would ordinarily follow therefrom that Milton was entitled to the judgment in his favor which he received.

However, appellant argues as follows: That Milton executed the contract as agent for "Mariposa District No. 5"; that Milton did not purport to bind the County of Mariposa and that the county's name appears nowhere upon the face of the contract; that prior to contracting Milton did not have the approval of the board of supervisors of the county relative to the contract or to the purchase of the maintainer; that Mariposa County District No. 5, a road district, is not a political entity and has no corporate existence either de jure or de facto; that Milton did not intend to contract upon his own behalf, but did intend to contract as agent of the road district which he knew did not exist as a political entity. From all of this appellant argues that Milton became liable on the contract as a principal, citing Civil Code Section 2342, since he had assumed to act as an agent and thereby warranted to appellant's assignor that he had authority to act as such and because, purporting to act as an agent, he entered into a written contract in the name of a principal without believing in good faith that he had authority to do so.

[4, 5] Assuming the validity of appellant's argument it does not follow that in this action appellant was entitled to any relief against Milton. The only relief it has asked against Milton by its complaint is the recovery of a chattel, the possession of which the county had at all times. The trial court found as a fact that the county had possession of the chattel and that Milton had not had possession thereof. These findings were supported by substantial evidence. Milton had testified that he had never claimed any interest in the maintainer nor any intent to purchase, use or dispose of the same for himself. Plaintiff sued here, not upon its contractual rights against Milton, whatever they may have been, arising out of his having acted as an unauthorized agent, but to recover possession of the chattel it claimed to own and which it claimed was being withheld from it unlawfully and to such an action, with some exceptions not material here, nonpossession is a complete defense. California Packing Corporation v. Stone, 64 Cal.App. 488, 222 P. 193. We quote from the headnote:

"In an action in replevin or claim and delivery, being an action for the recovery of specific personal property, in order to sustain a judgment for the plaintiff, it must be shown that possession was in the defendant at the time of the beginning of the action or that he had the power to make delivery of the personal property for the recovery of which the action is prosecuted." See also Rathbun v. Hill, 129 Cal. App. 601, 19 P.2d 64.

For the reasons given, the judgment in favor of the County of Mariposa, based upon the order granting the county's motion for judgment on the pleadings, is reversed, and the judgment in favor of respondent Milton on the merits is affirmed.

ADAMS, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

99 Cal.App.2d 52

PEOPLE v. LE BLANC.

Cr. 4437.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 18, 1950.

Warren LeBlanc was convicted in the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, William M. Byrne, J., of robbery in the second degree, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that a codefendant's possession of stolen property was evidence of the defendant's guilt.

Affirmed.

1. Robbery ⚖24(1)

Where codefendants were found together at scene of robbery, possession of one was possession of other, and where, at time of arrest, one defendant threw notebook and cards taken from victim to ground other defendant could be found guilty of robbery, second degree, on that evidence of their possession of notebook and cards.

2. Criminal law ⚖351(2, 3)

Where defendant fled when about to be arrested, and made statements to arresting officers inconsistent with his testimony on trial, defendant's conduct indicated consciousness of guilt.

3. Robbery ⚖4

If elements of robbery are present, crime is made out even though property taken be of slight value.

4. Criminal law ⚖1159(4)

In prosecution for robbery, where two police witnesses testified that they had seen defendant going through his victim's pockets and codefendant arrested at same time threw notebook and cards belonging to victim on ground at time of arrest, there was no such inherent improbability in prosecution's case that defendant's conviction must necessarily have been result of passion and prejudice.

5. Criminal law ⚖553

Inherent improbability is established only when it is physically impossible for facts to be true, or their falsity is apparent without resorting to inferences or deductions.

Jefferson & Jefferson, Bernard S. Jefferson, Martha Malone Jefferson, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Donald D. Stoker, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

The complaining witness was going to his hotel room, on East Fifth street in Los Angeles, near the old Southern Pacific station. He had been drinking. It was about eight o'clock at night, and it was dark.

As he came to a street intersection, somebody struck him along the side of the head. Then somebody jerked through his clothes, and took a notebook and cards, and a celluloid wallet. The wallet had in it a dollar bill which the witness had been saving to pay his room rent. He was dazed and frightened and did not know who his assailants were.

At the same time two police officers of the City of Los Angeles were passing by in a vehicle called the "drunk wagon." The officers saw two men at the intersection, standing next to the complaining witness, going through his pockets.

The officers went after the men. One of the men stood still, and was taken into custody by one of the officers. The other man, the defendant here, ran away, was pursued and captured.

On the trial the other defendant said he was going through the victim's pockets to find out where he lived; "to show him the way to go home."

Defendant, appellant here, testified that he was drinking wine on the sidewalk, knew that it was wrong; that he did not touch the complaining witness or take anything from him; did not know the other defendant; and when he saw the officers coming he just "powered right out of there."

Trial by jury was waived, the trial court found the defendants guilty of robbery, second degree. Appellant had an admitted prior conviction, and was sent to the penitentiary. From this judgment he appeals.

Appellant contends that the evidence was insufficient to prove the corpus delicti of robbery—that the information charges taking the notebook and cards, and not the celluloid wallet with the dollar bill in it.

Appellant also contends that the prosecution's case against him is inherently improbable, and that his conviction must have been the result of passion and prejudice.

[1] With respect to the first contention: The complaining witness was asked if he had the notebook, and said he did; "I had that in my pocket." At the time of the arrest the other defendant threw the notebook and cards to the ground. Applying the theory of the case for the People, as we must, the possession of one defendant was the possession of the other, and evidence of appellant's guilt.

[2] The two police witnesses testified they saw appellant, as well as the other defendant, going through the victim's pockets. When appellant was about to be arrested he fled. He made inconsistent statements: first, to the officers, that he was going through the man's pockets "to help him find a location that he wanted;" and secondly, on the trial he denied making any such statement. Appellant's conduct indicated consciousness of guilt. People v. Cooper, 81 Cal.App.2d 110, 183 P.2d 67.

[3] Though the property taken be of slight value, if the elements of robbery are present, the crime is made out. People v. Simmons, 28 Cal.2d 699, 172 P.2d 18.

[4] With respect to appellant's second contention, of inherent improbability, passion and prejudice: What has been said sufficiently refutes this contention. No inherent improbability appears in the case, nor in the findings of the trial court.

[5] Inherent improbability is established only when it is physically impossible for the facts to be true, or their falsity is apparent without resorting to inferences or deductions. People v. Huston, 21 Cal.2d 690, 134 P.2d 758; People v. Lindsey, 90 Cal.App.2d 558, 203 P.2d 572.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 132

CRACOLICE v. KRAMER et al.

No. 14283.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 22, 1950.

Action by M. A. Cracolice, by Andrew F. Cracolice, his guardian ad litem, against Fred Kramer and another for injuries sustained by service station attendant when brakes on named defendant's automobile failed to work as it was being driven onto grease rack. The Superior Court for Monterey County, H. G. Jorgensen J., rendered judgment in favor of defendants, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that the evidence sustained finding that driver of automobile was not negligent and that therefore whether injured attendant was contributorily negligent was immaterial.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and error ⇐1001(1)

Trial Court's finding that automobile driver was not negligent was conclusive on appeal, unless such finding was unsupported by any substantial evidence and driver was negligent as a matter of law.

2. Automobiles ⇐368

In action for injuries sustained by service station attendant who was pinned against wall of greasing compartment when brakes of automobile to be serviced failed to hold, evidence sustained finding that driver was not negligent in driving automobile with new brake linings onto greasing rack toward attendant or in trying to pump foot brake instead of using emergency brake when foot brake failed to hold.

3. Automobiles ⇐368

Where finding that driver of automobile which struck service station attendant was not negligent was supported by substantial evidence, whether attendant was contributorily negligent was immaterial.

4. Automobiles ⇐368

In action for injury sustained by service station attendant who was struck by automobile when its brakes failed to work as it was being driven onto grease rack, last clear chance doctrine was inapplicable, in absence of evidence that when driver discovered that foot brake would not work, automobile could have been stopped by use of emergency brakes.

5. Appeal and error ⇐717

Inconsistency between trial court's memorandum and decision and the findings of fact cannot be considered by an appellate court.

Joseph J. Polverino, Charles R. Wayland, San Jose, for appellant.

Gallagher & Madden, Paso Robles, Lacey & Thornberry and Garth V. Lacey, all of Salinas, for respondents.

BRAY, Justice.

In an action for damages for personal injury, tried without a jury, judgment was rendered in favor of defendants, from which plaintiff appeals.

Questions Involved.

The principal question raised is the alleged insufficiency of the evidence to support the court's findings (1) that defendants were not negligent, and (2) that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. Also it is claimed that the findings are contradictory and that the court should have found on the doctrine of last clear chance.

Facts.

Taking the evidence, and the inferences reasonably deducible therefrom, most strongly in favor of defendants, the facts follow: Defendant Fred Kramer was the owner of a 1937 Studebaker sedan. He was the uncle of defendant Walter Kramer, who had come to the United States from Europe but a short time before. One Sunday it was decided that the uncle and nephew, together with the uncle's wife, Mrs. Helen Kramer, would go for a ride. One of the purposes was to show the nephew the scenery; the other was to work in the brake linings. About two weeks before, the car had developed brake trouble, and had been taken to a service station for repair. After a week the car was returned to Fred. The repairman stated that the "car is just like a new car, the lining isn't fixed, is not broken in, you have to drive the car with speed of a new car, and it might be possible that in using the brake you have to pump it up because I can't adjust the brakes until the lining is settled." Walter, who did not have an operator's license, although he was an experienced driver, drove. They left Fred's home in Paso Robles and drove to King City. Fred sat beside Walter and directed his driving, as Walter was unfamiliar with the road. Just before reaching King City, Mrs. Kramer remarked that there was something wrong, as she felt heat under the seat and thought the car smoked. Fred looked out of the window and saw smoke coming out of the rear wheel. They drove into the Standard Oil station. Plaintiff, who was employed there, came by and Fred told him, "There is something wrong with my brakes." Fred got out of the car and saw smoke coming out, and he could smell it.

He asked plaintiff if he could "fix that." Plaintiff told him to drive to the grease rack. Walter drove the car onto the rack. He was unable to stop the car, and it struck plaintiff, who was standing at the center of the rack between it and the rear wall of the greasing compartment, pinning him to the wall, inflicting serious injuries.

Walter Kramer testified that the place where they first noticed smoke coming from the brakes was two or three miles from King City; that when they drove into the service station plaintiff came up and asked him if he wanted gas. Walter's testimony is somewhat confused, probably because of his inaccurate understanding and use of the English language. When it was explained that they did not want gas, but they wanted the brakes checked, plaintiff directed him to the grease rack. This was a hydraulic jack. Plaintiff was standing at the end of the rack and made motions with his hands indicating that Walter was to "come on." The car went very slowly in first gear and did not increase speed. When Walter got on the rack he tried the foot brake; it would not work and he tried to pump. Then he hit plaintiff.

Was defendant Walter Kramer[1] negligent?

[1, 2] The trial court found that he was not. It is not a question of the weight of the evidence or whether, had we been trying the case in the first instance, we would have found otherwise. For us to upset this finding we must find that there was no substantial evidence to support it and that as a matter of law defendant was negligent. We cannot do so from the evidence. The determination of defendant's negligence or non-negligence rests primarily on whether defendant knew or should have known that the foot brake would not work, and whether under the circumstances he should have used the emergency brake. The evidence shows that defendant had stopped the car twice on the way to King City and that the brakes had worked, although defendant may have had to pump them. Defendant stopped the car when he drove in to the service station. It is not clear whether he pumped in order to do so. There was quite a controversy as to whether he used the emergency brake at that time to stop. He first denied using it; then when confronted with statements in his deposition, he admitted that he used it because the foot brake would not work. It was for the court to reconcile this contradictory testimony. There was evidence from which the court could, and evidently did, conclude that nothing had happened which would have put a reasonable person on notice, that the brake would not work or that it was unsafe for defendant to drive onto the rack and towards the plaintiff, who was standing at the end of it, beckoning him on. Nor can we say as a matter of law that it was negligence for defendant to try to pump the foot brake rather than grab the emergency brake when he was on the rack and first discovered that the foot brake was not working, nor even that had he then seized the emergency brake the car would have stopped in time to avoid hitting plaintiff.

Plaintiff contends that the damage done to the steel rear wall of the greasing compartment refutes the defendant's testimony that the car was being driven slowly on the rack. A photograph of this wall is in evidence and undoubtedly was considered by the court. It shows a large dent in the wall. However, there is no evidence of how that wall is supported, how thick the steel is (in the photograph it appears to be quite thin), etc. This, like the knowledge which defendant had of the faulty brakes, the failure to apply the emergency brakes and the other circumstances upon which plaintiff relies, were matters to be and undoubtedly were, argued to the trier of the facts, but do not justify us in holding as a matter of law that defendant was negligent.

The great difference between McMillan v. Kik, 1947, 181 Or. 270, 181 P.2d 128, where the facts of the accident were quite similar to those here, and the present case, is that there the trial court found in plaintiff's favor. On appeal it was held that there was ample evidence to support the finding that defendant was guilty of negligence. So here, had the trial court found in plaintiff's favor, we, under the evidence, would have to hold that such finding was well supported. However, our task now is not to determine the weight of the evidence, but rather whether there is substantial support for the findings which the court actually did make, not which it might have made.

1. Hereinafter referred to as defendant.

Contributory Negligence.

Evidence was introduced by defendants without objection by plaintiff to the effect that Standard Stations, Inc., plaintiff's employer, had rules to the effect (1) that the employees and not the customer were to drive cars on the grease rack and (2) that when cars were driven thereon the employee must stand to the side of the rack rather than at the end. The court found that "plaintiff's injuries were proximately caused by reason of plaintiff's contributory negligence, in that he violated" the two rules above-mentioned. Plaintiff attacks this finding on two grounds: (1) that the finding is inconsistent with the court's finding that defendant was not negligent, and (2) that the finding is erroneous as it in effect is a finding that violation of the company's rules constitutes negligence per se.

[3] It is not necessary to discuss this finding in view of our holding that the finding that defendant was not negligent is supported by the evidence. As said in Rath v. Bankston, 101 Cal.App. 274, 281 P. 1081, the finding of contributory negligence becomes immaterial, if the finding of non-negligence on the part of the defendant is proper.

Last Clear Chance.

[4] Plaintiff contends that the court should have made a finding on the doctrine of last clear chance. However, at no time was such a finding ever requested. Moreover, the evidence does not disclose facts which would allow the doctrine to be applied. While it is true that defendant knew that as he drove the car onto the rack plaintiff was in front of him, plaintiff's peril did not arise until defendant started to apply the brakes and found they would not work. The evidence fails to show the distance defendant then was from plaintiff and whether by the use of the emergency brake he could have stopped the car.

Tucker v. United Railroads, 171 Cal. 702, 154 P. 835, cited by plaintiff, is clearly distinguishable from our case, first, because "The pleadings clearly raised the issue" of last clear chance, 171 Cal. at page 704, 154 P. at page 836, and secondly, because there was testimony to the effect that the streetcar which struck and killed the woman in that case could have been stopped within the distance that the motorman first saw her and the point where she was struck. In Wright v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 14 Cal.2d 168, 93 P.2d 135, also cited by plaintiff, it was held that it was proper for the court to instruct the jury on last clear chance as there was substantial evidence to support the application of that principle. The case of Wheeler v. Buerkle, 14 Cal. App.2d 368, 58 P.2d 230, 232, referred to with approval in the Wright case, 14 Cal.2d at page 179, 93 P.2d at page 14, answers the contention of plaintiff here: "Counsel in their briefs argue the doctrine of the last clear chance, but we cannot consider it on this appeal. That doctrine is one of law and also of fact. If the facts of a case do not bring the doctrine into play, the court must so decide, and is not required to instruct a jury or to find upon it. If the facts of a case be such that the doctrine may be applied, it is the duty of a trial judge to submit it to a jury by proper instructions or to find upon it in the absence of a jury. In the instant case there are no findings upon it. The question is apparently presented here for the first time. In the absence of appropriate findings, we are not required to consider the question here."

[5] Plaintiff points out that in the court's "memorandum and decision" it did not mention the non-negligence of defendant, but merely stated that it found plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence in that he violated the two company rules. However, as said in Lord v. Katz, 54 Cal.App.2d 363, 367, 128 P.2d 907, 909: " 'And no antecedent expressions of the judge can in anyway restrict his absolute power to declare his final conclusion, in the only manner authorized by law, to wit, by filing his "decision" (findings of fact and conclusions of law), provided in sections 632 and 633 of the Code of Civil Procedure. [Citations.]' " Quoting from Phillips v. Hooper, 43 Cal. App.2d 467, 470, 111 P.2d 22.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and FRED B. WOOD, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 1

MAGANINI v. QUINN et al.

MERRITT et al. v. QUINN et al.

Civ. 7756.

Sac. 6048.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 10, 1950.

Hearing Denied Oct. 2, 1950.

Actions by Arthur L. Maganini and by G. Merritt and another against James H. Quinn and others as the duly elected, qualified and acting members of the State Board of Equalization to recover deficiency assessments of retail sales tax paid under protest by plaintiffs, and levied by defendants as members of the State Board of Equalization. The Superior Court, Sacramento County, B. F. Van Dyke, J., entered judgments in favor of the defendants, and appeal was taken jointly from both judgments. The District Court of Appeal, Sparks, J. pro tem., held that trial court's finding that quarterly returns of retail sales filed by defendants were not full, true or accurate returns of plaintiffs' retail sales was supported by substantial evidence and was therefore conclusive on appeal.

Judgments affirmed.

1. Evidence ⇐53

A "presumption" is merely a deduction which law directs to be made from particular facts, and unless declared by law to be conclusive may be controverted by other evidence, direct or indirect.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Presumption".

2. Licenses ⇐39

Where State Board of Equalization made deficiency assessment of retail sales tax paid by tavern owner, and owner filed petition for redetermination, and members of Equalization Board conducted comprehensive audit of tavern owner's inventory records, purchase invoices and selling price schedules, in order to determine quantity of stock purchased and disposed of by tavern owner during period, members of Board did not exceed their authority in conducting audit in such manner and there was no requirement that audit was to be restricted to pointing out falsifications, errors or omissions, if any, in books of account themselves. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 6001–7176, 7053; Administrative Code, Title 18, subc. 4, § 2098.

3. Licenses ⇐34

Where an action is brought by a taxpayer for recovery of sales tax paid under protest, use of certificate of delinquency as a defense to action is not authorized, and in such case it is incumbent on taxpayer affirmatively to establish his right to recover, and, when contrary evidence is introduced, he must do so by a preponderance of evidence. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 6714.

4. Licenses ⇐32(2)

Where action is brought by State Board of Equalization for recovery of deficiency in sales tax returns, introduction of its certificate of delinquency merely eliminates necessity of preliminary proof. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 6714.

5. Evidence ⇐584(1)

The words "prima facie" mean at first view, and a prima facie case is one which is received or continues until contrary is shown and can be overthrown only by rebutting evidence adduced on other side.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Prima Facie".

6. Appeal and error ⇐994(3), 1012(1)

It is not province of the district court of appeal to pass on weight of evidence, or credibility of witnesses, or to determine which side of an issue has more convincing force, and such matters are entirely for trier of facts.

7. Appeal and error ⇐996

Where different conclusions reasonably may be drawn from evidence by different minds, trial court's findings of fact are conclusive.

8. Appeal and error ⇐1010(1)
Licenses ⇐34

In actions brought to recover deficiency assessments of retail sale tax paid under protest, evidence sustained finding that quarterly returns of retail sales filed by taxpayers were not full, true and/or accurate returns of retail sales, and findings were therefore conclusive on appeal. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 6001–7176, 7053; Administrative Code, Tit. 18, subc. 4, § 2098.

J. Elwood Andresen, Oakland, for appellants.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, by Irving H. Perluss, Deputy Attorney General, for respondents.

SPARKS, Justice pro tem.

Two separate actions were brought to recover deficiency assessments of retail sales tax paid under protest by plaintiffs, and levied by defendants as members of the State Board of Equalization. The factual situations of the cases being similar, a stipulation was entered into at the trial that evidence would be presented only in the action in which Arthur L. Maganini was plaintiff, and that the decision of the court rendered therein would apply to both cases. The trial then proceeded before the court sitting without a jury, and the decision being in favor of defendants and against plaintiffs, judgments were thereupon entered. Appeal is now taken jointly from both judgments.

Appellant Maganini owned and operated a tavern known as the "Fairfax Buffet" located in Oakland, California. The business conducted therein consisted mainly of the sale of distilled spirits, beer, wine and soda by the drink, although some tobaccos, candy and food were also sold. In the operation of the tavern appellant had three employees and was not himself personally present at all times during business hours. Record of sales was made by means of a cash register, unequipped with a tape.

The taxable period involved was from October 1, 1943, to September 30, 1946, during which appellant filed quarterly returns of the gross sales of his business, the aggregate amount being the sum of $109,234.90. Taxes in the sum of $2,725.18 were paid thereon. In December of 1946 respondents sent an auditor to examine the sales tax returns, books and records of appellant. After an examination of these documents it was discovered that a discrepancy existed between the amount of merchandise purchased by appellant and the gross amount of sales reported by him. The deficiency was calculated and an additional sum of $439.05 of sales tax and interest was assessed against him. A petition for redetermination was then filed by appellant, and thereupon a second and more detailed audit was made of the tavern's operations. As a result of this re-audit a revised deficiency determination, based upon unreported sales in the amount of $30,958.16, was asserted against said appellant. Additional tax plus interest in the total sum of $915.13 was assessed, which is the amount paid under protest by appellant, and which is sought to be recovered.

Appellant's principal contentions on appeal are that in assessing an additional tax against him respondents disregarded his books of account, without impeaching them and employed a formula based upon a markup arbitrarily applied; also that respondents substituted an estimate of what appellant's gross retail sales should have been in the place of sales tax returns as filed by him.

The tax imposed by the Sales and Use Tax Law, Rev. and Tax.Code, secs. 6001–7176, is self-assessed in the sense that all retailers are required to keep records of their sales and file quarterly tax returns in such form as may be prescribed by the State Board of Equalization. Such returns are required to show the gross receipts of the seller and the amount of the tax for the period. In this connection Section 7053 of the Revenue and Taxation Code provides: "Every seller, every retailer as defined in subdivision (b) of Section 6015, and every person storing, using, or otherwise consuming in this State tangible personal property purchased from a retailer shall keep such records, receipts, invoices, and other pertinent papers in such form as the board may require."

Supplementing this section are Sales and Use Tax Regulations, codified in Subchapter 4 of Title 18 of the California Administrative Code, as follows:

Section 2098: "Every seller, retailer and person storing, using or otherwise consuming in this State tangible personal property purchased from a retailer, shall keep until the board in writing authorizes their destruction, adequate and complete records showing:

"(a) The gross receipts from the sales of tangible personal property (including any services that are a part of the sale) made within California irrespective of whether the seller regards the receipts as taxable or nontaxable.

"(b) All deductions allowed by law and claimed in filing returns.

"(c) Total purchase price of all tangible personal property purchased for sale or consumption in California.

"These records must include the normal books of account ordinarily maintained by the average prudent business man engaged in the activity in question, together with all bills, receipts, invoices, cash register tapes, or other documents of original entry supporting the entries in the books of account as well as all schedules or working papers used in connection with the preparation of tax returns. (Emphasis added.)

"Failure to maintain such records will be considered evidence of negligence or intent to evade the tax, and will result in the imposition of appropriate penalties."

Authority to verify the accuracy of any sales tax return is given in Section 7054 of the Revenue and Taxation Code which provides: "The board or any person authorized in writing by it may examine the books, papers, records, and equipment of any person selling tangible personal property and any person liable for the use tax and may investigate the character of the business of the person in order to verify the accuracy of any return made, or, if no return is made by the person, to ascertain and determine the amount required to be paid."

The statute further provides, Section 6481: "If the board is not satisfied with the return or returns of the tax or the amount of tax required to be paid to the State by any person, it may compute and determine the amount required to be paid upon the basis of the facts contained in the return or returns or upon the basis of any information within its possession or that may come into its possession. One or more deficiency determinations may be made of the amount due for one or for more than one period." (Emphasis added.)

As noted above, respondents caused two audits to be made of the business transacted at the Fairfax Buffet. The first or preliminary audit of December, 1946, was conducted substantially as follows: An examination was made of appellant's records in order to determine the average rates of markup on costs as reflected by the reported sales on returns filed by appellant. The average rates of markups so determined were as follows: 1944—100%; 1945—135%; 1946—260%. Respondent's auditor thereupon applied to appellant's cost of goods, sold for the taxable periods of 1944 and 1945, the average normal markup used by like businesses in the community. These were as follows: Distilled spirits —200%; Beer—90%; Soda—200%; Tobacco and candy—25%; Food—100%. A computation of tax was then made, based upon the average normal markups as applied to appellant's sales, and in this manner it was determined that appellant owed $439.05 in additional sales tax and interest.

The second audit, ordered after appellant had filed his petition for a redetermination, was not only a more detailed and comprehensive investigation, but was conducted by an entirely different method. No reference to, or comparison with, the average normal markups used by like businesses in the community was made. On the contrary, a detailed investigation was made of appellant's records in order to determine the quantity of stock purchased and disposed of by appellant during the period. Then, in the case of beverages, the sale of which constituted the bulk of appellant's business, a computation was made of the number of individual drinks which the total quantity of inventory would yield, less a tolerance for spillage. To the aggregate thus obtained were applied the prices charged by appellant for the drinks, and in this manner a markup or percentage of increase of selling price over cost calculated.

The trial court's finding of fact as to the second audit was that respondent's auditor "made a detailed audit and analysis of plaintiff's inventory records, purchase invoices and selling price schedules; that from such records, he determined the brand of distilled spirits purchased; the cases and bottles which were inventoried; the total ounces contained therein; after allowing eight percent for spillage, the ounces available for sale; that seven-eighth ounce drinks were served and sold; and that he applied the established price charged for each drink of each brand to the inventory sold, thereby determining the mark-up on distilled spirits sold for the periods herein involved; that similar procedures were followed to ascertain the mark-up on wine and beer."

This method of testing the accuracy and completeness of appellant's journal entries of gross sales, and of determining a deficiency, is essentially the same type of audit which was under consideration in Rathjen Bros. v. Collins, 50 Cal.App.2d 765, 123 P.2d 925. In that case the Board of Equalization computed a deficiency in excise tax upon distilled spirits under the provisions of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act. The record of sales as disclosed by the books of the wholesaler was not accepted by the board. Instead, the amount of sales was determined by ascertaining the quantity of liquor purchased and acquired during the taxable period, and then by deducting from that figure the amount of liquor then on hand and the amount shown by the books to have been disposed of in nontaxable transactions. This figure, in gallons, rather than a figure taken from sales records, was adopted by the board as the quantity sold and subject to tax.

In the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act there is a provision that distilled spirits acquired by a rectifier shall be presumed to have been sold in this State. Deering's Gen. Laws, Act 3796, sec. 24.2. Commenting on this presumption, the court in Rathjen Bros. v. Collins, supra, said 50 Cal.App. 2d on pages 770–771, 123 P.2d on page 928: "The presumption is based on common sense. If, from the total gallonage possessed or acquired during the taxable year, there is deducted the gallonage on hand at the close thereof, plus the gallonage disposed of in nontaxable sales, plus a reasonable loss tolerance, the resulting figure is presumptively the gallonage disposed of in taxable sales. If, as here, there is a large quantity of liquor unaccounted for it is up to the wholesaler to show that it was disposed of in nontaxable transactions. But, unless he does so, the board has established a prima facie case as to the gallonage disposed of in taxable transactions."

[1] A presumption is of course merely a deduction which the law directs to be made from particular facts, and unless declared by law to be conclusive, may be controverted by other evidence, direct or indirect. Consequently, in the Rathjen case, supra, the rectifier was privileged to introduce evidence rebutting the presumption created by Section 24.2 of the Act. In this connection it is noteworthy to observe that in that case the presumption was not deemed to have been overcome by the introduction into evidence of the taxpayer's books of account showing the amount of their gross sales.

[2] From the foregoing, we conclude that respondents here did not exceed their authority in the manner in which their second audit was conducted and the deficiency determined. The code sections hereinbefore quoted clearly contemplate an examination "behind the books", so to speak, in which original records, such as purchase invoices, sales slips, cash register tapes, and inventory records may be audited and analyzed. There is no requirement that such audit be restricted to pointing out falsifications, errors or omissions, if any, in the books of account themselves.

We further conclude that there was nothing inherently incorrect in the manner in which the audit was conducted. It was predicated in the main upon facts and figures obtained from appellant's own records, and from information as to the manner in which his business had been conducted. No pre-adopted percentage of proceeds over costs was applied, and those portions of the audit which were of necessity dependent upon estimate, such as the eight per cent tolerance for spillage, were, if not correct, subject to be controverted by appellant.

In the case of People v. Schwartz, 31 Cal. 2d 59, 187 P.2d 12, our Supreme Court had under consideration the precise question presented here, namely, the authority of the Board of Equalization to by-pass a taxpayer's record of gross sales and to make a deficiency determination of sales tax in derogation thereof. The method used was as follows: An examination was made of the retailer's bank deposits and cash disbursements, and finding that they substantially exceeded the gross receipts from sales reported by the taxpayer, the latter was called upon to explain the excess. The court said, 31 Cal.2d on page 64, 187 P.2d on page 15:

"The taxpayer's records disclose that, during the period in question, he received in cash from sales (or otherwise accounted for and adjusted) an amount substantially smaller than he had paid out in cash and by check. In the absence of explanation by the taxpayer, and accepting his statement that the partnership had no income except from sales, it reasonably may be concluded that the total of money received, after giving credits as mentioned, is the amount of the additional taxable sales."

[3-5] Appellant seeks to distinguish the holding in People v. Schwartz on the ground that the Board of Equalization there had executed a certificate of tax delinquency. It is true, that when an action is brought by the board a certificate by the board showing the delinquency is declared by the statute to be prima facie evidence of certain facts, namely, of the determination of the tax or the amount of the tax; of the delinquency of the amount set forth; and of the compliance by the board with the provisions of law in relation to the computation and determination of the amounts. Rev. and Tax. Code, sec. 6714. However, when the action is brought by the taxpayer for the recovery of sales tax paid under protest, the use of the certificate of delinquency as a defense to the action is not authorized. In such case it is incumbent upon the taxpayer affirmatively to establish his right to recover, and when contrary evidence is introduced, he must do so by a preponderance of the evidence. On the other hand, when the action is instituted by the board the introduction of its certificate of delinquency merely eliminates the necessity of preliminary proof. The words "prima facie" mean literally, "at first view", and a prima facie case is one which is received or continues until the contrary is shown and can be overthrown only by rebutting evidence adduced on the other side. Frank Moline Co. v. Kleinberger, 108 Cal.App. 60, 290 P. 1042.

The record shows here that appellant produced his books of account with testimony that the entries therein were without error or omission. He then rested his case. Respondents thereupon proceeded in defense, and introduced evidence of its audits, the method followed in going behind the book entries of gross sales, and the resultant determination of the deficiency assessment. Appellant then introduced some rebuttal testimony and the case was submitted to the court.

There being a discrepancy between the amount of gross sales as shown by appellant's books of account and that determined by respondents' audit, a conflict in evidence obviously resulted. The fundamental issue thereof was whether or not the full, true and correct amount of appellant's sales had been entered in his journal, and reported on the quarterly returns. On the one side there was the testimony of appellant and of his accountant as to the correctness of the sales entries, unsupported, however, by cash register tape, or other documentary evidence of sales. When asked how he verified the sales, appellant's accountant testified, "There is no way of verifying sales except the veracity of the man with whom I am doing business."

On the other side of the issue there was the audit conducted by respondents in the manner hereinbefore described and which revealed unreported sales in the amount of $30,958.16.

[6, 7] It is of course not the province of this court to pass on the weight of the evidence, the credibility of the witnesses, or to determine which side of an issue has the more convincing force. These are matters entirely for the trier of facts. Rice v. California Lutheran Hospital, 27 Cal.2d 296, 163 P.2d 860; Peri v. Los Angeles Junction Ry., 22 Cal.2d 111, 137 P.2d 441; Raggio v. Mallory, 10 Cal.2d 723, 76 P.2d 660. It has been repeatedly held that where different conclusions reasonably may be drawn from the evidence, by different minds, the trial court's findings of fact are conclusive. Crawford v. Southern Pacific Co., 3 Cal.2d 427, 45 P.2d 183; Bellon v. Silver Gate Theatres, Inc., 4 Cal.2d 1, 47 P.2d 462; Raggio v. Mallory, supra; Vosburgh v. Meda, 61 Cal.App.2d 396, 143 P.2d 41; Tobola v. Wholey, 75 Cal.App.2d 351, 170 P.2d 952.

[8] It is our conclusion that the trial court's finding here that the quarterly returns of retail sales filed by appellants were not "full, true and/or accurate returns of plaintiff's retail sales" was supported by substantial evidence, and therefore must be held conclusive on appeal.

The judgments are affirmed.

ADAMS, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

STAFFORD et al. v. GROFF et al.

HOWARD v. GROFF et al.

Civ. 17242.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Aug. 18, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 11, 1950.

Hearing Denied Oct. 16, 1950.

Lucille Stafford, an alleged incompetent, by Comly Shoemaker, her guardian ad litem, and Ray Howard brought action against James Groff and others for an accounting, for injunction, and for cancellation of assignment of oil royalties, and to recover alleged gifts and money loaned. Lucille Stafford died, and Ray Howard, special administrator of the estate of Lucille Stafford, etc., deceased, was substituted as plaintiff. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Allan W. Ashburn, J., entered certain orders, and the defendants appealed, and the special administrator cross-appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Wood, J., held that Superior Court had jurisdiction to enter the orders from which the defendants appealed, in view of provision in judgment reserving jurisdiction, and that evidence sustained findings as to an award of additional attorney's fees to Ray Howard as attorney for Lucille Stafford.

Orders affirmed.

1. Insane persons ⇐103

Where judgment, based on stipulation of parties in action to cancel assignment of oil royalties and to recover gifts made and money loaned by alleged incompetent, provided that attorney for guardian of alleged incompetent should recover certain attorney's fees and expenses, but provided that court reserved jurisdiction to make such other and further orders as may be necessary to obtain performance of acts ordered by the judgment, court had jurisdiction to consider subsequent application of attorney for guardian for additional allowance for fees and expenses.

2. Appeal and error ⇐989

It is not a function of a reviewing court to weigh the evidence, but its function, with respect to the evidence, is to determine only the legal sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings.

3. Insane persons ⇐98

In action to cancel assignment of oil royalties and to recover gifts made and money loaned by alleged incompetent, evidence was sufficient to support findings as to additional award of attorney fees and expenses to attorney for alleged incompetent.

Overton, Lyman, Plumb, Prince & Vermille, Los Angeles, for appellants Groff et al.

W. W. Comstock and Ray Howard, Los Angeles, for respondents.

WOOD, Justice.

Lucille Stafford, by a guardian ad litem, commenced an action on October 11, 1943, for an accounting and an injunction against appellants, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Groff, Elizabeth Groff Dunseth and Roy C. Poor. Mrs. Groff is Mrs. Stafford's sister, and Mrs. Dunseth is Mrs. Groff's daughter. Mrs. Stafford sought to cancel an assignment of oil royalties from herself to Mrs. Groff, to recover alleged "gifts" from her to the Groffs and Mrs. Dunseth, and to recover $210,000 which she had loaned to an investment company in which Mr. Groff was a partner (which company later became defunct). It was alleged in the complaint that Mrs. Stafford was an incompetent person. Later in 1943 she was adjudged an incompetent person, and a bank was appointed guardian of her estate, and Comly Shoemaker was appointed guardian of her person. On December 27, 1944, the superior court approved an agreement between plaintiff, by her guardian ad litem, and Ray Howard and W. W. Comstock, attorneys at law, whereby plaintiff employed said attorneys to represent her in said action and agreed to pay them 50 per cent of the recovery plus attorney's fees and expenses in any proceeding to enforce his (their) rights. On April 23, 1946, Ray Howard as "First Party" and Arthur E. White, an attorney at law representing the defendants Groff, Dunseth and Poor as "Second Party," entered into a "Memorandum Agreement" for settlement of said action subject to approval of the court. The guardian ad litem and the attorneys Howard and Comstock approved the agreement in writing; and attorneys Newton E. Anderson, Arthur E. White and Montgomery G. Rice, as attorneys for the defendants, approved the agreement. That agreement provided that Mr. Howard should receive a total of $18,000 in full payment for all fees and expenses of himself and associates (including $1,600 for Mr. Shoemaker). On September 27, 1946, an "Interlocutory Order Instructing Guardian ad litem as to Settlement," based upon said memorandum agreement, was filed. Among other things, it was provided in said order that the guardian of Mrs. Stafford's estate should pay $13,400 to Mr. Howard and $1,600 to Comly Shoemaker, the guardian ad litem and guardian of Mrs. Stafford's person. Said amounts were for work done and cash spent for the benefit of Mrs. Stafford. On April 26, 1946, under the provisions of the memorandum agreement of settlement, Mr. Howard was paid $3,000. Prior to the proceeding herein, Mr. Howard had received the said $18,000.

On October 27, 1947, a judgment (dated October 24, 1947), based upon a stipulation of the parties, was entered. On January 19, 1948, allegedly pursuant to provisions in that judgment, Ray Howard filed a "Petition for Allowance and Payment of Fees and Expenses to Ray Howard, Attorney." In said petition Mr. Howard sought attorney's fees and expenses for the period from April 23, 1946 (the date of the memorandum agreement) to October 24, 1947 (the date of the final judgment). On February 10, 1948, the matter of the petition came on for hearing. None of the defendants Groff, Dunseth or Poor, or their counsel, was present at the hearing. Evidence was introduced, and the court made an order allowing $10,000 as additional attorney's fees for Mr. Howard and $300 as attorney's fees for Mr. Comstock, the attorney who represented Mr. Howard at the hearing of the petition herein. It was also ordered therein that whenever it shall appear upon motion made in this action that the funds in the hands of the estate guardian amount to $10,000 or less the defendants Groff shall be required to make said payments of $300 per month commencing from a date to be specified by the court, and also to pay to said estate guardian any unpaid balance of said $10,300 and any other reasonably necessary expense of the guardianship. The defendants Groff, Dunseth and Poor appeal from said order.

Said appellants assert, among other things, that the court did not have jurisdiction to entertain the proceeding that resulted in said order. They argue that the judgment of October 24, 1947, was a final adjudication of the rights of the parties; that jurisdiction was not reserved for further proceedings in the action in which said judgment was rendered; that Ray Howard's petition for further fees presented a new and distinct civil action for attorney's fees; that since his petition was a disputed claim against the guardian, a separate civil action should have been commenced.

The judgment of October 24, 1947, provided, among other things, that the bank, as guardian of said estate, should pay $13,400 to Ray Howard and $1,600 to Comly Shoemaker, guardian ad litem; that defendants Groff should pay to the guardian of the estate for the support of Mrs. Stafford $300 per month plus any additional amounts necessarily and reasonably expended by said guardian "but said payments shall not be required to commence until, and shall continue only so long as, the funds belonging to Lucille Stafford, in the hands of said bank amount to $10,000.00 or less"; that the payment of said sums to Mr. Howard and Mr. Shoemaker "ordered to be made under paragraph (1) hereof, are in full of all of their, and each of their claims under an order made on December 27, 1944, authorizing an agreement between Lucille Stafford and Ray Howard," and all other claims by them or either of them against defendants Groff, Dunseth and Poor and all defendants in an action in the United States District Court in Illinois, and "shall also be in full for all fees, expenses," and other claims of any kind in connection with the prosecution of said actions by Ray Howard, Comly Shoemaker and any of their associates against Lucille Stafford or against her estate either under guardianship or in probate in case of her death. The judgment provided, in paragraph (11) thereof, that: "This court hereby reserves jurisdiction to make such other and further orders herein as may be necessary in order to obtain performance of the acts herein ordered and to make its order decreeing that said estate guardian has complied with this judgment upon said estate guardian showing, after notice to the other parties to the within action, that it has complied with the provisions of this judgment but in all other respects the within action is hereby dismissed with prejudice as to all defendants." In paragraph (25) of the judgment it was provided in part as follows: "A substantial part of the consideration for the signing of the stipulation for this judgment by Ray Howard is the permission hereby granted, for him to apply for an allowance and to be paid the amount so allowed, on account of his fees for services and expenses performed or expended after the making of the Memorandum Agreement of April 23, 1946, in the prosecution of the cases herein referred to, in addition to the $18,000 then agreed upon as his total fee as of that date, of which said $13,400 is a part. Such additional allowance is to be based on the reasonable value of services and the amount of his expenses after said April 23, 1946, and/or for services and expenses subsequent to said date under and pursuant to the agreement made under date of December 28, 1944, on behalf of Lucille Stafford by her guardian ad litem, pursuant to the order herein of December 27, 1944, authorizing the same. Mr. Howard's claims include those based on the provision thereof for attorney's fees in enforcing his rights thereunder.

"The other parties to said stipulation have agreed to this provision after the drafting of the foregoing provisions contained in paragraphs 1 to 24, both inclusive, and this provision is therefore inserted as a modification thereof.

"Said application may be made at any time within ninety days from the date hereof and no statute of limitations or other bar of lapse of time shall apply, and may be made either in the matter of the guardianship (or conservatorship) of the estate of Lucille Stafford as an incompetent or in the matter of the administration of her estate in probate in case of her death including the filing and prosecution of a creditor's claim, and may be made in any court or courts having jurisdiction of such matters, and may be made by Ray Howard or by his representatives in case of his death or incapacity including the manner provided by said agreement of December 28, 1944, with respect thereto." It was also provided in said paragraph (25) as follows: "It is therefore further hereby decreed that no provision of this judgment, nor any finding, conclusion, judgment or order, nor any of the waivers of further fees provided for in said Memorandum Agreement or in said Interlocutory Orders, nor in any document made in pursuance of any of the same, shall be a bar to the making or granting of such application, and no party hereto shall assert any such bar."

[1] By the provisions of the judgment of October 24, 1947, the court reserved jurisdiction to consider and determine such a proceeding as that which resulted in the order appealed from. The court was empowered in this case to reserve such jurisdiction. The judgment was made and given upon stipulation of the parties. In Los Angeles Auto Tractor Co. v. Superior Court, 94 Cal.App. 433, it was said at page 440, 271 P. 363, at page 366: "We find nothing in our statutes or decisions which can be said to have been intended to limit the power of the Superior Court in a suit in equity to grant relief properly adjusted to the equitable rights of the parties as determined by the court, and to control the parties in all matters connected with their required obedience to the orders embodied in the decree." It was also said in that case, 94 Cal.App. at page 439, 271 P. at page 366: "It is possible, however, for a decree in equity to be a final determination of the rights of the parties and of the specific relief to be granted, and yet the decree might contain a reservation of a right of supervision by the court over the administration of the remedy." See also, Leslie v. Federal Finance Co., Inc., 14 Cal. 2d 73, 81, 92 P.2d 906; Hercules Glue Co., Ltd. v. Littooy, 45 Cal.App.2d 42, 45, 113 P.2d 490; Gibson v. River Farms Co., 49 Cal.App.2d 278, 284, 121 P.2d 504. The application herein for such additional allowance was made on January 19, 1948, which was within the 90 days provided in the judgment of October 24, 1947, as the time within which such an application might be made. The court found, among other things (in the proceeding herein upon the petition for additional attorney's fees), that from time to time beginning with the memorandum agreement Mr. Howard had made conditional waivers of his right to recover the full compensation provided by the contingent fee agreement which was approved by the court on December 27, 1944; that the waivers had always been conditional and the conditions had never been performed; that he was not obstructive or delinquent in the performance of his obligations throughout the period of time involved in said proceeding; that the further prosecution of the actions referred to in the final judgment "was made necessary by the failure of the defendants as parties of the second part in said Memorandum Agreement to comply therewith and their actions contrary to their agreements therein." Those findings were supported by the evidence.

[2, 3] Appellants contend also that, even if the court had jurisdiction to entertain the proceeding, Mr. Howard was not entitled to any additional fees. They refer to the interlocutory order (made by Judge Sheldon upon stipulation on September 27, 1946) which provided that the $18,000 when paid should be in full payment of all claims of Mr. Howard, and they refer to the decision (by Judge Sheldon) on the hearing of Mr. Howard's supplemental complaint (on October 2, 1946) that he was not entitled to any fees not provided for in the interlocutory order, and they argue that by reason of said decision the matter of attorney's fees was res judicata. Mr. Howard appealed from that decision, but he abandoned the appeal when the judgment of October 24, 1947, was made upon stipulation. That judgment superseded the interlocutory order and the judgment upon the supplemental complaint. Paragraph

(25) of that judgment, provided, as above shown, that "no provision of this judgment, nor any finding, conclusion, judgment or order * * * shall be a bar to the making or granting of such application [for further fees], and no party hereto shall assert any such bar." The matter of attorney's fees was not res judicata. Said appellants argue further that Mr. Howard was not entitled to payment of the balance of $18,000 (namely $13,400) until he had performed everything required of him under the memorandum agreement and since he did not so perform until the judgment of October 24, 1947, was made, he was not entitled to further fees. The $18,000 was the amount of the fees and expenses as of the date April 23, 1946. It was a question of fact for the trial court as to whether further services were rendered after that date. After said date Mr. Howard went to Illinois twice and made appearances in court there regarding the claims of plaintiff, and he appeared in courts in California several times pertaining to those claims and he held many conferences pertaining thereto. The court herein found, as above stated, that "the further prosecution of the actions referred to in said Final Judgment was necessary and was made necessary by failure of the defendants as parties of the second part in said Memorandum Agreement to comply therewith and their actions contrary to their agreements therein." Appellants assert that Mr. Howard in performing those alleged services was acting for his own personal interest and was not acting for the benefit of Mrs. Stafford, and the court failed to find that the services were for her benefit. It is implicit in the findings, regarding the services and the value thereof, that the services were for the benefit of the plaintiff. It is not a function of a reviewing court to weigh the evidence, but its function, with respect to the evidence, is to determine only the legal sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings. Said appellants assert that only $26,000 was recovered as a result of Mr. Howard's services and that the total amount allowed as attorney's fees exceeded the amount recovered by $2,000. According to the computations of the trial judge, as shown by his statements in announcing his decision, the amount recovered was approximately $56,000. The items considered in arriving at that amount were as follows: $5,504.37, the proceeds of a building and loan certificate; $6,000 cash; and the present value of an award of $300 per month payable to Mrs. Stafford during her life—which value was considered to be the cost of a $300 annuity for her, namely, $44,445.60. The total of those items is $55,949.97. Under the contingent fee agreement Mr. Howard was to receive one-half of the amount recovered. The trial judge considered that $28,000 was one-half of the total recovery and that since $18,000 had been paid, the balance due was $10,000. Mr. Howard asserts that since the Groffs were required by the judgment of October 24, 1947, to pay "additional amounts reasonably and necessarily expended by the guardian," which amounts would include her attorney's fees, guardian's fees then accrued, funeral bill and expenses of administration, and since those sums would amount to approximately $16,000, the total recovery would be the $56,000 plus the $16,000, or approximately $72,000. The evidence was legally sufficient to support said findings.

Said appellants also contend that the court erred in allowing Mr. Howard $300 as fees for the services of his attorney, Mr. Comstock. They argue that Mr. Howard's petition was restricted to an application for his fees and expenses during the period from April 23, 1946, to October 24, 1947, and that the services of Mr. Comstock were rendered, of course, after that period, and therefore the court erred in making an allowance for services rendered beyond the period covered by the application. There is a provision in said paragraph (25) of the judgment of October 24, 1947, as follows: "Mr. Howard's claims include those based on the provision thereof [the memorandum agreement] for attorney's fees in enforcing his rights thereunder." It appears that Mr. Howard did apply herein for fees for his attorney in enforcing his rights. The court did not err in making said allowance.

Said appellants also contend that, even if the court had jurisdiction to award attorney's fees, it did not have jurisdiction to "Order the Other Matters" which were included in the order appealed from. Some of the "Other Matters" referred to, as stated by appellants, were "orders setting aside portions of the guardianship assets for the use of the incompetent and for payment of the award made in the order, and otherwise instructing and directing the guardian as to its duties as guardian and with respect to guardianship assets." They argue that such adjudications, in the order appealed from, purport to construe the judgment of October 24, 1947, purport to assume the jurisdiction of the probate court in guardianship matters, and duplicate orders in the judgment of October 24, 1947. It is not necessary to set forth in detail the orders so referred to. As to the matters duplicated in the order appealed from, the appellants are not aggrieved since they are thereby required to do only that which they were already obligated to do under the judgment entered upon their stipulation. As to the other matters referred to, it appears, under the judgment of October 24, 1947, in this adversary civil action, that jurisdiction to make such orders was reserved. It was therein provided that "This court hereby reserves jurisdiction to make such other and further orders herein as may be necessary in order to obtain performance of the acts herein ordered." Furthermore, as to the purported assumption of probate jurisdiction, it appears that the questions involved therein have become moot. The order herein which was directed against or to the bank has subsequently become a final order in the probate court as an instruction to the bank, as guardian, and to the administrator who succeeded to the guardian's duties after Mrs. Stafford's death. (Mrs. Stafford died on March 14, 1948.) Under the guardianship proceeding the money has been distributed as provided in the order herein, and the guardian and the administrator have been directed by the probate court to proceed against the Groffs and the Ohio Oil Company as ordered by the trial court herein.

The trial judge herein announced his decision in open court on February 16, 1948; Mrs. Stafford died on March 14, 1948, and a formal order nunc pro tunc as of February 16, 1948, was entered on March 18, 1948. On said March 18th a representative of Mrs. Stafford's estate had not been appointed, and the trial judge herein, on April 5, 1948, vacated the March 18th order. Ray Howard had been appointed (prior to April 5th) as special administrator of the estate of Mrs. Stafford and on April 5th he was substituted as such administrator as a party in place of Mrs. Stafford. On April 7, 1948, a formal order, which was substantially the same as the order of March 18th, except that it recited the appointment of Ray Howard as special administrator, was also entered nunc pro tunc as of February 16, 1948. (Afterward Ray Howard was appointed general administrator, and as such administrator he was substituted as a party on September 21, 1948, in place of himself as special administrator.) The Groffs, Dunseth and Poor, have appealed from the orders of March 18th and April 7th. Since the two orders were to the same effect (except as to the matter of the administrator being a party in place of Mrs. Stafford) the discussion herein is applicable to each order. Since the March 18th order was vacated properly and was superseded by the April 7th order, it appears that the April 7th order is the one primarily involved on this appeal.

By reason of the conclusions hereinabove stated, it is not necessary to determine the other contentions of appellants Groff, Dunseth and Poor. Both orders from which they have appealed should be affirmed.

Ray Howard, as administrator of the estate of Mrs. Stafford, has appealed from the order of April 7, 1948, allowing fees to Ray Howard as attorney for Mrs. Stafford. Mr. Howard, as administrator, petitioned the probate court for instructions regarding the appeal, and he asserts that the appeal is under the direction of the probate court. He states that he appealed as such administrator in order to permit the Groffs to present whatever arguments they might have against the order allowing fees to him. By reason of the conclusions hereinabove stated, it is not necessary to discuss further the points involved on the appeal by Mr. Howard, as administrator. The order from which he appealed should be affirmed.

The orders of March 18, 1948, and April 7, 1948, are affirmed.

SHINN, P. J., and VALLÉE, J., concur.

98 Cal.App.2d 829

OWENS v. HASLETT et al.

Civ. 7715.

Sac. 6038.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 10, 1950.

Hearing Denied Oct. 2, 1950.

Action by Floyd L. Owens against Rose Haslett and others, to foreclose lien claim for amount allegedly due plaintiff under contract for construction of a dwelling house. The named defendant filed a counterclaim and cross-complaint for damages for plaintiff's alleged breach of contract. The Superior Court, Placer County, Lowell L. Sparks, J., entered a judgment denying relief to Rose Haslett, and she appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, J., held that, where contract for construction of dwelling house by contractor was illegal when made because of contractor's lack of license, and owner of house and contractor entered upon and were in course of performance of contract before owner discovered illegality, and contractor constructed two-thirds of house in strict conformity to contract and requested the further payments provided by contract at such stage of construction, and owner refused further payments on untrue claim of contractor's nonfaithful performance and not on any claim of illegality, and contractor ceased performance for such refusal, owner could not on ground of illegality of contract recover losses, incurred by reason of contractor's nonperformance.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Licenses ⇐39.43

A building contractor executing contract for construction of dwelling house and beginning work thereunder without having first procured a license violated the law and the contract was illegal, and procurement of license during course of work did not validate contract, and hence contractor could not maintain action on the contract. Business and Professions Code, §§ 7028, 7030, 7031, 7065 et seq.

2. Contracts ⇐138(1)

As a general rule, to which there are exceptions, a party to an illegal contract can neither recover damages nor, by rescinding, recover the performance that he has rendered, or its value.

3. Contracts ⇐139

Where illegality of bargain is due to facts of which one party is justifiably ignorant and the other party is not, or is due to statutory or executive regulations of a minor character relating to a particular business which are unknown to one party, who is justified in assuming special knowledge by the other party of the requirements of the law, the illegality does not preclude recovery by ignorant party of compensation for any performance rendered while he is still justifiably ignorant or for losses incurred or gains prevented by nonperformance of the bargain.

4. Licenses ⇐39.43

Where contract for construction of dwelling house by contractor was illegally made because of contractor's lack of license, and owner of house and contractor entered upon and were in course of performance of contract before owner discovered illegality, and contractor constructed two-thirds of house in strict conformity to contract and requested the further payments provided by contract at such stage of construction, and owner refused further payments on untrue claim of contractor's nonfaithful performance and not on any claim of illegality, and contractor ceased performance for such refusal, owner could not on ground of illegality of contract recover losses incurred by contractor's nonperformance. Business and Professions Code, §§ 7028, 7030, 7031, 7065 et seq.

P. H. McCarthy, Jr., F. Nason O'Hara and Herbert S. Johnson, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Lowell & Lowell, Auburn, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment denying any relief to Rose Haslett, cross-complainant. Plaintiff below, Floyd L. Owens, to whom likewise all relief was denied, but who does not appeal, contracted with defendant Rose Haslett for the building of a dwelling house, for a price of $6,400.00. It was agreed that payments would be made, one-third when the sub-floor was laid, one-third when the roof was on, and the balance when the building was completed. It appears that one Mary DeMartini owned the land on which the house was to be built, but further mention of her as a party is unnecessary since she does not appeal. She was not a party to the contract. Her mother, Rose Haslett, was building the house as a gift to her.

The work was begun and payments on account were made. When plaintiff considered the building two-thirds completed he requested additional payment up to two-thirds of the agreed price. This was not forthcoming and the plaintiff ceased work. Thereafter defendant employed another contractor to finish the work, and the total cost to her was above the plaintiff's contract price.

Plaintiff, claiming defendant had breached the contract by refusing payment, filed a lien claim for the amount he claimed due him, and brought this action to foreclose the same. Defendant answered, denying his allegations that she had breached her contract, alleging breach on his part by use of defective material, defective workmanship, and abandonment without cause; she counterclaimed and also cross-complained, alleging the aforesaid breaches and asking damages. Hereafter we shall refer to the parties to this appeal as Owens and Haslett.

At the trial it developed that Owens was not, when he contracted, nor for some time after the work was begun, a licensed contractor as required by Division 3, Chapter 9, Article 5, of the Business and Professions Code.

The trial court in its findings of fact found as follows: That the building contract pleaded had been entered into; that Owens began work thereunder and continued periodically until the 11th day of May, 1946, at which time he ceased further work; that on the 9th of May he was "entitled to the second progress payment as provided in said agreement" (a finding we interpret as meaning that the work was two-thirds completed, and done as called for by the contract); that he thereupon demanded of Haslett that she complete the second progress payment and that upon such demand she failed to do so; that the building contract was silent as to the time of completion; that Haslett failed to prove faulty construction; that Owens was not a licensed contractor as required by the Business and Professions Code of this State at the time the contract was entered into, nor when he commenced performance thereunder. As conclusions of law from the foregoing findings of fact the court declared as follows: That Haslett totally breached the contract on May 9, 1946, "justifying plaintiff [Owens] in terminating performance"; that because of this breach Haslett was to be denied recovery for "additional building costs as prayed" in the cross-complaint; that claimed loss of rentals could not be allowed because, the contract being silent as to time of completion, such loss was not within the contemplation of the parties; that damages claimed for faulty material and workmanship be denied as not proven; that because Owens was not a licensed contractor Haslett's motion for nonsuit against him should be granted and recovery by him denied. The judgment decreed that no recovery be had by any party against another, and from this judgment, so far as it decreed no recovery upon the cross-complaint, Haslett has appealed.

It may be said here that the foregoing factual findings are supported by the evidence. Indeed, that issue is not raised by the appellant Haslett. Her contentions revolve around what she conceives to be the legal consequences flowing from Owen's lack of a license. Her contentions as advanced in her brief are stated in this way: Owens violated the law; Haslett was not in pari delicto and the illegality of the contract is not therefore in and of itself a bar to relief; justice and equity require some form of relief and she should be permitted either to recover what she has already paid Owens or to hold him accountable as for a breach of his contract in failing to complete the building, thus making it necessary for her to obtain completion by another contractor at an increased cost.

[1] It is, of course, conceded that Owens violated the law when he executed the contract with Haslett and began work thereunder without first having procured a license. Secs. 7028, 7030, 7031, Bus. & Prof. Code; Holm v. Bramwell, 20 Cal. App.2d 332, 335, 67 P.2d 114; Loving & Evans v. Blick, 33 Cal.2d 603, 607, 204 P. 2d 23. It may be further stated that the contract was not validated so as to enable the plaintiff to sue upon it by his having procured such license during the course of the work, for the statute, Sec. 7031, Bus. & Prof. Code, declares that no person may bring or maintain any action for compensation for doing work for which a license is required without alleging and proving that he was duly licensed at all times during the performance of the contract. See, also, Restatement of the Law of Contracts, Section 609, reading as follows:

"A bargain that is illegal when formed does not become legal

"(a) by reason of a change of fact, except where both parties when the bargain was made neither knew nor had reason to know the facts making it illegal." See, also, Teachout v. Bogy, 175 Cal. 481, 166 P. 319; Moffatt v. Bulson, 96 Cal. 106, 112, 30 P. 1022, 31 Am.St.Rep. 192.

It follows that the judgment of the trial court denying relief to Owens was correct, as, indeed, is impliedly admitted by his not having appealed therefrom.

[2] However, a different situation exists as regards the appeal of Haslett from the judgment denying her relief on her cross-complaint. Both Owens and Haslett were parties to an illegal contract and, as a general rule, to which there are exceptions, a party to an illegal contract can neither recover damages nor, by rescinding, recover the performance that he has rendered, or its value. The rule is thus stated in Restatement of the Law of Contracts, Section 598: "A party to an illegal bargain can neither recover damages for breach thereof nor, by rescinding the bargain, recover the performance that he has rendered thereunder or its value, except as stated in Secs. 599-609."

Reference is further made to the matter following the quoted section under the heading "Comment", including the statement that "The rule stated in the Section precludes recovery on principles of quasi-contract for benefits conferred under an illegal bargain, as well as an action on the bargain itself." This general rule has likewise been declared in many opinions rendered by the appellate courts of this State. See Takeuchi v. Schmuck, 206 Cal. 782, 786, 276 P. 345, 346, wherein the court said: "It has long been a rule of law that courts will not compel parties to perform contracts which have for their object the performance of acts against sound public policy either by decreeing specific performance or awarding damages for breach. [Citing cases.] This rule is not generally applied to secure justice between parties who have made an illegal contract, but from regard for a higher interest—that of the public, whose welfare demands that certain transactions be discouraged." See, also, Teachout v. Bogy, supra.

And in Loving & Evans v. Blick, supra, the Supreme Court said: "* * * It has been repeatedly declared in this state that 'a contract made contrary to the terms of a law designed for the protection of the public and prescribing a penalty for the violation thereof is illegal and void, and no action may be brought to enforce such contract' [citing cases]; and that 'whenever the illegality appears, whether the evidence comes from one side or the other, the disclosure is fatal to the case.' [Citing cases.]" [33 Cal.2d 603, 204 P.2d 25.]

[3] To this general rule there are certain recognized exceptions in favor of a party who is not in pari delicto with the other party to the contract and who, as the more innocent of the two, seeks recovery. One of these exceptions to the general rule material here is stated as follows in Section 599 of Restatement of the Law of Contracts:

"Where the illegality of a bargain is due to "(a) facts of which one party is justifiably ignorant and the other party is not, or

"(b) statutory or executive regulations of a minor character relating to a particular business which are unknown to one party, who is justified in assuming special knowledge by the other party of the requirements of the law, the illegality does not preclude recovery by the ignorant party of compensation for any performance rendered while he is still justifiably ignorant, or for losses incurred or gains prevented by non-performance of the bargain."

The conditions which must be met by one seeking recovery under the rule so stated is also covered in the Comment following the foregoing statement of the rule, under subsection b, as follows: "A party who is within the terms of Clause (a) or (b) at the time of the formation of the contract may discover before or during performance the facts that render the bargain illegal. Save in the exceptional cases stated in §§ 600–604, he cannot recover for any performance rendered after the discovery. The same reason then bars him that bars recovery on a contract originally legal that subsequently before performance becomes illegal (see § 608). If, however, on discovering the illegality, he renders no further performance, he can recover the same damages that would be recoverable for any wrongful breach of contract (see § 329), provided, 1, that his non-performance is caused by illegality, and, 2, that the other party is not equally innocent. He is not freed from the ordinary requirement for the recovery of damages for breach of contract that a plaintiff who does not himself perform must establish that he could and would have performed except for the defendant's fault. Under the rule stated in the present Section illegality does not preclude recovery, but any other ground for denying recovery is still open." (Italics added.) See, also, McAllister v. Drapeau, 14 Cal.2d 102, 92 P.2d 911, 125 A.L.R. 800.

If, therefore, as she claims on appeal, Haslett was not in pari delicto, if she was justifiably ignorant of the fact which made the contract illegal, that is, Owens' lack of license, then she could, on proper pleading and proof, have made her case come within the above exception to the general rule; for if she was not in pari delicto the illegality of the contract would not have precluded her from recovering for losses incurred or gain prevented by nonperformance of the contract. But, to bring herself within this exception to the general rule, she was required to establish that at some time during the performance of the contract she discovered the facts that rendered it illegal; that she ceased her performance because of this illegality; that she had up to that time in good faith performed the contract, and was ready, able and willing, but for the illegality, to continue to perform. These things are so because when relief is given to a party to an illegal contract who is not in pari delicto it amounts to a recognition of the contract by the court for the benefit of such a party and to prevent injustice; and the party whose plea for relief is thus entertained is faced with the usual and ordinary requirements exacted of any party who seeks recovery of damages for breach by the other party. While, as stated, the illegality of the contract does not preclude recovery in such case, any other ground for denying recovery is still open.

[4] Applying these rules to the situation presented here, as gathered from the factual findings of the trial court, we find the following: In the beginning an illegal contract was made; it was illegal because of Owens' lack of license; being illegal when it was made, it did not become legal when Owens obtained his license during the progress of the work. Before she discovered the illegality of the contract, both Owens and Haslett had entered upon and were in the course of performance thereof; the house reached the stage of two-thirds completion and, up to that point, as to both material and workmanship that went into it, the house had been constructed in strict conformity to the contract; in that situation Owens requested further performance by Haslett, basing his request upon his faithful performance of the contract thus far; Haslett, basing her refusal, not upon illegality, but upon an untrue claim that he had not so performed, refused further payment; Owens thereupon ceased performance, basing that cessation, in turn, and justifiably in so far as the facts were concerned, upon Haslett's refusal to pay.

When Owens sued her neither party in the pleadings, either in the complaint, the answer or the cross-complaint, as originally filed, set up the illegality of the contract or sought to bring the pleader within any exception from the general rule that parties to an illegal contract can obtain no relief in the courts. But during the course of the trial the illegality developed, and if there was nothing further the court would at that time have been justified in rendering judgment that neither take anything from the other, for under the general rule and in the absence of pleaded and proven exception, whenever the illegality appears, whether the evidence comes from one side or the other, the disclosure is fatal to the case. However, the trial court proceeded to take all the evidence which either party desired to produce, reserving all rulings, dependent upon illegality, until the close of the trial. Haslett sought and obtained from the court leave to amend her pleadings. Amendments were made, but again she did not plead illegality, and exception to the general rule permitting her to recover; she did not plead that she was not in pari delicto, and the record is barren of any testimony to that effect. But, over and beyond this, she neither pleaded nor proved, although seeking relief as for a breach of Owens' contract, that is, his failure to perform, that she herself had performed up to the time when performance by both parties ceased. True, there was evidence presented by her to the effect that she had ceased performance because Owens had not performed and on the contrary had breached the contract. But the evidence upon this subject was conflicting, the findings of the trial court were in favor of Owens and hence the record here stands that it was Haslett, not Owens, who had been guilty of breach. Haslett thus failed to bring herself within the exception permitting recovery to a party to an illegal contract who is not in pari delicto. This usual and ordinary requirement exacted of all persons who seek to recover upon a contract, that they themselves have kept the agreement, was not met by her and as a consequence she was not entitled upon the facts to any relief and the judgment of the trial court in denying such relief was correct.

It is ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

ADAMS, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 149

HELVEY v. SECURITY-FIRST NAT. BANK OF LOS ANGELES.

Civ. 17334.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 22, 1950.

A. C. Helvey, administrator of the estate of Ira B. Murphy, deceased, sued the Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles for the amount of a deposit account paid by defendant to the state treasury under the Abandoned Property Act. From an order of the Superior Court of Ventura County, Charles F. Blackstock, J., dismissing plaintiff's amended complaint on defendant's motion, plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that the Abandoned Property Act is not unconstitutional.

Order affirmed.

1. Appeal and error ⇐907(2)

In absence of record of evidence before trial court, District Court of Appeal must presume that evidence supports order appealed from.

2. Dismissal and nonsuit ⇐71

Affidavits may be used in support of motion to dismiss action.

3. Dismissal and nonsuit ⇐53(2)

The Superior Court has inherent power to dismiss action shown to be fictitious and sham, without basing order on facts specified in statute. Code Civ.Proc. § 581 et seq.

4. Banks and banking ⇐234
Constitutional law ⇐190, 306
Escheat ⇐2

The Abandoned Property Act, providing for payment to state treasury of amounts of abandoned bank deposit accounts, is not unconstitutional on grounds that it deprives depositors of interest, applies to money deposited before enactment of law, does not provide for notice to depositors, and applies to national banks. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1274.1–1274.17.

William M. Taylor, Coachella, for appellant.

Arthur H. Blanchard, Robert E. Friedrich, Santa Paula, for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

In June of 1919 Ira B. Murphy made two deposits in Farmers and Merchants Bank of Santa Paula, in the sum of $710. Defendant in this case is successor to that bank. No further deposits were made, except credits of interest earned. No withdrawals were made. October 2, 1946, defendant bank paid the amount due on the account to the Treasury of the State of California. Abandoned Property Act; Code Civ.Proc. secs. 1274.1 to 1274.17.

Plaintiff is administrator of the estate of Ira B. Murphy, and assignee of decedent's widow. As such, he first petitioned in the Superior Court in Sacramento county in a proceeding against the State of California. The procedure is outlined in Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1274.10. Upon making the necessary proof the court is empowered to direct return of abandoned property to the owner thereof.

While the proceeding in Sacramento county was pending, plaintiff commenced the present action against the defendant in Ventura County. In his brief he says he did this because he could not recover interest from the State.

Defendant served plaintiff's counsel with notice of motion to dismiss. Plaintiff made no appearance on the hearing of the motion. Evidence was heard by the court, the motion was granted, and the case dismissed. From this order plaintiff appeals.

[1, 2] No record of the evidence before the trial court has been supplied to this Court. Therefore, it must be presumed that the evidence supports the order. Vieth v. Klett, 88 Cal.App.2d 23, 198 P.2d 314; Lucich v. Lucich, 75 Cal.App.2d 890, 172 P.2d 73. Affidavits may be used in support of a motion to dismiss. Best v. Fitzgerald, 81 Cal.App.2d 965, 185 P.2d 377.

[3] Plaintiff argues that the order is not based on facts specified in Section 581 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, and is, therefore, void.

The Superior Court has inherent power to dismiss actions which are made to appear fictitious and sham. Cunha Anglo California National Bank, 34 Cal.App.2d 383, 93 P.2d 572.

[4] Plaintiff also argues that the Abandoned Property Act is unconstitutional for the following reasons: (a) A bank depositor is deprived of interest; (b) the money was deposited before the enactment of the law; (c) no notice to depositors is provided for; (d) the Act does not apply to a national bank. Each assignment is without merit. Anderson National Bank v. Luckett, 321 U.S. 233, 64 S.Ct. 599, 88 L. Ed. 692, 151 A.L.R. 824.

The order is affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 188

PEOPLE v. ELLIS.

Cr. 736.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 24, 1950.

John Ellis was convicted of robbery and grand theft. From an order of the Superior Court of San Diego County, William A. Glen, J., denying a petition for writ of error coram nobis, defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that defendant had known all of the facts upon which his contentions were based, and should have presented them in regular way by appeal.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal law ⇐997

Where defendant was convicted of robbery and grand theft, and applied for writ of error coram nobis on grounds of collusion, conspiracy, fraud and perjury, bias and prejudice of judge in his rulings, denial of separate trial, and denial of counsel at preliminary hearing but all of such grounds were known to defendant and could have been presented in the regular way by appeal, writ was properly denied.

2. Criminal law ⇐997

Writ of error coram nobis was never intended as substitute for appeal, or as rehash of former appeal.

John C. Thompson, San Diego, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Norman H. Sokolow, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from an order denying a petition for a writ of error coram nobis.

The appellant and one Erskine entered a home near San Diego at 1 o'clock in the morning and held up five occupants at the point of a gun, one shot being fired to show "We mean business." They took certain money and other articles and also took an automobile from the garage, in which to leave. They were tried together and convicted of robbery and grand theft, judgment being pronounced on June 16, 1949. Erskine appealed, and the judgment as to him was affirmed by this court. This appellant, who had not appealed, filed a coram nobis petition on March 27, 1950, which was denied. On this appeal from that order he filed his own briefs but, at his request, this court appointed his present attorney who ably presented the matter here.

It is first contended that the court abused its discretion in denying this writ "upon the presumption" that the judgment against the appellant had been appealed and affirmed. The record shows the exact contrary; that the trial judge knew that Erskine alone had appealed; and that a hearing was had at which everything submitted was considered.

It is further contended that the trial court erred in rulings on law at the trial which resulted in a miscarriage of justice, and that appellant's conviction was the direct result of collusion, conspiracy, fraud and perjury, as shown by the "numerous instances" alleged in the petition by reference to the transcript of the trial. In this connection, it is contended that the judge repeatedly showed bias and prejudice in his rulings; that one witness was not excluded from the court room; that his motion for a separate trial was denied; that he was prejudiced because the criminal record of his codefendant was brought out; that no effort was made at any time by his counsel or the judge to protect his rights; that his attorney was negligent in not letting him take the stand and in failing to move for a new trial; that the district attorney prejudicially referred to him as an exconvict; that he thought at the time, and still thinks, that one juror was substituted for another during the first recess; that he was identified as one of the robbers only vaguely and by hearsay; and that he was denied an attorney at his preliminary hearing.

Aside from the matter of diligence, most of these contentions are utterly unsupported by the record, including the trial record which is before us, and would have been unavailing had they been presented on an appeal. He was completely and positively identified by all five occupants of the house, and by a taxi driver who took him and Erskine to the scene immediately before the robbery. One of his fingerprints was found in the house. He admitted having ridden in the automobile which was taken, and he took the officers to it after they had vainly tried for two hours to locate it, Erskine having given them its general location. The record discloses no sign of bias or prejudice on the part of the judge. On the contrary, it shows that he was extremely fair to the appellant in his rulings, and most vigilant at all times in protecting his rights. There is no evidence in the record which in the slightest degree indicates collusion, fraud or perjury. Appellant's attorney at the trial carefully and ably conducted his defense and the criticism of him is entirely unjustified. The only contentions which are at all supported by the record are that he was denied a separate trial, which was obviously correct, and that he was denied counsel at the preliminary hearing, which appears by inference.

[1, 2] All of the contentions made, whether supported or not, were known to the appellant and could have been presented in the regular way. This is true of the contention that he asked for and was refused counsel at the preliminary hearing. If this be assumed, that fact was well known to him at the time. The record shows that when he was brought up for arraignment in the superior court an attorney was appointed for him, and the matter was continued for two days. He was then properly arraigned and pleaded not guilty, and no objection was raised. At the time set for judgment an additional attorney appeared for him, stating that he wanted to look into the advisability of a motion for a new trial, and the matter was continued for two days. No motion was then made, the appellant stated that he had no legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced, and this was done.

The appellant's contentions are all without merit and, under familiar rules, his application for this writ was properly denied. His guilt conclusively appears, his trial was eminently fair, and no additional facts are presented which could have affected the judgment. While such a writ serves a just purpose in a few exceptional cases, it is unfortunate that the right thus given is so increasingly abused. It was never intended as a substitute for an appeal, or as a rehash of a former appeal.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

GRIFFIN and MUSSELL, JJ., concur.

98 Cal.App.2d 817

LUNDIN et al. v. SHUMATE'S PHARMACY, Inc., et al.

Civ. 14288.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 10, 1950.

Action by Catherine Lundin and another against Shumate's Pharmacy, Inc., and others, to recover for injuries sustained by the named plaintiff in a fall while entering the named defendant's drug store. The lower court, Robert McWilliams, J., rendered a judgment on a verdict for the defendants, and the plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Goodell, J., held that there was no error in giving or rejecting certain instructions.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Negligence ⇐138(1)

In patron's action against operator for injuries sustained in fall while entering drug store operated on premises under month to month tenancy, instruction that owner or lessee of building who invites others to enter owes duty to keep premises in reasonably safe condition was not misleading because of words "owner or lessee".

2. Trial ⇐260(8)

In patron's action against operator for injuries sustained in fall while entering drug store, court properly refused to give requested instruction that was lengthy and less favorable to those tendering it than given instructions.

3. Negligence ⇐139(6)

In patron's action against operator for injuries sustained in fall while entering drug store for the first time, instruction that true ground of liability rested on owner's superior knowledge of perilous condition and danger therefrom to invitees over knowledge possessed by invitees was not objectionable as permitting operator to set up its own ignorance caused by its own negligence as a defense.

4. Trial ⇐296(3)

In patron's action against operator for injuries sustained in fall while entering drug store, instruction relating to knowledge of dangerous condition necessary to impose liability for injury to invitee was not objectionable as misleading in view of other given instruction.

5. Negligence ⇐48

To impose liability for injury to invitee by reason of dangerous condition of premises, defective condition must either have been known to owner or occupant or have existed for such time that it was duty of owner or occupant, by exercise of reasonable care, to have known of such defect.

6. Negligence ⇐48

Operator of drug store was under no duty to patron to inspect store and discover that slab of marble on outer edge of floor of entrance was loose, wet and slippery.

7. Negligence ⇐139(2)

In patron's action against operator for injuries sustained in fall while entering drug store, instructions defining ordinary care were not objectionable as imposing on operator a lesser degree of care than that imposed on invitee in view of other given instructions.

8. Negligence ⇐136(26)

In patron's action against operator for injuries sustained in fall while entering drug store, whether patron was guilty of contributory negligence was a question for the jury.

9. Negligence ⇐141(1)

In patron's action against operator for injuries sustained in fall while entering drug store, where contributory negligence was a question for the jury, instruction that where such danger is obvious or is as well known to injured invitee as to owner there is no liability on owner was properly submitted.

10. Negligence ⇐32(2.8)

One who during business hours lawfully enters store to purchase goods does so at implied invitation of owner upon whom law imposes duty of exercising ordinary care and prudence to keep entrance and passageway, in and through which, by its location and arrangement, customer in entering premises is induced or obligated to go, in a reasonably safe condition so as not to unnecessarily expose customer to danger or accident.

11. Trial ⇐260(1)

Instruction which contained correct statement of law, but which was already covered by given instructions declaring law in equivalent language, was properly refused.

12. Appeal and error ⇐216(1)

In patron's action against operator for injuries sustained in fall while entering drug store, where ordinary care was defined, and proximate cause was not, but patron made no request for a definition, patron could not thereafter complain that court failed to define proximate cause.

13. Trial ⇐260(1)

Proposed instructions given in substance by other instructions were properly refused in form tendered.

14. Trial ⇐255(11)

In patron's action against operator for injuries sustained in fall while entering drug store, court properly refused to instruct that patron could not be charged with contributory negligence because she might have avoided accident if she had acted differently in absence of request by patron.

15. Trial ⇐260(1), 261

Instruction which was carelessly drawn and told no more than jury had already been told in conventional form by given instructions was properly refused.

16. Trial ⇐295(1)

On appeal, court's instruction must be read as a whole.

Jos. A. Brown, San Francisco, for appellants.

Lillick, Geary, Olson, Adams & Charles, San Francisco, for respondents.

GOODELL, Justice.

This appeal is from a judgment on a verdict in favor of defendant.

The action was for damages for personal injuries sustained by appellant Catherine Lundin when she fell while entering the drug store of respondent for the purpose of making a purchase.

Appellants' attacks are all aimed at the instructions, hence a very brief summary of the facts will suffice. The entrance to respondent's store, which is on the corner of 16th and Valencia Streets in San Francisco, is slightly above the sidewalk level. It is claimed that a slab of marble on the outer edge of the floor of the entrance was loose, and wet and slippery as well, and that when the appellant stepped onto the slab she lost her footing and fell. Her left leg was fractured in three places.

Appellants contend that the court erred in instructing the jury as to the duty of an owner to an invitee, in that the charge "omits all mention of any of the specific duties of the proprietor of a place of business to his customers and others who come upon the premises at his invitation." They also claim there was error in refusing to give certain instructions. These contentions will be discussed in detail.

The following instructions were given:

(A) "The owner or lessee of a building who, directly or by implication, invites others to enter owes to such persons who thus enter a duty to have his premises in a reasonably safe condition, and to give warning of latent or concealed perils and dangers."

(B) "He is not an insurer of such persons, nor does the mere occurrence of injury on such premises to such invitee create any presumption of negligence on the part of the owner. His responsibility is not absolute; he is required to use ordinary care for the safety of the persons he invites to come upon his premises. The true ground of liability rests on the owner's superior knowledge of the perilous condition and the danger therefrom to invitees, over the knowledge possessed by the invitee."

(C) "An invitee is a person who has been invited by the proprietor of a certain business to go upon the latter's premises. Such invitation may be either express or implied."

(D) "If you believe from the evidence in this case that the plaintiff * * * was injured when entering the store of the defendant for the purpose of making a purchase of merchandise, the plaintiff * * * was an invitee in the sense which I have used that term and heretofore defined it."

(E) "In order to impose liability for injury to an invitee by reason of the dangerous condition of the premises, the defective condition must either have been known to the owner or occupant, or have existed for such time that it was the duty of the owner or occupant, by the exercise of reasonable care, to have known of such defect."

[1] The first of this group, (A), is characterized by appellants as "colorless" and "formal and minuscule". The only question is whether it was erroneous. The words "owner or lessee" were not misleading since the store was owned and operated by respondent (and so alleged by plaintiffs), under a month-to-month tenancy, and respondent was the only defendant before the court. The criticism of this instruction is not well founded.

[2] Appellants tendered an instruction copied verbatim from Madigan v. O. A. Hale & Co., 90 Cal.App. 151, at page 159, 265 P. 574, 577, which they claim should have been given. It is in 113 words and was less favorable to appellants than instructions (A), (B), (C), (D) and (E), which left no doubt that plaintiff was an invitee, while the one tendered said that the person entering "is presumed by law to be doing so on the invitation of the owner." Moreover (A) said it was the owner's duty "to give warning of latent or concealed perils and dangers", an element not found in the instruction tendered. The court in the Madigan case by no means gave this cloudy and wordy instruction its wholehearted approval. It said that it was but preliminary, "merely attempting to outline the general duty of defendant without reference to any question of liability". (Emphasis added.) The refusal to give the Madigan instruction was correct.

[3] Appellants attack (B) above, and particularly its last sentence. They say it was gross error to tell the jury that the true ground of liability rests on the owner's superior knowledge of the perilous condition and the danger therefrom to invitees, over the knowledge possessed by the invitee. The evidence shows that the occasion in question was Mrs. Lundin's first visit to the store, which had been there for a long time. In thus giving the jury the reason for the rule the instruction emphasized the difference between the "superior knowledge" of the owner over that of an invitee (visiting the store for the first time). There was nothing favorable to the respondent about this, and how appellants can complain is not understandable.

"This instruction" appellants argue "told the jury in plain terms that unless the defendant's knowledge of the condition of the step upon which plaintiff was injured was superior to that of the knowledge of the plaintiff, the defendant was not liable. The defendant could thus set up its own ignorance caused by its own negligence as a defense to the action." We disagree with any such interpretation.

The language of instruction (B) as a whole is a paraphrase of statements repeatedly found in the cases, among them Mautino v. Sutter Hospital Assn., 211 Cal. 556, 560–561, 296 P. 76; Touhy v. Owl Drug Co., 6 Cal.App.2d 64, 66, 44 P.2d 405 and Crawford v. Pacific States Savings & Loan Co., 22 Cal.App.2d 448, 449, 71 P.2d 333.

[4, 5] Appellants attack instruction (E) as an erroneous statement of the law, uncertain and misleading. They ask "How long must a defect exist before the owner or occupant * * * is under a duty to discover it?" In Crawford v. Pacific States Savings & Loan Co., 22 Cal.App.2d 448, 449, 71 P.2d 333, 334, supra, it is said: "The general rule is stated in 45 Corpus Juris, 837, § 245: 'In order to impose liability for injury to an invitee by reason of the dangerous condition of the premises the condition must have been known to the owner or occupant or have existed for such time that it was the duty of the owner or occupant to know of it', citing the California case, Shanley v. American Olive Co., 185 Cal. 552, 197 P. 793." The instruction was phrased in substantially that language. The "question whether the condition which caused the injury had existed so long as to be discoverable by the defendant within a reasonable time is one for the jury". Rothschild v. Fourth and Market St. Realty Co., 139 Cal.App. 625, 627, 34 P.2d 734, and its citations. Practically the same language was used in Hatfield v. Levy Bros., 18 Cal.2d 798, 807, 117 P.2d 841, citing the Rothschild case. See, also Louie v. Hagstrom's Food Stores, 81 Cal. App.2d 601, 607, 184 P.2d 708. Moreover, as we have seen, the jury was told of "the owner's superior knowledge." There was no error in this instruction.

[6] The instructions (A), (B), (C), (D) and (E) nowhere expressly speak of an owner's duty to inspect his premises, and appellants contend that there is such a duty. They cite no California case of such a type as this, holding that the jury must be instructed on the duty of an owner to inspect. The cases they do cite deal with litigation of an entirely different nature. They cite Basye v. Craft's, etc., Shows, 43 Cal.App.2d 782, 111 P.2d 746, where a bystander at a carnival lost an eye from the fragment of a deflected bullet in a shooting gallery, and Sherward v. Virtue, 20 Cal.2d 410, 126 P.2d 345, involving the liability of the manufacturer of a defective beauty parlor chair, each of them, obviously, a totally different type of case. The Sheward case cited O'Rourke v. Day, etc., Company, 31 Cal.App.2d 364, 88 P.2d 191, a case involving the inspection of a patented water heater. They rely, also, on Spore v. Washington, 96 Cal.App. 345, 274 P. 407, 410, where the court, speaking of the board walk which did the damage, said "no part of it was concealed so as to make inspection difficult or dangerous" and "From the facts adduced the jury might easily have concluded that the slightest inspection would have disclosed the conditions actually existing." Whatever was said respecting inspection, was not said in connection with instructions since the opinion points out, 96 Cal.App. page 351, 274 P. page 409, that "Not one single complaint is made of any instruction, and we, therefore, assume that the jury were fully and fairly instructed * * *" Clampett v. Shopping Bag Markets, Inc., 29 Cal.App.2d 410, 84 P.2d 543, cited by appellants, was a slipping case, but it is not in point since the trial court there had directed a verdict for defendant (because it considered plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law) hence no problem of instructions was presented.

Moreover, appellants requested no instruction even mentioning inspection. See 24 Cal.Jur., "Trial", § 74. It may well be that no instruction was tendered because they could find no authority on which to base it.

The four following instructions were given on ordinary care:

"By ordinary care is meant that degree of care that would be used by a person of ordinary prudence under the same or similar circumstances."

"While proceeding to enter the premises at the time and place in question, the plaintiff, * * * was required to use ordinary care for her own safety."

"While Mrs. Lundin was under the duty of using ordinary care for her own safety, she was not obliged to search for defects, and she had a right to assume that the place where she stepped was reasonably safe, and a reasonably safe place, until she ascertained to the contrary."

"The law does not require the defendant to use any greater degree of care than the plaintiff was required to use for her own safety and protection in her use of the defendant's premises."

[7] It is contended that the instructions imposed on the owner a lesser degree of care than that imposed on the invitee. It is difficult to follow this in view of the instruction already discussed respecting "the owner's superior knowledge of the perilous condition and the danger therefrom" and in view of the third instruction just quoted, which was clearly in appellants' favor and essentially in the form proposed by appellants, the variations being trifling.

[8] It is contended that the court erred in instructing on contributory negligence. That defense was pleaded, and the case was tried by respondent on that theory. There were photographs in evidence showing the entrance to the store from several viewpoints and there was much testimony respecting its physical condition. The day was rainy and appellants concede that it is "a matter of common knowledge that marble is or may be extremely slippery in wet weather and that tiles are likewise slippery." Moreover, Mrs. Lundin testified that she just stepped up into the entrance without glancing down and there was other evidence from which the defense could legitimately contend that she was negligent. An instruction on contributory negligence was certainly proper.

[9] What has just been said answers the claim that the following instruction should not have been given: "Where such danger is obvious, or is as well known to the injured invitee as to the owner, there is no liability upon the owner." The wording is not criticized, simply its applicability. If contributory negligence was in the case, this instruction was not improper.

Appellants tendered the following instruction: "You are instructed that one who during business hours lawfully enters a store to purchase goods, does so at the implied invitation of the owner, upon whom the law imposes the duty of exercising ordinary care and prudence to keep the entrance and passageway, in and through which, by its location and arrangement, a customer in entering the said premises is induced or obliged to go, in a reasonably safe condition so as not to unnecessarily expose such customer to danger or accident."

[10, 11] This was taken almost literally from Thompson v. B. F. Goodrich Co., 48 Cal.2d 723, at pages 726–727, 120 P.2d 693, and it is urged that it should have been given, just as it is urged that the Madigan instruction should have been given. There is no doubt that this instruction contains a correct statement of the law, but the first four quoted herein (A to D) declared the law in equivalent language and there was no need for repetition.

[12] It is claimed that the court failed to define "ordinary care" and "proximate cause", both of which terms were used in the instruction on contributory negligence. Ordinary care was defined, as already quoted herein, but proximate cause was not. In three of their proposed instructions appellants used the term "proximate cause" or its equivalent but made no request for a definition of it. In the absence of such request they cannot now complain. Ambrose v. Allen, 113 Cal.App. 107, 116, 298 P. 169; and Dicken v. Souther, 59 Cal.App.2d 203, 209, 138 P.2d 408; 24 Cal.Jur., "Trial", § 74, supra. Spear v. Leuenberger, 44 Cal.App.2d 236, 246, 112 P.2d 43, 49, is not in point. There the court failed to define negligence for the jury in the conventional way or even approaching it, but told them that "Want of ordinary care is called negligence" and then failed to define ordinary care. Here the conventional definition of negligence was given as well as the definition of ordinary care. In the Spear case it is true the court failed to define proximate cause, but it is questionable whether, standing alone, that would have called for a reversal, in the absence of a request for it.

[13] Appellants' proposed instructions II and VII were refused by the court in the form tendered, but were given in substance in (A), (B), (C), (D) and (E), defining an invitee and laying down the owner's duty.

[14] To appellants' complaint that "the court did not instruct the jury that the plaintiff could not be charged with contributory negligence because she might have avoided the accident if she had acted differently" the answer is that they did not so request. 24 Cal.Jur., "Trial", § 74, supra.

[15] Finally, it is claimed that reversible error was committed in refusing an instruction reading as follows: "You are instructed, that even though you may believe from the evidence that the defendant (or its agents and employees) did not know of any defect in the marble step, yet, if by the exercise of ordinary care you believe the defendant could have discovered such condition, then, I charge you, the defendant may nevertheless be liable if you believe such condition existed at the time the plaintiff fell, and that such fall was proximately caused in part or entirely by said condition and proximately caused any injuries, you may believe the plaintiff suffered." (Emphasis added.)

The draftsman probably meant to say "yet, if you believe that the defendant, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have discovered such condition." As tendered, however, it extended the ordinary care rule to the functioning of the jury.

The jurors were told by (B) that the owner "is required to use ordinary care for the safety" of his invitee, and that such owner has "superior knowledge" over his invitee, and by (E) that "the defective condition must either have been known to the owner or occupant, or have existed for such time that it was the duty of the owner or occupant, by the exercise of reasonable care, to have known of such defect." (Emphasis added.)

The instructions which were given were "clear and concise, complete, intelligible, unambiguous and certain". 24 Cal.Jur., "Trial", sec. 85. Why, then, add to the jurors' task the job of trying to grasp the meaning of an instruction which bears internal evidence of having been hastily and carelessly drawn and which tells them no more than they had been already told in conventional form? The tendered instruction, moreover, lacked the saving grace of adhering to "instructions which have been sanctioned by the appellate courts". 24 Cal. Jur., "Trial", § 84.

Appellants characterize the instructions as "one-sided", "half-hearted, misleading and colorless" yet they have produced no authority to convince us that there was error in the giving or the rejecting of any one of them.

[16] "The charge must be read as a whole". 24 Cal.Jur., "Trial", § 113. When so read it was fair, comprehensive, and well balanced.

We find no merit in any of appellants' points, most of which are extremely technical.

The judgment is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and DOOLING, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 25

BUTCHER v. QUEEN CITY IRON & METAL CO. et al.

Civ. 17506.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 16, 1950.

George Butcher brought action against the Queen City Iron & Metal Company, a partnership, and others, for personal injuries. A judgment in favor of plaintiff was entered by the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Samuel R. Blake, J., and the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeals, McComb, J., held that evidence that plaintiff, while a business invitee on premises of defendant partnership, undertook to remove steel plate from table at request of partnership's employee without knowing that there was a round piece of steel beneath the plate, though such fact was known to partnership's employee, and that round piece of steel rolled off table and struck plaintiff on foot, supported finding that plaintiff's injury was caused by negligence of partnership's employee and that plaintiff was not contributorily negligent.

Affirmed.

1. Negligence ⇐32(1)

An owner of property is under duty to a business invitee to exercise reasonable care in maintenance and use of its premises so as not to injure invitee.

2. Negligence ⇐32(1)

A business invitee is entitled to ordinary care at hands of employee of an employer and an omission of such care resulting in injury makes employer liable to injured party.

3. Appeal and error ⇐999(3)

A finding by jury that plaintiff in personal injury action is a business invitee when supported by substantial evidence is binding upon appellate court.

4. Appeal and error ⇐1001(1)
Negligence ⇐136(14, 26)

Whether defendant was negligent or plaintiff contributorily negligent are questions of fact for determination of jury whose findings supported by substantial evidence will not be reversed on appeal.

5. Negligence ⇐134(3), 135(1)

Evidence that plaintiff, while business invitee on premises of defendant partnership, undertook to remove steel plate from table at request of partnership's employee without knowing that there was a round piece of steel beneath the plate, though such fact was known to partnership's employee, and that round piece of steel rolled off table and struck plaintiff on foot, justified finding that plaintiff's injury was caused by negligence of partnership's employee and that plaintiff was not contributorily negligent.

6. Appeal and error ⇐1004(1)

A jury's verdict will not be set aside upon appeal on ground that verdict is excessive unless verdict is so outrageously excessive as to suggest passion, prejudice, or corruption.

7. Damages ⇐132(6)

$15,000 for loss of plaintiff's big toe on his right foot causing a permanent limp and permanently impairing circulation at lower end of right foot, so that gangrene might be caused to flare up with necessity of further amputation of a part of his foot or leg, was not excessive.

Moss, Lyon & Dunn, Los Angeles, Henry F. Walker, Los Angeles, of counsel, for appellants.

Erb, French & Picone, Beverly Hills, Ralph Highsmith, Los Angeles, Samuel B. Picone, Beverly Hills, for respondent.

McCOMB, Justice.

From a judgment in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $15,000 after trial before a jury in an action to recover damages for personal injuries, defendants appeal.

Facts: On October 25, 1947, plaintiff went to defendant partnership's place of business, which was a steel and metal yard, for the purpose of buying a piece of steel and also some scrap angle iron. Upon entering the yard plaintiff saw defendant Wood, an employee of the partnership, and also Mr. Carpio, foreman of the yard. The foreman upon learning plaintiff's mission requested plaintiff to follow him to the back of the yard. This he did and was shown a piece of steel longer than he desired. The foreman told plaintiff he could cut the metal the length desired, and started to cut it in plaintiff's presence. Before the metal was completely cut plaintiff walked along the stock shed to a point where the foreman had told him he could find some scrap angle iron. Plaintiff picked up some short pieces of angle iron and went toward the office and the scales. Plaintiff stopped near a cutting table where defendant Wood was using a torch. On the table was a steel plate below which was a piece of round steel approximately 3½ feet in length and about 2½ to 2¾ inches in diameter, weighing approximately 100 pounds. Plaintiff did not know the round steel was on the table, it being completely covered by the plate steel and not visible to plaintiff. Defendant Wood, however, knew the piece of steel was beneath the plate. While plaintiff was standing near the table defendant Wood looking in the general direction toward plaintiff said "That plate is in my way." After the statement, plaintiff went up to the table, picked up the steel plate, and the piece of round steel beneath the plate rolled off the table striking plaintiff's right foot and injuring it.

As a result of the injury it was necessary to amputate the right great toe. The amputation of the toe caused plaintiff to have a permanent limp and a doctor testified that further surgery might be necessary in the future.

Questions: First: Did the evidence show that defendant partnership had violated a duty which it owed plaintiff?

This question must be answered in the affirmative and is governed by these rules:

[1] 1. An owner of property is under a duty to a business invitee to exercise reasonable care in the maintenance and use of its premises so as not to injure such invitee. (Smith v. Pickwick Stages System, 113 Cal.App. 118, 126, 297 P. 940.)

[2] 2. A business invitee is entitled to ordinary care at the hands of the employee of an employer and an omission of such care resulting in injury makes the employer liable to the injured party. (Smith v. Pickwick Stages System, supra, 113 Cal. App. at page 126, 297 P. 940.)

[3] 3. A finding by a jury that a plaintiff is a business invitee when supported by substantial evidence is binding upon an appellate court. (Bee v. Tungstar Corporation, 65 Cal.App.2d 729, 732, 151 P.2d 537.)

[4] 4. Whether defendant was negligent or plaintiff contributorily negligent are questions of fact for the determination of the jury whose finding supported by substantial evidence will not be reversed on appeal. (Reinders v. Olsen, 60 Cal.App. 764, 767, 214 P. 268; McStay v. Citizens Nat. T. & S. Bank, 5 Cal.App.2d 595, 600, 43 P.2d 560.)

[5] Applying the foregoing rules to the facts in the instant case the jury from the evidence were justified in finding that plaintiff was a business invitee on the premises of defendant partnership, and that defendant Wood within the scope of his employment requested plaintiff to remove the steel plate from the table. Also that plaintiff did not know there was a round piece of steel beneath the plate and defendant Wood was negligent in not informing plaintiff of such fact. Likewise the jury was justified from the evidence in finding that plaintiff acted as a reasonably prudent man would have acted under the same or similar circumstances and was therefore not contributorily negligent.

Second: Was the judgment excessive?

[6] This question must be answered in the negative. A jury's verdict will not be set aside upon appeal on the ground that the verdict is excessive unless the verdict is so outrageously excessive as to suggest passion, prejudice, or corruption. (Junge v. Midland Counties etc. Corp., 38 Cal.App. 2d 154, 160, 100 P.2d 1073.)

[7] In the instant case the amount of the award, $15,000, does not fall in such category. The evidence disclosed that as a result of the injury plaintiff lost the big toe on his right foot causing a permanent limp and that the circulation in the lower end of his right foot was permanently impaired which might cause gangrene to flare up with the necessity of a further amputation of a portion of his foot or leg.

Affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., and WILSON, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 124

RINGO v. JOHNSON.

No. 14174.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 22, 1950.

Action by Robert Ringo against Raymond W. Johnson for injuries sustained by pedestrian when struck by defendant's automobile. The Superior Court for the City and County of San Francisco, James G. Conlan, J., entered judgment on an order granting a motion for nonsuit, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that pedestrian's own testimony established as a matter of law that he was contributorily negligent in crossing street outside crosswalk without looking for approaching vehicles and that presumption of due care could not be invoked to raise a question of fact as to such contributory negligence.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Automobiles ⇐244(1)

Where pedestrian was struck by and thrown to the hood of an automobile and then rolled off, fact that his spectacles were found in a particular place would not justify a finding that he was struck at that place.

2. Negligence ⇐122(1)

Where a plaintiff is unable, because of loss of memory, to testify as to his own conduct, the presumption of due care applies as a species of evidence.

3. Death ⇐58(1)

In action for wrongful death, the presumption that deceased exercised due care for his own safety may be weighed against other evidence, since, being dead, he is unable to testify.

4. Evidence ⇐89, 589, 594

A fact is proved as against a party when established by uncontradicted testimony of the party himself or his witnesses under circumstances which afford no indication that such testimony is the product of mistake or inadvertence, and when fact so proved is wholly irreconcilable with a presumption sought to be invoked, the presumption is dispelled and it disappears from the case.

5. Automobiles ⇐242(8)

Where pedestrian's own testimony, though confused, as well as that of defendant showed that pedestrian was crossing street outside crosswalk when struck by defendant's automobile, presumption of due care could not be invoked to raise a question of fact as to contributory negligence of pedestrian, though he had had difficulty in expressing himself both before and after accident and repeatedly testified that he did not remember exatly where he crossed street. Vehicle Code, § 560.

6. Automobiles ⇐245(72)

A pedestrian who crosses street outside crosswalk and without looking for approaching vehicles is guilty of "contributory negligence" as a matter of law. Vehicle Code, § 560.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Contributory Negligence".

7. Appeal and error ⇐927(3)

On appeal from order granting a nonsuit, the evidence and every favorable inference and presumption properly arising therefrom must be weighed in the light most favorable to plaintiff.

8. Automobiles ⇐242(8)

Defendant had the burden of proving contributory negligence of pedestrian struck by defendant's automobile.

9. Automobiles ⇐245(72)

Pedestrian's own testimony that he was crossing street at night outside crosswalk and without looking for approaching vehicles when struck by defendant's automobile established as a matter of law that pedestrian was contributorily negligent and, in absence of any evidence which would support a finding in favor of pedestrian on such issue, defendant was entitled to a nonsuit. Vehicle Code, § 560.

Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, Oakland, for appellant.

Charles V. Barfield, San Francisco, for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

Action for personal injuries brought by a pedestrian against the driver of an automobile which struck him. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment entered on an order granting a motion for nonsuit.

Questions Presented.

While the basic question is whether there is any substantial evidence which would have supported a verdict for plaintiff, that question, in turn, depends primarily upon whether, under the facts, the presumption that plaintiff used due care applied.

Facts.

It is not necessary to detail all of the facts in the case. About 10:30 p. m. plaintiff, a pedestrian, was proceeding in a northerly direction across California Street in San Francisco when he was struck by an automobile operated by defendant, who was driving westerly along said street. At the place in question there is no marked crosswalk. It was defendant's contention that plaintiff was crossing the street outside of the crosswalk area and hence defendant had the right of way. Defendant so testified, and so did plaintiff. Defendant testified that when he saw plaintiff, defendant was 25 feet west of the westerly property line of Spruce Street; that plaintiff came from behind an approaching street car and was about 10 feet in front of defendant's car; that defendant stopped his car around 15 feet after hitting plaintiff, and that when he hit plaintiff, plaintiff landed on the top of the car's hood and fell to the street; that he did not carry the body forward at all; that when his car stopped, plaintiff lay in the street approximately 15 feet behind the rear end of the automobile. A bystander and defendant carried plaintiff directly over to the sidewalk, placing him at a point which was 35 or 40 feet west of the west property line of Spruce Street. The person who helped carry plaintiff did not testify. Later other witnesses saw plaintiff in that spot.

A witness who arrived shortly after the accident testified that he found a pair of glasses (identified as plaintiff's) at the curb at a point which he marked on a photograph of the scene. They were at the northwesterly corner of the intersection where the curve of the curb starts to straighten out. This would be on a line with the property line at or near the westerly extremity of the crosswalk and about 35 feet easterly of where defendant claims plaintiff was when struck.

Plaintiff's testimony was vague and contradictory, due to difficulty in expressing himself, a difficulty which had existed prior to the accident. Since the accident he had had more difficulty in expressing himself and making himself understood as "his nerves are completely shot."

Concerning whether he crossed at the crosswalk, plaintiff testified: "I really don't remember whether I crossed at the intersection or I crossed, cut the corner, like * * *." He was asked where he was with reference to the pedestrian crossing when he started across California Street. He replied, "I don't remember, I don't know." Again:

"Q. Now, Mr. Ringo, you told your attorney—one of your attorneys, Mr. Myers, didn't you, that you didn't know whether you were crossing in the crosswalk or outside of the crosswalk, is that right? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. You told him you couldn't remember whether you were in the crosswalk or not, is that right? A. Between the crosswalk and about the middle—the middle of the—it is where they stop and let people off the street car, in between there some place.

"Q. You mean the safety zone there on the south side of California Street? A. Yes, sir, the south side."

He was then shown a photograph of the intersection, and marked on it the point at which he crossed, stating that it was "in between the middle and the place—and the place where the people turned, where the people cross, where the people cross." His testimony and his marking of the photograph (he later marked where he was when hit) show that he started from the safety zone which was west of the west end of the crosswalk and that he was also westerly of the latter when struck. In marking the photograph as to the point where he was struck, he said: "I can't remember exactly, but a little further than that, about there (indicating)." He later testified: "Q. Well, now is it not a fact, Mr. Ringo, that you know you were not crossing in the crosswalk at the time of this accident? A. I wasn't crossing in the crosswalk, no, but I was crossing about the middle of the—I don't know, I mean my—crossing in the middle of the—in the middle of the safety zone, then I—then I crossed over that way."

Concerning whether he looked to his right or east before starting to cross California Street, his testimony is likewise confused. He first said: "I looked at the car I just got off. I looked, I saw the lights, I guess the lights shining on the street, and I thought I got a glimpse of the lights shining on the street, so then I just crossed, to get across the street. Q. I see. Then were you hit by the automobile? A. Yes, sir." Inasmuch as after getting off the car which was on the northerly side of the street, plaintiff crossed to the southerly side, looked at an excavation there before he started to cross back, it is difficult to understand what is meant by seeing lights shining on the street. The streetcar meantime had gone west a few blocks and apparently was coming back. Plaintiff testified that before starting back he saw the lights of the streetcar coming towards him from the west.

(Defendant came from the east.) He later testified:

"Q. —you say that before you started to cross the street, you looked to your left, or to the west, and you saw a streetcar coming down there? A. I never turned to the left, I might glance a little to the left, so I could see the headlights of any car. You can generally see the headlights coming—coming. I didn't know it was a car, exactly, but I knew a car was coming, and I had enough time to cross over. I saw the headlights.

"Q. You are talking about a streetcar coming from the west? A. And the car was coming a little bit behind the streetcar, I think.

"Q. An automobile came from the west behind the streetcar? A. I imagine so, I didn't see it.

"Q. This is an automobile that was coming from the west? A. No, not from the west. Pardon me. From the east to the west.

"Q. That was while you were on the sidewalk, was it? A. No, I was crossing the—crossing the street.

"Q. Well, now, are you telling us that you looked to the east before you started to go across the street? A. I didn't look to the east, I saw the headlights of the car coming from the east and started to walk across the street then.

"Q. What did you see, the headlights of a streetcar or what? A. Automobile or streetcar, I knew something was coming and I had to hurry up and walk across.

"Q. Coming in which direction, from east to west or west to east? A. From east to west."

In his deposition he positively stated that he did not look to the east at all as the "quickest place to get hit from a car is coming from the west." When asked if he saw defendant's automobile any time before the accident he said he saw the headlights. He then denied that he had not looked to the east before the accident happened. On redirect examination his counsel asked if he could remember exactly what happened at the scene of the accident and he replied, "No, beause after I was hit, I became very emotional, and I couldn't help it, I just got emotional, I don't know what happened exactly, I know what happened before." Admittedly he received no head injury. He had previously testified: "Q. * * * Then were you hit by the automobile? A. Yes, sir. Q. Do you remember anything after that at all? A. Not too much, no."

Defendant moved for a nonsuit on the ground that the evidence affirmatively showed that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. The court granted the motion. Plaintiff contends that there was evidence from which a jury could have found that plaintiff was crossing in the crosswalk. The question of whether he was in the crosswalk is of prime importance, for if he were he would have the right of way. Vehicle Code, § 560. He contends, first, that from his confused testimony the jury could have inferred that he actually was in the crosswalk when hit. We have set forth all his testimony on the subject and it is apparent that nowhere did he say he was in it. In fact he positively stated that he did not cross at the crosswalk and the line he drew on the photograph demonstrates it.

[1] Secondly, plaintiff contends that there was other evidence that plaintiff was in the crosswalk when hit. This is based upon the testimony of the witness Smith that he found plaintiff's glasses at or in the crosswalk and some 30 to 35 feet behind the point which defendant testified was the point of impact. Defendant testified that plaintiff walked into the side of the car, was cast up on top of the hood, rolled off and fell at practically the point of impact. Plaintiff contends that this testimony is inherently improbable, and, coupled with the place where the glasses were found, shows that plaintiff was in the crosswalk when hit. The testimony of the police officer was that the left front headlight was damaged, as well as the top of the hood, which would indicate that defendant was mistaken when he said plaintiff walked into the side of the car. However, there was nothing in this testimony that justified the claimed inference that plaintiff was in the crosswalk. Everything that plaintiff claims pointed towards plaintiff being in that position was merely surmise or conjecture. The same is true as to the location of the glasses. No one can say where glasses will end up when their wearer is struck and thrown to the hood of a car and then off, as occurred here; and to determine that the mere fact that the glasses were found in a particular place is sufficient proof to justify a finding that he was hit at that place would be to base such a finding on mere surmise or conjecture.

Thirdly, plaintiff contends that in view of his confused way of testifying and his claimed lack of memory the jury was entitled to weigh, against his own testimony, the presumption that he used due care, and that the conflict between the presumption and his testimony was sufficient to send the case to the jury. This brings us to the question of when a plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of the presumption.

[2] Where a plaintiff is unable, because of loss of memory, to testify to his own conduct, the presumption applies as a species of evidence. See Douglas v. Hoff, 82 Cal.App.2d 82, at page 84, 185 P.2d 607, at page 608—where the plaintiff "lost all remembrance of the circumstances of her accident and * * * was unable to relate how it happened"; Satariano v. Sleight, 54 Cal.App.2d 278 at page 280, 129 P.2d 35 at page 37—where plaintiff "suffered a brain concussion and remembered nothing of what had happened after leaving the gymnasium" before the accident; Hoppe v. Bradshaw, 42 Cal.App.2d 334, at page 337, 108 P.2d 947, at page 948—where plaintiff in the accident sustained a "brain injury [which] resulted in a loss of memory to such an extent that he had no recollection of any of the incidents" from a time prior to the accident; Scott v. Sheedy, 39 Cal.App.2d 96, 102 P.2d 575—where the plaintiff had received a brain injury in the accident and testified that he could not tell anything about how the truck which struck him came into the opening of a barricade he was guarding.

[3] There are many cases holding that the presumption of due care may be weighed against other evidence where the plaintiff is dead and hence cannot testify. Smellie v. Southern Pacific Co., 212 Cal. 540, 299 P. 529; Westberg v Willde, 14 Cal.2d 360, 94 P.2d 590.

[4] We have been able to find no case, nor have we been cited to one, which holds that a plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of the presumption of due care where his own testimony is directly contradictory to it. The presumption may be invoked by a party when "his evidence is not inconsistent therewith." Smellie v. Southern Pacific Co., supra, 212 Cal. at page 555, 299 P.2d at page 535. The presumption gives rise to a conflict in the evidence "unless the presumption on the one hand is irreconcilable with the evidence on the other hand" said the court in Mar Shee v. Maryland Assurance Corp., 190 Cal 1, at page 9, 210 P. 269, at page 273. The test is there stated: "* * * a fact is proved as against a party when it is established by the uncontradicted testimony of the party himself or of his witnesses, under circumstances which afford no indication that the testimony is the product of mistake or inadvertence; and that when the fact so proved is wholly irreconcilable with the presumption sought to be invoked, the latter is dispelled and disappears from the case." As to the presumption in question here, this test is approved in the Westberg case, supra, 14 Cal.2d at page 365, 94 P.2d 590.

[5] Applying such test to the facts of our case, it appears that plaintiff's own testimony as well as that of defendant dispels the presumption because it shows that he was not crossing the street within the crosswalk. Nor can plaintiff bring himself within the exception above mentioned "that the testimony is the product of mistake or inadvertence" by saying, as he did, that he "didn't remember." While he repeated such an expression, he positively testified more than once that he was not within the crosswalk. In fact, when he was showing on the photograph where he crossed the street, while saying he did not "remember exactly" he moved the point "a little further than that, about there * * *." We can find no case where the presumption remains in the case after uncontradicted evidence to the contrary, merely because the plaintiff uses the expression "I don't remember" in connection with his own testimony showing that he did remember. As said in Mundy v. Marshall, 8 Cal.2d 294, 296, 65 P.2d 65, 66: "The manner in which the decedent was crossing the street having been covered by the plaintiff's own evidence, there is no room for the operation of the presumption that he was exercising due care, Paulsen v. McDuffie, 4 Cal.2d 111 [47 P.2d 709], and it cannot be relied upon to establish a conflict in the evidence." As said in Paulsen v. McDuffie, 4 Cal.2d 111, 119, 47 P.2d 709, 714: "It is difficult to see how there was any place for a presumption as to the plaintiff's conduct. What he did on that occasion was entirely covered by the evidence in the case, and there was neither necessity nor reason for indulging in any presumption upon that subject."

[6] While plaintiff's aunt testified that since the accident plaintiff had a great deal more difficulty in expressing himself and making himself understood, the difficulty is not that, because although his testimony was somewhat confused and he several times repeated that he did not remember, his testimony showed that he did remember and the one thing he did make clear was that he did not use the crosswalk. Moreover, plaintiff also made it clear that he did not look to the east before crossing the street. Under such circumstances it has been held that a pedestrian is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Weissman v. Seehusen, 55 Cal.App.2d 391, 393, 131 P.2d 10; White v. Davis, 103 Cal. App. 531, 542, 284 P. 1086.

[7-9] Taking every favorable inference and presumption properly arising from the evidence, and weighing the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiff, as we are required to do in passing upon an order granting a nonsuit, Williamson v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 78 Cal.App.2d 482, 177 P.2d 977, we are unable to find any evidence which would support a finding in favor of plaintiff, and hence the nonsuit was proper. While the burden of proof of the issue of contributory negligence is on the defendant, the evidence of plaintiff shows as a matter of law that he was contributively negligent. See Weissman v. Seehusen, supra, 55 Cal. App.2d 391, 131 P.2d 10; Foy v. Carlton, 29 Cal.App.2d 575, 85 P.2d 220.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and FRED B. WOOD, J., concur.

98 Cal.App.2d 743

GILLIES et al. v. MICHIGAN MILLERS MUT. FIRE INS. CO. et al.

Civ. 17531.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 1, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 16, 1950.

Hearing Denied Sept. 25, 1950.

B. Allison Gillies and others, doing business as Acme Saw Works, a limited partnership, sued Michigan Millers Mutual Fire Insurance Company, a corporation, and Northwestern Mutual Fire Association, a corporation, for a decree of contribution. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Charles C. Burnell, J., rendered a judgment adverse to plaintiffs and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeals, Moore, P. J., held that an "excess" clause in fire policy issued by Fulton was improperly ignored in applying apportionment clauses of specific fire policies issued by defendants.

Judgment reversed with instructions and appeal from order denying appellants' motion for a new trial dismissed.

1. Insurance ⇐604

Where merchandise which was destroyed by fire was insured against fire under policies of specific insurance and of excess insurance issued by different insurers, and insurers gave assured their several drafts totaling amount of loss, with drafts being computed according to formula of insurers under specific policies, with agreement that dispute as to extent of liability of each insurer should thereafter be adjusted between insurers, and insurers each took a "loan receipt agreement" from insured, insurers under specific policies were estopped from asserting loan receipts were fictitious, and insurer under excess policy could obtain decree of contribution from insurers under specific policies.

2. Insurance ⇐162, 504

A "specific fire policy" covers property at a specific location in a specific amount for a specified premium, and in event of a loss, insurer is liable to extent of its policy.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Specific Fire Policy".

3. Insurance ⇐504

Where there are two or more specific fire policies insuring same property, liability is prorated to extent of joint coverage.

4. Insurance ⇐504

If a merchant insures his merchandise in one store and pays a definite premium for fire insurance on merchandise, the insurance is "specific insurance" and in event of loss merchant can collect amount of insurance to extent of loss but not exceeding amount of policy.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Specific Insurance".

5. Insurance ⇐124, 138(1)

An insurance policy is merely a contract between insurer and insured and they may contract as they please so long as they do not violate regulatory statutes.

6. Insurance ⇐504

An "excess" fire policy does not attach until full value protected by specific insurance has been exhausted.

7. Insurance ⇐504

Where merchandise destroyed by fire was insured against fire under specific policies containing an apportionment of loss clause, and under an excess policy written after specific policies were written, the "excess" clause was improperly ignored in applying apportionment clauses of specific policies, as against contention of insurers under specific policies that they were liable for no greater portion of loss suffered by insured than amount insured under specific policies bore to entire insurance covering merchandise. Insurance Code, § 2071.

8. Insurance ⇐171, 502, 504

The "amount of insurance" under specific fire policy is the face value of policy, whereas "amount of liability" is a variable factor, dependent upon extent of loss and apportionment clause.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Amount of Insurance" and "Amount of Liability".

George Penney, Robert M. Newell, Theodore A. Chester, all of Los Angeles, Rein, Mound & Cotton, New York City, of counsel, for appellants.

Schell & Delamer, Sampson & Dryden and Jacob Swartz, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Appeal from a judgment involving policies of "specific" insurance and "excess" insurance.

October 25, 1946, appellants suffered a loss by fire which destroyed their merchandise to the extent of $34,417.64. On that day they carried three policies of insurance against loss of such property by the following insurers in the following amounts:

Michigan Miller Mutual Fire Insurance Co.	$25,000
Northwestern Mutual Fire Association	5,000
Fulton Fire Insurance Company	80,000 [1]
Total	$110,000

1. $80,000 was taken as the basic amount for computing the annual premium on the policy whose liability fluctuated with the changing inventory. However, the policy fixed $115,000 as the maximum liability.

Each is referred to herein by the first word of its name.

Following the fire and presentation of claims, a dispute arose among the insurance carriers respecting the extent of liability of each of them under the terms of their respective policies. Being unable to reach an agreement as to the extent of the liability of each, they decided to reimburse their assured for the total loss sustained by the fire according to respondents' formula and thereafter to adjust disputed matters. Pursuant to such decision, within the knowledge of all, they gave to the assured their several drafts as follows:

Michigan,	$ 8,298.92
Northwestern,	1,659.75
Fulton	24,459.07

Thereupon each took from the assured a "loan receipt agreement." Before delivering its draft, Fulton required that it approve the loan receipt agreements executed by both respondents. The drafts issued by the insurers were drawn on forms customarily used by them. Within two months after the fire both respondents cancelled their policies. Two months later appellants filed this action on behalf of Fulton. The case was tried on a stipulation of facts and other documents. The court found that (1) Michigan and Northwestern issued their policies of fire insurance upon the merchandise of appellants; (2) respondents' policies were the only policies of specific insurance in force at the time of the fire; (3) appellants had excess insurance (Fulton's) to which no liability attached until such specific insurance had been exhausted; (4) the total insurance in effect on the day of the fire was $103,682; (5) Michigan's proportionate share of the loss is 25,000/103,682; Northwestern's is 5,000/103,682; and Fulton's is 73,682/103,682 or the balance, $24,459.07. The premium paid to Fulton was ascertained by taking the monthly average of the value of appellant's merchandise on hand for a year. The court found also that the Fulton policy contains the following provisions:

"5. 'Contributing Insurance Clause.' Permission is granted for other insurance written upon the same plan, terms, conditions, and provisions as those contained in the form attached to this policy, i. e., insurance written under this provisional reporting form. The insurance under this policy in accordance with its printed conditions or riders, shall contribute only with other insurance as herein above defined, against any peril insured by this policy.

"6. 'Specific Insurance.' Insurance other than described in the 'Contributing Insurance Clause' paragraph 5, shall be known as specific insurance for which permission is hereby granted. However, in the computation of the final premium it shall not be permissible to deduct or credit such specific insurance against the values shown in the monthly reports except when "(a) It has been necessary to procure such insurance to protect values in excess of the limits of liability of this policy, or

"(b) It has been disclosed by written endorsement hereon showing location, expiration and amount.

"7. 'Excess Clause.' This policy does not attach to or become insurance against any peril upon property herein described which at the time of any loss is insured by 'specific insurance' as defined in paragraph 6, until the liability of such 'specific insurance' has been exhausted, and then shall cover only such loss or damage as may exceed the amount due from such 'specific insurance' (including the amount otherwise due from invalid insurance had same been valid, and including also the amount due from any uncollectible insurance) after application of any contribution, coinsurance, average, distribution, or other similar clauses contained in policies of such 'specific insurance' affecting the amount due thereunder, not, however, exceeding limits as set forth herein."

[1] Respondents now contend that the "loan" to appellant is a fiction; that since Fulton paid appellants it cannot obtain a decree for a contribution from respondents. The law is otherwise. Fireman's Fund v. Palatine Insurance Company, 150 Cal. 252, 255, 88 P. 907; Luckenbach v. W. J. McCahan Sugar Refining Company, 248

U.S. 139, 39 S.Ct. 53, 55, 63 L.Ed. 170, 1 A.L.R. 1522. In the latter case a loss occurred while the merchandise was in possession of a carrier whose bill of lading provided that the carrier shall have the full benefit of any insurance on the cargo. The policy warranted against liability for merchandise in the possession of any carrier who may be liable for loss or damage thereto. The insurer paid the shipper the amount of the loss by use of "loan receipts" whereupon action was brought in the shipper's name for the insurer's sole benefit. Mr. Justice Brandeis said that the insurer would not be liable to the shipper if the carrier was liable, but that if the insurer settled the loss before the carrier's liability had been determined the insurer would lose the benefit of all claims against the carrier to which it would be subrogated in the absence of a provision to the contrary in the bill of lading. If nothing should be recovered from the carrier the shipper could retain the loans as payment under the policies. Such devices are common business practice, declared the court and it is "creditable to the ingenuity of business men that an arrangement should have been devised which is consonant both with the needs of commerce and the demands of justice." The doctrine thus announced is sound and is applicable here even though the policies involved there specifically provided for the procedure. Moreover, respondents contend with poor grace against the method used by appellants since the loan receipts, the amendments to the drafts and the stipulation of facts clearly prove that the parties intended to devise a means of reimbursing appellants promptly with the view of later determining the liability of each insurer. Respondents knew that Fulton could have refused to pay more than its admitted liability and thereby could have compelled the assured to sue each company. The doctrine of estoppel is justly invoked against respondents' asserting the loan receipts to be fictitious.

Two Kinds of Policies

[2, 3] The contracts sold to appellants by Michigan and Northwestern are standard fire insurance policies which provide fixed and inflexible coverage for which definite premiums are paid. They are known as "specific insurance." A "specific" policy covers property at a specific location in a specific amount for a specified premium. In event of a loss, the insurer is liable to the extent of its policy. If there are two or more policies of specific insurance they prorate the liability to the extent of their joint coverage. But if the assured carries a "floater" or "monthly reporting" policy, the issuer thereof shares the liability on a different basis.

[4] If a merchant insures his merchandise in one store and pays a definite premium therefor, it is specific insurance and in event of loss he can collect the amount thereof to the extent of his loss but not exceeding the amount of his policy. But if the amount of his stock fluctuates from day to day or if he intends to move his stock from one location to another, or if he maintains several establishments, he contracts with the insurer to pay a premium on his monthly average inventory, and in event of loss he recovers the value of merchandise destroyed. Such an arrangement is effected by including in his policy a provisional amount clause such as is found in Fulton's policy, to wit:

"The amount of insurance provided for hereunder is provisional and is the amount on which the deposit premium is based, it being the intent of this insurance to insure hereunder the actual cash value of the property described herein, subject to the limits of liability and provisions for other insurance hereinafter provided."

Thus the insurance sold by the "provisional reporting" form is not a fixed amount as in the specific insurance sold to appellants by respondents. The first premium on the Fulton policy was based upon the average value of appellants' stock estimated at $80,000. But it was subject to revision according to the monthly inventories submitted to Fulton. At the end of the policy period the actual premium rate was determined by the monthly average value of the merchandise minus the amount of such specific insurance as was in force during the same period. Paragraph 7 of Fulton's policy emphatically excludes from its coverage any peril to property named in the policy "which at the time of any loss is insured by specific insurance as defined in paragraph 6, until the liability of such specific insurance has been exhausted, and then shall cover only such loss or damage as may exceed the amount due from such specific insurance."

Basis of Respondents' Contention

[5-7] Inasmuch as respondents' policies are of the "specific" type written on the Standard Form containing an apportionment of loss clause[2], as required by section 2071, Insurance Code, they conceive that they are liable for no greater proportion of the loss suffered by appellants than the amount insured bore to the entire insurance covering the property. In this they contend in vain. Fulton's policy was written subsequent to those of respondents and it provides definitely for Fulton's liability to attach only to the loss in excess of $30,000 of insurance provided by respondents. It follows that the court below erred in ignoring the "excess" clause of the Fulton policy and in applying the apportionment clauses of respondents' policies. It has been long established that an insurance policy is merely a contract between insurer and insured; that they may contract as they please so long as they do not violate regulatory statutes; and that an "excess" policy does not attach until the full value protected by specific insurance has been exhausted. Fairchild v. Liverpool and London Fire & Life Insurance Company, 51 N.Y. 65; Klotz Tailoring Company v. Eastern Fire Ins. Co., 116 App.Div. 723, 102 N.Y.S. 82; Wilson Co. v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 300 Mo. 1, 254 S.W. 266; United Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Powell, 94 Ga. 359, 21 S.E. 565; Hale v. Central Manufacturers Mutual Ins. Co., Mo.App., 93 S.W.2d 271. In the Klotz case the plaintiff carried three policies. Two were specific insurance and one was an excess or floater policy just as in the case at bar. Defendant's policy was for $932.05; the other specific policy was for $7,160.25 while the floating insurance of Globe & Rutgers Fire Insurance Company was for $50,000. The Globe policy contained a clause substantially the same as paragraph 7 of Fulton's policy. Defendant contended that it was liable for only its proportionate share of the total loss ($12,833.79) that the amount of its policy bore to what it claimed was the entire insurance in force at the time of the fire and that such share amounted to only $583.87, already paid. The court rejected such contention, and after approving and quoting from Fairchild v. Liverpool & London Fire & Life Ins. Company, supra, the court said: "In the light of the Fairchild Case, therefore, there seems to be no doubt of the exact meaning and effect of the provision contained in the Globe Company's policy. By its terms it did not cover or protect any of the property affected by the defendant's policy of insurance; that is, it did not and could not affect any part of such property which was fully covered by defendant's policy, and failed to reach that interest in the property which was covered by defendant's policy. In this view, the Globe policy did not in any wise affect the interest in the property which was destroyed, covered by the defendant's policy and the other specific insurances; and the 'whole insurance,' referring only to the property that was covered by the defendant's policy, does not include the floating insurance, that issued by the Globe Company, for it covered other property." [116 App.Div. 723, 102 N.Y.S. 84]

The Missouri court was equally as emphatic in maintaining the doctrine thus announced. In Wilson Company v. Hartford Fire Insurance Company, supra, the plaintiff and other packers had procured a policy of specific insurance from defendant through the Kansas City Livestock Exchange which was comprised of all meat

2. "This company shall not be liable under this policy for a greater proportion of any loss on the described property, or for loss by, and expenses of, removal from the premises endangered by fire, than the amount hereby insured bears to the entire insurance covering such property whether valid or not, or by solvent or insolvent insurers."

packers who kept their beef steers in the yards. For convenience the exchange was named as the assured. The only limitations on the Hartford insurance were that it would not exceed $150 on any one steer or $35 on any one hog. Wilson Company being insured as a member obtained an excess policy with Globe & Rutgers in the amount of $100,000 which provided that its insurance "shall be considered surplus insurance, where any specific insurance exists on any of the property hereby insured, and this insurance shall not apply or contribute, until the amount collectible from all such specific insurance shall have been exhausted." [300 Mo. 1, 254 S.W. 281]. Hartford Fire maintained that it should pay nothing or only its proportionate share of the total insurance. However, the excess clause of the Globe & Rutgers policy was too explicit to be overcome by mere exclamations of disappointment. "A floating policy", said the court, "is one intended to supplement specific insurance on property, and attaches only when the latter ceases to cover the risk. * * * The reason for the creation and the purpose of this character of policy is to provide indemnity for property which cannot, because of its frequent change in location and quantity, be covered by specific insurance. * * * Floating or surplus insurance is a form of indemnity * * *. By its terms it cannot become operative until the prior insurance has been exhausted."

The excess clause of a floating policy cannot be defeated by a distinct clause of a policy of specific insurance on the same property where the pro-rata clause of the latter provides that all insurance on the property whether specific or floating is to be considered in the apportionment. In such a situation, the court held the floating policies did not insure the same property and the insurance under the floating policy did not cover any property then protected by specific insurance. United Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Powell, supra.

Notwithstanding the clarity and force of the cited decisions and the soundness of their logic, respondents insist that under the apportionment clauses in their policies they should be required to pay no more than that proportion of the loss which the amounts of their policies bear to the entire insurance. That amount they assert to be $133,682[3], the aggregate of the face amounts of the three policies. They argue that they should be held respectively for 25,000/133,682 and 5,000/133,682 of the total loss of $34,417.64 and Fulton for 103,682/133,682, the balance of the loss. They cite Air Transport Mfg. Co. v. Employers Liability Ins. Corp., 91 Cal.App.2d 129, 204 P.2d 647—a decision of this court. It does not apply to the issues here involved. Pacific Indemnity first issued a public liability policy to Air Transport with a limit of $25,000 for injury to one person. The policy carried an apportionment clause similar to those in the policies of respondents at bar. Later Employers issued to American U-Drive Truck Rentals Company a public liability policy with a limit of $25,000 with an omnibus clause extending coverage to any person operating a vehicle with U-Drive's consent. Also, it contained a type of excess clause to the effect that if other valid insurance of the same type protected the insured, Employers' policy was to be null and void, except that if the limit of Employers' policy exceeded such other policy Employers should be liable for only such excess. Air Transport rented a car from U-Drive and an accident occurred during its use. The court determined the liability of each company as of the time of the accident, holding that because of its apportionment clause the Pacific policy did not constitute such unconditional insurance as would render void the policy of Employers and that by reason of the latter's policy, that of Pacific afforded only pro-rata insurance. There the court decided but one question: was Employers' policy rendered void because of the existence of other valid insurance? Or to be more specific, was the policy issued prior to that of Employers' valid insurance within the meaning of the

3. This figure is derived from the fact that on the day of the loss the total inventory amounted to $103,682. Respondents contend that the value of the Fulton policy is equal to this sum.

"other insurance" clause of the defendant's policy? The court held that the term, "valid insurance," contemplated insurance which provides unconditional coverage and that since the Pacific policy afforded only pro-rata coverage it did not meet the requirement. The "excess" portion of the clause was not involved. This is readily understood by supposing there had been no excess provision whatever in defendant's policy. The court would still have determined that Employers' policy was not void and would have apportioned the liability on the basis of the apportionment clause in Pacific's policy and reached the same result, to wit, Employers was liable for one half of the loss up to $12,500. Still another distinguishing feature of the Air Transport decision is to be found in the fact that the Fulton policy conditioned that its insurance should not attach if there was other insurance, valid or invalid, on the property. Had the policy of Employers' Liability Insurance Corporation contained the same language this court could not have held otherwise than that the Employers' policy was void.

[8] Respondents attempt to dilute the force of paragraph 7 of the Fulton policy. They cannot do so for the reason that its provisions give it a character that determines the issues of the controversy. They admit that paragraph 7 provides that the insurance of Fulton does not attach until the liability of "specific insurance" has been exhausted; that it expressly covers a loss which exceeds the amount due from specific insurance; that it does not say that its insurance does not attach until the face value or the amount of the specific insurance is exhausted. They thereby contend that the purport of the excess clause was to afford insurance for all loss exceeding that proportion of the loss for which respondents were liable after including the amount of Fulton's policy in the apportionment; that Fulton anticipated that the liability of any specific insurance might be reduced below its face amount by such contribution, coinsurance or other similar clause contained in the specific policy. In advancing such argument respondents rely on the distinction between "amount of insurance" and "amount of liability," the former being the face value of a policy whereas the "amount of liability" is a variable factor, dependent upon the extent of the loss and the apportionment clause. "The amount of the insurance is the maximum amount of the risk assumed, the face of the policy; the amount of the loss is the adjusted damage by fire to the property covered by the policy; the amount of the liability as to any particular loss is the amount of the adjusted damages properly apportionable to the policy." Stephenson v. Agricultural Insurance Co., 116 Wis. 277, 93 N.W. 19, 21; see also Farmers Feed Co. of New Jersey v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co., 173 N.Y. 241, 65 N.E. 1105, 1107. This distinction is proper, but the cases relied upon were concerned only with apportionment problems and in neither was there a contention by any insurer that its policy was excess over another. In a situation such as the one at bar where one policy is excess, this liability of the specific policies is to be determined independently of the surplus insurance. This is clear from the language of paragraph 7 itself which specifically provides that the policy "does not * * * become insurance * * * until the liability of such specific insurance has been exhausted." It is also true that Fulton's policy anticipated a reduction of the liability of any specific policies below their face values through contribution, coinsurance or like clauses, but this provision was inserted for the benefit of the insured and not for the protection of other insurers. Such clauses are distinct from apportionment provisions. The former operate to reduce the amount the insured could recover and would function regardless of whether or not there was a provisional policy in the picture.

The implication and intendment of the judgment of the court below if held valid would foreshadow grave perils for full insurance coverage in California. If it were correct, it would render difficult and grossly expensive full protection against loss by fire. Where a merchant has a number of establishments with a fluctuating inventory in each of them with all protected by one or more specific policies he must have the benefit of a flexible coverage to be certain of the continuity as well as the growth of his business. If he had only a $20,000 specific policy on his stock in store and a fire should destroy it while housing a $100,000 stock, the loss might prove to be tragic. To maintain specific insurance for the latter sum would be exceedingly costly. If a provisional reporting or "excess" clause policy may be carried, allowing the merchant to pay a premium on his average monthly stock he may thereby be protected fully at all times. But he cannot without great expense do so if he may not contract to report monthly the value of his merchandise on hand and pay a premium in accordance therewith. Where attempts have been made to defeat the purpose of the provisional reporting and flexible premium scheme the courts have emphatically rejected them. Peters v. Great American Insurance Co., 5 Cir., 177 F.2d 773.

Respondents have attempted to distinguish a number of authorities cited in support of the proposition that surplus insurance attaches only after the full coverage of specific policies has been exhausted. They contend that the language of the excess clause referred to in the cited decisons is utterly different from that in the Fulton policy. But a momentary perusal of the cases demonstrates that they are peculiarly apropos. Their excess clauses are substantially identical with that in the Fulton policy. In United Underwriters Insurance Company v. Powell, 94 Ga. 359, 21 S.E. 565, 566, the provision in a policy other than the specific insurance was "this policy shall not apply to or cover any cotton which may at the time of loss be covered, in whole or in part by * * * any more specific insurance." In response to the specific insurer for a contribution the court ruled that under the quoted clause it was not entitled thereto. The excess clauses in the Fairchild and Klotz cases, supra, provided that the excess policies should not cover property covered by specific insurance. In Hale v. Central Manufacturers Mutual Insurance Company, Mo. App., 93 S.W.2d 271, and Cutting v. Atlas, 199 Mass. 380, 85 N.E. 174, the excess insurance policy provided that it should not apply until all specific insurance is exhausted. Respondents erroneously conclude that they applied the formula used in Federal I. Credit Bank v. Globe and Rutgers, D. C., 7 F.Supp. 56, 59, in computing their proportions of the liability to appellants. The monthly reporting policy in the Federal case did not provide that it shall be "excess" over "specific" insurance. On the contrary the court held the effect of the clause was that in event of loss all insurance "both specific and monthly reporting, contribute to the loss in proportion to the amounts insured by the respective policies; the amount of contributing insurance covered by the specific policies being the amounts specified therein; and the amount of the reporting policies as contributing insurance being the excess of value at risk after deducting the specified amount in the specific policies." The reporting policies in that case did not provide for "excess loss insurance but was excess contributing insurance," and would contribute with the specific policies whereas the Fulton policy provides that it will pay the excess over the liability of specific insurance.

Respondents likewise misinterpret Wilson Co. v. Hartford Fire Insurance Company, supra. Despite their efforts to distinguish the decision by contending that "there was no excess of value at risk, and therefore the Globe Rutgers was not liable for any proportion of the loss," it is clear that the Hartford policies had no amount of insurance stated but that they named a limit to be paid on any one hog or steer. The court did not suggest that the amount of insurance in relation to the value of the entire property was to be considered. The excess policy contained a paragraph to the effect that it is surplus insurance "where any specific insurance exists on any of the property hereby insured, and this insurance shall not apply or contribute until the amount collected from all specific insurance shall have been exhausted." The court held that the defendant was obliged to pay the extent of its full liability. Since the loss was only $68,000, it was fully protected by the specific policy and consequently the excess insurers escaped liability.

From a review of the authorities, considering the clear and explicit meaning of Fulton's excess clause, the effect of the judgment of the trial court is exactly what it should be if the author of that clause had concluded with a provision for Fulton to apportion any loss with the specific insurers: the antithesis of the intention of the excess clause as written.

The judgment is reversed with instructions to enter judgment as prayed. Appeal from order denying appellants' motion for a new trial is dismissed.

McCOMB and WILSON, JJ., concur.

98 Cal.App.2d 805

PEOPLE v. ROSS et al.

Cr. 4447.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 8, 1950.

Hearing Denied Sept. 7, 1950.

William Winston Ross, alias Billy Ross, Letha Ahause, and Betty Ann Schrader, etc., were convicted in the Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County, Ray B. Lyon, J., of burglary and conspiracy to commit burglary, and from the judgment and an order denying a motion for a new trial, the defendants William Winston Ross and Letha Ahause appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that the evidence supported the convictions.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Criminal law 633(2)

Statutory proceedings for reading information to the jury are not mandatory. Pen.Code, § 1093.

2. Criminal law ⇐1166½(10)

Where information jointly charged three defendants with burguary and conspiracy to commit burglary, and one defendant pleaded guilty to both counts, and court permitted information to be read to the jury and allowed jury to be informed of pleas of the respective defendants, but cautioned that pleas were not to be taken as any evidence of guilt of other defendants as to any particular count, fact that court did not direct clerk not to mention the guilty plea of one defendant did not deprive remaining defendants of a substantial right. Pen.Code, § 1093.

3. Criminal law ⇐369(2)

Generally, in criminal case, evidence is admissible that tends naturally, logically, and by reasonable inference to establish any fact material for the prosecution or to overcome any material matter to be proved by the defense whether it embraces commission of another crime, and whether the other be similar in kind or part of a single design.

4. Criminal law ⇐372(10)

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit burglary of a filling station, evidence that defendant had been caught in attempted burglary of another filling station while using same tactics subsequent in time to offense for which defendant was being tried was admissible.

5. Burglary ⇐41(1)

Evidence supported convictions of burglary.

6. Conspiracy ⇐47

Evidence supported convictions of conspiracy to commit burglary.

Richard P. Harris, San Luis Obispo, for appellants.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Donald D. Stoker, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

On a peaceful Sunday afternoon in the quiet little city of Paso Robles the complaining witness was sitting in a chair near the cash register at his gas filling station. He was reading a Sunday paper. A colored lady came to the door, told him she could not start her car, and asked him to help her.

He went with her to the stalled car, which was parked behind the filling station, next to a grease rack. A white girl was in the rear seat. The car was so placed as to keep him away from the front of the filling station, and out of sight of the cash register.

After several minutes trying to start the engine, customers came to the front of the filling station; so he left to take care of them. Two paid for gas by signing credit slips. The next customer tendered him a $5 bill. When he went to the cash register to make change he found it had been robbed of $152.00.

The police were called. They took the white girl into custody as she was walking down a street not far from the filling station. They took into custody the colored lady, and a colored gentleman, as they were standing at a street corner.

While he was being searched at the police station, the man said to the officers: "I might as well tell you, I robbed the till." He also told the officers that the girls had nothing to do with taking the money. And in substance he repeated this statement to the district attorney.

Information was filed in the Superior Court, charging all three defendants with burglary, first count, and, in the second count, with conspiracy to commit burglary.

The white girl pleaded guilty to both counts. Judgment was suspended, and she was granted probation for five years, the first three months to be spent in the county jail.

Defendant Ross was admitted to bail. While on bail he was convicted of a felony in Los Angeles county, and sent to the penitentiary.

In this case, he pleaded guilty to the first count, not guilty to the second count, was convicted by a jury of the second count, waived time for judgment, and was sent to the penitentiary.

Defendant Ahause pleaded not guilty to both counts, was convicted on both, and sent to Tehachapi. She had a prior felony conviction.

Sentences as to both on both counts were fixed to run concurrently.

These three people left Los Angeles together the evening before the burglary, to go to San Francisco. They were driving an old 1936 jalopy, which easily heated up and was subject to vapor lock. They stopped overnight at Santa Maria, and had breakfast in San Luis Obispo.

Before reaching Paso Robles the car began to act up. Defendant Ross took the wheel from defendant Ahause and drove to the position where the complaining witness tried to start it. He said he first went across the street, and coming back, on the spur of the moment, "hit the till."

Assuming the burglary was planned by all three of these people, everything went wrong. The car really would not start. Undoubtedly this accounted for the swiftness with which they were apprehended. Water had leaked through the cylinder-head gasket and into the spark plugs.

A passing car undertook to push, and got hung up on the bumpers. Bystanders disengaged the bumpers, and part of the bumper on the jalopy came off. Defendant Ahause told them to tear the rest of the bumper off; that she had to get to San Luis Obispo right away to see her sick mother. Other kindly bystanders tried to help in various ways. One poured gasoline into the carburetor, but still the car would not go.

Defendant Ahause was visibly upset and disturbed; she told several witnesses she had to get to San Luis Obispo right away to see her sick mother. In truth she had no mother in San Luis Obispo, and she wasn't going that way anyway.

She testified that her car had not been parked behind the filling station, but was at the curb on the street—directly in conflict with the testimony of the complaining witness. She and defendant Ross pretended they did not know each other.

On the trial each of these two defendants testified that defendant Ahause had no idea that a burglary was to be committed by defendant Ross. Nonetheless, as stated, the jury convicted them.

Three assertions of error are presented:

First, it was error for the court, upon the voir dire examination of jurors, to comment upon the fact that the defendant, Betty Ann Schrader, had entered a plea of guilty.

Secondly, it was error for the clerk to read to the jury the information filed against the three defendants, and then to state that the defendant, Betty Ann Schrader, had pleaded guilty.

Thirdly, it was error to admit in evidence the fact that the defendant, Ross, after the offense here tried, had been caught in an attempted burglary of a filling station, using the same scheme: A car drives up and asks for help; while the filling station attendant is busy at the car, the defendant rifles the till.

And defendants argue that the evidence is insufficient as a matter of law to support their convictions.

Relative to the plea of guilty by the defendant, Schrader, the record shows the following colloquy between court and counsel during the examination of a prospective juror:

(By Mr. Harris, counsel for defendants): "Q. In other words, the fact that Ross has already entered a plea on Count 1 might prejudice you against any testimony that he might give in connection with any other matters submitted here? A. I believe that's true, Mr. Harris."

(By Mr. Somogyi, assistant district attorney): "Q. And you feel that that factor would make it difficult for you to act fairly and impartially? A. Yes, sir.

"Mr. Harris: Thank you very much, Mr. Patterson.

"The Court: Well, I think we ought to have some more discussion about this matter. There may be some confusion in the juror's mind. After all, we want to get a jury here today, and I want to be sure that there is a prejudice.

"Q. You understand that this one defendant has pleaded guilty to one count in the information. That is closed; he has pleaded guilty to it. Then there is a charge of a conspiracy in the second count which he has—he is being tried upon.

"Mr. Somogyi: With two other defendants.

"Mr. Harris: One other defendant.

"The Court: One of the other defendants has pleaded guilty to both counts, and will not be tried.

"Mr. Harris: Well, now, if your honor please, I object to that on the ground that it is a prejudicial statement by the Court, and ask the Court to instruct the jury to disregard it.

"The Court: I am going to have the information read.

"Mr. Harris: I can't help that. I still make the request of the Court that you instruct the jury to disregard that. I believe that is a matter that is not properly before this jury.

"The Court: Just for the record, I deny it.

"Mr. Harris: We ask at this time, your honor, that a mistrial be declared.

"The Court: That will be denied * * *."

During the reading of the information, and before the pleas were stated, the Court made the following statement to the jury:

"The Court: Well, I will do this: The information, of course, as I have stated to the jury before, is not to be taken as evidence of the guilt of any defendant, and in this information three defendants have been charged jointly, and the plea of any one or more of the defendants to any one or more of the counts is not to be taken as evidence of the guilt of the remaining defendants to one or more of the counts. The clerk will proceed with the giving of the pleas of the respective defendants to the charges of the information, and again I want to caution the jury that the pleas of the respective defendants are not to be taken as any evidence of the guilt of the other defendants as to any particular count."

[1, 2] The information was read as directed by Section 1093 of the Penal Code. Proceedings set forth in that section are not mandatory. People v. Willard, 150 Cal. 543, 89 P. 124. The trial court quite properly could have directed the clerk not to mention the plea of the defendant, Schrader. However, under the circumstances in this case, this court is not able to say that the defendants were deprived of a substantial right. People v. Reese, 136 Cal.App. 657, 29 P.2d 450.

Was it error to admit in evidence the fact that the defendant, Ross, had been caught in an attempted burglary of a filling station, using the same tactics, but subsequent in time to the offense for which he was being tried?

However the profession may differ as to the admissibility of evidence of other crimes, it would seem that the question has been set at rest in California in the landmark case of People v. Peete, 28 Cal.2d 306, 169 P.2d 924.

[3] In that case it is said: "* * * evidence that is relevant is not excluded because it reveals the commission of an offense other than that charged. 'The general tests of the admissibility of evidence in a criminal case are: * * * does it tend logically, naturally, and by reasonable inference to establish any fact material for the people, or to overcome any material matter sought to be proved by the defense? If it does, then it is admissible, whether it embraces the commission of another crime or does not, whether the other crime be similar in kind or not, whether it be part of a single design or not.' * * * 'But, whenever the case is such that proof of one crime tends to prove any fact material in the trial of another, such proof is admissible, and the fact that it may tend to prejudice the defendant in the minds of the jurors is no ground for its exclusion.'" 28 Cal.2d at page 315, 169 P.2d at page 929.

[4] In prosecutions for burglary, testimony showing a plan, scheme, or system used by defendants is properly admissible in evidence. People v. King, 4 Cal.App.2d 727, 41 P.2d 593.

Finally, with respect to defendants' argument that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict:

[5, 6] The facts have already been recounted. It was the province of the jury to find in accordance with the theory of the people—first, that there was a burglary committed by all three defendants; and secondly, that they conspired to commit the crime.

The two defendants who stood trial went to the filling station together; by a ruse the complaining witness was called away from the station and the cash register; defendant Ross actually took the money; the actions and conduct of defendant Ahause pointed to her guilt and to her complicity in the crime.

The judgment and the order denying defendants' motion for a new trial are, and each is affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 296

PEOPLE v. CUNNINGHAM.

Cr. 4471.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 31, 1950.

Shirley Cunningham was convicted in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Clement D. Nye, J., for grand theft from the person, and she appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that the evidence warranted the trial judge's conclusion that the crime was committed within the statutory limitation period of three years before filing of the information.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal law ⇐335

In prosecution for grand theft from the person, defendant's plea of not guilty put in issue allegation of information that offense was committed on or about certain date within statutory limitation period of three years before filing of information, and burden rested on the people to show that offense occurred within such period, though they were not required to prove commission thereof on exact date alleged. Pen.Code, § 800.

2. Criminal law ⇐304(1)

Courts may draw inferences predicated on judicial notice of calendar dates of week on which certain days fall and related astronomical dates as contained in scientific works. Code Civ.Proc. § 1875, subd. 8.

3. Criminal law ⇐304(4)

The meanings of English words and phrases and of idioms of vernacular language are proper subjects of judicial notice.

4. Criminal law ⇐323

In determining whether evidence showed that grand theft from person was committed within statutory limitation period of three years before filing of information charging such offense, trial court was justified in concluding that complaining witness, stating in answer to question as to age of her daughter, who was with witness at time of theft, that "she is six," meant that child was six years old. Code Civ.Proc. § 1875, subd. 1; Pen.Code, § 800.

5. Criminal law ⇐565

In prosecution for grand theft from the person, evidence warranted trial judge's conclusion that crime was committed in year during which information was filed and hence within statutory three-year limitation period before filing of information. Pen.Code, § 800.

6. Larceny ⇐65

Evidence supported conviction of grand theft from the person.

7. Criminal law ⇐316

Where defendant made no attempt, by her own testimony or otherwise, to contradict, explain or deny any of incriminating evidence and circumstances shown against her, trial judge was entitled to consider such circumstances in determining defendant's guilt of crime charged. Const. art. 1, § 13.

Walter L. Gordon, Jr., Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Stanford D. Herlick, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

In an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County, defendant was charged with the crime of grand theft from the person, alleged to have been committed on or about the 23d day of September, 1949.

Trial by jury was duly waived and the cause was submitted to the court on the transcript of the proceedings had at the preliminary examination.

The court adjudged the defendant guilty as charged in the information. Motion for a new trial was denied. From the judgment of conviction defendant prosecutes this appeal.

Epitomizing the facts which gave rise to this prosecution, the record reflects that the complaining witness, a housewife, saw the defendant at a department store in the city of Los Angeles. It was about 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Complaining witness had her purse along with her and inside the purse was a coin purse containing $24 (two $10 bills and four $1 bills). While in the store the larger purse was closed. She did not open her purse while she was in the store. Defendant and another woman bumped into the complaining witness, the defendant being next to the latter. They were side by side for about five minutes when defendant left. When the complaining witness was about to pay a saleslady for a purchase she found that her purse was open and the coin purse had been abstracted therefrom. She instituted a search for the defendant and finally found her in an adjacent department store. Following the defendant out of the store the complaining witness approached her and asked if defendant had been in Grant's store with her, telling her also that the witness' coin purse was missing. The complainant asked defendant if she had it and the latter answered that she did not, at the same time exhibiting her own purse. At that point the complaining witness saw her purse beneath the blouse of the defendant; it was partly caught in defendant's brassiere and partly showing. The complainant directed the attention of the defendant to the purse and the latter denied that it belonged to the former. Complaining witness retrieved it. Thereupon police officers arrived and the defendant said to the complaining witness,

"What do you want now that you have your purse?" When she obtained her purse from the defendant, complaining witness noticed that there was $80 in it. When the defendant took the purse out of her blouse a $10 bill dropped to the sidewalk. She was arrested at that time.

The complaining witness was at the store with her "little girl". The purse was hanging on the complaining witness' arm. Defendant was a total stranger to the complainant.

A police officer testified that he had a conversation with the defendant regarding the accusation made against her. The conversation took place at the Lincoln Heights Jail on September 26th at 11 a. m. Defendant told the officer that she offered the complaining witness her purse and money back but that the complaining witness was not satisfied. Defendant admitted that she had been a professional pickpocket all her life. When asked how the complaining witness' purse got in her brassiere, defendant answered, "I'm not going to cop out to you about that." Defendant did not take the witness stand in her own behalf nor was any testimony offered in her defense.

[1] Appellant's sole contention is that the evidence is insufficient to show that the offense was committed within three years prior to the filing of the information, which is the statutory period of limitations for prosecutions for this offense. Penal Code, section 800. The provisions of the code section just cited require that the information must be filed within three years after the alleged commission of the offense. In the instant case the information was filed within three years of the date when the crime was alleged to have been committed for it is therein alleged that the offense was committed on or about September 23, 1949, and the information was filed on October 14, 1949. However, it must be conceded that appellant's plea of not guilty put in issue this allegation of the information, and while the people were not required to prove the date as alleged with exactness, the burden rested upon them to show that the offense took place within the period of limitation. People v. James, 59 Cal.App.2d 121, 122, 138 P.2d 30.

In the case now engaging our attention the only specific dates shown in the testimony are "Friday, September 23", testified to by the complaining witness on direct examination, and "September 26th", supplied by a police officer who interrogated appellant following her arrest.

The year of the offense not being shown in the testimony would appear to bring this case within the principles announced in People v. James, supra. However, a critical examination of the record reveals that on cross-examination of the complainant the following occurred:

"By Mr. Bernay:

"Q. On this day in question, you were in Grant's Department Store? A. This lady here?

"Q. You were in Grant's Department Store? A. Yes, I was there.

"Q. What time was it? A. About 2:00 o'clock.

"Q. Were you there alone or were you with someone? A. I was with my little girl.

"Q. How old is she? A. She is six.

"Q. You were shopping in Grant's Department Store? A. Yes, sir. I was going to.

"Q. When and where did you first see the defendant? A. There at Grant's." (Emphasis added.)

The plea of not guilty put the specific date, September 23, 1949 in issue. The complaining witness testified that the offense occurred "on this day in question". The only "day in question" was the day "in issue". The term "in issue" is synonymous with the term "in question". In Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, Second Edition, 1942, at page 1319, the following definition is given:

"—at or in issue. In controversy, at variance; disputed; in question." (Emphasis added.)

Appellant did not challenge the correctness of the date put "in issue" by the information.

[2] There is another circumstance in evidence which gives reasonable support to an inference that the offense was proven to have been committed on Friday, September 23, 1949. The preliminary examination was held on Friday, September 30, 1949. At the time of said preliminary hearing the age of the daughter of the prosecutrix was, according to the latter's testimony, "six". Since her daughter accompanied the complainant to Grant's store on the day of the alleged theft it follows that the offense occurred at least within six years and two weeks prior to October 14, 1949, the date of the filing of the information. Courts may draw inferences predicated on judicial notice taken of calendar dates of the week on which days fall and related astronomical dates as contained in scientific works. Code Civ.Proc. § 1875, subd. 8; People v. Malone, 213 Cal. 406, 407, 2 P.2d 332; People v. Mayes, 113 Cal. 618, 624–627, 45 P. 860; People v. Chee Kee, 61 Cal. 404; In re Whitlatch, 60 Cal.App.2d 189, 193, 140 P.2d 457; Hiner v. Olson, 23 Cal.App.2d 227, 235, 72 P.2d 890, 73 P.2d 945.

An examination of the calendar for the year 1949 shows that September 23d was a Friday. There was no Friday, September 23d, in any year within six years and two weeks prior to October 14, 1949, the date when the information was filed. In fact, the last preceding year in which September 23d fell on a Friday was the year 1938. The following chart indicates the day of the week on which September 23d fell for the years 1938 through 1949:

Date	Day of Week
September 23, 1938	Friday	*p. 17
September 23, 1939	Saturday	p. 11
September 23, 1940	Monday	p. 21
September 23, 1941	Tuesday	p. 14
September 23, 1942	Wednesday	p. 15
September 23, 1943	Thursday	p. 16
September 23, 1944	Saturday	p. 26
September 23, 1945	Sunday	p. 12
September 23, 1946	Monday	p. 13
September 23, 1947	Tuesday	p. 14
September 23, 1948	Thursday	p. 24
September 23, 1949	Friday	p. 17

The preliminary hearing was held on Friday, September 30, 1949, so that the record itself reveals that September 23, 1949, also fell on a Friday.

The only reasonable conclusion possible in this case is that the date of the offense was established as September 23, 1949.

The daughter of the prosecutrix who was with her on the date and at the time of the alleged offense being six years of age on September 30, 1949 when the preliminary examination was held, could not have been with the mother on a "Friday, September 23" other than in the year 1949, because during the lifetime of the six-year-old daughter, September 23 came on a Friday only in the year 1949.

[3, 4] Furthermore the meaning of the statement "six" was for the trier of fact. The meaning of English words and phrases and of idioms of the vernacular language are proper subjects of judicial notice, and the court was entitled to infer that when one states the age of a person without naming the time unit involved, that such designation refers to the number of years of age, that if any other designation of time is intended it is usually stated with particularity, such as "six weeks" or "six months". The court was justified in concluding that when the complaining witness in answer to the question concerning her daughter's age "How old is she?" replied, "She is six" that the witness clearly meant that her child was six years of age. Code Civ.Proc. § 1875, subd. 1; Clarke v. Fitch, 41 Cal. 472, 477; Estate of Winzeler, 42 Cal.App.2d 246, 249, 108 P.2d 720; People v. Thompson, 119 Cal.App. 310, 311, 312, 6 P.2d 301. The same conclusion is inescapable even though, as appellant urges, the complaining witness in testifying to the age of her daughter as "six" may have meant "six weeks", or "six months". In either event, the child could have been with her mother on a September 23d only in the year 1949.

* The page numbers are references to the applicable pages in The Perfect Calendar by Henry Fitch, Rev.Ed., 1930, Funk and Wagnalls Co., New York and London. The above dates may also be verified by reference to the chart found in The World Almanac and Book of Facts, New York World-Telegram, N. Y., N. Y., 1950, at page 811.

[5] The question presented is whether under all the circumstances of the case, there was sufficient evidence to warrant the trial judge in concluding that the crime was committed in the year 1949, and we think it was sufficient. Proof of the appellant's guilt was overwhelming, in fact it was demonstrated by testimony, including her own admissions. The testimony and inferences to be drawn therefrom, coupled with facts which the court was entitled to take judicial notice of, was enough to satisfy the trier of fact that the date of the offense was that charged in the information. Considering all the evidence and circumstances of the case, there could hardly be any reasonable doubt that the offense was committed on or about September 23, 1949. People v. McGregar, 88 Cal. 140, 143, 145, 26 P. 97; In re Application of O'Connor, 80 Cal.App. 647, 653, 252 P. 730; People v. Bastio, 55 Cal.App. 2d 615, 617, 131 P.2d 614; People v. Vicencio, 71 Cal.App.2d 361, 363, 364, 162 P.2d 650.

[6, 7] Finally, it should be said that the foregoing authorized inferences which support the judgment of conviction, while sufficient in themselves, People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778, are strengthened by the fact that the appellant made no attempt by her own testimony or otherwise, to contradict, explain or deny any of the incriminating evidence and circumstances shown against her. Therefore, as provided by our State Constitution, Article I, section 13, the trial judge was entitled to consider these circumstances in determining appellant's guilt. People v. Adamson, 27 Cal.2d 478, 486, 491, 165 P.2d 3; People v. Platnick, 71 Cal.App.2d 767, 771, 163 P.2d 766. What we have herein stated in no way militates against the holding in People v. James, supra. The facts and circumstances surrounding that case are easily distinguishable from the factual situation presented in the case at bar.

The judgment is affirmed.

DORAN and DRAPEAU, JJ., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 238

PEOPLE v. WALKER.

Cr. 737.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 28, 1950.

William Robert Walker was convicted in the Superior Court, San Diego County, John A. Hewicker, J., of assault with a deadly weapon, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that the evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction and that failure of court to instruct jury on certain elements of self-defense and circumstantial evidence was not prejudicial to defendant.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Assault and battery ⇦92

Evidence sustained conviction for an assault with a deadly weapon. Pen.Code, § 245.

2. Assault and battery ⇦92

In prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon, evidence that defendant had drawn small pocket knife and used it to cut victim three times in stomach and chest sustained conclusion by jury that pocket knife was "deadly weapon". Pen.Code, § 245.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Deadly Weapon".

3. Assault and battery ⇦56

Specific intent is not an element of the crime of assault with deadly weapon, and where evidence is sufficient to establish character of instrument as charged it is not necessary for prosecution to prove specifically that defendant intended to injure complaining witness, as such intent may then be implied from doing of an unlawful act. Pen.Code, §§ 20, 245.

4. Assault and battery ⇐92

In prosecution for assault with deadly weapon, evidence that defendant had fled scene after stabbing victim, and had made inconsistent statements to interrogating officer, established consciousness of guilt. Pen.Code, §§ 20, 245.

5. Criminal law ⇐351(2)

In prosecution for assault with deadly weapon, statement by defendant to naval intelligence officer that he had warned victim to stay away from him and that victim struck him in face, after which he drew a knife and cut victim, were inconsistent with his statements on witness stand that victim had surprised him by an attack, after which he had cut victim, and were indicative of his consciousness of guilt. Pen.Code, §§ 20, 245.

6. Criminal law ⇐351(1)

False statements for purpose of misleading or warding off suspicion are indicative of a consciousness of guilt.

7. Criminal law ⇐1160

In prosecution for assault with deadly weapon, whether defendant struck at and injured victim in reasonable self-defense was question to be passed on by jury and judge on a motion for new trial, and appellate court would not review finding adverse to defendant. Pen.Code, § 245.

8. Criminal law ⇐823(6)

In prosecution for assault with deadly weapon, an instruction that right of self-defense existed only as against an unlawful attack was not objectionable on ground that it left question of whether victim was acting lawfully for jury to decide without guiding instruction, in view of fact that jury was completely instructed on right of self-defense. Pen.Code, §§ 245, 692, 693.

9. Criminal law ⇐829(5)

Refusal by court to give jury defendant's proffered instruction on self-defense was not prejudicial where jury was fully and fairly instructed.

10. Criminal law ⇐814(17)

In prosecution for assault with deadly weapon, refusal to instruct jury on elements of circumstantial evidence was not prejudicial to defendant, where state's case rested chiefly on direct evidence. Pen. Code, §§ 245, 692, 693.

John C. Thompson, San Diego, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Donald D. Stoker, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

It is charged in the information that defendant assaulted one Wilton Roy Young with a deadly weapon. He pleaded not guilty. A trial by jury resulted in a verdict of guilty.

On appeal it is contended that the verdict is contrary to the law and evidence and that the court erroneously instructed the jury. Young and a girl whose name he did not know were sitting at a bar. Defendant, a sailor in the United States Navy, entered the bar and seated himself next to the girl. Defendant bought the girl a drink of beer. She did not drink it but removed herself to a stool on the other side of Young. All parties had several drinks of beer. Apparently the girl was talking loudly and it seemed to interfere with defendant's conversation. About that time defendant reached across and slapped the girl in the face with his hand. Young got down from his stool and grabbed defendant on the left shoulder, telling him to "lay off her", to "watch it". Young testified that he made no gesture to hit defendant with his hand and that he did not see a knife nor did he see defendant put his hand in his pocket, but after a struggle he felt his stomach burning; it was cut; that he turned around, went to the front door "holding his insides in"; and that he was subsequently taken to the hospital.

A physician testified that he examined the victim and found that he had several stab wounds, one in the left chest, one in the abdomen, and one on the right hand; that surgery was performed and consisted of an exploratory examination of his abdomen to determine if there was any injury of the intra-abdominal organs. He found no internal injuries. However, three loops of intestines, which were protruding about four inches from the abdominal wound, were replaced. The lacerations of the chest and hand were closed and approximately 100 multiple sutures were taken in the three wounds. The knife blade did not hit any of the intestines. The wound in the chest had gone no farther than the ribs. Young's recovery was rather rapid and uncomplicated.

One witness testified that she did not see the knife just before the victim staggered backwards, but earlier in the evening she saw the defendant in the possession of a pocket knife three or four inches long, with a blade of about the same length and that the defendant had it on the bar; that part of the time it had been open and part of the time it had been closed.

In his haste to make his escape the defendant left his hat and neckerchief and returned to his ship. Two days later he was apprehended and questioned by a Naval Intelligence officer. Defendant stated to him that he was sitting at the bar talking to a sailor and that during the conversation some girl sitting in the vicinity kept interrupting his conversation; that he told her to keep quiet on several occasions but that she refused to do so; that he finally "told her to shut up" and shortly thereafter Young took offense and approached him; that he told Young to stay away and that instead Young struck him in the face and that he backed in the direction of the wall; that defendant again warned him to stay away and that he then drew a knife and cut Young, but did not recall how many times; that he left the bar-room, threw the knife away, and returned to the ship.

On the witness stand the defendant testified that he was seated at the bar talking to another sailor; that they had been drinking beer; that a girl started to sit on defendant's right, placing her hand on his shoulder and that he ordered her a beer but she did not drink it and did not sit there; that she left and sat down on the other side of another sailor and kept interrupting the conversation between defendant and that sailor; that he might have slapped her but did not remember it; that Young came around from the rear, took hold of his shoulder and jerked him around; that he did not know what was happening and did not know the victim had left his stool; that the knife was lying on the bar and that he struck at Young but did not remember hitting him with his fist, but "only with a knife" and that "the only strike must have cut him". He then testified that he was "scared" and went back to the ship; that he did not think he would have struck the victim if he had not come up from behind and grabbed him and jerked him around.

On cross-examination he testified, without objection, that he had formerly been convicted of a felony involving the use of a knife but that the offense was later shown to be a misdemeanor. He then stated that the knife used was a small pocket knife, small enough to place in the pocket of "Navy Blues"; that he did not remember cutting Young three times but he must have used an underhand motion. He then testified that the knife was lying open in front of him because he was trimming or cleaning his fingernails and that he purchased the knife the day before from a shipmate on the ship.

[1, 2] The first challenge as to the sufficiency of the evidence is defendant's contention that it shows his actions were "reflexive only", and that self-defense was established as a matter of law. These contentions are without merit. The evidence and the law as applied to the evidence sufficiently established defendant's guilt of the crime with which he was charged. Sec. 245, Penal Code. The evidence as to the manner of the use of the knife and the injury inflicted thereby was such that the only rational conclusion the jury could have reached under the circumstances was that the knife was a deadly weapon. People v. Petters, 29 Cal.App.2d 48, 52, 84 P.2d 54; 3 Cal.Jur., p. 205, sec. 21; People v. McCoy, 25 Cal.2d 177, 188, 153 P.2d 315; People v. Arguilida, 85 Cal.App.2d 623, 193 P.2d 478.

The claim that the defendant did not make an unlawful attempt, with a criminal intent, to commit a violent injury upon the victim is untenable. There is no question that Young was seriously injured. Defendant's contention that the evidence only shows "that the response of the defendant was reflexive and not a premeditated or voluntary act as is required to constitute an act done with criminal intent" is equally untenable.

[3-6] Under Section 20 of the Penal Code, "In every crime or public offense there must exist a union, or joint operation of act and intent, or criminal negligence." Specific intent is not an element of the crime of assault with a deadly weapon and where the evidence is sufficient to establish the character of the instrument as charged it is not necessary for the prosecution to prove specifically that the defendant intended to injure the complaining witness. Such intent may then be implied from the doing of the unlawful act. People v. McCoy, supra; People v. Lim Dum Dong, 26 Cal.App.2d 135, 78 P.2d 1026; People v. Sanchez, 35 Cal.2d 522, 219 P.2d 9. The fact that defendant made three stabs, instead of just one as a person acting reflexively might do, might well negative defendant's contention. Defendant's consciousness of guilt is established by both flight and prior inconsistent statements. People v. Anderson, 90 Cal.App.2d 326, 333, 202 P.2d 1044. The evidence shows inconsistent statements in that defendant told the Intelligence Officer that he warned the victim to stay away from him; that the victim struck him in the face and that he again warned him and at that time he drew a knife and cut the victim. False statements for the purpose of misleading or warding off suspicion are indicative of a consciousness of guilt. People v. Anderson, supra; People v. Cole, 141 Cal. 88, 74 P. 547; People v. Cooper, 81 Cal.App.2d 110, 183 P.2d 67.

[7] The argument that the evidence established self-defense as a matter of law is without merit. Whether defendant struck at and injured the victim in reasonable self-defense was a question to be passed upon by the jury and by the judge on a motion for new trial. This adverse finding will not be reviewed on appeal. People v. Mitchell, 40 Cal.App.2d 204, 104 P.2d 545; People v. Alexander, 1 Cal.App. 2d 570, 37 P.2d 125.

As to the court's instructions, defendant charges error on the issue of self-defense. Defendant offered an instruction to the effect: "That a person assailed has the right to repel force with force; that he may imply the right to defend himself from apprehended danger to any extent which, to him is apparently necessary when he acts in a reasonable manner." And that even if the jury finds as a fact that the "complainant was not armed with any weapon at the time of the combat, nevertheless, that did not deprive the defendant of his right to defend himself with that degree of force which, to a reasonable man, might have appeared necessary under the appearances and circumstances there present." Defendant also charges error in refusing to give another proposed instruction in the language of CALJIC Inst. No. 327, p. 304, under "Homicide". As to this latter instruction defendant argues that he was prejudiced by the court's refusal to so instruct the jury because the jury was left to decide his fate without having been adequately instructed that the right of self-defense exists whether the danger of great bodily harm is real or apparent, and also that the jury was left without adequate instruction as to how to determine whether the defendant acted as a reasonable man or not. The court fully instructed the jury on the subject of self-defense and particularly stated that it was lawful for a person who was being assaulted and who had reasonable grounds for believing that bodily injury was about to be inflicted upon him to stand his ground and defend himself from such attack and in doing so he might use all force and means which he believed to be reasonably necessary, and which would appear to a reasonable person in the same or similar circumstances to be necessary to prevent the injury which appeared to be imminent, and that in exercising his right to lawful self-defense he was not required to retreat; that "If an assault with a fist is being made on a person but without intent to kill or do great bodily harm and if the assault is not likely to produce great bodily injury and if the one thus attacked is not deceived as to the character of such an assault, he is not justified in using a deadly weapon in self defense"; that the right of self defense exists only against an unlawful attack; that the right does not exist even though bodily injury appears probable as against a person who, in threatening or appearing to threaten injury, is acting lawfully.

[8] In this connection defendant contends that the court erred in giving this instruction, particularly in respect to the statement that "The right of self-defense exists only as against an unlawful attack. The right does not exist, even though bodily injury appears probable, as against a person who, in threatening or appearing to threaten injury, is acting lawfully." This instruction is found in CALJIC p. 500, No. 624, which cites People v. Craig, 152 Cal. 42, 91 P. 997, and secs. 692 and 693 of the Penal Code in support thereof. The claim is that although this instruction contains the correct abstract statement of the law, it was prejudicial to defendant herein because it left a question of whether the victim was acting lawfully for the jury to decide, and gave it no further instruction to guide it as to whether he was acting lawfully.

[9] No instructions were offered by the defendant on the question of the lawfulness of the victim's acts. The evidence shows that the victim did not make an unprovoked attack. Even if it could be assumed that he did, the jury was completely instructed on the defendant's right of self defense to an assault. Defendant cannot complain because no further instructions were given on this subject. Even if it could be assumed under the evidence that defendant was entitled to have the proffered instructions on self defense given, we have carefully examined all instructions, both given and refused, and conclude that the jury was fairly and fully instructed and that no prejudice resulted to the defendant. People v. Lopez, 32 Cal.2d 673, 197 P.2d 757; People v. Moody, 62 Cal.App.2d 18, 143 P.2d 978; People v. Wheeler, 75 Cal.App.2d 360, 367, 171 P.2d 62.

The last claim is that the court failed to instruct the jury on the subject of circumstantial evidence. Defendant's position is that at least two elements of the case rest upon circumstantial evidence: (1) That criminal intent must be established by circumstantial evidence; and (2) That the standard upon which a reasonable man would act must be proved by circumstances which surrounded the occurrence. Defendant proposed an instruction that the jury was not permitted, "on circumstantial evidence alone, to find the defendant guilty of the crime charged against him unless the proved circumstances not only are constant with the hypothesis that the defendant is guilty of crime, but are irreconcilable with any other national conclusions." This instruction was refused. In addition the court refused an instruction to the effect that "When the case which has been made out by the people against a defendant rests entirely or chiefly on circumstantial evidence, and in any case before the jury may find a defendant guilty basing its finding solely on such evidence, each fact which is essential to complete a chain of circumstances that will establish the defendant's guilt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt."

[10] Assuming that the italicized portion of the first instruction may have been but typographical errors, we nevertheless conclude that under the evidence here presented, a refusal to give such instruction was not prejudicial error. It is quite apparent that the case, as made out by the people, did not rest entirely or chiefly on circumstantial evidence, but rested chiefly on direct evidence. People v. Corlett, 67 Cal.App.2d 33, 48, 153 P.2d 595, 964; People v. Lapara, 181 Cal. 66, 70, 183 p. 545. The jury was fully instructed that the defendant was presumed to be innocent until proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt and that where the evidence "is susceptible of two constructions or two interpretations, each of which appears to you to be reasonable, and one of which points to the guilt of the defendant, and the other to his innocence, it is your duty under the law, to adopt that interpretation which will admit of the defendant's innocence, and reject that which points to his guilt." It was further instructed with respect to all the essential elements of the crime, including intent, and was instructed extensively and correctly on all issues, including that of self defense. We conclude that no prejudicial error resulted.

Judgment and order affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MUSSELL, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 137

BARDIN v. CASE et al. (two cases).
Civ. 17127, 17128.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 22, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 11, 1950.

Hearing Denied Oct. 19, 1950.

Actions by Robert S. Bardin and by Aline S. Bardin against F. W. Case and J. M. Loyd for injuries sustained by plaintiffs in a collision between an automobile driven by Robert Bardin and an automobile operated by defendant Loyd and registered in the name of defendant Case. The two actions were consolidated for trial. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Frank G. Swain, J., entered judgments for the plaintiffs against the respective defendants and the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that the record presented no substantial evidence to warrant an inference of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiffs and evidence established that the automobile which collided with plaintiffs' automobile was operated with the permission of defendant Case.

Judgments affirmed.

1. Negligence ⇐136(9)

Contributory negligence, like negligence, is a question of fact for jury, except where trial court can hold as a matter of law that only one inference can be rationally drawn from evidence.

2. Automobiles ⇐245(73, 79, 88, 89)

Where on-coming motorist swerved to his left across highway and collided with plaintiffs' automobile which had turned to right in effort to avoid collision, contention that plaintiff driver could have swerved to left, and evidence that he had previously suffered a broken back, had been treated for exophthalmic goitre and had an eye condition which required him to wear tinted glasses was not sufficient to require submission to jury of question whether plaintiff driver was contributorily negligent or his wife was contributorily negligent in not taking control of vehicle prior to accident or acting to aid in prevention of accident when she saw motorist approaching.

3. Evidence ⇐54

An inference of fact must be based on substantial evidence, not conjecture.

4. Trial ⇐139(1), 142

In order to justify submission of any question of fact to jury, proof must be sufficient to raise more than a mere conjecture or surmise that fact is as alleged and must be such that a rational, well-constructed mind can reasonably draw from it conclusion that fact exists, and when evidence is not sufficient to justify such inference, court should refuse to submit question to jury.

5. Automobiles ⇐206, 207

Where on-coming motorist shot across road directly into path of plaintiffs' automobile and plaintiff husband who was driving had a second at most in which to react, he was not required to anticipate negligence on part of motorist and could not be held guilty of contributory negligence because in a moment of imminent peril he failed to take course that careful consideration after fact showed that he ought to have taken.

6. Automobiles ⇐244(22)

Evidence established that at time of collision with plaintiffs' automobile any previous restrictions on defendant driver's use of automobile were no longer in effect after defendant driver and defendant owner made their deal whereby defendant driver was to buy the automobile and that at time of collision defendant driver was operating automobile with permission of the defendant owner. Vehicle Code, § 402.

7. Automobiles ⇐19

An agreement of sale coupled with transfer of possession, irrespective of compliance with provisions of Vehicle Code regulating motor transfer, operates as a consent and permission to buyer to use automobile in way in which such property is customarily used and for all reasonable purposes. Vehicle Code, § 402.

8. Appeal and error ⇐989
Trial ⇐178

In passing on propriety and legality of granting a motion for a directed verdict, neither appellate court nor trial court is authorized to weigh evidence or determine where preponderance lies and appellate court is limited solely to considering evidence for purpose of determining whether any substantial evidence appeared which would support a verdict contrary to that directed.

9. Trial ⇐139(1), 141

The trial court may direct a verdict where evidence is undisputed, or is of such conclusive character that court, in exercise of a sound judicial discretion, will be compelled to set aside a verdict returned in opposition to it.

10. Trial ⇐68(1)

The granting or denial of a motion to reopen the case to strike out testimony is committed to sound discretion of trial judge.

11. Trial ⇐69

Where after all evidence was in and trial court had announced its conclusion to instruct jury that at time of collision with plaintiffs' automobile defendant driver had permissive use of vehicle from defendant owner, owner moved to reopen case to enable him to strike out his alleged irresponsive self-serving conclusion given by him on direct examination by his own counsel on ground that owner's counsel had not heard him make statement that after agreement to sell was made with defendant driver, owner considered automobile to belong to defendant, denial of motion was not an abuse of discretion as to have granted motion would have amounted to striking concededly competent evidence of a party's admission.

12. Appeal and error ⇐1048(6), 1056(1)

In actions by husband and by wife for injuries sustained when their automobile collided with defendant driver's on-coming automobile which had swerved across the highway in front of them, exclusion of defendant owner's cross-examination of defendant driver, and independent evidence of motorist's verbal acts and admissions concerning his interest in owner's automobile when there was no offer to prove purchase was conditional or that it was coupled with restrictions on use of automobile by defendant driver, was not reversible error. Vehicle Code, § 402.

13. Appeal and error ⇐1056(1)

In actions by husband and by wife for injuries sustained when automobile operated by defendant driver crossed highway and collided with plaintiffs' automobile, exclusion of testimony that defendant driver told defendant owner's wife on eve of his departure that he intended to go by train, as bearing on probable restrictions on defendant driver's use of automobile, was not reversible error. Vehicle Code, § 402.

Forrest A. Betts, Betts, Ely & Loomis, all of Los Angeles, William C. Ring, Los Angeles, of counsel, for appellant F. W. Case.

Walter C. Harbert, Lasher B. Gallagher, Los Angeles, for appellant J. M. Loyd.

Thomas F. McGrath, Spray, Gould & Bowers, Los Angeles, for respondents.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

These appeals arise out of two actions brought respectively by Robert S. Bardin and his wife, Aline Bardin, to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by them in a collision between a Dodge automobile driven by Mr. Bardin and a Plymouth automobile operated by defendant J. M. Loyd and registered in the name of defendant F. W. Case. The two actions were consolidated for trial and heard before a jury, which returned verdicts in favor of each of the plaintiffs and against both defendants. Judgments were entered on the verdicts, the judgments against defendant Case in each action being limited to $5,000.00 under the provisions of section 402 of the Vehicle Code. Each of the defendants has appealed from the respective judgments against him.

The two main contentions of appellant Case are that the court erred in instructing the jury that as a matter of law defendant Loyd was operating the Plymouth automobile with the permission of Case, and erred in instructing the jury that there was no evidence of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiffs. The only contentions of appellant Loyd are that the court erred in taking the issue of contributory negligence from the jury and in refusing Loyd's profferred instructions on the subject of contributory negligence.

Turning to the evidence, it appears that at about noon on August 24, 1947, plaintiff, with his wife as a passenger, was driving north on Highway 99 (the Ridge Route), and defendant Loyd was driving south on the same highway. The weather was clear and the pavement dry. The paved portion of the roadway contained three marked lanes. The accident occurred at a point about 25 feet north of the northerly entrance to a service station known as "Five Mile Garage" located on the east side of the highway about five miles south of the summit of the Ridge Route. As the two vehicles approached the service station, each in its proper lane, the Loyd car suddenly veered to its left, came diagonally across the road, and struck the Bardin vehicle, which had been swerved to the right in an effort to avoid the collision. When the cars came to rest, the Loyd car was on the pavement facing southeast, while plaintiffs' car faced northeast and was partly on the pavement and partly on the shoulder. The State Highway Patrol found twenty feet of skid marks behind plaintiffs' car and seventy feet of skid marks behind the car of defendant Loyd. Just above the Five-Mile Garage the roadway curves to the northwest. From the diagram contained in the appendix to appellant Case's brief, it would seem that the Loyd car did not swerve, but simply failed to follow the curve in the roadway, with the result that it proceeded directly into the path of plaintiffs' car.

There were no eyewitnesses to the accident other than the persons involved. Plaintiff Mrs. Bardin testified that her injuries caused a lapse of memory as to events preceding and following the accident, and she could recall none of the circumstances of the collision. Defendant Loyd also testified that as a result of his injuries he could not recollect the circumstances of the collision.

Considering the claim of both appellants that the jury should have been permitted to find on the issue of contributory negligence, it becomes necessary to summarize the testimony of plaintiff Robert S. Bardin. In substance, he testified that he saw the other car coming down grade in the right-hand lane when it was possibly 100 to 150 yards away. There were no cars ahead of him. When the distance between the two cars was between 125 and 150 feet, the other car suddenly changed direction and headed straight across the highway, when it became apparent to him that there was going to be a collision; that there was "absolutely nothing that could be done" about it. He headed his car for the right-hand side of the highway and immediately put on his brakes while he was two or three feet inside the lane. The shoulder to his right was about eight feet wide. The impact rendered him momentarily unconscious. On cross-examination he testified that he had maintained a speed of 35 miles per hour until he anticipated the collision. He had traveled the Ridge Route several times. He was in a position to observe the Five-Mile Garage when he was about 100 yards away from it. As he approached the garage he was aware of the possibility of automobiles going in and out and that in traversing the Ridge Route automobiles frequently become hot and are parked at service stations, but he did not recall any cars parked at the time of the accident.

Defendant Loyd testified under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that he stopped for fuel, food and a short rest of about one hour south of Merced, and stopped again for "naps" south of Fresno and Bakersfield. We did not believe he was asleep just before the accident, but did not recall the impact. He did not recall stating after the accident that he had been without sleep or that he fell asleep before the accident, and did not recall a purported statement to the Highway Patrol apparently bearing his signature. His last recollection before the accident was rounding a slight curve north of the Five-Mile Garage. He testified he was alert and his sight unimpaired. He "had in mind that having climbed most of the grapevine and starting down on the other side, I might need to have gas and oil checked." He recalled seeing the plaintiffs' car, but nothing further concerning the accident.

A doctor called by plaintiff testified on cross-examination that plaintiff Robert S. Bardin had previously suffered from a broken back, requiring extensive treatment, and that he had also treated him for an exophthalmic goitre. It was admitted that Mr. Bardin wore tinted glasses, that most of his teeth had been extracted, and that he was afflicted with hay fever. It was further undenied that Mrs. Bardin was the registered owner of the Dodge automobile and a competent motor vehicle operator.

Appellant Case urges that the jury might have found, "from conflicting evidence or inferences that plaintiffs or either of them were contributorily negligent." The argument in this respect occupies fifteen pages in appellant's brief. Summarized, it is that under the evidence the jury might have reasonably concluded that Mr. Bardin failed to act as a reasonably prudent man, in that he could have braked more sharply and turned to the left into the center or passing lane, and thus avoided the accident; and further, that Mrs. Bardin, knowing of her husband's previous back injury, his previous operation for goitre, resulting possibly in slowed reaction, and his eye condition which required tinted glasses, was negligent in not either taking control of the vehicle prior to the accident or acting to aid in prevention of the accident when she saw the vehicle of defendants approaching. The same contentions are advanced by appellant Loyd. These arguments, ably presented as they are, cannot prevail.

[1-4] There is no question here as to the principles to be applied. Contributory negligence, like negligence, is a question of fact for the jury, except where the trial court can hold as a matter of law that only one inference can be rationally drawn from the evidence. Anthony v. Hobbie, 25 Cal. 2d 814, 818, 155 P.2d 826; Blank v. Coffin, 20 Cal.2d 457, 126 P.2d 868; Kosloskye v. Cis, 70 Cal.App.2d 174, 160 P.2d 565. The question presented to us is whether, under the evidence, any inference of contributory negligence can rationally be drawn. We are of the view that the record presents no substantial evidence to warrant such an inference. The possibility of such negligence may be conceded, but that is not sufficient. An inference of fact must be based upon substantial evidence, not conjecture. "In order to justify the submission of any question of fact to a jury, the proof must be sufficient to raise more than a mere conjecture or surmise that the fact is as alleged. It must be such that a rational, well-constructed mind can reasonably draw from it the conclusion that the fact exists; and, when the evidence is not sufficient to justify such inference, the court should refuse to submit the question to the jury." In re Calkins' Estate, 112 Cal. 296, 306, 44 P. 577, 580.

Appellant Case argues that the jury could have found from the evidence that Mr. Bardin, who was familiar with the route, knew or should have known, that cars might cross the highway in order to stop for service at the garage; that he saw Loyd's car change direction while 150 feet away and then believed a collision was imminent; that a collision could have been avoided only if plaintiffs' car was slowed sufficiently to enable Loyd to pass in front of it, or if plaintiffs' car was turned to the left so as to pass behind Loyd's car. It is pointed out that plaintiffs' brakes were in good condition, and therefore their car could have been stopped within less than 113 feet, but that there were only 20 feet of skid marks behind the plaintiffs' car. The jury could have found, it is urged, that Mr. Bardin was negligent in that, perceiving the imminence of collision, he failed to turn the five or six feet to the left which would have prevented the accident.

It is argued, in effect, that Mr. Bardin should have anticipated a car turning toward the garage. The evidence is that the accident occurred 25 feet north of the north entrance to the garage. There is no evidence that Loyd gave any signal indicating an intention to turn. Plaintiff was driving at a lawful rate of speed—35 miles per hour.

Appellant Case argues further: "Mr. Bardin's testimony as to his earliest knowledge of danger and when he first applied his brakes and turned his car would not have been conclusive on the jury, who could have found from all circumstances, including the physical evidence, that he negligently failed to avail of a reasonable opportunity to avert the collision, * * *. Or the jury could have inferred from the length of plaintiff's skid marks and the fact that their speed was apparently not retarded until the last 20 feet before the impact, that their brakes were defective, or not timely applied or that they were driving at an excessive speed, either of which was negligence. * * *"

[5] The "circumstances, including the physical evidence," warrant only one conclusion—that without warning, the Loyd car shot across the road directly into the path of plaintiffs' car, and that plaintiff Mr. Bardin had perhaps a second, at the most, in which to react. Plaintiff driver was not required to anticipate negligence on the part of the other driver, Bingham v. Greenamyer, 25 Cal.App.2d 467, 77 P.2d 867, nor may he be held guilty of contributory negligence because in a moment of imminent peril he failed to take the course that careful consideration after the fact shows that he ought to have taken. Karr v. Parks, 40 Cal. 188, 193.

Further discussion along this line would serve no useful purpose. It can only be said that, had the jury been instructed upon contributory negligence and returned a verdict for the defendants, a new trial would have been mandatory and it would have been an abuse of discretion to deny it. Our conclusions in this regard apply also to the argument that Mrs. Bardin was guilty of contributory negligence, as well as to the contentions on appeal of appellant Loyd.

The court instructed the jury that there was no evidence that Loyd was acting in the scope of his employment at the time of the accident, but that defendant Case was liable if the car registered in his name was used with his permission, express or implied, and that upon this second theory, "in view of the testimony of the defendant Case himself, the defendant Loyd, at the time of the collision, was driving the automobile with the permission of Case." Appellant Case attacks this instruction upon the grounds (1) that the court erred in taking this issue from the jury, and (2) that the court abused its discretion in denying his motion to reopen the case to enable him to move to strike the testimony of Case that after a tentative agreement for the sale of the automobile to Loyd was made, "from then on I considered the car Loyd's."

Loyd was employed by defendant Case at Los Angeles. There was evidence from which it could be concluded that prior to the purported sale hereafter discussed Loyd was authorized to use the vehicle only to go to and from work and on business errands for Case, although Loyd testified that there was no restriction on his use of the vehicle. At the time of the accident Loyd was admittedly operating the vehicle for a purpose of his own, returning from Berkely, whence he had gone in connection with the enrollment of his son at the University of California. About two weeks before the happening of the accident, the question of Mr. Loyd's buying the vehicle came up, and with reference to this point Loyd testified:

"To the best of my remembrance, your Honor, Mr. Harris (an employee of Case) was talking with Mr. Case, on the walk in front of the office, and mentioned to Mr. Case that one of his men, a field man, would like to buy a car; and that this car that I was driving had been mentioned; and so Mr. Case called me out and asked me if I would like to have the car; and I said, 'Yes'; that I would have to have transportation; but as I recall, no further conversation took place at that time, your Honor; at least no arrangements were made. I asked what the price this gentleman was offering was and Mr. Harris said $300.00.

"* * * I said I would have to have transportation and if some arrangement could be worked out, probably we could get together, or words to the same effect. * * *"

Appellant Loyd testified that no further conversations were had and nothing further was done about the contemplated transaction. However, appellant Case testified, with respect to the purchase of the vehicle: "Jim Loyd came out. I said, 'Well, Jim, we have got a chance to sell the Plymouth now and Dan James here, a truck driver, wants to buy it, and you are entitled—we thought it was only no more than fair to give you the first chance to buy it.' He said, 'Okay; I will take it'; and from then on I considered the car Loyd's. * * * He (Loyd) said 'I am going to put my boy in school * * * in Berkely, and I am pretty short of money right now, and I would like to make arrangements to pay for it weekly, if you are not going to be too tough on me it will be all right.' He said, 'I think after the boy gets up there and we get organized a little bit, I can pay you $10 a week on the car.' I said 'That is perfectly all right.'" With respect to the indorsement of the ownership certificate and reregistration of the vehicle, Mr. Case testified, "I told him (Loyd) when he got around to it to make the transfer, that is, so that things would be in order. He said he would." (This was never done.) Mr. Case further testified:

"Q. Did you at any time tell Mr. Loyd his use of the automobile was restricted to any particular area? A. I did.

"Q. When was that? A. When he took possession of the car.

"Q. What did you tell him? A. I told him he could drive it back and forth to home and down to the bank and to the post office or wherever I would send him.

"Q. And you told him that his use of the car was restricted for that purpose? A. That is what I told him. That was the conversation."

[6] Appellant Case devotes much of his brief to argument as to the effect of an informal sale, or agreement of sale, and the liability of the registered owner under section 402 of the Vehicle Code when a sale has been agreed upon but the statutory requirements of indorsement and delivery of the ownership certificate or notification of the Department of Motor Vehicles have not been complied with. It is argued (1) that there was no contract of sale, (2) that the existence of an agreement of sale does not per se constitute permission by the owner for the buyer to operate the vehicle without restriction, (3) that if such a contract existed, a right of possession in the buyer does not necessarily follow. The academic soundness of the arguments is not the point here. The sole question, again, is whether the record contains any substantial evidence to support a finding that Mr. Loyd, in operating the automobile for his private purposes,—driving to Berkely in the interests of his son's scholastic pursuits—did so without the permission, express or implied, of Mr. Case, the owner of the vehicle. It must be held that the evidence supports only one conclusion, that defendant Loyd was operating the vehicle with the permission of defendant Case. No trier of fact, considering the testimony of defendant Case, substantially corroborated by that of his employee Harris, could reasonably come to any conclusion other than that any previous restrictions upon Loyd's use of the car were no longer in effect after Loyd and Case had made their "deal" whereby Loyd was to buy the car. Appellant Case's testimony amounted to an admission that he "considered the car Loyd's." We are not here concerned with the actual state of the title to the vehicle, but with the state of mind of defendant Case, who "considered the car Loyd's" and told Loyd "when he got around to it to make the transfer." To hold that in the circumstances presented there could be any doubt as to Loyd's unrestricted permission to use the vehicle as he saw fit would be to uphold a finding based upon no substantial evidence and against the unqualified admission of the party concerned.

Even viewing the evidence solely in the light of the testimony of Loyd, it is clear that an understanding was reached that Loyd was to purchase the vehicle. This understanding, coupled with possession of the vehicle by Loyd, not only warrants, but, considering all the evidence, compels, the inference that thereafter the vehicle was operated with the permission of defendant Case.

[7] It is firmly settled that an agreement of sale coupled with transfer of possession, irrespective of compliance with the provisions of the Vehicle Code regulating the mode of transfer, operates as a consent and permission to the vendee to use the car in the way in which such property is customarily used and for all reasonable purposes. Weinberg v. Whitebone, 87 Cal. App.2d 319, 196 P.2d 963; Bunch v. Kin, 2 Cal.App.2d 81, 37 P.2d 744; Votaw v. Farmers Automobile Inter-Insurance Exchange, 15 Cal.2d 24, 97 P.2d 958, 126 A.L. R. 538; Ferroni v. Pacific Finance Corp., 21 Cal.2d 773, 135 P.2d 569; Gutknecht v. Johnson, 62 Cal.App.2d 315, 144 P.2d 854.

[8, 9] We deem it appropriate, in connection with the two contentions hereinbefore discussed, to re-emphasize that in passing upon the propriety and legality of granting a motion for a directed verdict, neither this court nor the trial court is authorized to weigh evidence or determine where the preponderance lies. When the trial court has granted a nonsuit, directed a verdict, or entered judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the function of the appellate tribunal is to determine whether there is any substantial evidence to support a verdict contrary to that directed. In other words, we are not authorized to weigh the evidence, but are limited solely to considering the same for the purpose of determining whether any substantial evidence appears which would, in the instant case, support a verdict contrary to that directed. It is stated in James v. White Truck & Transfer Co., 1 Cal.App. 2d 37, 40, 36 P.2d 401, 402, "To warrant a court in directing a verdict, it is not necessary that there should be an absence of conflict in the evidence; but to deprive the court of the right to exercise this power, if there be a conflict, it must be a substantial one." (Emphasis added.) Had the jury herein found in favor of Case on the issues of contributory negligence or permissive use, the trial court would have been bound to set the finding aside. As was said by this court in Washer v. Bank of America, 87 Cal.App.2d 501, 506, 197 P.2d 202, 206, "It is likewise settled that the trial court may direct a verdict 'where the evidence is undisputed, or is of such conclusive character that the court, in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, will be compelled to set aside a verdict returned in opposition to it.' Wilkinson v. United Railroads, 195 Cal. 185, 204, 232 P. 131, 138, quoting from Davis v. California Street Cable R. Co., 105 Cal. 131, 38 P. 647." Here, as in the Washer case, supra, we hold that only one conclusion is legally deducible from the evidence, and that any decision other than that arrived at under the direction of the trial court would have been so lacking in evidentiary support that an appellate court would be impelled to reverse it upon appeal.

Since, as we have hereinbefore indicated, the verdicts rendered by the jury (the question of the amount of damages is not here involved) against the owner and the driver of the vehicle are the only verdicts supported by substantial evidence, it becomes unnecessary to consider many of the assignments of error raised by appellant Case. Any errors in the admission of evidence or rejection thereof, in the restriction of cross-examination or in the asserted "injudicious solicitude for plaintiffs" charged against the trial court, afford no ground for reversal, by reason of the provisions of section 4½, Article VI, of the Constitution of California.

However, certain other points raised by appellant Case require consideration.

It is urged that the court abused its discretion in denying Case's motion to reopen the case to enable him to strike the "irresponsive, self-serving conclusion of witness, F. W. Case." (Emphasis added.) It appears that this motion was not made until after all the evidence was in and the trial court announced its conclusion to instruct the jury that Loyd had "permissive use" of the vehicle. Counsel for appellant Case then stated that he had not heard such answer from the witness, and moved to strike as above stated. Appellant Case asserts that the trial judge, with "cruel injudiciousness", replied: "No, you are not going to do that. You have rested, the evidence is all in and we take it now as it is. If you are going to sleep during the evidence you cannot open it up to move to strike out important bits of evidence, because that is perfectly competent. It is out of the question. I would not have opened it up for discussion if I had the slightest idea of reopening the evidence. I brought up the subject for discussion because the evidence was closed, you had rested, and there is no reason why it should be reopened, because it is the undisputed evidence of Mr. Case as to the sale, and that carries with it the undisputed deduction, the only deduction, we can draw from that is that he gave Mr. Loyd the right to use it wherever he pleased. The law still holds him responsible while he is the registered owner; but for him to say in one breath he made the agreement with Mr. Loyd under which he was to buy the car and that he considered that after that it was Mr. Loyd's car, and in the next breath to say there is any dispute on permissive use—'I now deny that he had the right to drive it wherever he pleased'—it is an impossible position for him to take."

[10, 11] It has long been the established law that the granting or denial of such a motion is committed to the sound discretion of the trial judge. We are not here confronted with the case of an unresponsive answer by a witness, but an admission by a party under direct examination by his own counsel. Appellant Case's counsel urges that because he was suffering from a severe cold, he did not hear the answer given by the witness to a direct interrogatory propounded by counsel, cannot be made the basis for holding that the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to reopen the case. The answer was pertinent to a fundamental issue—that of permission. To have granted a motion to strike such testimony, not on the ground that the witness did not give it, but on the ground that the latter's counsel did not hear it, would amount to striking concededly competent evidence of a party's admissions. The court acted well within its discretion in denying the motion to reopen the case for the avowed purpose of accomplishing just that.

[12, 13] The contention of appellant Case that the court erred "in excluding appellant's (Case) cross-examination of defendant Loyd, and independent evidence of his verbal acts and admissions, concerning his interest in appellant's car," is without merit. Appellant offered to prove in this connection only that Loyd had told two people, prior to the accident, that he had bought the Plymouth automobile from Case. There was no offer to prove that the purchase was conditional or that it was coupled with restrictions upon the use of the car. The proffered testimony was, if anything, adverse to appellant. Nor can error be predicated upon the exclusion of evidence that Loyd told Mrs. Case on the eve of his departure for Berkeley that he intended to go by train. The probative value, if any, of this evidence, under the issues in the trial, is too slight to justify serious consideration of the alleged error as a ground for reversal.

The remaining grounds of reversal urged by appellant Case have been considered, but do not require determination in view of our conclusions upon the two main issues hereinbefore discussed. None of the asserted errors could have affected the outcome of the trial. Sec. 4½, Art. VI, Const. Calif.

The judgments appealed from are, and each is, affirmed.

DORAN and DRAPEAU, JJ., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 109

McLAIN v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR SACRAMENTO COUNTY.

Civ. 7848.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 21, 1950.

Hearing Denied Oct. 19, 1950.

Petition by George H. McLain against the Superior Court in and for the County of Sacramento for a writ of prohibition to restrain the named court from taking any further steps or proceedings based on an indictment charging petitioner with the crime of bribery in that he allegedly gave a bribe to a member of the state Legislature with intent to influence the said legislator in giving or withholding his vote on bills introduced for passage. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, J., held that where petitioner before Senate committee had testified under oath to matters on which bribery prosecution was based, immunity attached and petitioner could not be prosecuted.

Peremptory writ issued directing respondent court to dismiss indictment.

1. Witnesses ⇐298

Constitutional privilege inherent in declaration that no party accused shall be compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself is not available to corporations, which can be required to produce their books and papers by a subpoena duces tecum. Government Code, § 9410; Const. art. 1, § 13.

2. Witnesses ⇐16

Production of books and records is ordinarily procured by service on appropriate person of a subpoena duces tecum and compulsion to testify brought about through subpoena ad testificandum, and there is no necessary connection between two writs, and although they are in many cases combined in one form, that is a mere matter of convenience and does not combine them in substance. Government Code, § 9410; Const. art. 1, § 13.

3. Witnesses ⇐297

Under statute providing that a person sworn and examined before Senate or Assembly, or any committee, cannot be held to answer criminally or be subject to any penalty or forfeiture for any fact or act touching which he is required to testify, the claim of immunity or privilege by witness is not necessary. Government Code, § 9410.

4. Witnesses ⇐298

Where a Senate committee issued subpoena to chairman of nonprofit corporation engaged in fostering public interest in proposed constitutional amendment concerning old age assistance, and chairman appeared before committee and produced canceled checks allegedly given to an assemblyman as bribes and chairman was sworn as a witness and identified checks, and his testimony touched on alleged bribery of assemblyman, immunity attached, and bribery prosecution of chairman, based in part on his testimony, could not be maintained. Government Code, § 9410; Const. art. 1, § 13.

Kenny & Morris, Los Angeles, John L. Brannely, Sacramento, for petitioner.

J. Francis O'Shea, District Attorney, Elvin F. Sheehy, Chief Criminal Deputy, Sacramento, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Justice.

On February 20, 1950, petitioner herein, George H. McLain, was indicted by the Grand Jury of Sacramento County. The indictment contained four counts, in each of which petitioner was charged with the crime of bribery in that he gave a bribe, consisting of the sum of $75, to John W. Evans, then a member of the State Legislature, with intent to influence the said legislator in giving or withholding his vote on bills introduced for passage. The alleged dates of bribe-giving were January 27th, February 25th, April 8th and April 15th, all in 1949. The accused has filed herein a petition for a writ of prohibition, asking that the Sacramento County Superior Court be restrained from taking any further steps or proceedings based upon the indictment, save to dismiss the same.

It is the fundamental contention of the petitioner that he cannot be prosecuted under the indictment because he was required to testify before the Senate Interim Committee on Social Welfare, touching upon the matters charged in the indictment, and thereby acquired immunity.

It appears without dispute in the record that the aforesaid committee was investigating matters having to do with social welfare pursuant to the Senate resolution creating the committee. In the course of its investigations the committee turned its attention to the activities of the Citizens Committee for Old Age Pensions, a nonprofit corporation. Its corporate purposes as expressed in its articles included the acquisition of real and personal property, and the fostering and promotion of public interest in a proposed initiative constitutional amendment concerning old age assistance. Its by-laws provided that the secretary should keep all books and records required by law and have custody of the corporate seal; and its treasurer should receive and receipt for all money and property, deposit all money in bank and pay out or otherwise dispose of the same as directed by the board of trustees. Desiring production of the books and records of the corporation, the committee, acting through a sub-committee, issued a subpoena to one Charles Ohlsen, who, in response thereto, appeared before the sub-committee on November 26, 1949. He testified that he was secretary and treasurer of the corporation, elected to those offices September 12, 1949, and that George McLain, Ray Howell and he were the members of the board of trustees of the organization. The subpoena had called upon him to produce for the years 1947 to 1949, inclusive, the financial records of the corporation. He testified that he had not brought the records and documents requested for the reason that he had never had them in his possession and that they were in the possession of Mr. McLain. However, he stated that he would demand possession of the records and make every effort to produce them, whereupon the committee recessed to give him opportunity to do so.

On December 3d he again appeared and testified he had not been able to get the records; that he had requested them of Mr. McLain and had been told he could not have them and if the committee wanted them it should summon McLain; further he testified that the records were not in the offices of the Citizens Committee.

Thereafter the committee issued a subpoena addressed to the corporation and to "George H. McLain, Chairman of said Citizens Committee for Old Age Pensions" commanding them to appear before the committee on a given date "as witness in an investigation by the said committee" and commanding them to bring with them all cancelled checks, check stubs, check ledgers and bank statements of all the accounts in the name of Citizens Committee for Old Age Pensions, including, but not limited to, the payroll account, the special account and the General (rental) account, for the calendar years 1948 and 1949. Petitioner appeared and was sworn. He testified that he was chairman of the corporation and that he had received the subpoena. He was then told that he had been subpoenaed only in his capacity as chairman and in none other and was asked if he had the documents which the subpoena had required him to produce. He stated he had the records and would produce them as soon as he made a statement. Privilege to make such a statement was denied to him. Thereupon his counsel asked what particular documents they wanted the witness to hand over. Committee counsel asked first for all cancelled checks as demanded. Again petitioner stated his desire to make a statement which was again refused. Thereupon counsel for the committee suggested that if petitioner would waive immunity and allow full cross-examination he be allowed to make his statement. Petitioner replied in substance that he would not waive immunity but was ready to testify. Considerable discussion then followed between respective counsel concerning the conditions of the delivery of the records, the time that they might be kept for perusal by the committee, and the like. Counsel for the committee again asked petitioner if he had produced all the corporation's cancelled checks and the reply was that they were all there, with the exception of two bank statements and related cancelled checks, which he said had been stolen. After some time was spent in arranging the records, petitioner stated that for the convenience of the committee "we have separated to the best of our ability the checks that have been issued to Assemblyman John Evans during 1948 and 1949 as one of our public relations counsel, so we will be very happy to turn these over to you during the time you are going through the checks." He thereupon handed the specified checks to counsel for the committee, who said, "What are these?" and petitioner replied, "Checks made payable to John W. Evans." There were twenty-two checks which petitioner had identified, as above stated, and they were all copied into the records of the committee hearing. Four of them form the basis of the grand jury indictment of petitioner. They were signed "Citizens' Committee for Old Age Pensions, George H. McLain", and bore the apparent endorsement of Mr. Evans, and also the usual stamps and punch marks indicating a clearance through the bank on which they were drawn.

By virtue of the foregoing, petitioner claims he has acquired immunity against prosecution under the provisions of Section 9410 of the Government Code, formerly Section 304 of the Political Code, which, so far as here applicable, provides as follows: "A person sworn and examined before the Senate or Assembly, or any committee, can not be held to answer criminally or be subject to any penalty or forfeiture for any fact or act touching which he is required to testify."

This section is found among a group of sections intended to govern the matter of summoning witnesses and producing documents before committees of the legislature or one of the houses thereof. The statutes provide for the issuance of subpoenas, the service thereof, and punishment for contempt for neglecting or refusing to obey such process or to produce, upon reasonable notice, books, papers and documents in the possession or under the control of a person so subpoenaed.

The forerunner of the present legislation was enacted in 1857, Stats. 1857, chap. 95, the declared purpose of the act being "To enforce more effectually the attendance of Witnesses on the Summons of either House of the Legislature of this State, and to compel them to discover Testimony." When the codes were enacted in 1872 this legislation was substantially carried into the Political Code and found expression in Sections 300 to 304, inclusive thereof. The legislation was continued without substantial change until 1943, when, during the general codification of much of the existing legislation not theretofore placed in the various codes, the subject-matter was carried into the Government Code.

Legislation of this sort has been enacted by almost, if not all, of the state legislatures and many such statutes have been enacted by Congress. Generally speaking, they were intended to aid investigative agencies whose work might be and often was seriously impeded by witnesses claiming the constitutional privilege against self-incrimination found in the Federal constitution and in the constitution of almost all of the states, including California. See Cal.Const. Art. I, Sec. 13. The principle involved had long received recognition and enforcement in England under the common law and in the early colonial governments. As stated in 8 Wigmore on Evidence, 3d edition, Section 2250, Page 276: "The history of the privilege against self-crimination has something more than the ordinary interest of a rule of Evidence,—not only because the privilege has been given a constitutional sanction in nearly every one of our jurisdictions; nor merely because the tracing of its origin takes us so far afield, in our survey, as the administrative policy of William the Conqueror, and the criminal procedure of Louis XIV and the French Revolution; but particularly because the woof of its long story is woven across a tangled warp composed in part of the inventions of the early canonists, of the momentous contest between the Courts of the common law and of the church, and of the political and religious issues of that convulsive period in English history, the days of the dictatorial Stuarts."

Many decisions in the highest courts of this country, both state and Federal, have been concerned with the construction and application of these so-called statutes of immunity. It will not be necessary to the decision of the issues presented here to refer to many of them.

It is the principal contention of respondent that immunity was not acquired by petitioner, not because the documents produced under the compulsion of the subpoena did not touch upon the alleged crimes for which he was later indicted, nor that the meager testimony he gave did not serve to identify and authenticate these documents, but that the production of the documents by petitioner and his testimony concerning them fell within permissible limits without the granting of immunity. Respondent contends that if anyone has documents, books and records of another in his custody and under his control which a legislative committee can properly cause to be produced a subpoena to produce may be properly served upon such person, compelling him to produce such records, and having so produced them, he may be further compelled to identify and authenticate them under oath and that if nothing more be done immunity has not been gained. On the contrary, petitioner contends that such limitations of the immunity provisions of our statute do not exist, have never been declared by our courts and that the plain language of the statute is to be given full and literal interpretation and scope. Petitioner contends that the statute represents an exercise of the legislative pardoning power and that to make it serve its purpose it must receive the broad construction claimed. They say, in effect, petitioner was subpoenaed to appear as a witness before the committee and to bring with him certain designated documents; he was sworn as a witness and required to testify; his testimony touched upon the alleged briberies for which he has been indicted and he is, therefore, by the plain language of the statute, immune to prosecution.

[1] It has long been decided that the constitutional privilege inherent in the declaration that no party accused shall be compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself was not available to corporations, which could be required to produce their books and papers by a subpoena duces tecum. Thus in Wilson v. United States, 221 U.S. 361, 31 S.Ct. 538, 541, 55 L.Ed. 771, Ann.Cas. 1912D, 558, decided in 1911, the Supreme Court of the United States declared that a corporation could not resist upon such constitutional grounds the compulsory production of its books and papers. See, also, Heike v. United States, 227 U.S. 131, 33 S.Ct. 226, 57 L.Ed. 450, and Shapiro v. United States, 335 U.S. 1, 68 S.Ct. 1375, 92 L.Ed. 1787. And this right of a court or properly constituted investigative body to compel the production of such records has long existed, even though they may be temporarily in the custody of someone not authorized to have them by the corporation itself.

[2] But there is a clear distinction between the admitted power of such a body as the Senate Interim Committee on Social Welfare to compel the production before it of such documents, and the right to compel testimony from the custodian of such documents which would incriminate the witness. The production of books and records is ordinarily procured by service upon appropriate persons of a subpoena duces tecum. Compulsion to testify is ordinarily brought about through subpoena ad testificandum or the swearing of a person who, although not subpoenaed, is actually in the presence of the tribunal and therefore can be made to respond to the general duty of all citizens to give testimony. There is no necessary connection between the two writs. Their functions are different and although they are in many cases combined in one form, as was the case here, nevertheless that is a mere matter of convenience and does not combine them in substance. This distinction between the two writs is noted and discussed in Wilson v. United States, supra. Discussing the nature and origin of the subpoena duces tecum the court declared that: "While a subpoena duces tecum ordinarily contains the ad testificandum clause, this cannot be regarded as essential to its validity. The power to compel the production of documents is, of course, not limited to those cases where it is sought merely to supplement or aid the testimony of the person required to produce them. The production may be enforced independently of his testimony, and it was held long since that the writ of subpoena duces tecum was adequate for this purpose. As was said by Lord Ellenborough in Amey v. Long, 9 East, p. 484: 'The right to resort to means competent to compel the production of written, as well as oral, testimony, seems essential to the very existence and constitution of a court of common law, which receives and acts upon both descriptions of evidence, and could not possibly proceed with due effect without them.' Where the subpoena duces tecum contains the usual ad testificandum clause, still it is not necessary for the party requiring the production to have the person producing the documents sworn as a witness. They may be proved by others."

The court quoted from Summers v. Moseley, 2 Cromp. & M. 477, as follows:

"'* * * The party called upon in pursuance of such a process not as a witness, but simply to produce, would do so or not, and if he did not, I can entertain no doubt that it would have been open to the party for whom he was called to make an application to the court in the ensuing term to punish him for his contempt in not producing the document in obedience to such subpoena. Whether he could require to be sworn not ad testificandum, but true answer to make to such questions as the court should demand of him touching the possession or custody of the document, is not now the question. Perhaps he might; but we are clearly of opinion that he has no right to require that a party bringing him into court for the mere purpose of producing a document should have him sworn in such a way as to make him a witness in the cause, when it may often happen that he is a mere depository, and knows nothing of the documents of which he has the custody.'"

The court continued:

"Treating the requirement to produce as separable from the requirement to testify generally what one knows in the cause, it follows that the latter may be omitted from the subpoena without invalidating the former. * * *

"Where the documents of a corporation are sought, the practice has been to subpoena the officer who has them in his custody. But there would seem to be no reason why the subpoena duces tecum should not be directed to the corporation itself. Corporate existence implies amenability to legal process."

Here the subpoena was directed to the corporation and to petitioner as chairman of the board of trustees thereof and it required the production of the books and records referred to. However, when petitioner was sworn he became a witness pursuant to the ad testificandum part of the process served upon him. Indeed, there is no way in which a witness can be sworn otherwise, although, as has appeared from the statement of facts, there was a prompt declaration by counsel for the committee that petitioner had been subpoenaed merely in his capacity as chairman of the board of trustees of the corporation and not otherwise. That position was departed from when to him there was administered the usual oath administered to all witnesses. The situation may be illustrated by inquiring how a sentence for contempt would have been served had the petitioner after the administration of the oath proved contumacious. Clearly, he would have served that sentence individually and not as chairman of the board of trustees. If, therefore, after the production of the books and papers in response to the subpoena duces tecum, by which production the demands of that process had been met, the petitioner, in response to appropriate questioning, gave testimony touching the facts and acts for which he now stands under indictment, no reason appears why he should not have the immunity granted him by the statute in exchange for his constitutional privilege against self-incrimination.

[3] Before proceeding further it might well be said that although immunity was claimed at one point in the proceeding when the matter was suggested by counsel for the committee, nevertheless, under the holding of the Supreme Court in United States v. Monia, 317 U.S. 424, 63 S.Ct. 409, 412, 87 L.Ed. 376, the claim of immunity or privilege was not necessary. The Supreme Court in the Monia case, interpreting a statute to all intents and purposes identical with our own upon this point, held that where the words of the statute granting immunity were plain and did not require claim for the immunity offered, it was not necessary that such claim be made. The court said the legislation involved in that case was plain and, "on its face, means to the layman that if he is subpoenaed, and sworn, and testifies, he is to have immunity." This declaration is clearly applicable to our own statute which is equally plain upon its face, which equally declares "A person sworn and examined before the Senate or Assembly, or any committee, can not be held to answer criminally or be subject to any penalty or forfeiture for any fact or act touching which he is required to testify."

Since the purpose of the so-called immunity statutes is to gain information by taking away the constitutional privilege of refusing to give testimony, exchanging therefor immunity, there is no reason why the immunity so voluntarily offered by the legislature should be whittled away by the courts. If the legislative fiat seems to be unduly generous, restriction should come from the legislature. The statute before us here has been long on the books and many investigations have been conducted under it. If the legislature was not satisfied with its working it has always had the remedy in its hands. Since it has not seen fit to make changes we must assume it wants the law as it is.

Applying, then, the plain language of the act to the facts here, did the petitioner, having been sworn, testify as to any fact or act touching the bribery with which he stands charged? We think he did. The term "cancelled check" is one of ordinary and general usage. Its meaning is well known. It means a check drawn, delivered, endorsed, presented, paid by the drawee bank and returned in due time to the drawer. It is to be presumed that the ordinary course of business has been followed and in respect to cancelled checks the orderly happening of the above actions is to be presumed. When permissible inferences and presumptions are considered, his testimony amounted to this: Here are four checks; they are cancelled checks of the Citizens Committee for Old Age Pensions; they were drawn and made payable to Assemblyman John W. Evans; they cleared through the Committee's bank account; they are for $75 each; they are dated January 27, February 25, April 8 and April 15, 1949; my name appears as drawer for the Committee; I was then the Committee's Chairman of the Board of Trustees.

[4] Having so testified, petitioner now stands indicted for having, on the several dates those checks bear, given bribes to Evans in the amounts for which the checks were drawn. Before the grand jury those checks were produced as being the very instruments of bribery, as being the things which constituted the bribes alleged to have been given. Without proving the facts to which petitioner testified the bribery charged would not be shown. It matters not that the same testimony could have been given by others. It was given by petitioner. Not only does it touch upon the bribery charged, but, if it be supplemented by proof of felonious intent thereby to influence the vote of Assemblyman Evans as charged, it will go far to establish the crime. When the legislative committee swore petitioner as a witness it contracted that he would be immune from prosecution for any crime touching which he might testify. When that testimony touched upon the alleged bribery of Evans, immunity attached. Petitioner cannot be prosecuted therefor.

Let the peremptory writ be issued as prayed for directing respondent court to dismiss the indictment referred to herein and in the petition.

ADAMS, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

KNUDSEN CREAMERY CO. v. BROCK, Director of Agriculture.
Civ. 17723.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 16, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 1, 1950.

Hearing Granted Oct. 9, 1950.*

Knudsen Creamery Company of California, a corporation, brought an action for declaratory relief to determine the power and jurisdiction of A. A. Brock, as Director of Agriculture of the State of California, to make and enforce an order issued respecting stabilization and marketing plan for fluid milk in San Diego County Marketing Area. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Wilbur C. Curtis, J., rendered judgment in defendant's favor, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Wilson, J., held that plaintiff, under the Milk Control Act, was a distributor, and under marketing plan was entitled to deduct cost of transporting milk to its San Diego distributing plant from minimum price it had to pay producer.

Judgment reversed with directions.

1. Food ⇐2

Purpose of Milk Control Act is to eliminate economic disturbances and unfair trade practices in the milk industry, which threaten both the quality and adequacy of the supply of fluid milk and cream. Agricultural Code, §§ 735 et seq., 735.1 (b, d), 736.

2. Food ⇐2

The Milk Control Act is aimed primarily at what the producer shall receive and not at what the dealer or consumer shall pay. Agricultural Code, §§ 735 et seq., 736.

3. Administrative law and procedure ⇐209
Constitutional law ⇐62

Legislature has function of declaring policy and fixing primary standards, but after doing so may confer upon executive or administrative officers power to fill up the details by prescribing administrative rules and regulations.

4. Constitutional law ⇐77

A ministerial officer may not, under the guise of a rule or regulation, vary or enlarge terms or conditions of statute or compel that to be done which lies outside scope of the statute.

5. Food ⇐1

Where Milk Control Act provided that any person who purchased or handled fluid milk or fluid cream for sale was a distributor, Director had no authority to require additionally that distributor maintain milk processing plant within marketing area in which he distributed milk, to qualify as distributor. Agricultural Code, §§ 735 et seq., 735.3, 735.3(f), 736.3.

6. Food ⇐1

Where order of Director of Agriculture established a minimum price to be paid by distributors in San Diego Marketing Area for milk purchased "f. o. b. distributor's plant" and defined distributor's plant as one where milk was received, weighed, tested and processed, definition of distributor's plant as contained in order was void as being in conflict with Milk Control Act which did not include requirement that a distributor process the milk. Agricultural Code, §§ 735 et seq., 735.1(b), 735.3(f), 735.4(b) (4), 736.3.

7. Food ⇐4

Distributor which maintained milk processing plant in Los Angeles area and shipped milk processed there to San Diego plant for storage and distribution, was qualified as a distributor under Milk Control Act, and as such and under marketing plan promulgated by Director, was entitled to deduct cost of transporting milk from producer to its San Diego plant from minimum price it had to pay producer. Agricultural Code, §§ 735 et seq., 735.1(b), 735.1(d), 735.3, 735.3(f), 735.4(b) (4), 736.1, 736.3.

8. Food ⇐4

Where distributor maintained milk processing plant in Los Angeles area and shipped milk processed there to San Diego plant which was used for storage and distribution, it purchased milk "under same terms and conditions" as other distributors in San Diego area, was a distributor therein, and was entitled to benefits of marketing plan promulgated by Director for San

* Subsequent opinion 234 P.2d 26.

Diego area. Agricultural Code, §§ 735 et seq., 735.1(b), 735.1(d), 735.3, 735.3(f), 735.4(b) (4), 736.1, 736.3.

Vaughan, Brandlin & Wehrle, J. R. Vaughan, and Pat. B. Trapp, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General of the State of California, Walter L. Bowers, Assistant Attorney General, for respondent.

WILSON, Justice.

The decision in this case turns upon the validity of an order issued by the Director of Agriculture with respect to the stabilization and marketing plan for fluid milk for the San Diego County Marketing Area, especially that portion of the order defining "Distributor's Plant."

Contending that the order is void and unenforceable plaintiff brought the action for declaratory relief in order to determine the power and jurisdiction of the Director to make and enforce it. From a judgment in favor of defendant plaintiff appeals.

Appellant is a distributor of fluid milk and fluid cream. It maintains a plant in the city of Los Angeles in which it processes, pasteurizes and packages in containers for resale milk which it purchases from various producers. Approximately five per cent of the fluid milk received by appellant at its Los Angeles plant is transported in packaged form to its plant in San Diego for distribution in that county.

The Milk Control Act, Div. 4, Ch. 10, Agr. Code, authorizes the Director of Agriculture to designate marketing areas "wherein he finds the conditions affecting the production, distribution and sale of fluid milk, * * * are reasonably uniform." Agr. Code, sec. 736.[1] Los Angeles county and San Diego county respectively have been designated as marketing areas and stabilization and marketing plans have been formulated establishing minimum prices which distributors must pay producers. Sec. 736.1. The minimum price to the producer is governed by the price fixed in the marketing area wherein the milk is sold and delivered to the consumer. Sec. 736.3.

Pursuant to proceedings had as required by the provisions of Chapter 13, Division 4 of the Agricultural Code, the stabilization and marketing plan for the San Diego marketing area was amended and Order Number 26 was issued by respondent effective April 1, 1949. The stabilization and marketing plan as amended establishes a minimum price to be paid by distributors for fluid milk purchased "f. o. b. distributor's plant" and provides that any distributor who purchases, receives or otherwise handles fluid milk at the producer's dairy location for sale or distribution within the San Diego County Marketing Area may deduct from the specified minimum price an amount "not in excess of the lowest rate for transportation of said commodity then in effect for public carrier * * * from point or points of shipment to such distributor's plant within the Marketing Area." A distributor's plant is defined in the order as "any building in which milk is received, weighed, tested, and processed for distribution to consumer."

Appellant's plant in San Diego is used solely for storage and distribution. By reason of the fact that no milk is processed for distribution in its San Diego plant, appellant has no "distributor's plant" within the definition contained in Order Number 26 in the San Diego County Marketing Area and therefore in computing the minimum price payable to producers it is prohibited from deducting a sum equal to the cost of transporting the fluid milk in bulk from the producer's dairy to appellant's plant in San Diego. It is permitted to deduct the cost of transporting the milk from the dairy to its distributing plant in Los Angeles.

Appellant contends that Order Number 26 as interpreted by the Director of Agriculture is void in that it is in direct conflict with the Milk Control Act; that the definition of a "Distributor's Plant" is void; that the effect of the order as interpreted is to prescribe one minimum producer's price for a marketing area applicable to distributors whose processing facilities are located within the marketing area and another, higher minimum producer's price for the same marketing area applicable to distributors whose processing facilities are located outside the marketing area; that it is confronted with a competitive inequality which requires the distribution of milk at a loss; that it has but two alternatives: (1) Cease distribution in the area because of inequality of competitive opportunity and thereby promote local monopoly or (2) build a processing plant within the marketing area.

1. All sections cited in this opinion are in the Agricultural Code.

[1] The purposes of the Milk Control Act are, among others, to "authorize and enable the director to prescribe marketing areas and to determine prices to producers for fluid milk or fluid cream, or both, which are necessary due to varying factors of costs of production, health regulations, transportation and other factors in said marketing areas of this State, provided that the cost to distributors within any marketing area, for fluid milk or fluid cream shall be uniform with all other distributors purchasing fluid milk and fluid cream of similar grade or quality under like terms and conditions" Sec. 735.1(b), and to "eliminate economic disturbances and unfair trade practices in the milk industry which threaten both the quality and adequacy of the supply of fluid milk and cream." In re Willing, 12 Cal.2d 591, 594, 86 P.2d 663, 664. The act expressly states that it is the legislative intent that "Nothing in this chapter shall be construed as permitting or authorizing the development of conditions of monopoly in the production or distribution of fluid milk or fluid cream." Sec. 735.1(d).

[2] The act is aimed primarily at what the producer shall receive and not what the dealer or consumer shall pay. United Milk Producers v. Cecil, 47 Cal.App.2d 758, 768–9, 118 P.2d 830. In prescribing minimum prices to be paid by distributors the Director must take into consideration the "economic relationship of the price of fluid milk for the marketing area involved to the price of manufacturing milk, taking into consideration the additional costs incurred in producing and marketing fluid milk over and above such costs incurred in producing and marketing manufacturing milk." Sec. 735.4(b) (4).

A distributor is defined in section 735.3 (f) as "any person, whether or not such person is a producer or an association of producers, who purchases or handles fluid milk or fluid cream for sale, including brokers, agents, copartnerships, cooperative corporations and incorporated and unincorporated associations." Appellant contends that since it is a distributor under the statutory definition it is entitled to all the benefits of section 735.1(b) which provides that the cost to distributors within any marketing area shall be uniform with all other distributors purchasing milk under like terms and conditions; that since it is not permitted to deduct the cost of transporting the milk in bulk form from the producers' dairies to its place of distribution in San Diego, the cost to it is not uniform with that of other distributors. Appellant concedes the authority of the Director to establish reasonable regulations, including definitions, but asserts that he is without power either to enlarge or to abridge classifications established by the Legislature; that since the Legislature has defined a distributor as "any person, * * * who purchases or handles fluid milk or fluid cream for sale, * * *" the Director, by defining a distributor's plant as "any building in which milk is received, weighed, tested and processed for distribution to consumer", has placed a qualification upon the statutory definition of distributor which removes from the class of distributors all those who do not receive, weigh, test and process milk for distribution to the consumer in a plant in the San Diego County Marketing Area.

[3, 4] It is the function of the Legislature to declare a policy and fix the primary standard. To promote the purposes of the legislation and carry it into effect it may authorize an administrative or ministerial officer to "fill up the details" by prescribing administrative rules and regulations. First Industrial Loan Co. v. Daugherty, 26 Cal. 2d 545, 549, 159 P.2d 921. The rule is established, however, that a ministerial officer may not, under the guise of a rule or regulation thought necessary to carry out the purpose of an act, vary or enlarge the terms or conditions of the legislative enactment nor compel that to be done which lies without the scope of the statute. First Industrial Loan Co. v. Daugherty, supra; Whitcomb Hotel, Inc. v. California Emp. Com., 24 Cal.2d 753, 757, 151 P.2d 233, 155 A.L.R. 405; Boone v. Kingsbury, 206 Cal. 148, 161, 273 P. 797.

The Legislature in defining a distributor has not included in the definition any requirement that he process the milk. Any person "who purchases or handles fluid milk or fluid cream for sale, including brokers, agents * * *" is a distributor. Sec. 735.3(f). Thus a broker or an agent may be a distributor without having any processing plant or being a processor. Section 735.3 containing definitions, including that of distributor, was added to the code in 1935. Stats.1935, Ch. 241, p. 922. That section has been amended six times. Stats. 1937, Ch. 3, p. 44; Ch. 57, p. 151; Stats. 1939, Ch. 941, p. 2641; Stats.1941, Ch. 1214, p. 3008; Stats.1945, Ch. 1001, p. 1930; Stats.1949, Ch. 1400, p. 2444, but in none of the amendments has the Legislature changed the definition of distributor so as to require him to maintain a processing plant in the marketing area in which he distributes fluid milk nor has it indicated any such intent or authorized the Director to make any such requirement.

[5, 6] Neither the place of receiving the milk nor the place of processing is recognized by the Legislature in setting the standards under which the Director must operate. Under section 736.3 every producer is entitled to the price established for the marketing area in which his milk is finally sold and distributed and he must bear the cost of conveying his product to that area. The cost to the distributor must be uniform with that of all other distributors in the same area purchasing milk under like terms and conditions. Sec. 735.1 (b). The Director in defining a distributor's plant has added a requirement that the milk be processed in the plant in order that the distributor may deduct the cost of transportation from the producer's dairy to his plant. He has thereby established a separate classification of processor-distributor and the cost to the distributor is not uniform with that of other distributors in the area unless he falls within such classification. If the Director can define a distributor's plant as a building where milk is received, weighed, tested and processed for distribution he could as well enlarge the definition to include other functions not required by statute. He is without authority or jurisdiction so to vary the terms of the Milk Control Act.

[7, 8] Respondent asserts that since appellant does not have a processing plant in the San Diego Marketing Area it is not purchasing milk "under the same terms and conditions" as other distributors. That appellant has a different operating procedure from other distributors in that it chooses to process its milk at a place other than where it is distributed does not affect the terms and conditions under which it purchases milk. Respondent has not pointed out any substantial difference in the terms or conditions under which appellant purchases its milk from producers from the terms and conditions under which those distributors having processing plants in the area purchase milk. Appellant purchases quantities of milk for distribution in San Diego county for which it must pay the minimum producer price. The point at which milk is received does not in any way affect that minimum price, nor does the place of processing the product affect the conditions of purchase, since the only transportation charge which appellant is permitted to deduct from the minimum price to the producer is the cost of transporting the milk in bulk form from the dairy to its plant within the marketing area of sale and distribution to the consumer. Contrary to respondent's contention, appellant is not seeking to deduct the cost of transporting the milk in packaged form to its San Diego plant. The fact that it stops the milk enroute for the purpose of processing it should in nowise affect the rights to which it is entitled by statute.

Respondent's contention that the producer might be compelled to pay the cost of transportation of his product to any point in the state is without merit. The evidence is clear that there is not sufficient milk produced in the San Diego County Marketing Area to supply the requirements of that area and that about twenty per cent of the milk distributed there must be brought in from other areas. The producer need not contract to sell his product in the San Diego area if the cost of transportation would make it unprofitable. Upon the other hand, the producer might find it more profitable to pay the cost of transportation if he can thereby obtain the price for class 1 or class 2 milk which has a higher minimum price than that of class 3 or 4.

Judgment reversed with directions to make findings and conclusions and to enter judgment as follows: That the definition of "Distributor's Plant" as contained in Order Number 26 is void; that plaintiff is a distributor within the San Diego County Marketing Area; that the plant maintained by plaintiff in the San Diego County Marketing Area is a distributor's plant, and to make such other findings, conclusions and judgment as are necessary to conform with this opinion.

MOORE, P. J., and McCOMB, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 155

In re GREENHILL'S ESTATE.

GREENHILL et al. v. GREENHILL et al.

Civ. 17555.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 22, 1950.

Hearing Denied Oct. 19, 1950.

In the matter of the estate of Arthur A. Greenhill, deceased. Adelle L. Greenhill, deceased's widow, petitioned for probate of his will, which Arthur F. Greenhill and others contested. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Philip H. Richards, J., granting petitioner's motion for nonsuit at the close of contestants' evidence, admitting the will to probate and appointing petitioner as executrix, and from prior orders or decrees granting such motion, admitting the will to probate and granting petitioner letters testamentary, contestants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that contestants' evidence was insufficient to rebut the presumption of testator's testamentary capacity and that evidence of petitioner's activity in procuring execution of the will was insufficient to take to the jury the issue of her undue influence over testator.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Wills ⇐163(2)

Where confidential relation existed between testator and beneficiary of will and beneficiary unduly profits under and actively participated in procuring execution of will, presumption of beneficiary's undue influence over testator arises, and burden is on beneficiary to show that will was not induced by such influence.

2. Wills ⇐324(1)

In determining whether will contestants' evidence is sufficient to require submission of contest to jury, same rules apply as in civil cases.

3. Wills ⇐326

Every inference fairly deducible and every presumption fairly arising from evidence in will contestants' favor must be considered as facts proved in their favor on proponent's motion for nonsuit.

4. Wills ⇐326

Where evidence in will contest is fairly susceptible of two constructions or either of several inferences may reasonably be drawn therefrom, court must take view thereof most favorable to contestants on proponent's motion for nonsuit.

5. Wills ⇐326

All evidence in will contestants' favor must be taken as true and contradictory evidence disregarded on proponent's motion for nonsuit.

6. Wills ⇐324(1)

Any substantial evidence tending to prove all facts necessary to make out will contestants' case entitles them to submission of case to jury for verdict on merits.

7. Wills ⇐324(1)

Where different conclusions may be reasonably drawn by different minds from same evidence in will contest, decision must be left to triers of facts.

8. Wills ⇐326, 386

In determining will proponent's motion for nonsuit in will contest, neither trial court, nor District Court of Appeal, on appeal from judgment granting motion, can weigh evidence or pass on witnesses' credibility.

9. Wills ⇐1

A testator may dispose of his property as he wills, without consulting or satisfying wishes or views of juries or courts. Probate Code, § 20.

10. Wills ⇐324(1)

Whether a will is just or unjust in minds of others than testator is matter of opinion, and jury cannot be permitted to determine such question without substantial evidence required by law.

11. Wills ⇐155(1)

Undue influence over testator presupposes his testamentary responsibility or competency, which is essential to existence of such influence.

12. Wills ⇐52(1), 55(1)

The presumption is that testator was of sound mind at time of executing will, and burden rests on contestants thereof to show affirmatively, by preponderance of evidence, testator's mental incapacity and resulting bequest of his property in different manner than he otherwise would have bequeathed it.

13. Wills ⇐52(1)

The presumption of testator's testamentary capacity at time of executing will is rebutted only by substantial evidence that he was unable to understand and carry in his mind nature and situation of his property, his relations to his relatives and those around him, the act he was performing, and his relation to objects of his bounty.

14. Wills ⇐52(6)

To invalidate will, claimed infirmities of testator's mind or body must be shown to have had direct bearing on testamentary act.

15. Wills ⇐55(5), 164(7)

Evidence that testator was on hospital's critical list, with his death expected at any moment, when he signed will, that house physician, just two hours before will was signed, ceased questioning testator because further questioning might cause his death, that he was given pantopon, morphine and quinidine shortly after heart attack resulting in his death, and that he was in pain and nauseated shortly before signing will, was admissible as material in ascertaining effect of influence alleged to have been exerted over him by his wife, but insufficient to rebut presumption of his testamentary capacity.

16. Wills ⇐163(2)

Activity of testator's wife in procuring execution of will, naming her as principal beneficiary, must be shown to raise presumption of her undue influence over testator, even if confidential relationship existed between them solely because of husband and wife relationship.

17. Wills ⇐166(7)

Evidence of wife's opportunity to influence husband's mind in executing will, with possible interest or motive to do so, is insufficient to invalidate will on ground of wife's undue influence, but proven circumstances must be inconsistent with voluntary action by testator to overthrow will.

18. Wills ⇐324(3)

Evidence was insufficient to take to jury issue of wife's undue influence over husband in procuring his execution of will naming her as principal beneficiary.

19. Wills ⇐324(3)

To invalidate will on ground of undue influence over testator by his wife, substantial evidence that pressure was brought to bear by her directly on testamentary act must be produced.

20. Wills ⇐166(7)

Evidence that testator's wife was so situated as to have opportunity to influence testator's mind unduly at time of his execution of will or that her actions at such time were suspicious was insufficient to support finding of her undue influence over testator, in view of statutory presumption of innocence of wrongdoing. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 1.

21. Wills ⇐322

In will contest, evidence of testator's declarations that he intended to take care of contestants, who were his children, was admissible only to show relations between them and testator and state of his mind with reference to them.

22. Wills ⇐324(3)

Evidence that testator's wife called testator's attorney, who was selected by testator and had prepared will for him, to draw another will shortly before testator's death, was insufficient to take to jury question of wife's undue influence over testator in procuring execution of will.

23. Wills ⇐384

In absence of sufficient evidence of testator's widow's activity in procuring execution of will to raise issue for jury as to her undue influence over testator, exclusion of evidence of value of estate to be received by widow under will was not prejudicial to will contestants.

24. Wills ⇐371½

Attempted appeals from orders or decrees granting will proponent's motion for nonsuit in will contest, admitting will to probate, and granting proponent letters testamentary, were dismissed as reviewable on appeal taken from judgment entered on such order or decrees.

E. P. Mulholland, Geo. W. Trammell, Long Beach, for appellants.

Perry & Bush, Redondo Beach, John R. A. Girling, Betty B. Gillette, Los Angeles, for respondents.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Arthur A. Greenhill died testate April 8, 1949, at the age of 65. His attested will, dated April 7, 1949, provided for legacies of $10.00 each to his four children by first and second marriages, Arthur, Lorna, Joan, and Kenneth (contestants and appellants herein), and to two stepchildren by his fourth and last marriage, Kenneth and Naomi (legatees and respondents herein). The remainder of his estate was bequeathed and devised to his widow, Adelle (petitioner and respondent herein), whom he had married four and one half months prior to his death, and she was named as executrix.

The widow, Adelle Greenhill, petitioned for probate of the will, whereupon decedent's four children by previous marriages filed their grounds of opposition thereto contesting the validity of the execution and attestation of the will, the testamentary capacity of decedent, and alleging undue influence and fraudulent representations on the part of the widow. Of these, only two grounds of opposition were relied on at the trial: (1) That the will was executed under the undue influence of the widow, and (2) that it was executed at a time when the decedent lacked testamentary capacity. At the close of contestants' introduction of evidence, proponents' motion for nonsuit was granted and judgment accordingly entered granting said motion, admitting the will to probate, appointing the widow executrix, and ordering that letters testamentary be issued upon her taking the prescribed oath.

[1] Upon this appeal contestants insist that they were entitled to have their case submitted to the jury on both of the grounds upon which the will was assailed. As to the first ground of undue influence, appellants set forth the well-established rule that where there exists a combination of three factors, namely, (1) a confidential relationship between the beneficiary and the testator, (2) undue profiting by the beneficiary under the will, and (3) actual and active participation by the beneficiary in procuring the execution of the will, a presumption of undue influence arises and the burden is on the beneficiary to show the will was not induced by his undue influence. Citing In re Estate of Graves, 202 Cal. 258, 259 P. 935; In re Estate of

Lances, 216 Cal. 397, 14 P.2d 768; In re Estate of Gallo, 61 Cal.App. 163, 214 P. 496; In re Estate of Rabinowitz, 58 Cal. App.2d 106, 135 P.2d 579; Estate of Johnson, 31 Cal.App.2d 251, 87 P.2d 900; In re Estate of Teel, 25 Cal.2d 520, 154 P.2d 384.

[2-8] As to both the first ground of undue influence and the second ground of lack of testamentary capacity, appellants emphasize the necessity of applying the well-settled rules governing the dispositions of motions for nonsuits, quoting from the Estate of Gallo, 61 Cal.App. 163, at page 173, 214 P. 496, at page 501: "'In determining whether or not in a proceeding to contest a will, the evidence produced by the contestants is sufficient to require the submission of the case to the jury the same rules apply as in civil cases. Every favorable inference fairly deducible and every favorable presumption fairly arising from the evidence produced must be considered as facts proved in favor of the contestants. Where evidence is fairly susceptible of two constructions, or if either of several inferences may reasonably be made, the court must take the view most favorable to the contestants. All the evidence in favor of the contestants must be taken as true, and if contradictory evidence has been given it must be disregarded. If there is any substantial evidence tending to prove in favor of the contestants all the facts necessary to make out their case, they are entitled to have the case go to the jury for a verdict on the merits.' (Citing cases.)" In re Estate of Rabinowitz, supra, which was an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit, states: "* * * In other words, where different conclusions may be reasonably drawn by different minds from the same evidence, the decision must be left to the triers of fact. In determining the motion for a nonsuit the trial court was not authorized to, nor can this court on appeal, either weigh the evidence or pass upon the credibility of witnesses." [58 Cal.App.2d 106, 135 P.2d 581.]

[9, 10] But in applying these rules another consideration must be borne in mind, so aptly expressed by this Court in the Estate of Burns, 26 Cal.App.2d 741, 748, 80 P.2d 77, 81: "Reviewing the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the judgment of nonsuit in the light of settled and established legal principles, we are confronted first of all with the fact that every person of sound mind over the age of eighteen years may dispose of his separate property by will. Prob.Code, sec. 20. As was said in an especially well-considered opinion prepared by Mr. Presiding Justice Nourse of Division Two of the First Appellate District in the Matter of the Estate of Nolan, [25 Cal.App.2d 738], 78 P.2d 456, 457, 'the property of the testator is his to dispose of as he wills, and he is not called upon to consult or satisfy the wishes or views of juries or courts (citing cases); and "whether in the minds of others a will is just or unjust is a matter of opinion, and to permit a jury to determine the question without that substantial evidence which the law requires would be to permit a jury to make the disposition irrespective of the desires of a testator." In re Estate of Donovan, 114 Cal.App. 228, 233, 299 P. 816.'"

Bearing in mind the limitations of the above rules, the record discloses the following facts: Decedent lived at Redondo Beach in Los Angeles County and was a retired businessman deriving his income from his rental properties. He had four adult children by two previous marriages with whom he maintained friendly relations, and he visited at the home of his eldest daughter, appellant Lorna A. Callahan, on the average of once a week. He was very proud of his grandchildren and often presented them and his children with gifts, not, however, constituting advancements.

The eldest daughter testified that during his third marriage, decedent suffered two or three heart attacks similar to the one from which his death ensued and his children were called to his "supposed death bed." Decedent became very "will conscious." In the words of his daughter:

"A. * * * We rather kidded about it. It was rather sort of his indoor sport. He always was having a will on the table. We weren't supposed to look at it, but we were supposed to look at it. It was just sort of a teaser. I think he just enjoyed us looking over what he had. If one of us looked, then we joked, 'You are out of the will,' then the other one would say, 'I was out last week, so we are even.' But dad seriously said, 'You kids will never starve because you are my kids, and I will see to it that you are taken care of.' He gave us that understanding.

"Q. How often did he make a will? Was it one a year or several a year, or what? A. Well, that is hard to say. He might have made six; he may have made a dozen; I don't know.

* * * * * *

"* * * he came to my house after Mrs. Greenhill, the third Mrs. Greenhill, died; and he said he would make a temporary will. Some day or other he was going to make one that would stick, I guess, but he had me make this will."

There was further testimony by the eldest daughter that the previous wills made disposition of his estate to his four children and his grandchildren only. At one of his "supposed death beds" he told Lorna that she need not worry about the second mortgage on her home because he was going to see to it that it would be paid. There was discussion between the father and daughter about naming her as executrix of his estate. On January 21, 1948, she wrote to her father asking that she be relieved of the responsibilities attendant upon acting as executrix of his will because "the way you're bequeathing your property is so involved that I would never have a free minute for at least fifteen years after your demise." After expressing her appreciation for the confidence reposed in her by her father as well as for making her "one of your heirs," said daughter continued, "and if after reading this letter you decide to cut me out, that is all right, too. It is your money, and you have a perfect right to do what you want with it. * * *

"In the meantime, come and see me as usual. You are welcome any time. * * *"

Sometime in January, 1948, decedent met Adelle Greenhill, respondent widow herein. He saw her twice between January and July or August, 1948, visited her often thereafter, and they were married November 22, 1948. He continued his friendly visits with his children and his aforesaid wife often accompanied him.

On January 17, 1949, decedent retained Auten F. Bush as his attorney in an unlawful detainer action. The following month he visited his lawyer's office alone for the purpose of having a will drawn. Decedent instructed his attorney to draw the will so that respondent wife would receive all of his estate, subject to legacies of $10.00 to each of his children and each of the widow's children, but if she predeceased him, the estate was to be placed in trust for his grandchildren. Mr. Bush and his partner, Mr. Perry, proceeded to draw the will in accordance with the instructions given. On February 23d, Mr. Bush's secretary made a transcription of a telephone conversation she had with decedent wherein he dictated to her from a memorandum concerning a portion of his assets. Subsequently the memorandum in decedent's handwriting from which the foregoing transcription was made was delivered to Mr. Bush's office. Approximately two weeks after February 23d, both Mr. and Mrs. Greenhill visited Attorney Bush's office. By this time the will was ready for execution except that the last page was not complete in that it lacked the dates of birth of the grandchildren. Mr. Bush related the contents of the will to both Mr. and Mrs. Greenhill and told Mr. Greenhill that he would have to insert the dates before the will could be completed. After this conference, Mr. Bush testified that he recalled talking to Mrs. Greenhill over the phone "pertaining to whether or not the will was ready," and "that she either called or I have talked to her on that." As to phone conversations with Mr. Greenhill, Attorney Bush testified:

"Q. Do you recall communicating with him subsequent to this second visit? A. I had a phone conversation with him. The last one that I can recall where—I don't know whether he called me or I called him; I don't know that; I believe he called me.

"Q. Approximately when was that? A. It was in the latter part of March, because at that conversation I asked him about those dates and told him that the will wouldn't be ready until we had those dates, and he made some remark, 'Well, I am not going to worry about that,' or something indicating that he wasn't going to be bothered right at the moment to supply the dates."

The will with the trust provisions was never completed or executed.

On April 7, 1949, at about 4:00 p. m., the decedent was stricken with a heart attack while playing cards at the Fortune Club in Gardena. Dr. Harry Breetwor, who was in the club at the time, testified:

"A. The man was cold, clammy, semi-conscious, no pulse, blood pressure was hardly discernible; we gave him a third of a grain of pantopon, which is equivalent to about a quarter of a grain of morphine, intravenously, and gradually the pulse started to pick up; and he was able to talk at that time. I asked him if he had pain in his chest, and he put his hand on his chest here. I waited about ten or fifteen minutes, and I again questioned him. I said, 'Is that pain still pretty bad?' and he shook his head yes, and then I gave him another injection of the same, a third of a grain of pantopon, intravenously. He gradually improved, and his blood pressure gradually picked up; and we were all of this time trying to get his wife. In fact, I think the club contacted the wife, and his own private physician also was called by the wife, as I understand it; and they were on their way. The man, himself, supplied the information, even though we looked at his identification to get his number; he did indicate the proper numbers to call. Then he gradually revived and improved, as far as blood pressure and pulse picked up."

Dr. Breetwor testified that the effect of the sedative, pantopon, takes place immediately and wears off in about two hours. Decedent told Dr. Breetwor how to contact Mrs. Greenhill and suggested his choice of a hospital. He was conscious all of the time. The resuscitating squad from the sheriff's office arrived and administered oxygen. Mrs. Greenhill and the family physician arrived and accompanied decedent in an ambulance to the Harbor General Hospital in Torrance. At 5:45 p. m. decedent was admitted to the hospital ward on a stretcher, where Dr. Kassel, a resident physician, attended him.

Dr. Kassel started questioning the patient and then he "stopped questioning the man because he appeared to be critically ill, and I felt that any added effort on his part might increase the possibility of a demise; and as long as his wife was there and she was able to give me an adequate story, I proceeded to question his wife." Dr. Kassel thought that the patient was under the effect of a narcotic, that he was critically ill, and that he had what was commonly known as a heart attack. The patient appeared to be suffering from pain and he also mentioned that he did have pain. Dr. Kassel felt the patient "was sick enough and required a private room; and despite that they were being occupied I had the nurse remove one of the patients from a private room and substitute Mr. Greenhill there."

Dr. Kassel was in attendance upon the testator for approximately one-half to three-quarters of an hour. During that time according to the physician, decedent "may have spoken a few words" to his wife. During this interval, according to the testimony of Dr. Kassel, respondent wife inquired "if it would be possible to bring a lawyer so that Mr. Greenhill might sign his will, or make out his will." Dr. Kassel referred her to a nurse to make the telephone call asking the attorney to come to the hospital.

Because he was of the opinion that the testator might "die at any minute" Dr. Kassel placed him on what is known as the "critical list."

The physician prescribed quinidine, a preparation intended to "cause the heart to quiet down so that it may return to a normal rhythm." According to his testimony, in order "to ease the pain and apprehension on the part of the patient," he "also prescribed morphine, ordered the nurse to give him one dose medically, and then ordered her to give him doses subsequently, as required, on the part of the patient." In answer to a question as to how much morphine he ordered the nurse to give the patient, the physician testified: "A quarter of a grain, medically, and then to continue that every three hours, as required by the patient, for the control of his pain."

In describing the pain suffered by testator, Dr. Kassel testified, "Well, it is described differently by individuals. I don't know whether you can call it pain. Many people describe it as an oppression from the chest as though they had a steel wire bound and being tightened, pressing their chest. Some authorities in medicine describe it as being, perhaps, the most severe pain that an individual can tolerate. Some people think it is a gnawing ache, some a sharp pain; it is described variously."

The doctor then testified as follows:

"Q. Does that bring with it any premonition of death or feeling of imminence of death? A. Peculiarly, in this condition they say that the individual has an impending feeling of death. They get the feeling that they are going to die."

Dr. Kassel also testified that he did not give testator a "complete examination," that he "thought he was very ill and the less done with him the better." Oxygen was ordered for the patient. Dr. Kassel was in attendance upon testator from 5:55 p. m. until 6:30 or 6:45 p. m. and returned again at 10:25 p. m. The physician testified that while he was with the testator the latter was fully awake and conscious and talked rationally insofar as the questions directed to him were concerned.

With reference to medication administered to testator the hospital nurse testified that at 6:30 p. m. the patient "was given a quarter grain of morphine by hypo," and "at 6:35 he was given three grains of quinidine, as ordered. At 7:00 he was transferred to a private room. * * * At 8:00 he was resting quietly. At 9:00 he was given 300 milligrams of dicumarol, as ordered. And I have, color seems somewhat improved, pulse fair, with dozing at intervals. And at 11:00 he had three more grains of quinidine, as ordered, and that is all I have charted."

With reference to the arrival of Attorney Bush and execution of the will, the aforesaid hospital nurse testified that respondent Mrs. Greenhill "came to the office and she was very upset, and she wanted to notify Mr. Bush." Because the telephones were located some considerable distance away the nurse volunteered that "if she would give me the number I would get in touch with Mr. Bush for her."

The nurse called Attorney Bush, advised him that Mr. Greenhill was in the hospital, "that he was critically ill and that Mrs. Greenhill wanted to see him." The attorney advised that he "would be down as soon as he could," which message was transmitted by the nurse to respondent Mrs. Greenhill.

The nurse also testified that prior to being moved into a private room, testator "knew that he was in a county hospital, and he knew that he was out in the ward; and he didn't like it," and that "he was more satisfied when he was in a private room."

Coming now to the circumstances immediately surrounding the preparation and execution of the testamentary document in question, the record reflects that about 6:30 o'clock on the evening of April 7, 1949, Attorney Bush received a telephone call at his home from a then unidentified lady who said, "This is the Harbor General Hospital, and we have a patient here by the name of Arthur A. Greenhill who has asked that you come over right away and bring the will which you have prepared." Mr. Bush asked Mr. Richardson, his dinner guest, to accompany him and the two of them drove to the hospital, stopping en route at Mr. Bush's office to pick up the incomplete will. They arrived at the hospital about 7:00 p. m. where the guard directed them to Ward C-9. Mr. Bush testified that Mr. Greenhill was lying in a hospital bed—

"* * * He was, as I recall it now they had part of the bed raised so he wasn't sitting up, but, I believe, he was at an angle there; his back was, maybe, at a fifteen- or twenty-degree angle from the floor. He had on an oxygen mask, and, well, when I came in he shook hands with me—just—I didn't offer my hand to him, he offered his to me, and I was careful not to grasp his hand, and he gave me a pretty firm grip. I don't mean to imply that it was a strong grip, but he gave me an ordinary grip, which impressed me at the time; with that mask on there, and, of course, anything like that gave me the impression that the man must be sick.

* * * * * *

"* * * when I first went in there, I asked him, 'What are you doing here, and what is the matter?' And he said he had had a heart attack, and then he told me, he said, 'I was over at the Fortune Club playing cards, and I had two 2's and two ace's and drew the third ace, and it was too much for me.' And he was kind of joking about it, jovial; he didn't—I guess—excuse me. He appeared to be regarding it in a humorous manner, the incident."

The attorney testified that Mr. Greenhill asked him if he had the will and he answered, "I have it, but it is not completed because, as you know, we have never had the dates of the births of the grandchildren. * * * But I can redraft the will that everything goes to Mrs. Greenhill. You won't need the trust anyway; this is really an emergency." Mr. Greenhill told him to "go ahead and draw it up."

During this conversation, Mr. Richardson was standing in the doorway of the room and Mr. Bush asked him to come in, introduced him to Mr. Greenhill and they shook hands in a firm handshake. Mr. Richardson testified that Mr. Greenhill had on an oxygen mask that he took on and off. Mr. Bush and Mr. Richardson then left and went down to one of the nurse's offices where Mr. Bush prepared the will. Mr. Bush copied the previously prepared will in longhand, omitting the trust provisions, and in doing so, pointed out to both the nurse and Mr. Richardson that he was copying the previously prepared will. He and Mr. Richardson then returned to Mr. Greenhill's room. Mrs. Greenhill either entered the room before them or right after them. Mr. Bush asked Mr. Greenhill if he wished to read the will and Mr. Greenhill requested Mr. Bush to read it to him, which he did. Mr. Bush asked Mr. Greenhill if that was the way he wished the will and Mr. Greenhill "said words to the effect that yes, it was that he wanted to leave everything to his wife, and that the last six or eight months of his life, apparently the length of time that he had been married or known Mrs. Greenhill, had been the happiest of his life.

* * * * * *

"* * * I had been standing toward the foot of the bed, and as he was asked to sign the will—Mrs. Greenhill at that time had entered the room, and she made a move toward him—and he said, 'No,' he said, 'I want this young man'—or something to that effect—'at the end of the bed,' and he pointed to me to hold him up while he signed it; and I stepped over there and put my arm around him and held him up into a sitting position, and he signed it with the papers on his lap."

At Mr. Bush's suggestion, Mr. Greenhill also initialled the first page of the will. During the second visit to the room, Mr. Richardson testified that the patient appeared alert, that he was coughing or was nauseated and that he had a little pan into which he regurgitated.

According to the testimony of both Mr. Bush and Mr. Richardson the will was executed with the proper formalities. Mr. Greenhill died at 1:58 p. m. the following day.

The record further discloses that the hospital nurse testified that while Attorney Bush and his friend and attesting witness, Mr. Richardson, were in the room the nurse entered to ask testator "if he was still nauseated, and how he felt. * * *

He said he felt better. I asked him if he was having any pain, and he told me no."

On the basis of this evidence, appellants contend that they were entitled to have the issues of lack of testamentary capacity and undue influence submitted to the jury.

[11] Inasmuch as undue influence is said to presuppose testamentary responsibility or competency, and to require it as essential to the existence of undue influence, 1 Page on Wills, 3d Ed.1941, sec. 185, p. 369; 26 Cal.Jur. 642, the issue of competency will be considered first. Appellants emphasize that when Mr. Greenhill signed the purported will:

(1) he was on the "critical list" when death was expected any moment;

(2) he had been placed in a private room from whence another patient had been removed expressly for the accommodation of decedent;

(3) just two hours before the will in question was signed the house physician ceased his preliminary questioning of the decedent because, in his opinion, any further questioning of the decedent might result in his death;

(4) he was not able to breathe sufficiently unless he had an oxygen mask;

(5) shortly after his heart attack at the Fortune Club, Dr. Breetwor gave him a third of a grain of pantopon; at 6:30 p. m. the nurse at the hospital gave him a quarter grain of morphine, and at 6:35 p. m. she gave him three grains of quinidine.

(6) At exactly 7:00 p. m., according to the hospital nurse and the hospital charts, the decedent was in pain and was nauseated.

[12] In the Estate of Llewellyn, 83 Cal.App.2d 534, 189 P.2d 822, 835, 191 P.2d 419, this Court held that a verdict should have been directed in favor of the proponent of the will, and reversed the judgment. The right of the trial court to direct a verdict in a will contest is the same as its right to grant a nonsuit. In re Estate of Bemmerly, 110 Cal.App 550, 294 P. 33. In the Llewellyn case, this Court said: "The presumption always is that a person was of 'sound mind' at the time of the execution of his will, and the burden therefore always rests upon the contestants to show affirmatively, and by a preponderance of the evidence, the incapacity of the testator, and the further fact that except for alleged infirmities of mind or body, he bequeathed his property in a manner that he otherwise would not have done.

[13] "Giving a consideration to all of the foregoing evidence introduced by contestants and respondents, we must hold that it falls far short of constituting what the law regards as a rebuttal of the presumption of testamentary capacity at the time of the execution of the will, the existence of which is destroyed only when by substantial evidence it is shown that a testator was unable to understand and carry in his mind the nature and situation of his property, his relations to his relatives and those around him, incapable of understanding the act he is performing, and the relation in which he stands to the objects of his bounty if any."

[14, 15] The claimed infirmities of mind or body must be shown to have had a direct bearing upon the testamentary act. In re Estate of Russell, 80 Cal.App.2d 711, 182 P.2d 318. While the factors stressed by appellants are material in ascertaining the effect of the influence alleged to have been exerted, considering the physical and mental condition of the testator, they fall far short of constituting a rebuttal of the presumption of testamentary capacity. There was no evidence presented showing any irrationality on the part of the testator or that he was not conscious of his surroundings and his acts either before or during the time of the execution of his will. This total lack of evidence plus the fact that the executed will contained essentially the same provisions as a previously prepared will left the trial court with no alternative other than to grant a nonsuit as to the issue of lack of testamentary capacity.

[16] As to the issue of undue influence, appellants claim a prima facie showing of the three factors constituting a presumption of undue influence: (1) a confidential relationship between respondent wife and testator; (2) undue profit by respondent wife under the will; and (3) activity on the part of respondent wife in procuring the execution of the will. As to the first factor, appellants rely solely upon the relationship of husband and wife, citing In re Estate of Teel, 25 Cal.2d 520, 154 P.2d 384, 388: "A fiduciary relationship exists between husband and wife in respect to the issue of undue influence in a will contest, and where such fiduciary relationship is combined with unduly profiting by the will, and its being unnatural, and activity on the part of the proponent in procuring its execution, we have persuasive evidence of undue influence." Conceding a confidential relationship based solely on the husband and wife relationship, activity on the part of respondent in procuring execution of the will must be shown to raise a presumption of undue influence. The appellants set forth the following facts as evidence of such activity:

(1) Sometime after February, 1948, respondent wife called Bush, the attorney, twice to inquire whether the will was completed;

(2) Respondent wife on one occasion called at Mr. Bush's office with the decedent in reference to the preparation of the will;

(3) After Dr. Kassel, the resident physician at the Harbor General Hospital, had completed his first examination of Mr. Greenhill, respondent wife approached the doctor and inquired if it would be possible to bring in a lawyer to make his will;

(4) After this conversation with Dr. Kassel, respondent wife went to the nurse and procured her to call the attorney and request that he come to the hospital to make the will;

(5) Respondent wife was in the decedent's room throughout the time that the will, as prepared by the attorney at the hospital, was read to the testator and when it was executed by him.

[17] In the Estate of Llewellyn, supra, with reference to activity on the part of the person charged with exercising undue influence, this Court stated, 83 Cal.App. 2d at page 565, 189 P.2d at page 840: "In the instant case the evidence conclusively shows that the will was prepared from directions given by the testator to his attorney and there is very strong evidence that it was the testator's voluntary act. In re Estate of Fraser, 75 Cal. App.2d 99, 104, 170 P.2d 704. The evidence in the case at bar of activity on the part of appellant is far more lacking in substantiality than that present in In re Estate of Hamburger, 126 Cal.App. 455, 463, 464, 14 P.2d 802, wherein it was held that a motion for nonsuit was properly granted. In the case now engaging our attention, nothing more was shown than the presence of an opportunity for appellant to influence the testator's mind with a possible interest or motive so to do. This is totally insufficient. Before a testamentary document will be overthrown because of the exercise of undue influence, the proven circumstances must be inconsistent with voluntary action on the part of the testator."

In the Estate of Burns, 26 Cal.App.2d 741, 750, 80 P.2d 77, 82, wherein a judgment of nonsuit was affirmed, this Court said: "There is nothing in the record before us inconsistent with the idea that the testatrix executed the will here in controversy without any previous suggestion of such action by anyone, and entirely of her own free will, without influence or coercion of any kind. The burden was on the contestants to show the contrary, and it is not sufficient for a contestant merely to prove circumstances consistent with the exercise of undue influence, but before a will can be overthrown, the circumstances must be inconsistent with voluntary action on the part of the testatrix. In re Estate of Morcel, 162 Cal. 188, 121 P. 733; In re Estate of Donovan, 114 Cal.App. 228, 299 P. 816. See, also, In re Estate of Presho, 196 Cal. 639, 238 P. 944, and In re Estate of McDevitt, supra [95 Cal. 17, 30 P. 101]. The evidence in this case, when weighed by the standard here enunciated, falls far short of showing any such undue influence as in effect destroyed the testatrix' free agency and overwhelmed her volition at the time of making the will with which we are here concerned."

[18] The five instances of activity on the part of the respondent wife set forth by appellants herein fall far short of sufficient evidence to warrant determination of the issue of undue influence by a jury.

For support of the statement just made it becomes necessary to do no more than cite the following cases, in which the evidence was much stronger than appears in the instant case, and yet was held insufficient to justify the setting aside of the testamentary documents there under consideration: In re Estate of Perkins, 195 Cal. 699, 235 P. 45; In re Estate of Clark, 170 Cal. 418, 149 P. 828; In re Estate of Purcell, 164 Cal. 300, 128 P. 932; In re Estate of Casarotti, 184 Cal. 73, 192 P. 1085; In re Estate of Finkler, 3 Cal.2d 584, 46 P.2d 149; In re Estate of Garvey, 38 Cal.App.2d 449, 101 P.2d 551.

[19-22] In the case at bar we fail to perceive any substantial evidence that pressure was brought to bear by respondent widow directly upon the testamentary act, and it is the law that such evidence must be produced. In re Estate of Arnold, 16 Cal.2d 573, 577, 107 P.2d 25; In re Estate of Carithers, 156 Cal. 422, 428, 105 P. 127; In re Estate of Gleason, 164 Cal. 756, 765, 130 P. 872. Conceding that the evidence herein is sufficient to show that respondent wife was so situated as to have an opportunity to unduly influence the mind of the testator, or that the actions and conduct of the said respondent might be regarded as suspicious, such evidence is insufficient to support a finding of undue influence. There is a presumption that one is innocent of crime or wrongdoing. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1963, subd. 1. The declarations of testator that he intended to "take care" of appellants was admissible only to show the relations between them and the state of the testator's mind with reference to his children. Securing an attorney to draw a will for another has been held not to constitute participation. In re Estate of Hull, 63 Cal.App.2d 135, 139, 142, 146 P.2d 242. In the instant case the evidence conclusively shows that Attorney Bush was testator's attorney, selected originally by him, represented him in other litigation, and had, as heretofore noted prepared a previous will for him. In Re Estate of Hamburger, 126 Cal.App. 455, 463, 464, 14 P.2d 802, wherein it was held that a motion for nonsuit was properly granted, the evidence of activity was much stronger in substantiality than is present in the case now engaging our attention.

[23] Appellants also claim the trial court erred in refusing to admit evidence showing the value of the estate to be received by the widow. In view of the fact that a nonsuit should have been granted in the trial court on the issue of undue influence because of lack of evidence as to activity on the part of the respondent widow, the trial court's ruling on admissibility of this evidence is of little consequence and certainly not prejudicial.

[24] The attempted appeals from the order or decree granting motion for nonsuit, the order or decree admitting will to probate, and the order or decree granting letters testamentary are, and each is, dismissed for the reason that in the instant case such orders and decrees are reviewable on an appeal from the judgment entered thereon. The judgment is affirmed.

DRAPEAU, J., concurs.

DORAN, J., dissents.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

99 Cal.App.2d 151

HENNESSEY v. PUERTAS.
Civ. 17345.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.
Aug. 22, 1950.

Action by William Hennessey against Bonifacio Puertas, Jr., for an order quashing a writ of execution and vacating and declaring void a purported sheriff's sale under the writ. The Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County, Ray B. Lyon, J., entered an order quashing the writ, and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that since the judgment constituted only a declaration of the rights and duties of the parties under the provisions of the lease, order quashing the writ was proper.

Orders affirmed.

Execution ⇐7

Where lease provided for increase in rental if lessee erected buildings on premises and used them for financial gain, and lessor brought action for determination of rental value of addition to premises, judgment by agreement that lessor was entitled to rent of $75 per month was merely declaratory of rights of parties and was not a money judgment on which execution could issue.

Renetzky & Davis, Laura O. Coffield, all of San Luis Obispo, for appellant.

A. H. Brazil, San Luis Obispo, for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff has appealed from an order of the superior court quashing a writ of execution, vacating and declaring void a purported sheriff's sale under the writ, and denying plaintiff's motion to strike certain affidavits filed by defendant. The question presented is whether the judgment under which the writ was issued is a judgment for the payment of money or merely a judgment declaratory of the rights of the parties under the terms of a lease.

Plaintiff in his complaint filed November 12, 1942, set forth the terms of a certain lease between plaintiff as lessor and one Miller as lessee, which lease was assigned to defendant, successor to the lessee. The lease contained the following provision: "It is agreed by and between the parties hereto that Lessee may erect other buildings on said premises in addition to the frame building now situate thereon. If said buildings are to be erected and are to be used for financial gain, as distinguished from occupancy by Lessee or his agents for a dwelling, then it is agreed that the Lessor hereunder is entitled to an increase in the amount of rent; and if the parties hereto cannot agree upon the amount of increase then and in that event the amount shall be determined and fixed by the arbitration, the said Lessor and Lessee each appointing an arbitrator, and in case the two arbitrators so selected cannot agree, then John J. Hutchins, attorney at Law, Paso Robles, California, shall appoint a third arbitrator, and the decision of any two of the said arbitrators, delivered in writing to the parties hereto shall be conclusive evidence and binding upon the parties hereto."

Plaintiff further alleged that defendant erected improvements for use in his business and not as a dwelling; that plaintiff informed defendant that he had appointed an arbitrator to determine the increase in rent pursuant to the terms of the lease, but that defendant refused to appoint an arbitrator.

The prayer of the complaint was as follows:

"1. That this honorable court determine the rental value of said addition to the premises described herein as and from the 4th day of September, 1942, or that this Court appoint sufficient appraisers or arbitrators to determine the reasonable rental value of said addition.

"2. That this honorable court award this plaintiff an increase of rental in the amount found reasonable from September 4, 1942 to the termination of said lease.

"3. For a reasonable amount as and for attorney fees for plaintiff; costs of suit; and for such other and further relief as is meet and proper in the premises."

On December 21, 1943, the parties entered into a stipulation which recited the provision of the lease above quoted and that "the facts set forth in the complaint are true" and then provided:

"Now, Therefore, it is agreed that a judgment shall be entered in the premises in favor of plaintiff and against defendant providing that said plaintiff shall be entitled to rents from said defendant for the premises described in said lease for the sum of $75.00 on the 10th day of September, 1942, and $75.00 on the 10th day of each and every month thereafter up to the 10th day of February, 1951, inclusive.

"It is hereby agreed that judgment shall be entered herein at Court."

Pursuant to the stipulation judgment was entered as follows: "That Defendant, Bonifacio Puertas, Jr., pay to plaintiff, William Hennessey, the sum of $75.00 on the 10th day of September, 1942, and $75.00 on the 10th day of each and every month thereafter up to the 10th day of February, 1951, inclusive, subject to the terms and conditions of that certain lease, a copy of which is affixed to the complaint on file herein and therein marked Exhibit 'A', as and for rents on that certain premises * * *."

Nothing further of importance on this appeal occurred in the action, until August 17, 1948, when plaintiff secured the issuance of a writ of execution by presenting to the clerk of the superior court an affidavit that the sum of $1,322.50 was unpaid on the judgment. The writ was delivered to the Sheriff of Fresno County, who levied upon and sold real property of the defendant. Defendant then moved to quash the writ and vacate the sale, supporting the motion with affidavits. The court in its decision on the motion found: "That the judgment heretofore entered in the above-entitled case was judgment of declaratory relief establishing the rental to be paid by the lessee under the terms of the agreement referred to in the original complaint; that the said judgment prescribed the payment of $75.00 per month according to the terms of said lease and did not constitute a judgment for said sum, enabling the plaintiff to secure a writ of execution thereon; * * *."

The decision of the judge of the court below was obviously correct. The plaintiff's complaint in the action sought only declaratory relief, with an incidental award of costs and attorney's fees. The stipulation for judgment does not provide that plaintiff shall recover $75 per month from defendant, but that "said plaintiff shall be entitled to rents from said defendant for the premises described in said lease" of $75 per month. The inept language of the judgment, that defendant "pay to plaintiff" $75 per month, cannot control, in view of the record above recited and the further language of the judgment that such payment is "subject to the terms and conditions of that certain lease." The plaintiff by his action sought only declaratory relief; the stipulation for judgment clearly contemplated only declaratory relief; and the judgment itself, while it provides that defendant "pay * * * to plaintiff", further provides that such payment is "subject to" the terms of the lease."

The only reasonable construction is that the judgment constitutes a declaration of the rights and duties of the parties under the provisions of the lease, and no more. The construction urged by appellant would require a holding that defendant had in effect authorized confession of judgment for any unpaid rent accruing at any time in the future. The error of such a construction, in the light of the record, is manifest. At the time the action was brought, the plaintiff had no cause of action for unpaid rent except for such increased rent as might be awarded pursuant to the provision for increased rent if improvements were added. We have considered the authorities cited by appellant and do not deem them applicable here.

Our conclusion upon the main question presented renders it unnecessary to consider the merits of appellant's contention that the affidavits filed by respondent in support of his motion should have been stricken. Irrespective of the affidavits, the court's decision was correct.

The orders appealed from are, and each is, affirmed.

DORAN and DRAPEAU, JJ., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 274

Ex parte McLAIN.
Cr. 4510.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 30, 1950.

Habeas corpus proceeding by George H. McLain, who had been committed for constructive contempt for failure to comply with order to produce specified books and papers. The District Court of Appeal, Per Curiam, held the order and affidavit to be fatally defective in that they did not set forth the materiality and pertinency of the books and papers called for.

Writ granted and petitioner discharged.

1. Witnesses ⇐21

Witness otherwise orderly and respectful cannot be adjudged guilty of constructive contempt for failure to comply with order to produce certain books and papers unless the order adjudging witness in contempt affirmatively sets forth the materiality and pertinency of the books and papers. Government Code, §§ 9405, 9408.

2. Witnesses ⇐21

In constructive contempt for failure to comply with order to produce specified books and papers, not only the order adjudging witness in contempt, but also the affidavit must sufficiently charge the alleged facts constituting the offense. Government Code, §§ 9405, 9408.

3. Witnesses ⇐21

Where affidavit forming basis of proceeding for constructive contempt for failure to comply with order to produce certain books and papers merely stated as a conclusion that such books and papers were material, and only statement of materiality in the order adjudging witness in contempt was by reference to the affidavit, the affidavit and order were fatally defective.

Kenny & Morris, Los Angeles, for petitioner.

William E. Simpson, District Attorney, Jere J. Sullivan, Deputy District Attorney, Los Angeles, for respondent.

Miller and Kroloff, Nat Brown, Jr., By Jack J. Miller, all of Stockton, J. D. Strauss, Sacramento, and A. C. Morrison and Owen K. Kuns, Los Angeles, for Senate Interim Committee on Social Welfare, real party in interest.

PER CURIAM.

During the 1949 session of the California Legislature a committee named "The Senate Interim Committee on Social Welfare" was created by Senate resolution.

Pursuant to its powers of investigation, the Committee served upon Citizens Committee for Old Age Pensions, a corporation, and George H. McLain, as chairman of its Board of Trustees, a subpoena duces tecum, calling for the production of the following books, papers, and documents:

(1) For the period January 1, 1948, to date the book or ledger in which is entered the funds received by the Citizens Committee for Old Age Pensions.

(2) For the period January 1, 1948, to date the columnar journal in which all checks and disbursements of the Citizens Committee for Old Age Pensions were listed.

(3) For the period January 1, 1948, to date all books and ledgers containing the date which the above described books and ledgers contained; if the above books and ledgers have been replaced by others, due to change in accounting procedures or for any other cause.

(4) All vouchers supporting expenditures from the petty cash fund or cash imprest fund of the Citizens Committee for Old Age Pensions for the period January 1, 1948, to date.

(5) The minutes of the meetings of the Board of Directors of the Citizens Committee for Old Age Pensions for the period from January 1, 1948, to date.

Mr. McLain appeared before the Committee, in response to the subpoena; but refused, on advice of counsel, to answer questions or to produce the records called for.

Upon representation to the Superior Court by counsel for the Committee, an order was made directing Mr. McLain to produce the records. Gov.Code, sec. 9408. In this order the records are described as stated in this opinion, but no statement is made as to their materiality or pertinency. Section 9405 of the Government Code declares a contempt to refuse to produce under subpoena any material and proper books, papers and documents. (Emphasis added.)

Mr. McLain again appeared before the Committee and again refused to produce the records.

Thereupon an affidavit was filed in the Superior Court, setting forth the facts above stated, and praying that Mr. McLain be adjudged guilty of contempt. This affidavit makes the following averments with respect to materiality and pertinency of the records:

"That, based upon evidence in its possession, the said Senate Interim Committee has determined that each of the books, papers, and documents specified in said subpena duces tecum is material to the matters now under investigation by the said Senate Interim Committee, and the production of such books, papers and documents is necessary in order to enable said Senate Interim Committee properly to perform the duties imposed upon it and to report to the Senate of the State of California pursuant to said Senate Resolution No. 162.

"That each of the books, papers and documents specified in said subpena duces tecum is material to the matters now under investigation by the said Senate Interim Committee and that the production of such books, papers and documents is necessary in order to enable said Senate Interim Committee properly to perform the duties imposed upon it and to report to the Senate of the State of California pursuant to said Senate Resolution No. 162."

The Court adjudged Mr. McLain guilty of contempt, and ordered him committed to the custody of the county sheriff until he produced the records.

Mr. McLain petitions this Court for a writ of habeas corpus. His petition is based principally upon the contention that the affidavit upon which the contempt proceedings are based is fatally defective. He contends that it nowhere states in what respect the records were material and pertinent for the use of the Committee in its investigative procedure.

[1] The rule here to be applied is set forth in Re Battelle, 207 Cal. 227, 277 P. 725, 65 A.L.R. 1497, approved in Re Wells, 29 Cal.2d 200, 173 P.2d 811, and for the purposes of this inquiry paraphrased as follows: A witness who is otherwise orderly and respectful cannot be adjudged guilty of contempt unless the order affirmatively sets forth the materiality and pertinency of the books and papers called for.

[2] In cases of constructive contempt, as is this, not only the order but also the affidavit upon which it is based must sufficiently charge the alleged facts constituting the offense. In re Davis, 31 Cal.2d 451, 189 P.2d 283.

[3] Applying this test to the order, and to the affidavit, it becomes immediately apparent that each of them is lacking in the essential allegations of materiality and pertinency of the records, and that the Superior Court was without jurisdiction to hear the case, or to adjudge contempt. The affidavit states conclusions; and the only statement of materiality in the order is by reference to the affidavit.

It is unnecessary, in view of the foregoing conclusion, to determine the issues raised by petitioner with regard to unreasonable search and seizures or the validity of the powers of the legislative committee; however, it should be noted, that petitioner's contentions relating thereto are not without merit. This case turns upon elementary principles of due process of law. Before any man may be imprisoned he is to know in the affidavit charging him with constructive contempt in what respect records which he is ordered to produce are material to the investigation—legislative, executive, or judicial—under way.

The writ is granted and the petitioner discharged from custody.

99 Cal.App.2d 251

BLODGETT et al. v. WALKER SCOTT CORPORATION.
Civ. 3985.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 29, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 15, 1950.

Hearing Denied Oct. 26, 1950.

Action by Joel Blodgett, by and through his guardian ad litem, Della Blodgett, and another, against Walker Scott Corporation, for injuries sustained by the minor plaintiff while riding on moving escalator in store. From judgment for defendant by the Superior Court of San Diego County, C. M. Monroe, J., plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that the evidence was sufficient to support findings that accident was caused by act of boy in leaning far over banister of escalator, and that defendant was not negligent.

Affirmed.

1. Evidence ⇐571(6)

In action by boy against store for injuries sustained on moving escalator, state inspector's testimony that escalator complied with all applicable safety regulations, while it was not conclusive, was entitled to some weight.

2. Trial ⇐165

In action by boy against store for injuries sustained on moving escalator, tried to court without jury, fact that court refused to grant non-suit did not establish that plaintiff made prima facie case.

3. Stipulations ⇐14(11)

In action by boy against store for injuries sustained on moving escalator, fact that trial judge viewed escalator in operation in absence of boy, was not improper, in view of fact that both parties stipulated that judge might inspect escalator alone.

4. Appeal and error ⇐1008(1)
Carriers ⇐318(1)

In action by boy against store for injuries sustained while riding on escalator, question of store's negligence was one of fact for trial court and evidence supported finding that store was not negligent.

5. Carriers ⇐281

Operator of escalator is not responsible as insurer for safety of child passengers.

F. W. Powell; Thomas P. Golden, San Diego, for appellants.

Gray, Cary, Ames & Driscoll, San Diego, for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

The minor plaintiff, being two months less than 11 years old, was injured while riding on an escalator between the first and second floors of a store operated by the defendant. This escalator had a banister on each side, 11 inches in width at the top, which was stationary except for a moving handrail along the middle. Near the outer edge of the banister, and at the "apex" or angle where it passed through the ceiling, there was a triangular guard plate which was about 18½ inches from the nearest edge of the tread of the escalator upon which people stood.

Shortly before the accident the boy, with his parents, had gone to the second floor on this escalator. On their return to the first floor the boy asked and received his mother's permission to ride up again. The parents stood a few feet from the bottom and watched him until he was about half way up, and then looked elsewhere. While he was leaning across the banister and looking down his head came in contact with the guard plate at the "apex", causing the injuries complained of. The escalator was stopped and the boy ran down past the other occupants to where his parents stood.

The complaint alleged that this escalator was so negligently "maintained and operated" by the defendant as "to be wholly unfit and dangerous for public use." After a trial without a jury, and an inspection of the premises by agreement of the parties, the court found that it was not true: that the defendant maintained or operated this escalator carelessly or negligently; that it was unfit or dangerous for public use; that the defendants had, or should have had, knowledge of any dangerous or unfit condition; or that any act of negligence on its part was the proximate cause of the accident. The plaintiffs have appealed from a judgment in favor of the defendant.

Claiming insufficiency of the evidence, it is argued that there was no guard plate at the "apex"; that an elevator starter, who was the only attendant, saw and realized the boy's dangerous position, but did not warn him or stop the escalator; that instead of doing her duty she asked the maintenance supervisor to stop it; that the court's refusal to grant a nonsuit discloses a prima facie case, which was not overcome by respondent's evidence; that the testimony of a state inspector related only to a minimum standard, while a higher degree of care was here required; that the testimony that the boy leaned over the banister related only to his conduct, and not to the issue as to respondent's negligence; and that the fact that the trial judge viewed the escalator in operation is of no weight since the boy was not then present.

[1] These contentions are not sustained by the record. While the boy's mother testified that she did not see the triangular guard plate, several witnesses testified that it was there at the time. The elevator starter testified that she was standing near the escalator and saw the boy leaning over the railing; that she had seen other children leaning over, but not that far; that the moving handrail was opposite the middle of his chest and the rest of his body extended beyond the rail; that she yelled to the maintenance supervisor who was nearer the escalator than she was; that he "made a dive for the button", and stopped it; and that before it stopped the boy's head hit the triangular guard. The maintenance supervisor testified that when the elevator starter called his attention he saw the boy "leaning over", and "riding on the rail, almost on to his stomach"; that he "hollered" at the boy and immediately "slipped over to the button" and stopped the escalator. The state inspector's testimony that this escalator complied with all applicable safety regulations, while it may not be conclusive, is entitled to some weight. Moreover, he testified that this installation was of equal standard with the best, that the condition at the "apex" conformed to accepted standards, and that it was practically the same design as that used in all escalators.

[2, 3] The fact that a nonsuit was denied is immaterial since different rules apply when the judge is to weigh the evidence. Both parties expressed a desire to have the judge inspect the escalator, and stipulated that he might do so alone. This was for the obvious purpose of having him observe the actual situation, and there is no merit in the contention here made in this regard.

[4] The question was one of fact for the trial court, Kataoka v. May Dept. Stores Co., 60 Cal.App.2d 177, 140 P.2d 467; Reynolds v. May Dept. Stores Co., 8 Cir., 127 F.2d 396, and the evidence supports the findings made. The situation here was summarized by the trial judge, in making his decision: "It seems to me plain, as a physical fact, that the only way this accident could have happened is by the child leaning so far that his body was lying on the handrail," and "I cannot see that the weight of the evidence would justify a finding that the proprietors were bound to anticipate an action of that sort."

[5] The appellants further contend that the operator of an escalator is bound by the same degree of care as that required of a common carrier; that in such cases even more care is required when the passenger is a child; and that these principles should logically be so extended as to hold operators of escalators, elevators or common carriers "responsible as insurers for the safety of child passengers." Aside from other considerations, the facts here raise a doubt as to the advisability of such an extension of the existing rules.

The judgment is affirmed.

GRIFFIN and MUSSELL, JJ., concur.

HUGHES v. OREB et al.

Civ. 17431.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Aug. 25, 1950.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing Sept. 19, 1950.

Hearing Granted Oct. 23, 1950.*

Action by William J. B. Hughes against Nick K. Oreb, O. H. Ledbetter and H. J. Greenwood and another for false arrest and imprisonment. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, William S. Baird, J., rendered judgment on a directed verdict as to defendants Greenwood and Ledbetter and entered judgment of nonsuit against plaintiff as to defendant Oreb and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that evidence produced by plaintiff was sufficient to have supported a finding by jury that it was at instigation of defendant Oreb that plaintiff was arrested without process for a crime he did not commit, and that arresting police officers had failed to establish as matter of law defense of probable cause.

Judgments reversed.

1. Trial ⇐165

On motion for nonsuit all evidence in favor of plaintiff will be assumed to be true and will be construed most strongly in his favor.

2. False imprisonment ⇐15(1, 2)

One who participates in the unlawful arrest or imprisonment, or who authorizes, encourages, directs, or assists an officer to do the unlawful act, or procures an unlawful arrest without process, is liable for false imprisonment. Pen. Code, § 236.

3. False imprisonment ⇐31, 39

In action for false arrest and imprisonment, evidence that plaintiff had been arrested and imprisoned after passing two silver dollars at a defendant's saloon, that he suffered damages, that such defendant had subsequently informed him that officers were arresting persons passing silver dollars as suspects in burglary of defendant's home, established a cause of action for false arrest and imprisonment, and whether defendant had instigated plaintiff's arrest was question for jury. Pen. Code, § 236.

4. False imprisonment ⇐22

In action for false arrest and imprisonment, probable cause on part of defendant to believe that plaintiff was guilty of burglarizing defendant's home was a matter of defense and disproof of same was not a part of plaintiff's case.

5. False imprisonment ⇐22

In action for false arrest and imprisonment, after plaintiff had alleged and proved that arrest was without warrant and his imprisonment had followed, presumption arose that imprisonment was unlawful and burden rested on defendants to allege and prove lawfulness or justification therefor. Pen.Code, §§ 236, 836.

6. False imprisonment ⇐7(3)

An officer is liable in damages as for false imprisonment if he makes an unlawful arrest without process for a felony without reasonable ground for believing the person arrested to have committed it. Pen. Code, § 836.

* Subsequent opinion 228 P.2d 550.

7. False imprisonment ⇐7(3)

If reasonable grounds exist for believing a person arrested to have committed a felony, officer making arrest without warrant is not liable as for false imprisonment even though arrest is subsequently shown to be improper. Pen. Code, §§ 236, 836.

8. False imprisonment ⇐39

In action for false arrest and imprisonment, court must determine as matter of law whether facts constituted probable cause for the arresting officers to believe that person arrested had committed a felony. Pen. Code, § 836.

9. Arrest ⇐63(4)

Before peace officer is justified in making an arrest without warrant he must have a belief, founded upon relevant facts, circumstances or credible information presented at time of arrest, that person proposed to be arrested has in fact committed a felony. Pen. Code § 836.

10. Appeal and error ⇐1008(1)

Question of the existence of probable cause to believe that one is guilty of a crime, so as to justify peace officer in making arrest without process, must be determined as matter of law from facts and circumstances of the case and appellate court is not bound by conclusions of trial court in that regard. Pen. Code, § 836.

11. Trial ⇐178

On motion for directed verdict, all evidence in favor of plaintiff must be assumed to be true and must be construed most strongly in his favor.

12. Arrest ⇐63(4)

Where plaintiff was arrested and imprisoned on suspicion of having committed a felony because he used two silver dollars to pay for drinks in a defendant's saloon the day after such defendant's home was burglarized and a number of silver dollars taken therefrom, defendant police officers who arrested plaintiff without warrant had no probable cause to believe that plaintiff had committed the burglary, and arrest and imprisonment was not justified. Pen. Code, §§ 236, 836.

Entenza & Gramer, Los Angeles, M. E. Storrie, Los Angeles, of counsel, for appellant.

Nick K. Oreb, Crider, Runkle & Tilson, Los Angeles, for respondent.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Attorney, Bourke Jones, Assistant City Attorney, Roland Wilson, Deputy City Attorney, John F. Feldmeier, Deputy City Attorney, all of Los Angeles, for respondents, O. H. Ledbetter and H. J. Greenwood.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of nonsuit against him as to defendant Oreb; from the judgment on a directed verdict as to defendants Greenwood and Ledbetter; and from the order (nonappealable) denying his motion for a new trial. (The City of Los Angeles was originally named as a defendant, but the action as to it was dismissed before trial.)

The facts which gave rise to plaintiff's cause of action for false arrest and imprisonment in which he sought conpensatory damages of $25,000 and $10,000 exemplary damages, are as follows:

On February 1, 1948, at about 12:30 a. m., plaintiff entered the Hawaiian Gardens, an establishment owned and operated by Nick K. Oreb in San Pedro. According to plaintiff's testimony, he ordered two drinks for which he paid with silver dollars, receiving some change each time. He testified that during the evening he noticed three men watching him and he later identified these men as Oreb, and Officers Ledbetter and Greenwood; that when he started to get down from his stool at the bar he backed into one of these men (Officer Greenwood) who asked him where he was going; he replied that he was going home "if it is any of your business," whereupon the officer informed him that he had better "come with us." The two men, who were in plain clothes, took plaintiff's arms and informed him that they had some questions to ask him. Plaintiff objected to the restraint and told the men, whom he did not as yet know to be police officers, that if they had any questions to ask him it could be done there. Apparently they then told plaintiff that they were police officers but refused to prove it to him and when plaintiff resisted them, handcuffs were put on him and he was taken to a car outside the bar. On the way out of the establishment plaintiff asked some of the patrons to witness what was happening to him—that he was being kidnapped. The officers took plaintiff to the San Pedro police station where a momentary stop was made at the booking desk before plaintiff was taken to a closed room where the handcuffs were removed and he was searched and questioned over his resistance. He testified that Officer Greenwood "kicked me in the groin with his knee, he struck me in the stomach with his fist, and when I bent over he struck me in the face, and I pleaded with him not to strike me again. He said, 'Are you going to answer our questions?' I said, 'Yes. Give me a moment to recover.'" After he had been questioned and searched he demanded to know why he had been brought there and was informed that he was being booked "on suspicion of 459." Plaintiff testified that he had previously demanded permission to get in touch with his attorney and that Officer Ledbetter had said, "What are you doing with an attorney, wise guy?" and that he ought to know what "suspicion of 459" meant since he had an attorney. (Evidently the charge was later explained to him.) Plaintiff was not allowed to call either his attorneys or his mother because both of the calls would have resulted in charges. Subsequent to the searching and questioning of plaintiff he was taken to the booking desk and from there to a cell where he was confined, except for meals, for thirty three hours. On the Monday morning following his arrest he was questioned again by two men in plain clothes as to where he had been on a certain night and where he got the two silver dollars used to pay for the drinks. He testified that this was the first time he had heard any mention of the silver dollars. After this questioning, he was fingerprinted, samples of his handwriting were taken, and after he had regained possession of his personal effects, he was released from custody. After his release, plaintiff went back to the Hawaiian Gardens to get his hat, which he had left on the night of his arrest, and at that time had a conversation with Nick Oreb who told him that his home had been burglarized and some silver dollars taken the night before plaintiff's arrest, that "they had been picking up everybody who passed silver dollars, that they had picked up a boy or two on Sunday, at about ten a. m., who had admitted burglarizing his (Oreb's) home, and that he had an appointment to go down there and identify his property, confront the suspects" who had confessed 24 hours before plaintiff was released from jail.

At the close of plaintiff's testimony, his attorney rested and the attorney for Nick K. Oreb moved for and was granted a nonsuit on the ground that there was no proof of any allegation of the complaint so far as defendant Oreb was concerned.

The first question presented for determination is whether the trial court was justified in granting the motion of nonsuit as to defendant Oreb.

[1] A motion for a nonsuit involves the legal effect of admitted facts. When made at the close of plaintiff's case it in purpose and effect operates as a demurrer to the evidence, assuming that all the evidence in favor of the plaintiff, if relevant to the issues, is true. It is well settled that all the evidence and reasonable inferences must be construed most strongly in favor of the plaintiff, all contradictory evidence being disregarded. 9 Cal.Jur. 551, 552, 553; Milana v. Credit Discount Co., 27 Cal.2d 335, 343, 163 P.2d 869, 165 A.L.R. 621; Barnett v. La Mesa Post No. 282, 15 Cal.2d 191, 99 P.2d 650.

Plaintiff alleged that on February 1, 1948, at about 1:00 o'clock a.m., the defendant Nick K. Oreb did wilfully, deliberately, and without any legal cause, direct and cause two police officers to arrest him and take him into custody and confine him in jail, without any warrant or other authority, that he has suffered damages, etc., and that he was not guilty of any crime.

[2, 3] One is liable for false imprisonment who participates in the unlawful arrest or imprisonment, or who authorizes, encourages, directs, or assists an officer to do the unlawful act, or procures an unlawful arrest without process. Kaufman v. Brown, 93 Cal.App.2d 508, 209 P.2d 156; Collins v. Owens, 77 Cal.App.2d 713, 176 P.2d 372; Miller v. Fano, 134 Cal. 103, 66 P. 183; 12 Cal.Jur. 433, 434; Friskstad v. Medcraft, 100 Cal.App. 188, 279 P. 840; Wood v. Lehne, 30 Cal.App.2d 222, 226, 85 P.2d 910; Montalbano v. Rainbow Gardens, Ltd., 9 Cal.App.2d 661, 50 P.2d 972; Moffatt v. Buffums', Inc., 21 Cal.App.2d 371, 375, 69 P.2d 424. The question is whether plaintiff's evidence met this test. Inasmuch as all plaintiff need allege and prove to constitute a cause of action for false arrest and imprisonment is that he was, at the instigation of defendant, arrested and imprisoned without process, and the damages suffered because of such arrest and imprisonment, it would seem that the judgment of nonsuit should not have been granted. From plaintiff's testimony, as to his conversation with defendant Oreb, we find that Oreb said "he was very sorry that this ever happened, and that he (Oreb) shouldn't have even reported it to the police, but that he didn't have any more use for the cops that I had, but that he was paying taxes and entitled to their cooperation in the protection of his property;" also that the police were picking up everybody who passed silver dollars. Taking the evidence most favorable to plaintiff, in support of his cause of action against defendant Oreb, as true, it was reasonable to infer that plaintiff was arrested because he had used silver dollars to pay for drinks purchased in the saloon and that Oreb had reported this to the two police officers knowing and intending that plaintiff would be arrested solely on the strength of Oreb's statement that plaintiff had passed silver dollars. According to his admission, Oreb knew that such arrests were being made. It may well be that this method of detecting the guilty person originated with the officers and that Oreb had not advised it. Nevertheless, if he knew or expected that an arrest would result from his pointing out plaintiff to the officers, it was a proper question for the jury whether he had such knowledge and intended to cause plaintiff's arrest.

[4, 5] Probable cause, on the part of defendant Oreb, to believe that plaintiff was the one guilty of burglarizing his home the night before the arrest was a matter of defense and disproof of probable cause was no part of plaintiff's case. Ah Fong v. Sternes, 79 Cal. 30, 21 P. 381; Collins v. Owens, 77 Cal.App.2d 713, 176 P.2d 372; People v. Agnew, 16 Cal.2d 655, 107 P.2d 601. The arrest without a warrant, and the imprisonment that followed, having been alleged and proved, a presumption arose that the imprisonment was unlawful and the burden rested upon the defendant to allege and prove the lawfulness or justification therefor. Kaufman v. Brown, 93 Cal.App.2d 508, 209 P.2d 156; People v. Agnew, 16 Cal.2d 655, 663, 107 P.2d 601.

False imprisonment is defined by section 236 of the Penal Code as "the unlawful violation of the personal liberty of another." Ware v. Dunn, 80 Cal.App.2d 936, 183 P.2d 128. Each case must be decided on its own facts to determine whether the particular defendant "authorized, encouraged [directed] or assisted" an officer to arrest the plaintiff. Turner v. Elliott, 91 Cal. App.2d 901, 904, 206 P.2d 48, 49. The evidence produced by the plaintiff was sufficient to have supported a finding by a jury that it was at the instigation of defendant Oreb that plaintiff was arrested, without process, for a crime he did not commit. As we have pointed out, any justification defendant may have had was a matter of defense. People v. Agnew, 16 Cal.2d 655, 664, 107 P.2d 601. In the Agnew case, it was said that it should be a simple matter for the one assuming to make a citizen's arrest without process to show justification for such arrest if any such justification exists and that the facts constituting such claimed justification would ordinarily lie peculiarly within his knowledge. It would appear, therefore, that the trial court improperly granted the motion for a nonsuit as to defendant Oreb

[6-11] The other question presented for determination is whether the trial court was correct in directing a verdict in favor of defendant officers, Ledbetter and Greenwood. Section 836, Penal Code, provides that a peace officer may make an arrest without a warrant when a felony has in fact been committed and he has reasonable cause to believe the person arrested to have committed it; or on a charge made, upon a reasonable cause, of the commission of a felony by the party arrested. An officer is liable in damages as for false imprisonment if he makes an unlawful arrest without process for a felony without reasonable ground for believing the person arrested to have committed it. On the other hand, if reasonable grounds exist, the officer is not liable, even though the arrest is subsequently shown to be improper. Korkman v. Hanlon Dry Dock & Shipbuilding Co., 53 Cal. App. 147, 199 P. 880; Salo v. Smith, 25 Cal. App. 295, 143 P. 322; 12 Cal.Jur., p. 432. The court must determine, as a matter of law, whether the facts, as they appear, or are found to have existed, constituted probable cause or warranted a reasonable man in the belief that the charge was true. Van Fleet v. West American Ins. Co., 5 Cal. App.2d 125, 42 P.2d 378, 43 P.2d 557. "Belief," rather than "suspicion," that the person proposed to be arrested has in fact committed a felony, is required by Penal Code, section 836, before a peace officer is justified in making an arrest. Such belief must be founded upon relevant facts, circumstances or credible information conveyed to him. Cook v. Singer Sewing Machine Co., 138 Cal.App. 418, 32 P.2d 430. The facts presented at the time are determinative. People v. Hupp, 61 Cal.App.2d 447, 143 P.2d 84. The question of the existence of probable cause to believe that one is guilty of a crime must be determined as a matter of law from the facts and circumstances of the case. Hill v. Nelson, 71 Cal.App.2d 528, 162 P.2d 927; Michel v. Smith, 188 Cal. 199, 205 P. 113. A reviewing court is therefore not bound by the conclusions of the trial court in that regard. Allen v. McCoy, 135 Cal.App. 500, 27 P.2d 423, 28 P.2d 56; Michel v. Smith, supra. The rule which governs in the matter of nonsuits also applies to directed verdicts.

[12] A review of the entire record with the above rule in mind reveals that plaintiff was arrested and imprisoned on suspicion of having committed a felony because he used two silver dollars to pay for drinks which he ordered in defendant Oreb's saloon the day after said defendant's home had been burglarized and a number of silver dollars taken therefrom. This, then, is the evidence from which the trial court found that defendant officers had probable cause to believe that plaintiff was the one who had burglarized defendant Oreb's home. We must decline to go on record as holding that possession by plaintiff of two or three silver dollars, without any other relevant circumstance, furnished reasonable ground for belief that he had stolen silver dollars from Oreb.

We conclude that the trial court improperly directed verdicts in favor of defendant officers Ledbetter and Greenwood, in that they failed to establish, as a matter of law, the defense of probable cause.

The judgments appealed from are reversed; the attempted appeal from the order denying a new trial is dismissed.

WOOD and VALLÉE, JJ., concur.

In re REIZIAN'S ESTATE.

BALOIAN v. JOHNS et al.
Civ. 17481.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Aug. 30, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 30, 1950.

Hearing Granted Oct. 26, 1950.*

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Toorig Reizian, deceased, wherein Charles G. Baloian filed a petition. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Joseph M. Maltby, J., decreed distribution of a parcel of realty to Henry Arten Baloian, and E. M. Johns, coadministrator, appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that evidence supported determination that parcel was separate property of deceased.

Affirmed.

1. Husband and wife ⇐262(1)

Where deceased acquired property during marriage in her name alone and title remained in her name until death, there was a presumption that it was her separate property, and such presumption was itself evidence. Civ.Code, § 164.

2. Husband and wife ⇐264

In probate proceeding, evidence sustained finding that property acquired by deceased during marriage in her name alone, for which she had signed a note, and had secured policies of insurance thereon in her name, was the separate property of the deceased, and not community property. Civ.Code, § 164.

3. Husband and wife ⇐266

Where husband and deceased wife had executed separate wills and each contained statement that all property possessed was community property, the separate wills did not constitute an agreement between the parties and did not transmute parcel of realty from separate property of wife to community property.

4. Evidence ⇐236(3)

In proceeding to determine whether property of deceased was her separate property, statement in will by deceased that all property she was possessed of was community property was a declaration against interest and admissible in evidence.

5. Appeal and error ⇐1008(1)

Where presumption that certain property was separate property of deceased conflicted with statement in her will that all property she possessed was community property, weight to be given such statement was for trial court and its determination could not be disturbed on appeal.

William Kinley, Long Beach, for appellant and coadministrator.

Roland C. Swaffield, Long Beach, for respondent.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal from a decree of distribution. The only part of the decree attacked is that distributing a parcel of realty to respondent Henry Arten Baloian.

In the decree the court found that the parcel of realty was the separate property of the deceased. Appellant insists the finding is without support in the evidence.

[1] The property was acquired by deceased during marriage in her name alone. Title remained in her name until her death. The presumption is that it was her separate property. Civ.Code, § 164. The presumption itself is evidence. Stafford v. Martinoni, 192 Cal. 724, 738, 221 P. 919. The presumption is sufficient to sustain the finding that the property was the separate property of the deceased. Volquards v. Myers, 23 Cal.App. 500, 504, 138 P. 963; Rhea v. Thomson, 115 Cal.App. 466, 471, 1 P.2d 1091; Palen v. Palen, 28 Cal.App. 2d 602, 604, 83 P.2d 36. It was for the trial court to determine whether the evidence of appellant was sufficient to overthrow the presumption. Stafford v. Martinoni, 192 Cal. 724, 738, 221 P. 919.

* Subsequent opinion 227 P.2d 249.

[2] The presumption was buttressed by other evidence. When the deceased purchased the property she alone signed a note, as a part of the purchase price, and a deed of trust securing the same. She alone paid the note. She secured policies of insurance on the property showing that she was the owner. The evidence sustains the finding that the property was the separate property of the deceased.

[3-5] On July 6, 1945, the deceased and her husband executed separate wills. Each will contained this statement: "I further declare that all of the property of which I am possessed is community property." Appellant argues that by the execution of the wills the deceased and her husband agreed that all their property was community property and thereby transmuted the parcel in controversy from separate property of the wife to community property. There is no evidence of any express agreement to that effect. The separate wills did not constitute an agreement between the parties. There is no evidence that the will of the deceased was made pursuant to an agreement or understanding between them. The statement in the will of the husband was a self-serving declaration. The statement in the will of the deceased was a declaration against interest and admissible in evidence as such. Wilson v. Wilson, 76 Cal.App.2d 119, 124, 172 P.2d 568. Whether in a particular case a husband and wife have agreed to transmute the character of property is a question of fact for the trial court. Wheeland v. Rodgers, 20 Cal.2d 218, 222, 124 P.2d 816; Estate of Wooten, 64 Cal.App.2d 96, 102, 148 P.2d 33; 3 Cal.Jur. 10-Yr. Supp., p. 573, sec. 75; p. 642, sec. 128. The declaration against interest merely created a conflict with the presumption and the evidence supporting the presumption. The weight to be given the declaration of the deceased as against the presumption that the property was her separate property, and the other evidence in support thereof, was for the trial court. Estate of Lissner, 27 Cal.App.2d 570, 576, 81 P.2d 448; Monnette v. Title Ins. etc. Co., 107 Cal.App. 313, 316, 317, 323, 290 P. 668. Its determination cannot be disturbed on appeal.

Affirmed. Respondent to recover his costs on appeal.

SHINN, P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 236

PEOPLE v. JAHN.

Cr. 4453.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 28, 1950.

Hearing Denied Sept. 25, 1950.

Leslie E. Jahn was convicted in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, William M. Byrne, J., for incest, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that defendant's 16 year old daughter, with whom the act charged was committed, was not an accomplice, so that corroboration of her testimony against defendant was unnecessary to warrant conviction.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal law ⇐507(7)

A female, participating in incestuous intercourse as result of force, fraud or undue influence or when too young to be able to give legal assent, is not accomplice of man involved, so that her testimony against him need not be corroborated to warrant his conviction of incest. Pen.Code, § 285.

2. Criminal law ⇐507(7)

A 16 year old girl was not her father's accomplice in incestuous intercourse between them, as she was too young to consent thereto as matter of law, so that corroboration of her testimony against father was unnecessary to warrant his conviction of incest. Pen.Code, § 285.

Gladys Towles Root, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Gilbert Harelson, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from the judgment. Defendant was charged by information with the crime of incest in three counts and adjudged guilty as charged. Defendant waived a jury. The act was committed with defendant's daughter who was 16 years of age.

It is contended on appeal, quoting from appellant's brief, that "The verdict is contrary to the law and to the evidence.

"(1) The witness, Laura Lou Jahn, is an accomplice.

"At the outset it is the desire of the appellant to set forth his position with conciseness and with frankness. He concedes the holding of recent cases that in the crime of incest where the participating party is under the age of eighteen she is held not to be an accomplice for the reason that she cannot consent to an act of sexual intercourse legally and therefore her testimony need not be corroborated.

"People v. Pettis, 95 Cal.App.2d 790, 213 P.2d 731;

"People v. Stoll, 84 Cal.App. 99, 257 P. 583;

"People v. Hamilton, 88 Cal.App.2d 398, 198 P.2d 907.

"Counsel for Appellant states that it is her honest and sincere conviction that these cases do not give true service to the legislative intent as regards Penal Code section 285, defining incest", and that "There is not sufficient corroboration of the testimony of the accomplice".

[1] In People v. Stratton, 141 Cal. 604, 75 P. 166, 168, which is an incest case, appears the following, "If the prosecutrix, being of the legal age of consent, consents to the incestuous intercourse, unquestionably she is particeps criminis, and her testimony, like that of any other accomplice, uncorroborated, is insufficient to uphold a conviction. (Citing case.) But if, upon the other hand, she is the victim of force, or fraud, or undue influence, or is too young to be able to give legal assent, so that she does not willfully and willingly join in the incestuous act, she cannot be regarded as an accomplice." There appears to be no division of opinion on this question as contended by appellant but, on the contrary, the law is uniform in support of the Stratton case. People v. Johnson, 115 Cal.App. 704, 705, 2 P.2d 216; People v. Herman, 97 Cal.App.2d 272, 217 P.2d 440; People v. Hamilton, 88 Cal.App.2d 398, 198 P.2d 907.

[2] It appears well settled therefore that consent could not be given as a matter of law and that in such circumstances the law relating to the necessary corroboration of accomplices does not apply.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., and DRAPEAU, J., concur.

Hearing denied; SCHAUER, J., dissenting.

98 Cal.App.2d 780

SCHWARTZ v. PREMIUM PRODUCTS CO. et al.

Civ. 14346.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 7, 1950.

Action by Frances B. Schwartz, as personal representative of Nellie A. Cannon, deceased, against Premium Products Company, a corporation and others, for alleged wrongful death of plaintiff's mother. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, William F. Traverso, J., entered judgment on a verdict for the plaintiff and the defendants appealed on the ground that the award was excessive. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that where mother had agreed with married daughter that if daughter should have child, mother would care for it to permit daughter to continue her employment and child had been born at time of trial and daughter had discontinued her employment, in determining the amount of the award the jury was entitled to include the pecuniary loss of the anticipated benefits from mother's services, even though there was no evidence of the value of such services.

Judgment affirmed.

Death ⇐77

Where married daughter had agreed with mother that if daughter should have child mother would care for it to permit daughter to continue her employment and child had been born at time of daughter's action for death of mother and daughter had discontinued her employment, in determining amount of award pecuniary loss of anticipated benefits from mother's services could be included, even though there was no evidence of the value of such services.

Hadsell, Sweet, Ingalls & Murman, San Francisco, for appellants.

Hallinan, MacInnis & Zamloch, James Martin MacInnis, San Francisco, William F. Cleary, San Francisco, of counsel, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice.

Defendants appeal from a judgment for $7,500 following the verdict of a jury. The action was one by an adult daughter for the wrongful death of her mother and the sole point argued on appeal is the claimed excessiveness of the award.

The evidence showed that the daughter was married shortly before her mother's death; that her father had died when plaintiff was eleven years old and plaintiff, an only child, had been raised and supported by her mother to maturity and continued to live with her until her marriage. The mother owned her own home and for some years a family of friends had occupied a part of it. Plaintiff was employed and she testified that both before her marriage and afterwards it had been arranged with her mother that plaintiff and her husband would live with the mother in her home as soon as arrangements could be made to have the friends who were living there move to another residence, and that if plaintiff should have a child the mother would take care of it during the daytime thus permitting plaintiff to continue with her employment. At the time of the trial a child had been born and plaintiff had discontinued working. The mother was 59 years of age with an average life expectancy of 15.13 years. 58 C.J.S. page 1212.

Plaintiff was entitled to a recovery of her actual pecuniary loss from the death of her mother. We cannot agree with appellants that under the evidence the deprivation of society and comfort was the complete measure of that loss. The jury was entitled to include the pecuniary loss incident to the deprivation of the anticipated benefits which would have accrued from the mother's services in the home under the arrangement which we must assume the jury found to have been made as plaintiff testified.

Appellants argue that there is no evidence of the value of these services. There need not be. The jury may draw on its own knowledge of the value of services of that character. In re Estate of Rheinhertz, 82 Cal.App.2d 156, 160, 185 P.2d 858, 186 P.2d 755 and cases cited.

No purpose would be served by discussing the cases cited by appellants. In the opening brief appellants say: "No decision constitutes a clear cut precedent for a similar holding in a later case." We may add that none of the cases cited presents a fact situation comparable to the one here presented.

Judgment affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., concurs.

99 Cal.App.2d 216

EDWARDS v. PEOPLE.

Cr. 2203.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 25, 1950.

John D. Edwards was convicted of robbery and thereafter filed a petition for a writ of error coram nobis. The Superior Court, San Joaquin County, George F. Buck, J., denied writ, and petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Adams, P. J., held that where matters relied upon by petitioner were or could have been presented on his appeal from his judgment of conviction, or were presented in his former petitions for writs that were denied, and petition for writ of error coram nobis alleged no fact which was unknown to petitioner at time of his original trial or could not have been discovered by him at any time earlier than time when his petition for writ was filed, trial court properly denied writ.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal law ⇐997

Where matters relied upon by petitioner were or could have been presented on petitioner's appeal from his judgment of conviction, or were presented in his former petitions for writs that were denied, and petition for writ of error coram nobis alleged no fact which was unknown to petitioner at time of his original trial, or could not, in exercise of due diligence, have been discovered by him at any time earlier than time when his petition for writ was filed, trial court properly denied writ.

John D. Edwards, in pro per.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, By Gail A. Strader, Deputy, for respondent.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

In October, 1947, appellant and one McConnell were charged with robbery committed in San Joaquin County. Edwards was also charged with two priors which he admitted. After the conviction of both defendants Edwards was adjudged to be an habitual criminal. Both defendants appealed and the judgments were affirmed by this court. People v. McConnell, 86 Cal. App.2d 578, 195 P.2d 34. Thereafter Edwards in numerous proceedings sought to secure relief. He made various applications to the Superior Court of Sacramento County, to the Supreme Court of California, to the United States Supreme Court, Edwards v. Heinze, 337 U.S. 947, 69 S.Ct. 1506, 93 L.Ed. 1750, and to this court, all of which were denied.

In August, 1949, the present action was initiated in the Superior Court of San Joaquin County by the filing of a petition for a writ of error coram nobis. That court held a hearing thereon, at which evidence was presented. On November 1, 1949, the writ was denied. This appeal was taken from the judgment in that proceeding.

Respondent has filed herein a motion to dismiss said appeal on the ground that it is without merit and frivolous. Both the appeal on its merits and said motion to dismiss are now before us.

The limitations of the scope of review by writ of error coram nobis have been definitely fixed in several recent decisions of our California Supreme Court, which have been followed by decisions of this court. In re Lindley, 29 Cal.2d 709, 725–726, 177 P.2d 918; People v. Tuthill, 32 Cal.2d 819, 821, 198 P.2d 505; People v. Shorts, 32 Cal.2d 502, 513, 197 P.2d 330; People v. Adamson, 34 Cal.2d 320, 326, 210 P.2d 13; People v. Malone, 96 Cal. App.2d 270, 215 P.2d 109; People v. Chapman, 96 Cal.App.2d 668, 216 P.2d 112. In both the Malone and Chapman cases motions for dismissal of the appeals, which had been taken from orders denying writs of error coram nobis, were granted.

Such must be the order in this case since the matters relied upon by appellant are such as were or could have been presented on his appeal from his judgment of conviction, or were presented in his former petitions for writs that were denied. Appellant's petition to the Superior Court of San Joaquin County alleges no fact which was unknown to him at his original trial, or could not, in the exercise of due diligence have been discovered by him at any time earlier than the time when his petition for the writ was filed in this proceeding. The record before us presents no grounds for review by way of writ of error coram nobis, nor any matter reviewable by appeal from the decision of the trial court. The appeal appearing to be frivolous and without merit it is hereby dismissed.

VAN DYKE and PEEK, JJ., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 30

NEBEL et al. v. GUYER et al.

Civ. 7687.

Sac. 6027.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 17, 1950.

J. W. Nebel and Glenn Nebel brought action against Frank L. Guyer, Emmeline Guyer, and H. C. Flournoy for a mandatory injunction to require removal of a building which allegedly encroached slightly on lot of plaintiffs. The Superior Court of Plumas County, J. O. Moncur, J., rendered a judgment for the defendants, and the plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Adams, P. J., held that, as plaintiffs were relying on a bare legal right unsupported by any damage shown, they were not entitled to a mandatory injunction.

Affirmed.

1. Boundaries ⇐3(6)

Where landlord who owned a large lot, and who rented the easterly 50 feet of the lot measured from a fence, entered into agreement with tenants for sale of 50 feet of the lot, and thereafter tenants advised landlord that they would like to have a little more land to the west of their lot, and landlord without further compensation agreed to give them additional land, and thereupon they measured off 66 feet west from fence, and to mark the dividing line they cut a notch in front fence and on rear fence they drove a pin, boundary line fixed controlled over distances when it was later discovered that easterly fence was 3 feet out in street.

2. Injunction ⇐50

A mandatory injunction will not be granted at the instance of an owner of realty to compel an adjoining owner to remove a slight encroachment if no damages had been suffered because of the encroachment and there exists an adequate remedy at law.

3. Injunction ⇐51

Where it was apparent that plaintiffs, in asking for removal of portion of defendant's building which allegedly encroached a small amount on plaintiffs' lot, were relying on a bare legal right unsupported by any damage shown, plaintiffs were not entitled to a mandatory injunction.

4. Injunction ⇐51

Where encroachment of a building on the land of another is slight, cost of removal will be great, and corresponding benefit to owner of realty on which the building encroaches will be small, or compensation in damages can be had, a court will ordinarily decline to compel removal, and will leave the complaining party to his remedy at law.

5. Injunction ⇐23

Where issuance of an injunction will cause great injury to defendant and will confer very little benefit on complainant in comparison, it is proper to refuse an injunction, especially where the right is doubtful or where money damages will compensate complainant.

Wm. M. Macmillan, Quincy, Bertram D. Janes, Portola, for appellants.

Walter E. Hettman, Herbert Chamberlin, San Francisco, for respondents.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiffs brought this action to compel defendants Frank L. and Emmeline Guyer to remove a building which they claimed was constructed in part on the lot of plaintiffs. They also prayed for $500 punitive damages. After trial by the court sitting without a jury, plaintiffs appealed from a judgment for defendants.

The evidence shows that defendant Flournoy owned a large lot on the north side of Main Street in Quincy, Plumas County, which was bounded on the east by Church Street. Plaintiffs were tenants of Flournoy, occupying the easterly 50 feet of his lot, measured from a fence running north and south along Church Street, and had been such tenants for about eight years, occupying a dwelling thereon. In November, 1945, they decided to purchase the property they were renting and entered into an agreement with Flournoy whereby they were to purchase same upon terms therein set forth. Not long after the agreement was had, they advised Flournoy they would like a little more land to the west of their lot; and without further compensation, Flournoy agreed to give same to them. Thereupon, plaintiffs and Flournoy measured off 66 feet west from the fence along Church Street. To mark the dividing line they cut a notch in the front fence, and on the rear fence, 125 feet back, they drove a pin.

In November, 1946, defendants Guyer purchased from Flournoy the remaining portion of Flournoy's lot, measuring 100 feet along Main Street. In arranging for the purchase, Flournoy pointed out to them the marks indicating the west line of plaintiffs' lot. Later, the Guyers constructed a medical office building on their lot, all west of the line marked as aforesaid.

Plaintiffs saw the building being constructed and made no protest; but later they had a survey on their property made and the surveyor reported that the lot sold to them extended about 3 feet into Church Street. In other words it was the surveyor's conclusion that the fence along the Church Street side of the lot was out in the street, thus including in Flournoy's property a portion of the street itself. Plaintiffs then sought to move their west line westerly to compensate for the 3 feet of the street within the fence. Assuming such extension the surveyor testified that at the front of the property defendants' building extended 48/100ths of a foot and the eaves 155/100ths feet onto plaintiffs' lot, but that toward the rear of the building it did not encroach at all. The total encroachment of both building and eaves, if there was such encroachment, was but 203/100ths feet.

The trial court found that, in view of the line fixed by the markings made by plaintiffs and Flournoy, that line was plaintiffs' west line regardless of the developments resulting from the survey, and therefore no part of the medical building was on plaintiffs' lot. It also found that defendants had never interfered with plaintiffs' quiet and peaceable enjoyment of their property; that if any encroachment existed it was not of such a nature or extent as to occasion any damage or detriment to plaintiffs on their property; and that all the acts of defendants in the erection of their building were done in good faith and in the belief that said building was erected wholly upon their property. Furthermore the trial court took the position that even if a slight encroachment did exist, the damage to plaintiffs, if any, was too small to warrant the court in compelling the Guyers to move their building. It suggested to plaintiffs that by amendment they convert their action into one for damages actually suffered, if any, instead of asking the court to compel removal of the building; and it granted time for plaintiffs to so amend. Plaintiffs failed to amend. Appellants contend that the finding that no part of defendants' building encroaches upon plaintiffs' lot, is not sustained by the evidence. A somewhat similar situation was considered by this court in Arnold v. Hanson, 91 Cal.App.2d 15, 204 P.2d 97, in which we held that where a subdivider marks corners of lots and purchasers rely upon them, such marks are monuments fixing the boundaries and prevail over a later survey. Furthermore, Flournoy did not agree to convey any specific quantity of land to plaintiffs. He wanted to and did fix the west boundary, after donating an additional 16 feet at plaintiffs' request; and plaintiffs participated in fixing that line. In Togni v. Slocomb, 12 Cal.App. 733, 735, 108 P. 723, 724, this court said: "Certainly, the grantors, if owning the land, had a right to fix the boundaries of the land which they conveyed."

[1-3] The boundary line fixed as the west line of plaintiffs' land controls over distances, since markings were made establishing the west boundary. But regardless of whether or not defendants' building did slightly encroach upon plaintiffs' lot, plaintiffs failed to show that they were damaged by the alleged encroachment. The portion of the lot which they claimed was being occupied by defendant's building had been used by plaintiffs only for the planting of flowers; and it was not alleged or shown by testimony that any of said plants even had been destroyed. In fact the testimony shows that while the building was being erected no injury to them appeared, and that it was only subsequently, when defendants removed a fence in front of their lot, that Mrs. Nebel protested that she had planted flowers in front of it to hide it and did not want them trampled upon; that defendants took down their front fence and that left plaintiffs' side open so that dogs or anyone could get in there, and as she did not want it open they put up a line fence from the back to the front walk. And plaintiff J. W. Nebel admitted that the only time he felt imposed upon was after he had the survey made. It is therefore apparent that plaintiffs, in asking for the removal of the portion of defendants' building which they claim encroaches upon their lot, are relying upon a bare legal right unsupported by any damage shown. In Rothaermel v. Amerige, 55 Cal.App. 273, 203 P. 833, the rule, since relied upon in decisions of our courts, was laid down that a mandatory injunction will not be granted at the instance of an owner to compel an adjoining owner to remove a slight encroachment where plaintiff has not suffered any damage and there exists an adequate remedy at law. The same rule was stated in McKean v. Alliance Land Co., 200 Cal. 396, 398-399, 253 P. 134, citing the foregoing case, denying removal, and holding that even though an encroachment was found to exist, $10 was adequate to compensate plaintiffs for any damage suffered, there being no evidence that the encroachment caused any actual damage to them. In Blackfield v. Thomas Allec Corp., 128 Cal.App. 348, 17 P.2d 165, it was held, on authority of the foregoing cases, that an injunction compelling the removal of a part of an encroaching wall, which did not actually interfere with the use of the property encroached upon, should not be compelled where such injury as occurred readily could be compensated in damages. Also see Mertens v. Berendsen, 213 Cal. 111, 115, 1 P.2d 440; Ukhtomski v. Tioga Mutual Water Co., 12 Cal.App.2d 726, 728, 55 P.2d 1251; Baldocchi v. Four Fifty Sutter Corp., 129 Cal.App. 383, 393, 18 P.2d 682; Morris v. George, 57 Cal.App. 2d 665, 679-680, 135 P.2d 195.

[4, 5] The rule was early recognized that where the encroachment is slight, the cost of removal will be great and the corresponding benefit to the adjoining owner small, or compensation in damages can be had, a court will ordinarily decline to compel removal, and will leave the complaining party to his remedy at law. See 1 Corpus Juris, 1209, 2 C.J.S., Adjoining Landowners, § 36. Also see 32 Corpus Juris, 77-78, 43 C.J.S., Injunctions, § 30, where it is said that when the issuance of an injunction will cause great injury to defendant and will confer very little benefit upon complainant in comparison it is proper to refuse an injunction, especially where the right is doubtful or where money damages will compensate plaintiff.

There is here no evidence that the salability of plaintiffs' land is in any wise affected. That the value of the portion of plaintiffs' property encroached upon, if it did so encroach, is obviously very little, since the whole 16 feet that Flournoy added to the original 50-foot lot was given to plaintiffs without payment therefor. Obviously a removal of the part of defendants' building which the claimed overlap covers would be expensive as compared to any loss sustained by plaintiffs; and no bad faith on the part of defendants was shown.

We therefore conclude that, regardless of whether or not the trial court's finding that defendants' building did not encroach upon plaintiffs' land finds support in the evidence—though we cannot say that it does not—plaintiffs' plea for removal of the building was properly denied on the ground that they could be compensated adequately for actual damage suffered, if any, and that no proper grounds for compelling a removal of defendants' building had been proven.

The judgment is affirmed.

VAN DYKE and PEEK, JJ., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 105

AGNEW v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al.
Civ. 17410.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Aug. 21, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 31, 1950.

Proceeding by R. W. Agnew against the City of Los Angeles and another, for writ of mandate, to compel the city to issue a permit to install electrical work. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Arnold Praeger, J., in favor of plaintiff, the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that ordinance involved was not sufficiently pleaded by mere reference to the ordinance in petition by number.

Judgment reversed.

Vallée, J., dissented.

1. Municipal corporations ⇐122(1)

Where electrical contractor brought mandamus to compel city to issue him a permit to install electrical work and challenged validity of requirements in city ordinance that he pay $100 to defray inspection expenses and furnish a $1,000 damage bond, but contractor in petition referred to ordinance only by number, ordinance was not sufficiently pleaded to bring it before court for consideration. Code Civ.Proc. § 459.

2. Municipal corporations ⇐122(1)

An ordinance may be pleaded by referring to its title and the day of its passage, but mere reference to ordinance by its number is not sufficient. Code Civ.Proc. § 459.

3. Pleading ⇐350(3)

Upon motion for judgment on the pleadings, as on demurrer, court considers only the pleadings.

4. Pleading ⇐350(3)

Power of court to render judgment on the pleadings should not be exercised so as to permit consideration of facts not pleaded.

5. Stipulations ⇐14(10)

Where electrical contractor brought mandamus to compel city to issue a permit to install electrical work and challenged the validity of ordinance provisions but in his petition referred to ordinance only by number, stipulation between parties that ordinance contained such provisions would not support judgment in favor of contractor on the pleadings, in absence of showing of consent by parties that stipulation be considered by court. Code Civ Proc. § 459.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Attorney, Bourke Jones, Assistant City Attorney, Joseph N. Owen, Deputy City Attorney, and James A. Doherty, Deputy City Attorney, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

R. W. Agnew, in pro. per.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff brought this proceeding for a Writ of Mandate to compel the City of Los Angeles to issue him a permit to install electrical work. He alleged that he holds a state license as an electrical contractor; that the city refused to issue a permit until he had paid $100 to defray expenses of inspections and other charges and had given a bond of $1,000 conditioned for the payment of damages that might be suffered by any person through the violation of the building ordinance by him. He challenged the validity of these requirements on constitutional grounds. In his petition he referred to the ordinance in question by number but did not attempt to plead it in any other manner. The city answered and alleged that plaintiff had failed to comply with the ordinance by making the deposit and giving the bond required thereby. The answer of the city did not plead the ordinance, although it was referred to by number.

The parties entered into a stipulation for the purpose of simplifying the issues to be tried. It was stipulated that plaintiff holds a state license and that the ordinance in question contains certain provisions, copies of which were attached to the stipulation.

Plaintiff filed a written motion for judgment on the pleadings and the stipulation. The motion was granted. Defendant appeals from the judgment, which denied plaintiff a Writ of Mandate but declared the invalidity of the ordinance provisions which require the deposit and the bond.

[1, 2] Defendant's first point is that the ordinance was not pleaded so as to bring it before the court for consideration. This point is well taken. An ordinance may be pleaded by referring to its title and the day of its passage. Code Civ.Proc. § 459. Mere reference to an ordinance by number is not sufficient. Redwood Theatres v. City of Modesto, 86 Cal.App.2d 907, 196 P.2d 119; Bandini Estate Co. v. Payne, 10 Cal.App.2d 623, 52 P.2d 959.

It is assumed by the parties that the court deemed the stipulation to be sufficient to place the entire ordinance before the court on the motion notwithstanding any insufficiency of the pleadings. The record does not support this assumption. It does not appear that the stipulation was entered into for use on a motion for judgment on the pleadings. Although plaintiff specified the stipulation, as well as the pleadings in his motion, the record does not show that the parties consented that the stipulation should be considered by the court, as was done in North Side, etc., Ass'n v. Hillside, etc., Park, 70 Cal.App.2d 609, 613, 161 P.2d 618, nor does it appear that the court considered it. Upon the contrary, the judgment recites that the court had heard the arguments of the parties and had "read and considered the respective briefs and pleadings of the parties", etc. The record contains a certified copy of "Stipulation of facts and city ordinances." Attached to the stipulation as exhibits are a photostat of plaintiff's state contractor's license and what purports to be a photostat of certain amendments to the Los Angeles Municipal Code relating to the $100 payment and the $1,000 bond. These exhibits are identified in the stipulation. However, there are also exhibits purporting to contain ordinance provisions for "permit service fees—advance collection," provisions relating to "permits," provisions relating to permit fees and numerous other matters. As a supplement to the clerk's transcript there are copies of what purport to be provisions of certain other sections of the municipal code. Except for the first two exhibits mentioned the remainder are not authenticated by the stipulation.

[3] Upon a motion for judgment on the pleadings, as on demurrer, the court considers only the pleadings. North Side, etc., Ass'n v. Hillside, etc., Park, supra; Price v. Price, 85 Cal.App.2d 732, 194 P.2d 101; Grant v. Aerodraulics Co., 91 Cal.App.2d 68, 204 P.2d 683; National Automobile Ins. Co. v. Winter, 58 Cal.App.2d 11, 16, 136 P.2d 22; Merchants' Ice, etc., Co. v. Globe Brewing Co., 73 Cal.App.2d 828, 833, 167 P.2d 503; Kleiner v. Garrison, 82 Cal.App.2d 442, 445, 187 P.2d 57.

[4, 5] The power of the court to render judgment on the pleadings should not be exercised so as to permit of the consideration of facts that are not pleaded. There are other methods of summary procedure where the facts are not in dispute or may be readily established. Aside from the fact that the record indicates the court did not consider the stipulation, it would be assumed that it was not considered for the reason that it could not properly have been used as a basis for the motion.

The question of the validity of the ordinance can be put in issue only by amended pleadings and the entire ordinance should be pleaded in the manner provided by law. The stipulation was not intended to serve the purpose of an amendment of the petition, and if that had been its purpose, the record would have been greatly confused, since only fragments of the ordinance were included and numerous of the attached exhibits were not verified by the stipulation. These latter are relevant to the provision requiring the payment of $100 for a permit. It is impossible to tell from the record whether the unverified additions to the stipulations were considered by the court or whether the court deemed the entire ordinance to be in evidence. Under these circumstances we find ourselves without a proper record upon which to determine the validity of the ordinance provisions in question.

The judgment (denominated a "Judgment and Order") is reversed.

WOOD, J., concurs.

VALLÉE, Justice.

I dissent. The motion of plaintiff was for "judgment on the pleadings herein and the stipulation on file herein and on the ground that no issue of fact remains herein and that the sole issue is one of law clearly entitling plaintiff to judgment herein." It was this motion which was granted. The stipulation reads: "It is hereby stipulated and agreed by and between the plaintiff and the defendants, above entitled, as to the issues of fact herein and the Los Angeles City Ordinances herein concerned, as follows. * * *" It was then agreed that plaintiff is an electrical contractor licensed by the state and by the County of Los Angeles and that the ordinances attached thereto are ordinances of the City of Los Angeles. Various ordinances and provisions of others are set forth. I construe the stipulation to mean that all ordinance provisions necessary to a determination of the case were set forth in the stipulation and that the only question before the court was one of law. Defendants appeared on the hearing of the motion and argued on the theory that all of the facts were before the court and that only a question of law was involved. Plaintiff says in his brief that defendants "appeared on the motion for judgment and earnestly argued only the validity of their ordinance; the question of the propriety of the motion for judgment was not raised by the appellants in the lower court." This statement is not denied by defendants. We must accept it as asserting the fact correctly. De Mirjian v. Lutinsky, 77 Cal. App.2d 915, 916, 177 P.2d 50; Standard Iron Works v. Maryland Casualty Co., 56 Cal.App. 600, 601, 206 P. 136. Under these circumstances defendants should not now be permitted to say "that neither the trial court in the first instance, nor this Court upon review, may go outside the pleadings themselves in deciding whether the motion was properly granted." The appeal should be decided on its merits.

Rehearing denied; VALLÉE, J., dissenting.

35 Cal.2d 849

Ex parte MITCHELL.
Cr. 5025.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.
Sept. 7, 1950.

Original proceeding in the matter of the application of Marie Mitchell, also known as Brenda Allen, for a writ of habeas corpus on the ground that her conviction was the result of perjured testimony on the part of members of the police department of the city of Los Angeles. The Supreme Court, Shenk, J., issued the writ, and upon its return ordered a reference. The referee found that the questioned testimony had been truthful, and the petitioner presented exceptions to the findings. The Supreme Court reviewed the record and held that the petitioner had not sustained the burden of proving by a preponderance of the substantial, credible evidence that perjured testimony was knowingly presented by the prosecution and that such testimony established an essential element of her conviction.

Writ discharged and petitioner remanded to custody.

1. Habeas corpus ⇐90

Where reference is ordered in habeas corpus proceeding, court is not bound by findings of fact made by referee, but such findings are entitled to important consideration, since referee had opportunity to observe demeanor of those who appeared before him and to weigh what was said in connection with their manner on witness stand.

2. Habeas corpus ⇐85(1)

In habeas corpus proceeding by prisoner to secure release on ground that her conviction was result of perjured testimony, evidence was insufficient to authorize the setting aside of judgment of conviction.

3. Habeas corpus ⇐85(1)

In habeas corpus proceeding, where petitioner alleged that her conviction was result of perjured testimony presented by members of police department, burden was on petitioner to show by preponderance of substantial, credible evidence that perjured testimony was knowingly presented by prosecution and that such testimony established an essential of her conviction

4. Habeas corpus ⇐30(1)

Petitioner seeking relief by habeas corpus on ground that prosecution knowingly used perjured testimony to obtain conviction was not entitled to release on basis of testimony withheld by her at trial.

5. Habeas corpus ⇐90

In habeas corpus proceeding, where petitioner sought release on ground that her conviction was result of perjured testimony on part of members of police department, question of willful withholding of evidence by state not having been presented prior to order of reference or in hearing before referee was not issue in case.

6. Habeas corpus ⇐90

Where police woman was called as witness by petitioner seeking release by habeas corpus on ground that prosecution obtained conviction by use of perjured testimony on part of members of police department, said witness' refusal to testify on ground that her testimony would tend to incriminate her did not constitute willful suppression of evidence by state.

John J. Bradley, Max Solomon, Los Angeles, for appellant.

W. E. Simpson, District Attorney, Los Angeles County, Jere J. Sullivan, and Robert Wheeler, Deputies District Attorney, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHENK, Justice.

By this preceeding in habeas corpus the petitioner is seeking her release from the custody of the sheriff of Los Angeles County. She alleges that her conviction was the result of perjured testimony on the part of members of the police department of the city of Los Angeles and that thereby her constitutional rights were unlawfully invaded.

The petitioner was convicted in September 1948 of an attempt to commit the crime of pandering.[1] The trial was before the court without a jury. She was sentenced to the State Institution for Women at Tehachapi. She filed an application for probation which was granted on condition that she serve one year in the county jail. A motion for a new trial was denied. The judgment and the order were affirmed. People v. Mitchell, 91 Cal.App.2d 214, 205 P.2d 101. A hearing in this court was denied in May, 1949, and the petitioner commenced to serve her time in the county jail. In July, 1949, an investigation was in progress before the county grand jury involving certain members of the Los Angeles police department.

On July 7, 1949, Audrey Davis appeared before the grand jury and was subjected to direct and cross-examination concerning certain matters that had taken place during the course of the prosecution of the petitioner. She was a policewoman in the police department of the city of Los Angeles and was one of the principal witnesses on behalf of the prosecution against the petitioner. At the hearing before the grand jury she stated that she had sworn falsely at the petitioner's trial. She also stated that Charles Stoker had committed perjury at the trial and had influenced her to swear falsely. Stoker was a sergeant in the police department and was the officer to whom Audrey Davis was required to report in the performance of her duties.

After the testimony of Audrey Davis before the grand jury became known to her, the petitioner filed an application for a writ of habeas corpus in the District Court of Appeal, 2nd Appellate District, basing her application upon the same grounds set forth in the present petition. That application was denied on August 3, 1949. On August 10th she filed her application for a writ of habeas corpus in this court and the writ was issued. Upon the return to the writ a reference was ordered. The Honorable William F. Traverso, judge of the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, was appointed to take testimony bearing upon the following questions and to make findings of fact thereon:

1. Did any witness who testified at the trial of Marie Mitchell, also known as Brenda Allen, on the charge of attempted pandering, a felony, in action No. 119980 in the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, commit perjury as defined in section 118 of the Penal Code; that is, did any such witness give false testimony as to any material matter which he or she knew to be false?

2. In the event that any such witness so falsely testified, did any representative of the State of California responsible for the presentation of the testimony, including any police officer, cause or suffer such testimony to be introduced knowing that such testimony as given was false?

A hearing was held by the referee in Los Angeles on October 31, 1949. Witnesses were called including the petitioner and Audrey Davis on behalf of the petitioner and Sergeant Stoker on behalf of the respondents. Transcripts of certain testimony before the grand jury and at the petitioner's trial were introduced in evidence. On the basis of all of the evidence introduced, the referee made fourteen specific findings of fact to the effect that the testimony of Audrey Davis and Charles Stoker given at the petitioner's trial was truthful. The answer to the first question was therefore in the negative and it became unnecessary to answer the second question. Following the filing of the findings and report of the referee, the petitioner presented exceptions to the findings. The record before the referee and in turn the record before us in this proceeding consists of the petition for the writ; the respondent's objection to the issuance thereof; the transcript of the oral testimony taken at the hearing before the referee—covering 164 pages; the transcript of the testimony of Audrey Davis at the trial of the petitioner, and the transcript of testimony of Audrey Davis and Sergeant Stoker before the grand jury in July 1949.

1. Stats. 1911, p. 9, provides, "Any person who shall procure a female inmate for a house of prostitution, or who, by promises, * * * or by any device or scheme, shall cause, induce, persuade or encourage a female person to become an inmate of a house of prostitution, or shall procure for a female person a place as an inmate in a house of prostitution * * * shall be guilty of a felony, to wit: pandering * * *" with punishment of not less than one nor more than ten years.

In order to understand the nature of the charge of perjury, it is necessary to relate in some detail the facts in support of the judgment of conviction and the testimony taken before the grand jury.

At the petitioner's trial Audrey Davis testified to the following effect: She was a policewoman who worked under the direction of Sergeant Stoker. Stoker told her that he suspected that prostitutes were living at a certain hotel and that he was suspicious of the management of the hotel. He instructed her to reside at the hotel and pose there as a prostitute to see if she could obtain information to substantiate his suspicions. He gave her the number of a telephone exchange service that he believed was being used by prostitutes generally and told her to try to become listed on that exchange. She established a residence at the hotel as directed and became acquainted with some of the people there. She attempted to subscribe to the telephone exchange service but was unsuccessful. After about three weeks, in the afternoon of May 2, 1948, the petitioner called her at the hotel, identified herself as Brenda Allen, and said she had a mutual friend who had given her Audrey Davis' telephone number. She said she understood that Audrey Davis was a prostitute who was out of work, and said she would like to talk over a business proposition with her. An appointment for an hour later was made. The petitioner gave Audrey Davis instructions as to how to reach her address and furnished her the petitioner's telephone number. This was the same number that Stoker had given her as the number of the telephone exchange service. Audrey Davis then telephoned Stoker and told him what had happened. Prior to that time Stoker had never mentioned the petitioner's name to Audrey Davis or said that his purpose was to obtain information about the petitioner. Stoker told Audrey Davis to see the petitioner according to her arrangement. He told her that he would also proceed to the house and would hide outside in order to be available for assistance if trouble developed. Audrey Davis went to the petitioner's house and found her in her front yard flower garden. They went inside the house and engaged in conversation. The petitioner said she conducted a house of prostitution and gave various details of her operations. She questioned Audrey Davis about her experience and ability in that activity, and then told her she would arrange for a medical examination in order that she could start to work. The petitioner stated that she would telephone her the next day about eleven o'clock in the morning regarding the examination. The petitioner then called a taxicab by telephone for Audrey Davis. While they were waiting for the taxicab, an unidentified man called at the front door; the petitioner admitted him and escorted him to another part of the house. The petitioner returned and told Audrey Davis that the man was "an old customer" who was a "thirty dollar trick" and that if she wanted to make fifteen dollars quickly, she could "take the trick." The policewoman made excuses. The petitioner said that she had expected another girl to be available, and urged Audrey Davis to engage in an act of prostitution with the unidentified man. The taxicab arrived and Audrey Davis left, explaining that she had an appointment. On the next day about eleven o'clock in the morning, the petitioner again telephoned Audrey Davis. She said she was unable to have her see a doctor that day, but would arrange for an examination the next day. She told Audrey Davis that after the examination she could definitely start employment the next day at one o'clock in the afternoon. She also said that one of her girls might leave that night and if so Audrey Davis could begin work earlier. She asked Audrey Davis to telephone her about eight o'clock in the evening to find out whether she should begin work earlier.

Audrey Davis called several times, but each time was informed that the petitioner was not available.

According to the petitioner's allegations Sergeant Stoker testified at the trial that Audrey Davis called him and stated that the petitioner had called her by telephone; that he went to the petitioner's address and concealed himself across the street in some shrubbery before Audrey Davis arrived; that he saw Audrey Davis arrive, saw an unidentified man arrive later, and saw Audrey Davis leave.

Before the grand jury Audrey Davis testified that Sergeant Stoker had persuaded her to tell falsehoods at the petitioner's trial in order to bolster his case against the petitioner. In particular she stated that she had testified falsely in saying that the petitioner had made the original telephone call to her. She said that she herself had made that call. She said that when the Sergeant had given her the telephone number of the exchange service, he had informed her that it was the number used by the petitioner and had instructed her to use the number to call the petitioner in order to try to secure employment with her as a prostitute. She further testified that she did not call Stoker or anyone else to inform him that she was going to the petitioner's house, so that in her opinion Stoker was not telling the truth when he testified that he went to the house after receiving such a call. As to whether the petitioner called her on May 3, 1948, she stated that she could not recall. She also stated to the grand jury that she was formerly in love with Sergeant Stoker and for that reason had acceded to his request to bear false witness against the petitioner. She stated that she had more recently fallen out with Stoker and was now telling the truth. She did not, however, recant her testimony with reference to meeting the petitioner at the latter's house or the conversation that followed between the petitioner and herself at that time. She repeated her testimony as to those particular events in detail.

As a ground for her release from custody, the petitioner asserts that Audrey Davis falsely testified at the trial when she said, (1) that she was called by telephone originally by the petitioner on May 2nd, (2) that she telephoned Stoker before visiting the petitioner on May 2nd, (3) that she had never discussed the petitioner with Stoker before May 2nd, (4) that the petitioner urged her to engage in prostitution while at her house on May 2nd, and (5) that the petitioner again called her on the morning of May 3rd. The petitioner also alleges that Stoker testified falsely at the trial when he stated that he had not mentioned the petitioner to Audrey Davis prior to May 2nd; that he received the telephone call from Audrey Davis on May 2nd; and that he stationed himself outside the petitioner's house on May 2nd after receiving such a call and saw persons arriving.

Evidence on these issues of fact was taken at the hearing before the referee. Audrey Davis was called on behalf of the petitioner. She refused to answer pertinent questions on the ground that the answers would tend to incriminate her and she was excused. Charles Stoker, called on behalf of respondent, testified to the truth of his testimony at the petitioner's trial and denied that he had done anything to influence Audrey Davis to testify falsely at the trial. Stoker's testimony before the grand jury was introduced in evidence. In his testimony there, Stoker also asserted the truth of his testimony at the trial and denied influencing Audrey Davis' testimony. As to Audrey Davis' motive for changing her testimony, Stoker testified before the grand jury that Audrey Davis' friendship for him had abruptly ended when her father arrived in the city. He testified that her father was a former policer officer and a close friend of several members of the Los Angeles police department who were being investigated by the grand jury and about whom Stoker had earlier given damaging testimony.

The petitioner did not testify at her trial but she did testify before the referee. She denied making the original telephone call to Audrey Davis, but admitted talking to her twice on the telephone and admitted that she had had a personal interview with her at her house. She denied having any conversation with Audrey Davis over the telephone or in person about prostitution and denied in particular having urged Audrey Davis to engage in an act of prostitution while at the petitioner's house.

As stated, the referee found against the petitioner as to every item of asserted perjury, and the petitioner excepted to the findings. It was conceded at the hearing on the exceptions that if the testimony of Audrey Davis and Charles Stoker at the trial of the petitioner be found to be false with respect to any essential facts, their action would constitute state action as contemplated by the authorities. Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U.S. 103, 112, 55 S.Ct. 340, 79 L.Ed. 791; In re Mooney, 10 Cal.2d 1, 73 P.2d 554; In re Lindley, 29 Cal.2d 709, 722, 177 P.2d 918; In re De La Roi, 27 Cal.2d 354, 164 P.2d 10. The exceptions to the findings were on the ground that they lacked support in the evidence or were contrary to it.

[1-3] Although this court is not bound by the findings of fact made by the referee, his findings are entitled to important consideration. The referee "had an opportunity to observe the demeanor of those who appeared before him and to weigh what they said in connection with their manner on the witness stand." In re De La Roi, 27 Cal.2d 354, 364, 164 P.2d 10, 15. In the present proceeding, however, it is not necessary to rely solely on the credence given particular testimony by the referee. An independent review of the record not only justifies but impels the conclusion that the petitioner has not sustained the burden of proof required of her in order to set aside the judgment of conviction. See In re Lindley, 29 Cal.2d 709, 722, 177 P.2d 918. The petitioner must show by a preponderance of substantial, credible evidence that perjured testimony was knowingly presented by the prosecution, In re Mooney, 10 Cal.2d 1, 15, 73 P.2d 554, and that such testimony established an essential element of her conviction. See In re Lindley, supra, 29 Cal.2d 709, 722, 177 P.2d 918; In re De La Roi, 28 Cal.2d 264, 269, 169 P.2d 363; In re De La Roi, supra, 27 Cal. 2d 354, 365, 164 P.2d 10; In re Egan, 24 Cal.2d 323, 335, 149 P.2d 693. Cf. Lisenba v. California, 314 U.S. 219, 236–237, 62 S.Ct. 280, 86 L.Ed. 166. This she has failed to do.

[4] The crucial testimony at the petitioner's trial was Audrey Davis' testimony concerning the meeting and conversation with the petitioner at her house on May 2, 1948. That evidence was sufficient alone to convict the petitioner. It was referred to by the trial judge when he orally rendered his decision.[2] This testimony was not recanted by Audrey Davis. Its truthfulness must be deemed to have been established by the judgment of conviction and by the decision on appeal. Although the petitioner denied its truth before the referee, her silence as to this damaging evidence at her trial weighs heavily against her in the present proceeding. She is now endeavoring to set aside the judgment of the court in finding her guilty on evidence undisputed by her at her trial and not discredited by any witness but herself before the referee. She had an opportunity to present at her trial what she now claims to be the truth, and declined to do so. She is thus in the position of withholding her testimony at her trial and reserving a case for her possible later release. This she may not do. See In re Manchester, 33 Cal. 2d 740, 742, 204 P.2d 881; In re Swain, 34 Cal.2d 300, 209 P.2d 793.

The petitioner has failed to prove false the testimony that established the elements of her crime and it becomes unnecessary to make any nice inquiry into the asserted perjuries as to other testimony. It is enough to say that Sergeant Stoker's testimony before the referee was alone sufficient, if believed, to support the referee's findings. The motives of Audrey Davis in testifying as she did before the grand jury served greatly to discredit her, and the testimony of Stoker before that body also reflected on her credibility.

2. The trial judge stated, "In addition, the facts * * * establish that the defendant, while Miss Davis was visiting her * * *, sought to prevail upon her to have and accomplish an act of sexual intercourse with * * * an 'old customer', and when Miss Davis demurred * * *, the defendant further urged her to accept the proffered employment. * * * Thus it is quite plain that the acts of the defendant would have resulted in the commission of [pandering] but for the refusal of Miss Davis * *." Reporter's Transcript on appeal, p. 275, in People v. Mitchell, 91 Cal.App.2d 214, 205 P.2d 101.

[5, 6] In her exceptions to the findings of the referee the petitioner presents for the first time the point that the instructions embodied in the questions furnished by this court to the referee did not, but should have, contained a request for a determination as to whether any prosecuting official deliberately withheld information which would have been beneficial to the defense if it had been given. A sufficient answer is that nowhere in her petition for the writ of habeas corpus is it alleged that any prosecuting official withheld information that would have been beneficial to her cause. That question was not raised prior to the order of reference, nor was it presented on the hearing before the referee. It is not an issue in the case. Nevertheless it is asserted that there was a willful suppression of evidence by the state when Audrey Davis, called as a witness before the referee, refused to answer on the ground that her testimony would tend to incriminate her. As stated, Audrey Davis was called as a witness on behalf of the petitioner. Thus we have the unusual contention that the successful assertion by a defendant's witness of the constitutional protection against self-incrimination is a willful suppression of evidence on the part of the state. The constitutional right is of course available to any witness, and the contention is groundless. Furthermore, it is impossible to conjecture what she would have said if she had testified before the referee. In other words, there is no way of knowing whether she would then have repudiated her testimony at the trial or her testimony before the grand jury.

The exceptions to the findings of the referee are overruled, and those findings are adopted as the findings of this court.

The writ is discharged and the petitioner is remanded to custody.

EDMONDS, CARTER, TRAYNOR, and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 293

NEUSTADT v. SKERNSWELL.

Civ. 14431.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 31, 1950.

Hearing Denied Oct. 26, 1950.

Julius Neustadt brought an action against Joseph Skernswell to establish a trust in real property. On defendant's appeal from an interlocutory decree, the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division 1, reversed the judgment that defendant's demurrer to the complaint be sustained with leave for the plaintiff to amend. Thereafter plaintiff filed two amended complaints to which demurrers were sustained and a third amendment complaint to which demurrer was overruled. Defendant filed an answer and a cross-complaint, and plaintiff's demurrer to the cross-complaint was overruled, and his motion to strike was denied. Plaintiff had the cause set for trial for September 30, 1949. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Daniel R. Shoemaker, J., entered an order granting defendant's motion to dismiss the proceedings, and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division 2, Nourse, P. J., held that defendant was entitled to have the proceedings dismissed because trial was not had within three years after filing of the remittitur.

Affirmed.

1. Dismissal and nonsuit ⇐60(1)

Since section of code of civil procedure, providing for dismissal of action unless brought to trial within three years of filing of remittitur with county clerk on reversal of judgment on appeal is clear and unambiguous, such section is not open to judicial interpretation. Code Civ.Proc. § 583.

2. Dismissal and nonsuit ⇐60(1)

Section of code of civil procedure, providing for dismissal of action unless brought to trial within three years after filing of remittitur with county clerk on reversal of judgment on appeal, is mandatory. Code Civ.Proc. § 583.

3. Appeal and error ⇐927(2)

Where motion to dismiss action for delay in trial was heard upon conflicting affidavits, appellate court would assume that lower court found facts to be as asserted by moving and prevailing party. Code Civ.Proc. § 583.

4. Dismissal and nonsuit ⇐60(6)

In code section providing for dismissal of action for delay in trial, exception found in some portions of section, excusing delay when written stipulation extending time has been made, is not incorporated into last portion of section relating to causes remanded for new trial after appeal, and that portion of section admits of no stipulation, written or oral. Code Civ.Proc. § 583.

5. Dismissal and nonsuit ⇐60(2)

Where appeal was taken and judgment reversed with cause remanded for new trial and remittitur was filed with county clerk on July 31, 1945, and thereafter complaint was amended three times and cause was finally set for trial for September 30, 1949, defendant was entitled to have proceedings dismissed because trial was not had within three years of filing of remittitur. Code Civ.Proc. § 583.

Joseph A. Brown, San Francisco, for appellant.

Marcel E. Cerf, Robinson & Leland, San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

In an action to establish a trust in real property plaintiff had an interlocutory decree from which defendant appealed. Division One of this court reversed the judgment with directions to sustain the demurrer to the complaint with leave to amend. The remittitur went down July 31, 1945. There followed an amended complaint, a demurrer thereto and motion to strike. The demurrer was sustained and the motion to strike was granted. A second amended complaint was filed and the demurrer thereto was sustained. A demurrer to a third amended complaint was overruled and, on September 30, 1947, defendant filed an answer and cross-complaint. On November 12, 1947, plaintiff's demurrer to the cross-complaint was overruled and his motion to strike was denied. Plaintiff's answer to the cross-complaint was filed January 15, 1948. The pleadings then having been settled the cause was ready for trial as of that date.

On June 2, 1948, plaintiff filed a notice of motion to set the cause for trial. The motion came on the calendar August 11, 1948, but was dropped because plaintiff failed to appear. One year later—August 9, 1949, pursuant to notice given June 2, 1949, plaintiff had the cause set for trial for September 30, 1949. Thereupon defendant moved to dismiss the proceedings because trial was not had within three years of the filing of the remittitur with the county clerk on reversal of the judgment on appeal. This motion was made and granted pursuant to the provisions of section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure reading (in part): "When in an action after judgment, an appeal has been taken and judgment reversed with cause remanded for a new trial (or when an appeal has been taken from an order granting a new trial and such order is affirmed on appeal), the action must be dismissed by the trial court, on motion of defendant after due notice to plaintiff, or of its own motion, unless brought to trial within three years from the date upon which remittitur is filed by the clerk of the trial court." The appeal here is from such an order.

[1, 2] The code section is clear and unambiguous and hence is not open to "judicial interpretation". That it is mandatory under the circumstances noted has been held on numerous occasions. See Rosefield Packing Co. v. Superior Court, 4 Cal.2d 120, 122, 47 P.2d 716; Breakstone

v. Giannini, 70 Cal.App.2d 224, 229, 160 P.2d 887.

[3-5] The only debatable question raised on the appeal is whether respondent is estopped by his conduct to raise the bar of the statute. Appellant's counsel filed a lengthy affidavit in the superior court reciting conversations with one of the attorneys for respondent from which he argues that the long delay was agreed to. The respondent's counsel filed a similar affidavit categorically denying all these statements of fact. In denying appellant's plea for relief on this ground we must assume that the trial court accepted as true the facts as stated by respondent. Lieb v. Lager, 9 Cal.App.2d 324, 326, 49 P.2d 886. It should be noted however that the portion of section 583 applicable here does not incorporate the exception found in the other portions of the section excusing the delay when a written stipulation extending time has been made. Cases holding that the "written" stipulation might be excused under certain exceptional circumstances have no application to the last sentence of the section which is applicable here and which admits of no stipulation written or oral.

Order affirmed.

We concur:

GOODELL and DOOLING, JJ., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 269

HARRINGTON et al. v. EVANS.
Civ. 14499.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 30, 1950.

Suit by James Harrington and others against Charles H. Evans, individually and doing business under the firm name and style of Evans Auto & Truck Rental Company, and another, for injuries sustained in motor vehicle collision. The Superior Court for Alameda County, A. J. Woolsey, J., entered judgment on a verdict in favor of plaintiffs and the named defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, P. J., held that any lack of jurisdiction of appellant had been waived and that dismissal of operator of motor vehicle as a party defendant was not prejudicial error.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appearance ⇐9(4)

Where trial court found on conflicting evidence that summons had been served on party named as defendant by amendment of complaint, any lack of jurisdiction was waived by his general and special demurrer, raising the issue of sufficiency of the complaint, and his answer on the merits.

2. Automobiles ⇐234

In suit against alleged owner of motor vehicle for injuries sustained in collision therewith, operator of vehicle was a "proper party", but not a "necessary party", or "indispensable party". Vehicle Code, § 402(c, d).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Indispensable Party", "Necessary Party" and "Proper Party".

3. Parties ⇐18, 29

Persons who should normally be made parties in order to enable court to do complete justice are "necessary parties", but if their interests are separable from the others, and particularly if their presence in the suit cannot be obtained, they are not "indispensable parties" without whom the court cannot proceed.

4. Parties ⇐75(1)

Proceeding in absence of a proper or necessary party is not jurisdictional, but error at the most, dependent upon the circumstances.

5. Automobiles ⇐192(1)

Lack of final adjudication of the liability of operator of automobile does not affect the statutory liability of the owner. Vehicle Code, § 402(c, d).

6. Appeal and error ⇐1024(3)

In suit against alleged owner of motor vehicle from which operator of vehicle was dropped as a party defendant, whether plaintiffs had exercised due diligence in efforts to find and serve operator with summons was a question for trial court under conflicting evidence. Vehicle Code, § 402(c, d).

7. Appeal and error ⇐877(2)

Where defendant by verified answer and testimony disclaimed all right of ownership in motor vehicle involved in collision, he could not contend on appeal that dismissal of operator as a party defendant was prejudicial error, since he was in no position to insist upon statutory right of an owner against operator. Vehicle Code, § 402(c, d).

8. Automobiles ⇐192(2, 11)

Provisions of Vehicle Code, relating to primary liability of owner of motor vehicle without negligence on his part, do not relieve him from liability for negligence, such as lending vehicle to a known incompetent or careless driver or lending a vehicle having dangerous mechanical defects. Vehicle Code, § 402(c, d).

9. Appeal and error ⇐1036(5)

Where defendant in suit for injuries sustained in motor vehicle collision contended that he was merely using vehicle with owner's permission and disclaimed any right of ownership therein and jury returned a general verdict against him without disclosing for what type of negligence or in what capacity he was adjudged liable, dismissal of operator of vehicle as a party defendant was not prejudicial error. Vehicle Code, § 402(c, d).

10. Pleading ⇐345(1.4)

Where defendant was sued as owner of motor vehicle for injuries sustained in collision therewith, proof that he was in fact the bailee and not owner of vehicle would not render denial of his motion for judgment on the pleadings erroneous. Vehicle Code, §§ 66, 68.

11. Automobiles ⇐242(5)

Defendant's ownership of motor vehicle involved in collision could be inferred from fact that he permitted it to be used on public streets with name of his company painted thereon and without license plates, registration card or other means of showing ownership.

12. Automobiles ⇐246(17)

Where defendant in suit for injuries sustained in motor vehicle collision denied ownership of vehicle, the distinction drawn in definitions of owner and registered owner in Vehicle Code justified instruction that jury could disbelieve his testimony as to ownership and draw inference of ownership from proof that he permitted vehicle to be used on public streets with name of his company painted thereon and without license plates, registration card or other means of showing ownership. Vehicle Code, §§ 66, 68.

Schofield, Hanson & Sholars, Allison E. Schofield, Raymond L. Hanson, Brunswig Sholars, and Thomas M. Jenkins, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Thomas L. Berkley, C. Wayne White, of Berkeley, Terry A. Francois, of San Francisco, and Joseph G. Kennedy, of Berkeley, for respondents.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiffs sued for personal injuries arising from a motor vehicle collision. The defendants were named as "Charles J. Evans, individually, doing business under the firm name and style of Evans Auto and Truck Rental Company, John Coffee." Plaintiffs were granted leave to amend the name of the individual to "Charles H. Evans." Proof was made that summons was served on Charles H. and the trial court found on conflicting evidence that that was true. The cause went to trial on the complaint and the answer of Charles H. Evans after his demurrer was overruled. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiffs. Charles H. Evans appeals for himself and the Evans Auto and Truck Rental Company.

[1] The first ground urged is that the trial court was without jurisdiction to substitute appellant and to proceed with the trial in his name. If there was any lack of jurisdiction the question was waived by his demurrer and answer on the merits. His demurrer was both general and special, thus raising the issue of the sufficiency of the complaint which bears no relation to the question of service of summons. His answer raised all the issues of fact upon which the case was tried.

In Security Loan & Trust Co. etc. v. Boston & S. R. Fruit Co., 126 Cal. 418, 421, 58 P. 941, 59 P. 296, one of the objections raised to the question of jurisdiction of the defendant on substituted service was that the complaint did not state a cause of action against the defendant. This was held a waiver of the defense of want of jurisdiction. In accord are Olcese v. Justice's Court, 156 Cal. 82, 87, 103 P. 317; Raps v. Raps, 20 Cal.2d 382, 385, 125 P.2d 826; Judson v. Superior Court, 21 Cal.2d 11, 13, 129 P.2d 361; Lacey v. Bertone, 33 Cal.2d 649, 651, 203 P.2d 755. In the Lacey case the court said: "This rule is ordinarily applied when the defect consists in a failure to serve summons or give the notice required to bring the party before the court originally." [33 Cal.2d 649, 203 P.2d 757] Thus the appellant made himself a defendant for all purposes of the trial. This disposes of the first four grounds urged by appellant because since appellant waived the question of jurisdiction it is immaterial how the substitution was made.

[2, 3] The fifth ground—the dismissal of the driver of the motor vehicle as a party defendant—raises a question of "prejudicial" error only. It is argued that since appellant "as owner" had the right of subrogation against Coffee the driver under section 402(c) of the Vehicle Code, the latter should have been kept in the case for the purpose of securing a judgment against him. Appellant argues the point on the assumption that Coffee was both a necessary and an indispensable party. In this assumption he is in error. Coffee was a proper party defendant, but neither a necessary nor an indispensable one. This whole subject is discussed at length in Bank of California National Ass'n v. Superior Court, 16 Cal.2d 516, 520 et seq., 106 P.2d 879. There the court in 16 Cal.2d at page 521, 106 P.2d at page 883, quoted with approval Clark, Code Pleading, p. 245, note 21, as follows: "'It has been objected that the terms "necessary" and "indispensable" convey the same idea. * * * But a distinction has been drawn. While necessary parties are so interested in the controversy that they should normally be made parties in order to enable the court to do complete justice, yet if their interests are separable from the rest and particularly where their presence in the suit cannot be obtained, they are not indispensable parties. The latter are those without whom the court cannot proceed.'"

[4, 5] When a party is found to be indispensable it is improper for the court to proceed without bringing him in. When he is found to be a proper or necessary party proceeding in his absence is not jurisdictional but error at the most, dependent upon the circumstances. The authorities are in accord that lack of final adjudication of the liability of the operator of the car does not affect the statutory liability of the owner. This is true in such cases as where the operator is dead or without the jurisdiction or can not be served. See Baugh v. Rogers, 24 Cal.2d 200, 220, 148 P.2d 633, 152 A.L.R. 1043, and citations. Holland v. Kodimer, 11 Cal.2d 40, 43, 77 P.2d 843; Broome v. Kern Valley Packing Co., 6 Cal. App.2d 256, 44 P.2d 430; Sutton v. Tanger, 115 Cal.App. 267, 1 P.2d 521; Sayles v. Peters, 11 Cal.App.2d 401, 54 P.2d 94; Lee v. Deasy, 19 Cal.App.2d 667, 66 P.2d 175; National Automobile Ins. Co. v. Cunningham, 41 Cal.App.2d 828, 107 P.2d 643.

[6] There was some evidence here that the operator was outside the State for several months following the accident. Appellant claims that he had returned and was living in San Francisco for sometime before the trial. The matter of the diligence of respondent in endeavoring to find and serve him was a question for the trial court to decide.

The question here is further complicated by the insistence of the appellant that he was not at anytime the owner of the vehicle. It was his contention throughout the trial that the vehicle was owned by one McCord and was used by appellant in his business, presumably under permission of the true owner. This defense was raised in his answer but he did not demand that McCord be made a party. His demand that the operator be made a party was refused for the reasons above stated. This situation would make a case fundamentally different from those cited which hold that when the owner is sued the operator should be joined and which apply section 402(c) of the Vehicle Code to cases in which the owner is sued to enforce his primary liability.

[7] But the appellant is in no position to raise any of these questions. He pleaded in his answer and testified as a witness that he was not the owner of the vehicle. He went further and testified that the true owner was one McCord. This position is wholly inconsistent with the position of his counsel taken in some portions of his brief on this appeal. If he was not the owner at the time of the accident, he is not entitled to insist upon the right of an owner under either section 402(c) or 402 (d) of the Vehicle Code. Those sections are limited to and fix the privileges of an owner—not of a bailee, a lessee or one holding merely by permission express or implied. Hence the appellant, having by his verified answer and by his testimony disclaimed all right of ownership, may not now, by way of argument alone, assume an entirely inconsistent position.

If, as his argument here implies, he was a bailee of the owner then under section 402(d) of the Vehicle Code "such bailee and such driver shall both be deemed operators of the vehicle of the owner within the meaning of subdivisions (c) and (d) of this section."

[8, 9] The jury returned a general verdict against appellant. It did not determine in what capacity he was adjudged liable. The sections of the Vehicle Code noted relate to the primary liability of the owner without negligence on his part. They do not purport to deny his liability for negligence—i. e., his lending the vehicle to a known incompetent or careless driver or the lending of the vehicle having serious and dangerous mechanical defects. Likewise a bailee might be grossly negligent in the same respects and his liability for damage would not be limited by the code sections. As we have said, the record does not disclose for what type of negligence, or in what capacity, defendant was held. It is sufficient that the jury could find him negligent under either theory. Hence appellant has not shown error.

[10] Appellant's motion for judgment on the pleadings was properly denied. Plaintiffs sued the defendant as owner and Coffee as operator. If during the course of the trial defendant was shown to have been the bailee there was nothing wrong with the pleading.

[11] The instruction stating that ownership in defendant could be inferred from the fact that he permitted the truck to be used on the public streets with the name of his company painted thereon and with no license plates, registration card, or other means of showing ownership was proper. Tieman v. Red Top Cab Co., 117 Cal.App. 40, 45, 3 P.2d 381.

[12] Appellant complains of another instruction telling the jury it could disbelieve his testimony as to ownership and draw the inference of ownership from proof of the facts heretofore stated. The instruction was proper in view of the distinction drawn in the definitions of "owner" and "registered owner" in sections 66 and 68 of the Vehicle Code, and it was a wise precaution on the part of the trial court to let the jury know that it was not necessary to find that the appellant was a "registered owner."

We find no prejudicial error.

Judgment affrmed.

GOODELL and DOOLING, JJ., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 258

AIR PURIFICATION, Inc. v. CARLE et al.
Civ. 4000.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.
Aug. 29, 1950.

Air Purification, Inc., sued Paul Carle and others for a declaratory judgment establishing a constructive trust in a patent application and plaintiff's ownership thereof. From a judgment of the Superior Court of San Diego County, L. N. Turrentine, J., for plaintiff, defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that the evidence supported the trial court's finding that named defendant wrongfully and surreptitiously undertook to conceive, in his own behalf, certain improvements and refinements in an air cleaner covered by plaintiff's patent, so as to entitle plaintiff to all benefits of another patent applied for by defendant and an accounting therefor by defendant as trustee.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Joint adventures ⇐4(1)

One who was member of joint venture and an incorporator, director and officer of corporation organized to carry out purposes of venture was equitably barred from taking or claiming any profit or obtaining any secret advantage from corporation in his dealings therewith and from attempting to enrich himself by virtue of his fiduciary obligation thereto.

2. Joint adventures ⇐4(1)

One co-adventurer, gaining advantage for himself over other adventurers in violation of his duty to act in utmost good faith toward them becomes a constructive trustee for them.

3. Joint adventures ⇐4(1)

A trust relationship is inherent in association of joint adventurers for common purpose, and one of parties thereto will not be allowed to deal with subject-matter of association for his own advantage.

4. Joint adventures ⇐1.14

Generally, relationship of joint adventurers may be terminated by their mutual consent.

5. Joint adventures ⇐1.14, 4(1)

A member of joint venture for purposes of inventing, patenting and marketing air purification devices for adventurers' joint and mutual benefit did not orally terminate venture as to him by walking out of members' meeting in which ideas incorporated in device invented by him were rejected by other members, and hence was not at liberty to obtain patent thereon in his own name and appropriate it to his own use, where he continued to be stockholder and officer of corporation organized to carry on venture and participated in demonstration of his device with possibility of sale by corporation of rights accrued thereunder.

6. Joint adventures ⇐1.14, 4(1)

Where no time is fixed for termination of joint venture, agreement remains in full force until its purpose is accomplished or parties definitely ascertain that such purpose cannot be accomplished, and neither party has right to withdraw from venture on ground that it is no longer advantageous to him or for purpose of acting independently to his co-adventurers' exclusion while agreement is in force.

7. Trusts ⇐110

In corporation's action for declaratory judgment establishing constructive trust for plaintiff's benefit in patent application by defendant officer of corporation, which was organized to carry on joint adventure of defendant and others to invent, patent and market air purification devices for their mutual benefit, evidence supported trial court's finding that defendant wrongfully and surreptitiously undertook to conceive, in his own behalf, certain improvements and refinements in device covered by corporation's patent so as to entitle corporation to all benefits of another patent applied for by defendant and to an accounting by him as trustee.

Pat A. McCormick, Los Angeles, Floyd H. Norris, Los Angeles, of counsel, for appellants.

Luce, Forward, Lee & Kunzel, San Diego, and Chas. L. Nichols, Los Angeles, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Plaintiff corporation brought this action for declaratory relief seeking to establish a constructive trust covering a patent application and asked the court to decree that the plaintiff was the true and actual owner thereof and that the defendants assign and deliver the same to the plaintiff. The trial judge prepared his own findings and found generally that in October, 1947, one Ray, defendant Paul Carle, and one Hardy, entered upon and engaged in a joint venture to invent and turn to account devices for the purification of air including devices for impelling the movement of air, gases and liquids, and to protect all such devices with all possible patent protection, for their joint and mutual benefit; that they jointly filed an application for patent No. 20256 in 1948, embracing the ideas and inventions theretofore conceived by them in the course of said joint venture; that about that time one Van Keuren and one Nelson joined in said joint venture with the mutual consent of all concerned and that they organized plaintiff corporation for the purpose of taking over and carrying on said joint venture, and each co-adventurer assigned his interest in said joint venture and became the owner of shares of capital stock of plaintiff corporation in proportion to his interest in the joint venture; that thereafter the application for the patent above mentioned was assigned to plaintiff corporation which now owns it; that plaintiff took over and carried on the business of said joint venture; that the shareholders became and ever since have been officers and directors of plaintiff corporation and defendant Carle was at all times and still is a director and vice president of that corporation; that each of the parties agreed orally to continue to devote his best talents and efforts and necessary time in furtherance of the aforesaid inventions of plaintiff and its business affairs to the end that each of them should enjoy the fullest measure of financial benefit therefrom.

The court then specifically found: "That prior to the 23rd day of November, 1948, and in violation of his fiduciary obligation to plaintiff, defendant Paul Carle wrongfully and surreptitiously undertook to conceive in his own behalf certain improvements and refinements upon and relating to the inventions and devices of plaintiff, and in so doing made use of materials belonging to plaintiff for such experimentations. That on said date of November 23, 1948, defendant Paul Carle caused to be filed in his own behalf an application for patent No. 61679 covering such new improvements and innovations, all of which relate to and are intended to achieve the same end results as the inventions and devices of plaintiff but simply contemplate the use of varying means and methods."

It was then found that an actual controversy did exist in respect to patent No. 61679 and the inventions covered thereby; that the plaintiff is the true and equitable owner of and entitled to all of the benefits of that patent as applied for by the defendant, and all amendments and improvements thereon, and that defendant, as trustee, is accountable to plaintiff for its use and benefit.

Defendants' attack is directed to the quoted portion of the findings above recited and they argue that the uncontradicted evidence shows that there were no surreptitious acts on the part of the defendant Carle; that in truth and fact he acted in the utmost good faith with his coadventurers at all times, as evidenced by the fact that when he had first conceived the idea for patent No. 61679, in the latter days of May, 1948, he made a full disclosure to Ray and Van Keuren and insisted that they adopt his idea and that they proceed to erect a rotor along the principles suggested by him, to the exclusion of everything else; that the remaining members of the corporation rejected his ideas and therefore he was entitled and at liberty to develop his ideas after a full disclosure to plaintiff corporation and its officers, and was then authorized to build, in his own private capacity, a rotor designated as No. 5, at his own expense, and that said rotor, the patent rights thereon and the rights thereto, became his own individual property, and that the trial court had no right or jurisdiction to award these rights to plaintiff.

For a proper determination of this issue it will be necessary to review some portions of the evidence bearing on the subject.

In 1947, defendant Carle and his two joint adventurers developed the idea of encasing a power driver rotor or blower in a housing, injecting a fluid into the air stream thus created to emulsify the dust, dirt, etc., and passing such stream through a condenser to eliminate the fluid and emulsion thereby permitting clean air to be discharged from the other side of the air cleaner. Such a machine was built and was referred to as "Form No. 1". While testing it the parties discovered it would eliminate smoke. This machine did not create a satisfactory emulsion and the parties decided to build another in order to correct this condition. Ray suggested placing closely spaced rings or plates perpendicular to and around the rotor in order to bring the water and impure air into more intimate contract thereby securing proper emulsification. Another model was similarly built but only one ring or plate was built into it. This reflected marked improvement despite the fact that multiple plates or rings were not used. However, instead of following up Ray's idea, Hardy and defendant Carle built a new model based on the original idea, referred to as "Form No. 2". Additional working capital was needed. In this connection they brought Van Keuren into the joint venture to assist Ray in his efforts to sell such air cleaner. Van Keuren interested Nelson in the project. Nelson put up $15,000 to continue the work for a 15 per cent interest in the business or of any corporation thereafter to be formed by the parties to take over and carry out the joint venture. This money was distributed to the remaining members, including defendant Carle, "as eating money" and a portion was retained for the purchase of material and carrying on the program. In 1948, Form No. 2 was tested by the corporation. Its cleaning efficiency was found satisfactory but was not economical. Later the corporation was formed. The Union Oil Company desired to have the Stanford Research Institute test the air cleaner so the parties constructed Forms No. 3A and 3B, which contained plates and spacers. Later, Hardy withdrew from the venture because of some disagreement in ideas with defendant Carle and he sold his interest to Nelson. After Forms No. 3A and 3B were completed they were taken to the university at Palo Alto for testing. No. 3B was brought back by defendant Carle for the purpose of further testing and it was then decided to build a new model. Defendant Carle wanted one made with all rings; the others wanted one made so that rings and plates would be interchangeable. The duty and responsibility of designing and building the new model was entrusted to defendant Carle. He built Form No. 4 containing a series of alternating plates and rings which created a tortuous or interrupted passage through the cleaner. Ray and Van Keuren were out of town endeavoring to interest prospective buyers of air cleaners in the new device. In August, 1948, Ray caused two drawings to be made showing his ideas about a series of rings, one showing the rings staggered in a plane and in the other the rings were all in the same plane. In October, 1948, the parties continued to test Form No. 4, and about this time defendant Carle absented himself from the plant where the work was being carried on. Ray phoned him daily, advising him of the progress of the tests they were making on Form No. 4. Carle did not give his coadventurers any intimation as to what, if any, work he was carrying on during his absence. About two weeks later defendant Carle phoned Ray and invited him to call at his home. Upon arriving Carle showed Ray a model, Form No. 5, which defendant Carle stated he had built with staggered rings separated by spacers.

Thereafter, Van Keuren and Nelson were called in by defendant Carle and had similar discussions with him. Ray testified that Carle then told him Form No. 5 was a great improvement over what plaintiffs were doing and that he thought he would take out an application for a patent in his own name. He further testified that this form conformed to the ideas he represented on his drawings and that if Carle should take out a patent it should be assigned to the corporation. Ray told Carle that it was not a new invention but merely one of the new improvements or refinements they had all been discussing for some time. Carle told Van Keuren that before he would assign any rights in and to his new invention the corporation stock would have to be reallocated with different amounts of shares for each stockholder, with Carle holding the majority of the stock. Van Keuren told him that he did not believe that he had invented anything new; that he had only improved on their present cleaner and that any member of the joint venture might have perfected some improvement as a result of his efforts, such as he and Mr. Ray had done in perfecting the condenser. Apparently no final arrangements were completed in this respect.

The testimony of Van Keuren and Nelson is that the only difference between Form No. 4 and Form No. 5 was that in Form No. 4 the rings were separated by plates and in Form No. 5 the rings were separated by spacers. Ray described Form No. 5 as being similar to the drawings he had previously made about his own ideas as to rings being staggered in a plane.

Although it is denied by defendant Carle, there is evidence that certain materials belonging to plaintiff, such as the motors, the pump, and the saw mandrel type bearing, spacers, rings, plates, base plates, etc. were used by defendant in the construction of his claimed Form No. 5. The evidence further indicates that thereafter plaintiff built a model designated as Form No. 5, which was similar to Form No. 5 built by defendant Carle, took it to Pasadena for testing; that defendant Carle went along for the purpose of the tests; and plaintiff paid all of the expenses of the trip.

Thereafter, Carle stated that he had about reached the end of his ropes financially and that some more money would have to be brought in if the work was to be continued. Nelson, with the knowledge and consent of Carle, put up another $5,000. It was not until December, 1948, that plaintiff discovered that defendant Carle had filed an application for a patent on this so-called new invention. Thereafter, this action was instituted to establish a constructive trust in respect to the returns of this patent right.

The evidence clearly shows that the object and purpose of the formation of the joint venture was to develop and perfect an efficient air cleaner and that the efforts of all parties should be expended to this end. There is testimony that when the new members were brought into the joint venture all agreed that the men, other than Mr. Nelson, would "put in their time and efforts toward the objective of developing an air cleaner capable of receiving adequate patent protection and thereby being saleable or licenseable" and that Mr. Nelson then said in their presence: "You are not committing me to do anything but even if I get an idea I will give it to the corporation". There is testimony that "Mr. Carle brought up the subject and stated 'We have got to have $25,000 to carry this work on. We must have eating money and we must have development money for buying materials, etc., to carry it through to the point of where we can get adequate patents and saleability of our rights, or licensing of our rights'"; that Hardy said "Van (Van Keuren), if you will bring in the money and if you will agree to put in your time toward sales as we will put in our time toward further development, let's divide all of the 85 per cent four ways * * *. Mr. Carle expressed in substance that that suited him"; that it was there very clearly stated that the assets of the corporation would be "the proposed assignment of a patent, process of a patent application to be filed and such suggestions and outgrowths to it as would be indicated and advised by the patent attorneys, and that it was proposed those be assigned to the corporation as assets for which we would receive the necessary stock."

[1, 2] Defendant Carle admits the existence of a joint venture and that he was an officer of plaintiff corporation organized to carry out the purposes of such joint venture; that he was one of the incorporators and at all times a director thereof. He admits that, as a member of this joint venture and as an officer of the corporation, he was required to act in the utmost good faith towards his coadventurers. San Francisco Iron etc. Co. v. American Milling, etc. Co.,

115 Cal.App. 238, 248, 1 P.2d 1008. He was thereby accordingly barred from taking or claiming any profit or obtaining any secret advantage from plaintiff in his dealings with it, and any attempt to enrich himself by virtue of his fiduciary obligation to it would be at once obnoxious to the principles of equity. Andrews v. Bush, 109 Cal.App. 511, 517, 293 P. 152. The principle is well established that where one coadventurer gains an advantage for himself under such conditions he becomes a constructive trustee for his coadventurers. MacIsaac v. Pozzo, 26 Cal.2d 809, 161 P.2d 449; Swarthout v. Gentry, 62 Cal.App.2d 68, 144 P.2d 38; Koyer v. Willmon, 150 Cal. 785, 90 P. 135. In the latter case it was held that where a partnership was entered into for the purpose of buying a particular lot of land, each of the partners occupies the position of a trustee to the other with regard to all the partnership transactions, including the transactions contemplated by the firm and constituting the object or purpose for which the partnership was formed, and if one of the partners, after securing an option on the lot while acting for the firm, subsequently purchased it in his own name and with his individual money, he becomes a constructive trustee for his copartner to the extent of the latter's interest in the partnership.

[3] Likewise, in Hendrickson v. California Talc Co., 55 Cal.App.2d 467, 130 P. 2d 806, this court held that a trust relationship is inherent in such an association for a common purpose, and one of the parties will not be allowed to deal with the subject matter of the association for his own advantage.

[4, 5] The force of defendant's argument is that the remaining members of the corporation rejected the ideas incorporated in defendant's Form No. 5, and therefore he was at liberty to proceed, in his own name, to obtain such a patent right and to appropriate it to his own use, and that when he walked out of the meeting in which he claims such ideas were rejected by the others, it constituted an oral termination of the joint venture insofar as he was concerned. In support of these contentions he cites such cases as Ford & McNamara, Inc., v. Wilson, 119 Cal.App. 475, 6 P.2d 996; Irer v. Gawn, 99 Cal.App. 17, 277 P. 1053; Gudebrod v. Ward's Administrator, 165 Va. 444, 182 S.E. 118; Black v. Hunter, 169 Cal. 632, 147 P. 463; Dennis v. Gordon, 163 Cal. 427, 125 P. 1063; Neilsen v. Holmes, 82 Cal.App.2d 315, 186 P.2d 197; and Gillan v. Stansbury, 97 Cal.App.2d 502, 217 P.2d 1016. The general holding of the cases examined is to the effect that the relationship of joint adventurers may be terminated by mutual consent. It does not appear in the instant action that defendant Carle in fact terminated his relationship in the joint venture or in the corporation. So far as the record shows, he still owns stock in the corporation and is still an officer thereof and participated in the demonstration of Form No. 5, with the possibility of a sale by the corporation of the rights accrued thereunder.

[6] In San Francisco Iron, etc. Co. v. American Milling etc. Co., supra, it was held that where no time is fixed for the termination of a joint venture, the agreement remains in full force until its purpose is accomplished or until it is definitely ascertained that its purpose cannot be accomplished, and while the agreement is in force neither party has a right to withdraw on the ground that it is no longer advantageous to him, or for the purpose of acting independently to the exclusion of his coadventurers.

[7] The evidence clearly supports the claimed objectionable finding that defendant Carle wrongfully undertook to conceive, in his own behalf, certain improvements and refinements and, from the facts related, the court might well find that the defendant surreptitiously undertook to do so.

Judgment affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MUSSELL, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 219

GARFIELD v. BOARD OF MEDICAL EXAMINERS et al.

Civ. 14118.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 28, 1950.

Sydney Roy Garfield brought a proceeding against the State Board of Medical Examiners and the members thereof for a writ of mandate to set aside the board's orders suspending petitioner's license to practice as a physician and surgeon. From a judgment of the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, Edward P. Murphy, J., for petitioner, respondents appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held upon stipulation of the parties that, in the interest of justice and those of the respective parties, the second count of the accusation should be remanded for further proceeding and for the overruling of the board's objections to certain evidence offered in defense and received only for the purpose of mitigation.

Judgment reversed with directions.

Prior opinion, 219 P.2d 829.

1. Mandamus ⇐174

In mandamus proceeding to set aside decision of State Board of Medical Examiners suspending physician's license, trial court was authorized to exercise its independent judgment on evidence.

2. Mandamus ⇐187(9)

On appeal by State Board of Medical Examiners from judgment annuling board's decision suspending physician's license, evidence was to be viewed in light most favorable to physician.

3. Physicians and surgeons ⇐6(1)

Under statutory provision that any graduate medical student registered with State Board of Medical Examiners may treat sick as intern, registration of unlicensed physician as intern is mandatory. Business and Professions Code, § 2147.5.

4. Physicians and surgeons ⇐4

Under statute providing for treatment of sick by interns who are graduates of approved medical schools, requirement that medical school shall have been approved by Board of Medical Examiners is mandatory, and fact that number of graduates of medical school have been admitted to practice by board does not constitute approval of school. Business and Professions Code, § 2147.5.

5. Physicians and surgeons ⇐6(1)

Failure of State Board of Medical Examiners to adopt and file with Secretary of State regulation on registration with board of medical school graduates, not licensed as physicians to serve as interns in hospitals, did not excuse licensed physician and surgeon, operating hospital, from complying with self-executing statutory provision requiring registration of such graduates to enable them to treat sick as interns, since board needs no regulations other than registry forms adopted by it, and such interns owe duty to apply to board for registration. Business and Professions Code, § 2147.5; Government Code, §§ 11380, 11381.

6. Physicians and surgeons ⇐5(2)

Physicians' letters to State Board of Medical Examiners, enclosing completed forms of applications for licenses to practice in which they stated that they were residents in surgery at certain hospital, did not constitute compliance with statutory requirement that graduate medical students register with board in order to treat sick as interns in hospitals. Business and Professions Code, § 2147.5.

7. Evidence ⇐75

In mandamus proceeding to set aside decision of State Board of Medical Examiners suspending petitioner's license to practice medicine on ground of unprofessional conduct in employing nonregistered physicians as interns at petitioner's hospital, respondent's failure to offer evidence that such physicians were not registered with board as interns raised no presumption that they were registered, as required by law. Business and Professions Code, § 2147.5.

8. Physicians and surgeons ⇐6(1)

An "intern" is an indoor or resident physician, surgeon, or similar officer in hospital and specifically one serving in hospital as preparation for independent practice after completing required course of study.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Intern".

9. Mandamus ⇐168(4)

In mandamus proceeding to set aside decision of State Board of Medical Examiners suspending petitioner's license to practice medicine on grounds of unprofessional conduct in employing unlicensed physicians not registered with board as interns at petitioner's hospital, evidence sustained trial court's finding that such physicians were interns. Business and Professions Code, §§ 2141, 2147.5, 2378, 2392.

10. Physicians and surgeons ⇐6(1)

University medical school graduates, holding doctor's degrees, licensed to practice and practicing medicine in other states, serving in Army Medical Department as hospital surgeons and surgical consultants, taking refresher courses at hospital in state, and examining, prescribing for, and assisting in surgery on, out-patients therein under other physician's direction and supervision, for salaries of $700 per month, were not "interns" within statute requiring registration of graduate medical students with State Board of Medical Examiners to enable them to treat sick as "interns" in hospitals without having license to practice medicine in state. Business and Professions Code, § 2147.5.

11. Mandamus ⇐187(10)
Stipulations ⇐14(12)

On appeal from order of Superior Court setting aside decision of State Board of Medical Examiners suspending physician's license to practice medicine, where it was stipulated by parties that board had determined issues of second count of accusation on assumption that certain evidence was admitted in mitigation only, and appellate court held that such evidence should have been admitted without limitation, appellate court would accept proposal of stipulation and remanded second count for overruling of board's objections to evidence and for further proceedings.

12. Mandamus ⇐151(2)

Incumbent members of Board of Medical Examiners are proper, but not necessary, parties to mandamus proceedings brought against said board.

13. Mandamus ⇐168(4)

In mandamus proceeding to set aside decision of the State Board of Medical Examiners, suspending petitioner's license to practice medicine on ground of unprofessional conduct in employing unlicensed physicians at petitioner's hospital and aiding and abetting one of them to practice medicine, where there was no evidence that some of such physicians who were interns were registered with board as required by statute, and evidence showed conclusively that other physicians involved were not interns, trial court erred in finding that petitioner was not guilty of unprofessional conduct. Business and Professions Code, §§ 2147.5, 2392.

14. Mandamus ⇐187(10)

On appeal from trial court's order granting writ of mandate to set aside decision of State Board of Medical Examiners, where appellate court held, upon stipulation of parties, that, in interest of justice and those of respective parties, one count of accusation should be remanded for overruling of board's objections to certain evidence offered in defense and received only for purpose of mitigation, trial court's judgment would be reversed and matter remitted to board for reconsideration of penalty, since appellate court had no way of knowing what penalty board would have imposed for violation of other count of accusation alone.

Fred N. Howser, Atty. Gen., J. Albert Hutchinson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellants.

William A. O'Brien, Thomas K. McCarthy, and Thelen, Marrin, Johnson & Bridges, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

Appellant medical board, after hearing an accusation filed with it against respondent, found him guilty of unprofessional conduct as defined in section 2392 of the Business and Professions Code. It ordered his license to practice as a physician and surgeon suspended for one year, and then suspended its order for a five year period of probation, on condition that he comply with the laws of the United States and of the State of California and Rules and Regulations of the board, and that he personally report to the board at each of its regularly scheduled San Francisco meetings.

[1] Thereafter respondent petitioned the superior court for a writ of mandate to set aside the decision of the board. The hearing of the alternative writ was had on the pleadings, the stipulations of the parties and the transcript of the proceedings before the board. No additional evidence was offered. Exercising its independent judgment, as it was authorized to do, Moran v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 32 Cal.2d 301, 196 P.2d 20, the trial court set aside the action of the board and entered judgment in favor of respondent. The board appealed.

Question Presented.

[2] The primary question for us to determine "is whether the evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to petitioner, sustains the findings of the trial court to the effect that the charges against petitioner were not supported by the weight of the evidence." Moran v. Board of Medical Examiners, supra, 32 Cal.2d page 309, 196 P.2d page 25. Involved in this question is that of whether there is substantial evidence to support the court's findings that the doctors employed by respondent were (1) registered with the board, and (2) interns.

As to the second count in the accusation, the main question is whether guilty knowledge is necessary in a charge of aiding and abetting an unlicensed person to practice medicine.

Facts.

Taking the evidence and the reasonable inferences therefrom most favorable to respondent, the facts follow. (Actually there is little, if any, conflict in the evidence. The bulk of the testimony is that of respondent himself and one of the unlicensed physicians, Keene. However, there is considerable conflict in the inferences which the parties draw from the testimony.) The first count of the accusation charged respondent with employing ten unlicensed physicians, including Dr. Flint (one was later withdrawn); the second count referred to Dr. Flint alone and charged respondent with aiding and abetting him to practice medicine. It is admitted that none of the physicians in question had ever been licensed to practice in California.[1] Each was a graduate of an approved medical school, and had served an internship in an approved hospital, had received an M. D. degree, and had been licensed to practice medicine in another state, and was eligible to licensure in California on a reciprocity basis. All were employed by respondent at his hospital from August 20, 1945, to May 17, 1946; all, except Keene and Murphy, were paid salaries ranging from $125 to $225 per month, and resided at the hospital. All except Keene and Murphy were assigned to the hospital during the war (prior to May, 1945) by the Procurement and Assignment Board (a medical adjunct to the War Manpower Board) for the performance of medical services under supervision.

Certain exhibits presented to the board also showed that Dr. Garfield maintained a "call-board" at the hospital which listed no interns, but listed some of these unlicensed persons as doctors; that a list of respondent's employees included categories of "staff physicians," "interns" and "residents," and none of the unlicensed persons in the accusation was listed as "intern." Also a schedule of duties refers to some of the unlicensed persons, but not as interns.

1. Except Dr. Flint, whose license was revoked. He will be omitted in the discussion of the first count except when specifically mentioned.

Findings.

The trial court found that Permanente Foundation Hospital was operated by petitioner and approved by the board for the training of interns (no question of approval was involved, and it is still approved); that all of the persons named in count I except Flint were graduate students registered with the board and engaged as interns for the purpose of study; that to the extent such persons treated the sick, etc., it was under supervision, and for the purpose of obtaining education and training; that at no time referred to in said accusation did the board issue any regulations for the registration of interns, nor did it file any regulation for the registration of interns with the Secretary of State, or otherwise comply with the provisions of the Government Code, particularly chapter 4, part 1, division 3, title 2 (which requires filing of regulations); that the findings of the board that petitioner employed unlicensed persons are not supported by the weight of the evidence; that the findings of the board that the employment of such persons was not during a course of study and that they were not employed as interns, and that petitioner knew such facts, were not supported by the weight of the evidence; that on the contrary, the weight of the evidence was that such persons, other than Flint, were graduate students pursuing a course of study in the practice of medicine and surgery, engaged as interns, and registered with the board.

Statutory Provisions.

Those applicable at the time involved here follow. Section 2141, Business and Professions Code, prohibits any person from practicing any mode of treating the sick or prescribing for any mental or physical condition without having the certificate to practice provided in the Code. Section 2142 makes it a misdemeanor for any one without such certificate to use the prefix "Dr." or the letters "M. D." implying that he is a physician and surgeon or either. Section 2392 provides: "The employing, directly or indirectly, of any suspended or unlicensed practitioner in the practice of any system or mode of treating the sick or afflicted or the aiding or abetting of an unlicensed person to practice any system or mode of treating the sick or afflicted constitutes unprofessional conduct within the meaning of this chapter." This is the section which the first count of the accusation charges respondent with violating. The second count charges him with violating section 2378: "The violating or attempting to violate, directly or indirectly, or assisting in or abetting the violation of or conspiring to violate any provision or term of this chapter constitutes unprofessional conduct within the meaning of this chapter."

Inasmuch as it is conceded that none of the physicians had the necessary certificate to practice, it is necessary that the evidence bring them within the exceptions provided by the statute.

Section 2147.5 provides:

"Any graduate student registered with the board and upon whom a degree of doctor of medicine, bachelor of medicine, or doctor of osteopathy has been conferred by a school, approved by the board, and any regularly matriculated student in a school approved by the board may, during and as a part of his course of study, but not for a period of more than two years, treat the sick and afflicted either as such student in a school approved by the board, teaching medicine, surgery or osteopathy in this State, or as an interne in a hospital approved for the training of internes, and may, for rendering such treatment, receive compensation therefor from the hospital or school.

"Except to the extent authorized by this section, no graduate student may treat the sick or afflicted or receive compensation therefor, or otherwise engage in or offer to engage in the practice of medicine or surgery." (Emphasis added.)

All were graduate students of and held M. D. degrees from schools approved by the board. (It was stipulated that it would not be claimed that the two year limitation had been violated.) Permanente is a hospital approved for the training of interns by the American Medical Association, American College of Surgeons and by the board. The questions to be determined under the first count are, was there substantial evidence to show that (1) they were registered with the board, and (2) they were interns. (It is not contended that Permanente is a school approved by the board teaching medicine, etc.)

1. Registry.

With the exception of letters written to the board by Doctors Keene and Murphy asking to be admitted to practice and stating they were residents at Permanente, there is no claim of actual registration with the board of any of the other physicians, even though the court found that they had so registered. It is respondent's position (a) that the statutory requirement is merely directory and not mandatory, and (b) that the necessity for registration was obviated by the failure of the board to adopt regulations concerning registry,

a. Is registration mandatory?

[3, 4] The section provides, "Any graduate student registered with the board" may as an intern treat the sick. It is clear from reading the section that registry is an important element of the situation in which an unlicensed person may treat the sick, and is mandatory. Respondent's attempt to read a different legislative intent into the section is unfounded. He refers to the fact that the section, on the second reading of the bill, was amended to provide that the section would not apply to a graduate student who prior to undertaking graduate work had failed to register. This amendment was stricken out before final passage. If this fact has any bearing on the subject, it would indicate that the Legislature was unwilling to permit even graduate work without registry, and strengthens, rather then weakens, the position that the section is mandatory. In re Estate of Mitchell, 20 Cal.2d 48, 123 P.2d 503, cited by respondent, is not in point. It was held in Mann v. Board of Medical Examiners, 31 Cal.2d 30, 187 P.2d 1, that the fact that a number of graduates of a certain medical school had been admitted to practice by the board, did not constitute an approval of the school and, in effect, that the provision requiring approval of the school by the board was a mandatory one.

b. Was nonregistry excused?

[5] Admittedly the board had never adopted any rule or regulation upon the subject of registration. There had been, however, an "Interneship Registration Card, Required by Chapter 341, Statutes 1939" adopted by the board, which card stated that it was "To be filed by every graduate of a medical school not licensed in California who is serving an interneship or a resident service in a California Hospital." Section 11380 of the Government Code defined regulations of a state agency and section 11381 provided for the filing of such regulations with the Secretary of State and stated that a regulation becomes effective a certain time after filing. Respondent contends and the court found that the board's failure to adopt a regulation on registration and to file the same with the Secretary of State excused him from complying with section 2147.5 of the Business and Professions Code. He cites no authority to support this position. Section 2147.5 is self-executing. There is no provision in the Government Code requiring regulations to be adopted concerning self-regulating provisions of the Code. Before a person can treat the sick he must register with the board. The burden is on him. The board had registry forms. It needed no regulations other than the form which it had adopted. It is interesting to note that all of respondent's employees who were carried on the hospital records as "interns" had complied with the section by registering with the board on these cards. The fact that the card contains a statement that it was used for both interns and residents does not affect the requirement that interns must register. In view of the statute, it was the duty of the physicians to apply to the board for registration.

[6] There is no evidence that the other physicians applied to the board in any way for registry; therefore the charges of unprofessional conduct are proved against respondent in employing nonregistered persons, even if it be assumed that Doctors Keene and Murphy had applied for registration. The letter written by Dr. Keene (presumably that of Dr. Murphy was similar) enclosed a completed application form for California licensure. It in no wise asked for registry as an intern. It stated that he was a resident in surgery at Permanente. In no sense could this letter be a compliance with the statutory requirement.

[7] Respondent contends that inasmuch as appellants offered no evidence that the physicians were not registered it must be presumed that the interns obeyed the law and that that presumption is sufficient to support the court's finding. He cites Head v. Wilson, 36 Cal.App.2d 244, 97 P.2d 509, which was an action for damages resulting from a collision between defendant's automobile and a county ambulance causing the ambulance to careen into plaintiff's store and service station, setting the store on fire and otherwise damaging his property. In holding that the trial court erred in giving an instruction to the effect that if the county permitted the ambulance driver to drive without a license the county was prima facie negligent, the higher court said, 36 Cal.App.2d page 253, 97 P.2d page 514: "While there is no evidence that Biggs did not have a driver's license, it is a misdemeanor to drive a motor vehicle without one. There is a presumption that he obeyed the law in this respect, which is the only material evidence in the record on this subject. There is no evidence, therefore, to justify the giving of this instruction." It is obvious that such case is not in point here. Nor is Robbins v. Hercules Gasoline Co., 80 Cal.App. 271, 251 P. 697, where, in an action for damages for injuries received by falling into an excavation in a sidewalk, it was held, where there was no evidence on the subject, that it would be presumed defendant had obtained the necessary permit to make the excavation. Nor is National City v. Dunlop, 86 Cal.App.2d 380, 194 P.2d 788, in point either. That was an action brought by the city to eject defendants from certain real property. On appeal, it was held that in considering whether or not to accept the testimony of the superintendent of streets and the city engineer as proof that notices of street vacation had not been posted the trial court had the right to consider the presumption that official duty had been legally performed and the law obeyed.

The case applicable to the situation here is Anderson v. Board of Dental Examiners, 27 Cal.App. 336, 149 P. 1006. There the petitioner, a licensed dentist, had been accused in a proceeding before the Board of Dental Examiners of unprofessional conduct in employing unlicensed persons to practice dentistry. After holding that it was Anderson's duty before employing the person in question as a dentist to find out if he were licensed, the court answered Anderson's contention that the evidence failed to disclose that the person was not licensed, by saying that the board could take judicial notice of the persons it had licensed. The court then put the burden of proof on Anderson, stating, 27 Cal.App. page 340, 149 P. page 1008: "It would have been an easy matter for petitioner to produce proof of the fact that Munn had been licensed, if such were the fact, for by the statute the board is charged with the duty of keeping a roll of licensed practitioners; and under these circumstances it would be idle to say that it could not judicially notice who were and who were not duly licensed."

2. Were The Physicians Interns?

[8, 9] Dr. Garfield testified that the unlicensed doctors (except Flint, Murphy and Keene) were carried on the hospital records as residents, and that this did not mean residents in the sense, as in some hospitals, of doctors acting without supervision; that at Permanente first year interns were called interns, but the second year men were called junior residents. The six doctors were paid in salary ranges from $125 to $225 per month plus maintenance, which was the salary paid interns, the first year men getting $125 and the second year men $225. Gould's Medical Dictionary (Fifth Revised Edition, 1941) defines an intern as "An in-door or resident physician in a hospital." Webster's International Dictionary (Second Edition, Unabridged, 1941) defines an intern as "A resident physician, surgeon, or similar officer in a hospital: specif., one who upon completion of the required course of study serves in a hospital in preparation for independent practice." While there is considerable evidence upon which the court could have found that the six doctors were not interns, there is substantial evidence together with the reasonable inferences which could be drawn therefrom that they were.

[10] But a different situation arises in the cases of Doctors Keene, Murphy and Flint. (As far as Flint is concerned, he was considered by respondent to be a licensed physician and surgeon and not an intern.) Dr. Keene, a graduate of the University of Michigan Medical School with the degree of M. D. and of M. S. in surgery, was licensed to practice medicine in the State of Michigan in 1935 and practiced there until 1941. From 1942 until January, 1946, he was in the medical department of the United States Army, during which time he served in various capacities, such as chief surgeon for the Lovell General Hospital in Massachusetts, surgeon for the 311th General Hospital, surgical consultant for the 26th Hospital Center in Manila, surgical consultant for the 24th Corps Army Service. After a conversation with respondent, who was the medical consultant to the Kaiser Fraser Company, Keene contacted the company at Willow Run, Michigan, and apparently was offered the position of medical director and surgeon for them. In February, 1946, he arranged with respondent to come to Permanente to observe their methods and to take a refresher course in industrial medicine and surgery and to learn the administration aspects of an industrial hospital. He "worked in the Out Patient [department], under the direction of the doctors there, and discussed the industrial cases with them"; he "had no understanding concerning hours," and "was around there almost all the time." He received $700 per month from the hospital, "according to the dignity of his position." He prescribed "the usual physio therapy, or some times novocaine injections, * * * a form of aspirin—". He assisted in doing surgery, "The duties of a regular assistant, and occasionally * * * did minor procedures under the direction of another man." He saw outpatients in the absence of other physicians in the room but the latter were in the hospital. He examined outpatients, noted findings and prescribed a course of treatment for them.

"Q. And in what way did your conduct of these examinations and prescribing treatment differ from your practice as a physician if there is any? A. No difference.

"Q. In other words, the things you were doing there in this hospital were the same as you did in your private practice at home, is that right? A. No, (sic) except that when I was in private practice I had no one to supervise me.

"Q. But as far as your actual conduct of these operations of one kind or another, you proceeded as a trained physician, isn't that true? A. It is."

It was understood that he would be called a resident. His definition of resident was "any physician who lives or works exclusively in a hospital for the purpose to gain knowledge." In his experience the only distinction between an intern and a resident is in the degree of experience, a resident having more experience than an intern and is given much less supervision. He made no application to the board other than the one heretofore discussed. It was stipulated that if Dr. Murphy were called as a witness his testimony would be substantially the same as that of Dr. Keene except that his specialty was obstetrics while Keene's was surgery. Murphy also received $700 per month. Respondent classified Keene as an intern, as a man in training—"We called him a resident * * * he was there to learn under the refresher course * * *."

The directory at the entrance to the hospital commenced with Dr. Garfield "& Associates." Then followed the names of certain doctors. Under the heading of "Obstetrics and Gynecology" appears "Joseph Murphy, M. D." Murphy was not licensed to practice in California, and having in mind section 2142 of the Business and Professions Code had no right to use the letters "M. D." nor did respondent have the right to so list him.

Plaintiff's Exhibit 3, "Essentials of An Approved Internship, Prepared by the Council on Medical Education and Hospitals of the American Medical Association," upon which respondent testified Permanente's intern-training program was based, states: "The internship is a form of apprenticeship. The intern assists in the care of patients and receives in return instruction from the hospital staff in the clinical and laboratory aspects of his profession. 2. Length of Internship.—An internship should be of not less than twelve months' duration. * * *" Then follows a definition of the types of internship, all requiring "supervised experience" in the work to be undertaken. Other provisions applicable here are: "Assignments should be made so that the intern has opportunity each day to meet his attending physician for the conduct of systematic ward rounds or clinics and for the study of the patients under his care. * * * Each intern on duty in any clinical department should write or dictate the history, physical examination and his own diagnostic impression of all patients assigned to him. He should have laboratory work assigned to him of such nature as to give him familiarity with clinical laboratory methods and to develop in him competence in the use of all those which the average physician may be called on to perform. The non-operative treatment of each patient should, in the main, be his responsibility under critical guidance by the visiting physician. The intern's record should be checked within twenty-four hours by a competent supervising physician, calling attention to errors in observation and adding supplementary notes containing any relevant data which the intern may have omitted. * * * 1. Bedside Teaching.—The most important phase of intern instruction consists in well conducted teaching at the bedside. By this is meant systematic instruction of the intern by the attending physician with an ample discussion of the history, the clinical and laboratory findings, the diagnosis and the treatment of each patient. * * * 3. Internal Medicine.—This department should afford each intern an adequate amount of instruction and experience in general medicine and in such special medical technics as transfusion, intravenous and other parenteral therapy, and paracentesis. * * * 4. Surgery.—Surgical training should be planned to emphasize diagnosis and pre-operative and postoperative treatment of surgical cases rather than skill in operative technic. Thus the intern's work in surgery should be rather that of an assistant than of an operator. * * * 5. Obstetrics.—The intern should obtain training and experience by delivering under supervision at least 10 patients. At other deliveries he should act as an assistant, not merely as an anesthetist. 6. Pathology.—The intern should receive experience in clinical laboratory work to perfect his skill in routine laboratory procedures. He should also receive instruction from the pathologist in the procedures of pathologic diagnosis. * * * 7. Outpatient Department.—It is desirable that each intern should have supervised experience in outpatient work under circumstances comparable to the office practice of medicine. * * * 5. Relationship Between Hospital And Intern.—To avoid misunderstanding, it is desirable that each intern at the time of his appointment should enter into a formal agreement with the hospital defining mutual obligations. * * *"

While respondent now calls Doctors Keene and Murphy "interns" it is stretching one's imagination beyond all limits to so characterize them. Comparing these rules with the duties performed by Doctors Keene and Murphy, it is obvious that they were not interns. They were physicians and surgeons who undoubtedly had come to the hospital for a certain amount of refreshing but who were actually practicing medicine the same as any other practitioners except that they were under supervision. Boiled down, respondent's contention is that because interns act under supervision and the doctors here acted under supervision, ergo, they were interns. To hold that men with the medical experience of these men, doing the type of work they were doing at Permanente, and receiving the salaries they received, are interns, would make such a wide hole in the statute as to make it practically unenforceable. Courts have to be realistic and not misled by attempts to attach a nomenclature which is completely unfounded.

Second Count.

[11] The parties have stipulated, upon their respective applications for a rehearing, that the issues of the second count of the accusation were determined by the board upon the assumption that certain evidence (of the circumstances surrounding the re-employment and continuation of the employment of Dr. Flint by respondent) were admitted in mitigation, only, and that, if this court is of the opinion that such evidence should have been admitted without limitation, the issues of the second count should be remanded to the board for further proceedings without directions, other than to overrule the objection to the admission of such evidence. The court is of the view that the disposition of the issues of the appeal relating to the second count proposed by the stipulation of the parties is a proper one and that the issues raised in connection with the second count should be first tried out before the board upon such evidence as the parties may there produce without a specific holding on this appeal as to the sufficiency of respondent's evidence in the present record, which was received for the limited purpose of mitigation.

Judgment Against Individual Members of Board.

[12] Moran v. Board of Medical Examiners, supra, 32 Cal.2d 301, 196 P.2d 20, holds that incumbent members are proper but not necessary parties to a mandamus proceeding. The record fails to show service of process on board members French, Fleming and Nelson, or on former members Otto and Scatena. Respondent concedes that the judgment against these unserved members is improper.

Conclusion.

[13] While there is substantial evidence to support the court's findings that the doctors, other than Keene, Flint and Murphy, were interns, there is no evidence that they were registered with the board. For that reason, and for the reason that the evidence shows conclusively that Doctors Keene, Flint and Murphy were not interns, the action of the trial court in finding (under count I) that respondent was not guilty of unprofessional conduct, was erroneous.

[14] The board made a single order of suspension based on its findings and conclusions that both counts had been violated. Inasmuch as we hold upon stipulation of the parties that in the interest of justice and those of the respective parties, the second count of the accusation should be remanded for the overruling of the board's objections to certain evidence offered in defense and received only for the purpose of mitigation, and since the suspension of one year is a drastic penalty, even though, by the probationary order, its effect has been considerably lessened, and moreover, as we have no way of knowing what penalty the board would have imposed for violation of count I alone, the judgment will have to be reversed and the matter sent back to the board for reconsideration of the penalty. See Cooper v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 35 Cal.2d 242, 217 P.2d 630.

The judgment is reversed and the trial court is directed to enter judgment commanding appellant board to set aside its order of suspension and further directing the board to reconsider the case and redetermine its order in the light of this court's opinion and judgment.

PETERS, P. J., and SCHOTTKY, J. pro tem., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 302

In re WILLIAMS' ESTATE.

BLAND v. POTTER.
Civ. 14351.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.
Sept. 1, 1950.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Sarah Williams, deceased, wherein Marguerite Bland, executrix, sought probate of a will contested by John Potter. The Superior Court in and for the County of Santa Clara, M. G. Del Mutolo, J., denied probate of will and executrix appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that the evidence was insufficient to sustain a finding that legatee under the will exerted undue influence upon testatrix in the execution of her will.

Reversed.

1. Wills ⇐166(1)

To sustain a finding of undue influence there must be some evidence, direct or circumstantial, that person charged with exerting such influence overcame volition of testator so that will was not in fact testator's testamentary act.

2. Wills ⇐155(1)

In determining undue influence, court will consider whether will cut off natural objects of testator's bounty, whether there was a variance between terms of will and expressed intentions of testator, whether there was an opportunity afforded by legatee's relationship to testator to influence testator, whether testator's mental and physical condition was such as to permit a subversion of his freedom of will, and whether beneficiary was active in procuring execution of will.

3. Wills ⇐166(5)

Where it appears that disposition of estate is inspired by reasons which were present in mind of decedent, no inference is to be derived from fact that provisions of writing are apparently unjust to natural objects of decedent's bounty, and whether decedent's reasons may appear to be just or adequate is not open to inquiry.

4. Wills ⇐166(6)

Changes of testamentary intention are frequently explicable, and if circumstances disclose an adequate reason for a departure from provisions of an earlier will, fact of conflicting intention must be deemed to be without probative force or effect.

5. Wills ⇐166(2)

Evidence was insufficient to support a finding that relationship between testatrix and legatee under will gave legatee opportunity to exert undue influence upon testatrix.

6. Wills ⇐166(8)

The fact that testator is in a weakened condition when will is executed must be considered on issue of undue influence, however such facts standing alone cannot support a finding of undue influence.

7. Wills ⇐166(1)

A will is to be sustained, generally, where the evidence shows that decedent personally instructed draftsman as to preparation of instrument, or that instructions emanated from decedent, and case of proponent is strengthened by circumstance that decedent was alone with draftsman at time of execution of will.

8. Wills ⇐166(1)

Evidence was insufficient to support a finding that legatee exerted undue influence upon testatrix in execution of her will.

K. R. McDougall, Palo Alto, for appellant.

Crist & Stafford and John M. Donegan, all of Palo Alto, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Sarah Williams died June 24, 1948. Her sole surviving relative was John Potter, a nephew. She left an estate consisting of several hundred dollars in cash and a house and lot in Palo Alto valued at about $6,000. On May 11, 1948, she executed a will naming Marguerite Bland executrix, and leaving her entire estate to Rena Suddeth, thus disinheriting Potter, who had been sole legatee under a prior will. Potter contested the probate of the will on the grounds that the testatrix was of unsound mind, acted under the undue influence of Rena Suddeth, and that the will was drawn as a result of the fraud of Rena. The cause was tried before a jury to whom three special verdicts were submitted. By a 9 to 3 vote the jury found that Sarah was of sound mind when the will was executed; by a 10 to 2 vote that Sarah was acting under the undue influence of Rena in executing the will; and by a unanimous vote that the execution of the will was not procured by fraud. Based on the verdict of undue influence, the trial court denied probate of the will. From that judgment Marguerite Bland, proponent of the will, appeals. Rena Suddeth is, of course, the real party in interest, she being the sole legatee under the will.

The sole argument of appellant is that the finding of undue influence, as a matter of law, is totally unsupported by the evidence. With this contention we agree.

Sarah was a laundress, household domestic, and cannery worker. She came to live in Palo Alto in 1932, and purchased the home there that constitutes the main asset of her estate. She made monthly payments on this house for many years. Her health started to fail about 1941, and grew progressively worse until her death on June 24, 1948. During this period she suffered from diabetes, arteriosclerosis and uremia. She became completely blind in 1944. After 1944 she was almost entirely dependent on friends to administer the required insulin and to care for her in other ways, although, on several occasions, either Sarah or Potter hired practical nurses. Her condition became so bad, and her care so arduous, that she was admitted to the Santa Clara County Hospital on February 13, 1948, where she remained, completely bedridden, until her death. She was in her sixties when she died.

John Potter, respondent, went to live with Sarah, his aunt, when he was three years old, at which time his father, Sarah's brother, died, leaving his wife with two children, John and Lillian. The daughter was brought up by her mother, but John came to live with his aunt Sarah, who was then residing in San Antonio, Texas. John lived with, and was brought up by, Sarah until he was 18 years of age, when he left her home to earn his own living. After leaving Sarah's home, John kept in touch with his aunt and frequently gave her financial assistance when she was out of work or ill. On some occasions John made the payments on the house and advanced money to pay the taxes. On a few occasions Sarah sent John money when he was in financial distress. John frequently visited his aunt, and she frequently telephoned to him. There can be no doubt at all that the relationship between these two was very close and friendly, at least up to 1944. In fact, in 1944, Sarah conveyed the house and lot to John, but a few months later requested him to reconvey the property to her so that she could sell it and acquire money for care in a private sanatorium. John, without protest, reconveyed the property to Sarah. She immediately had her lawyer draw a will, which she signed, leaving the property to John and to his sister. After the sister's death, John was the sole legatee under this 1944 will. This will was revoked by the 1948 will, if the latter will was valid.

Sarah frequently told many different people that she wanted all of her property, upon her death, to go to her nephew and niece, and, after the niece's death, she frequently stated that she wanted the property to go to John. Several witnesses testified that such declarations were made during 1947, and up to several days before Sarah went to the hospital. One witness testified that such a declaration was made to him about a month before Sarah died, which would make such declaration subsequent to the execution of the disputed will.

As opposed to this evidence, there is testimony to indicate that sometime in 1944, Sarah, rightfully or wrongfully, became displeased with her nephew. She apparently felt that John should pay for her care in a private sanitorium, and apparently deeded the property to him upon his promise to send her to a private sanitorium. She had a great fear that she would die penniless and be buried in a pauper's grave, and that her debts would not be paid.

She did not want to go to a county hospital. Marguerite Bland, a secretary and notary public and friend of Sarah's since 1935, and who had handled many business transactions for Sarah, testified that Sarah told her that she demanded the deed back from John because she discovered that John did not intend to put her into a private sanatorium but was going to let her go to the county hospital. She testified that after that episode Sarah was very displeased with John and never again mentioned his name to her. Rena Suddeth, the sole legatee under the 1948 will, testified that in May, 1948, Sarah told her that she was displeased with John because "He just put me in the [county] hospital * * * and he wouldn't even come to see me, and he wouldn't answer my letters. * * * I don't want John * * * to have nothing I got." Admittedly, the last time John saw Sarah was in November, 1947, although in prior years he had visited her several times a month. On the very day the disputed will was executed, May 11, 1948, Sarah told the subscribing witnesses that she did not believe John would take care of her body after her death, and would not "put her away decently," but that Rena would do so, and therefore she wanted all her property to go to Rena.

Rena Suddeth was a friend of Sarah. She first met Sarah in 1941 or 1942 when she became a roomer in Sarah's house. She was a member of the church attended by Sarah, and, pursuant to the custom in that church, called Sarah "mother," and Sarah called her "daughter." Since 1943, Rena has resided in Salinas, but thereafter frequently visited Sarah, usually upon Sarah's request. After Sarah became blind Rena frequently did errands for her, and visited her when she was lonesome. Undoubtedly, the two became very good friends. Rena testified, and there is no contrary evidence, that she never asked Sarah to deed or will any of her property to her. She admitted receiving, in January of 1948, as a present, deeds to two Oklahoma lots, but testified that she did not request this conveyance. Admittedly, these lots were of little value. She testified that the only time Sarah had ever discussed leaving her property to her was when Sarah was in the hospital in San Francisco (date not specified), at which time Sarah told her that her nephew "wasn't treating her right"; and then "she asked me if I would, if she would deed me, if she'd will me her property, if anything happened to her, would I see that she'd be put away and pay her bills, and I told her that I would." Under date of November 3, 1947, Rena wrote a letter to Sarah. The letter contains these sentences: "Now, if you do as you was speaking about doing, I will promise you you won't be sorry. I will treat you just like you was my real mother. I will pay your bills and clear up everything so you won't have nothing to worry about, and I will put it down in black and white, or if you have the papers made out, I will sign them. Mother, you let Jesus lead you, and whatever you want to do, it is okay with me. Your will is my pleasure."

There was considerable evidence from close friends of the deceased to the effect that before and after Sarah entered the Santa Clara hospital her conversation was so confused, incoherent and unintelligent, and her conduct so irrational, that these friends believed her of unsound mind. There was testimony from other friends and from a doctor and a nurse at the hospital to the effect that although, after Sarah entered the hospital, she was, on occasions, irrational, she also had periods when she was rational and of sound mind. This evidence would have supported a finding either way on the issue of mental competency, but that issue has been settled by the finding of the jury that on May 11, 1948, she was of sound mind. Since Potter has not appealed, that issue is no longer in the case. It must be assumed, on this appeal, that on May 11, 1948, Sarah was of sound mind. Such evidence is now pertinent only in so far as it may have any relevant bearing on the issue of undue influence.

The circumstances under which the will was drawn were described by Rena and the attorney draftsman. Rena testified that, after Sarah went to the county hospital, she visited her about four times. One of these visits occurred early in May, 1948, at which time Sarah asked her to get her a lawyer. Rena's testimony about this visit is as follows: "* * * when I walked in, I spoke to her, I says, 'Oh, Mother, how are you?' She said, 'Rena, is that you?' I said, 'Yes.' She said, 'Oh, I'm glad, I'm so glad you come, Baby.' I said, 'What for, what's the trouble?' She said, 'I want you to get me a lawyer.' I say, 'A lawyer?' I said, 'What for?' She says, 'Mr. Moore and John isn't treating me right,' she said, 'He just put me in the hospital,' she said, 'I wrote John and he wouldn't even come to see me and he wouldn't answer my letters, and I see Mr. Moore every now and then.' She says, 'If I was to die, Baby, I wouldn't have money enough to be buried.' I says, 'Oh, yes,' and she say, 'Mr. Moore was here, I asked him to give me some money, a little money to buy me something extra, if I wanted it, and Mr. Moore told me I did not have no money, and I asked him what happened to my pension. He said they had cut my pensions off,' and I says, 'Oh, I don't think they have.' She asked me if I would go see if they had cut her pensions off, and I told her—she said, 'Baby, if I will my property to you, if I get well, can I come and live with you?' And I said, 'Mother, if you don't will me nothing, you can come and live with me.' She said, 'Yes, I want you to have it, because I don't want John and Mr. Moore to have nothing I got.'"

The Mr. Moore referred to in this testimony was Sarah's guardian, she having been declared incompetent in March, 1948, apparently because of her physical condition. It should also be noted that prior to May of 1948, Mr. Crist of Palo Alto had been Sarah's attorney for a period of about twenty years. This fact was apparently unknown to Rena. Why Sarah did not have Rena call Mr. Crist does not appear.

Rena testified that she did not know any attorneys in Santa Clara County, but that she did know that Marguerite Bland was a good friend of Sarah's and was in business in Palo Alto. The day after the above quoted conversation Rena went to Mrs. Bland and asked her to recommend an attorney for Sarah. Mrs. Bland recommended K. R. McDougall. Rena went to McDougall's office and there met McDougall and Robert Ensign, an attorney in the office, and told them that Sarah wanted an attorney to draw a will. There is no evidence that she told these attorneys that Sarah wanted to leave the property to her.

Ensign promised to call at the hospital, which he did. In all, he made three visits. He first called on Sarah on May 4, 1948, and introduced himself, whereupon Sarah told him she wanted to make a will and leave all of her property to Rena. On this occasion Ensign spent about twenty minutes with Sarah talking over the proposed will.

The second visit also lasted about twenty minutes and occurred on May 10th. On that visit Sarah confirmed her desire to leave all of her property to Rena, and referred to her nephew in such a manner as to indicate that she was displeased with him.

The third visit occurred on May 11th when the will was executed. Ensign knew that Sarah had been declared incompetent, and had examined the guardianship court records. On this visit of May 11th Ensign took with him a court reporter who took down in shorthand everything that occurred during this visit. The transcript of this meeting is in the record. The persons then present were Ensign, Sarah, the court reporter and a nurse. The transcript discloses that Sarah had some difficulty in sustaining her thoughts until the completion of her sentences, and that during the conversation she gave three different addresses for her home—381, 318 and 385 Chestnut Street. A reading of this transcript demonstrates that, while Sarah had some difficulty in talking, she was clearly aware of her property holdings and was most positive that she wanted her property to go to Rena. She stated, several times, that it was her own idea that the property should go to Rena. When Ensign reminded her that Potter was her nephew and asked her if she wanted to leave any of her property to him, she replied: "No, not a nickel, because he's tried to—he wants to see me down in the poor house." She also stated that she wanted her property to go to Rena because she felt that Rena "would look after me and see that I would be put away decently; and my nephew, he wouldn't do that."

The entire conversation lasted over an hour, and then Sarah signed the will by mark in the presence of Ensign, the court reporter and the nurse. Ensign and the reporter, at Sarah's request, witnessed the mark and then witnessed the will. It should be pointed out that Rena did not accompany Ensign to the hospital on the first two visits and that, although on May 11th she accompanied the lawyer to the hospital in his automobile, she waited in the car while Ensign went in to see Sarah, and did not enter the hospital until after the proceedings were completed.

On the above evidence the jury found that Sarah was mentally competent on May 11, 1948, that Rena was not guilty of fraud, but that the will was executed as the result of undue influence exerted by Rena. The sole question presented is whether the finding of undue influence finds any support in the record.

[1] To sustain a finding of undue influence there must be some evidence, direct or circumstantial, that the person charged with exerting such influence overcame the volition of the testatrix so that the will was not in fact her testamentary act. The rule has been frequently stated and applied. In Re Estate of Trefren, 86 Cal.App.2d 139, 146, 194 P.2d 574, 578, the court quotes with approval the following statement of the rule from In re Estate of Easton, 140 Cal.App. 367, 370, 35 P.2d 614: " 'The legal principles to be used in determining whether a will is the product of undue influence are well settled by a continuous line of decisions. They are set forth in the In re Estate of Morcel, 162 Cal. 188, 121 P. 733, 735, In re Estate of Bryson, 191 Cal. 521, 217 P. 525, In re Estate of Perkins, 195 Cal. 699, 235 P. 45, and several later cases hereinafter cited. As pointed out therein, the kind of influence that may be held to be undue influence warranting a repudiation of a will "must be such as in effect destroyed the testator's free agency, and substituted for his own another person's will" (In re Estate of Motz, 136 Cal. 558, 563, 69 P. 294); and mere general influence, however strong or controlling, not brought to bear on the testamentary act, is not enough; it must be influence used directly to procure the will, and must amount "to coercion destroying free agency on the part of the testator." In re Estate of Keegan, 139 Cal. 123, 127, 72 P. 828, 829; In re Estate of Fleming, 199 Cal. 750, 251 P. 637; In re Estate of Holloway, 195 Cal. 711, 235 P. 1012. So, also, proof of mere opportunity to influence the mind of the testatrix, even though coupled with an interest or with a motive so to do, is insufficient. In order to warrant setting aside a will on this ground there must be substantial proof, direct or circumstantial, of a pressure which overpowers the volition of the testator and operates directly on the testamentary act.' "

The case of In re Estate of Gleason, 164 Cal. 756, 130 P. 872, has frequently been cited with approval on this point. There, 164 Cal. at page 765, 130 P. at page 876, the court stated: "The unbroken rule in this state is that the courts must refuse to set aside the solemnly executed will of a deceased person upon the ground of undue influence unless there be proof of 'a pressure which overpowered the mind and bore down the volition of the testator at the very time the will was made.' "

It is apparent that in very few cases will there ever be direct evidence of undue influence, and that, in most cases reliance must be had upon circumstantial evidence. Many of the cases have referred to various "indicia of undue influence" in discussing the type of circumstantial evidence that may be entitled to consideration. In re Estate of Yale, 214 Cal. 115, 122, 4 P.2d 153; In re Estate of Brown, 89 Cal. App.2d 496, 200 P.2d 888; In re Estate of Graves, 202 Cal. 258, 262, 259 P. 935; In re Estate of Dopkins, 34 Cal.2d 568, 574, 212 P.2d 886.

[2] Although not always stated in the same way, there are apparently five questions to which the courts have given consideration in discussing this problem:

1. Does the will cut off the natural objects of the decedent's bounty, and unduly benefit the proponent?

2. Is there a variance between the terms of the will and the expressed intentions of the testatrix?

3. Was there an opportunity afforded by the legatee's relationship to the decedent to influence the testatrix?

4. Was the decedent's mental and physical condition such as to permit a subversion of her freedom of will?

5. Was the beneficiary active in procuring the execution of the will?

If these so-called "indicia" of undue influence be considered in relation to the facts of the present case, singly or together, there is no substantial evidence to support a finding of undue influence.

Were the provisions of the will unnatural?

[3] By her will Sarah cut off her nephew and left all of her property to one not a blood relative, but a close friend. Under the facts here, Potter, although only a nephew, may be considered the natural object of his aunt's bounty. But this fact alone is of very little legal significance. The evidence shows that rightly or wrongly Sarah had come to distrust her nephew, and had come to have great confidence in Rena. The rule that is applied in such cases is stated as follows in 26 Cal.Jur. p. 704, § 60: "Where it appears that the disposition of the estate was inspired by reasons which were present in the mind of the decedent, no inference is to be derived from the fact that the provisions of the writing are apparently unjust to natural objects of the decedent's bounty. As to whether the decedent's reasons, in the estimation of the court, jury or third persons generally, may appear to be just or adequate, is not open to inquiry. Where the evidence shows that the relations between the decedent and the contestant were estranged, the apparent injustice to the contestant is deemed to be explained, regardless of proof in respect of the cause of estrangement. It is immaterial that the decedent may have been blamable, that he may have imputed wrong motives to the contestant, or that his dislike or antipathy had no substantial foundation. Indeed, no inference is derivable from the fact that the decedent detested his relatives for some reason that is not apparent." See, also, In re Estate of Carson, 74 Cal.App. 48, at page 58, 239 P. 364.

Potter argues that Rena profited unduly by the will, and that, therefore, the will was unnatural. In this connection three cases are cited in which a non-relative beneficiary was held to have benefited unduly at the expense of a contestant who was a collateral relative, and where the appellate courts ruled in favor of the contestant. These three cases—In re Estate of Bucher, 48 Cal.App.2d 465, 120 P.2d 44; In re Estate of Lances, 216 Cal. 397, 14 P.2d 768; In re Estate of Graves, 202 Cal. 258, 259 P. 935—instead of assisting respondent, in fact support appellant, because they emphasize the nature of the evidence that must exist before a finding of undue influence will be upheld. In the Bucher case the proponent was a doctor who had known the decedent less than two years. The decedent was in the hospital under the proponent's care. The doctor secured the will from decedent's apartment and secreted it. He refused to allow anyone except his attorney whom he had selected and who had drawn the will, to see the decedent, and no copy of the will was left with the decedent. All of the evidence indicated undue influence. The facts are entirely different from those in the instant case where there is no evidence sufficient to sustain even a reasonable suspicion, far less a reasonable inference, that undue influence was exerted. The same can be said of the Lances case. There, the proponent was an attorney and friend of the decedent. It was he who drew the will. It was prepared in his handwriting. His testimony that no undue influence was exerted was substantially impeached. In the Graves' case the proponent advised the aged decedent to make a will in which he was named as sole legatee, and he introduced his attorney to the decedent and this attorney drew the will. Prior to the drafting of the will the decedent was very sick and in the hospital. The proponent had her removed from the hospital and taken to a room over the garage of his home where decedent was cared for by doctors and nurses selected by the proponent. After discussing the making of a will with decedent, the proponent had his attorney prepare it and supervise its execution. All of the circumstances supported the inference of undue influence.

Was the will at variance with Sarah's previously expressed intentions?

Respondent answers this question in the affirmative, and supports his position by a reference to the evidence to the effect that Sarah frequently had stated that she intended to leave her property to Potter, by the testimony of one witness that such a statement had been made after the challenged will had been executed, and by a reference to the provisions of the prior will. There was uncontradicted evidence of several witnesses that after 1944 Sarah had expressed displeasure with her nephew, and on the very day of the execution of the will, as shown by the transcript of proceedings then taken, Sarah explained why she did not want to leave her property to her nephew and why she wanted to leave it to appellant.

[4] The rule to be applied under such circumstances, supported by the citation of many cases, is thus expressed in 26 Cal. Jur. p. 659, § 28: "However, changes of testamentary intention are frequently explicable; and if the circumstances disclose an adequate reason for a departure from the provisions of an earlier will, the fact of conflicting intention must be deemed to be without probative force or effect." See, In re Estate of Llewellyn, 83 Cal.App.2d 534, 567, 189 P.2d 822, 191 P.2d 419.

Did the relations between Sarah and appellant allow the latter an opportunity to exert undue influence?

Respondent points to the evidence that Rena and Sarah were close friends, and contends that this evidence compels an affirmative answer to this question. In this connection he cites In re Estate of Graves, 202 Cal. 258, 259 P. 935; In re Estate of Payne, 94 Cal.App.2d 504, 210 P.2d 916; In re Estate of Anderson, 29 Cal.App.2d 537, 85 P.2d 212; In re Estate of Nelson, 134 Cal.App. 561, 25 P.2d 871, and In re Estate of Gallo, 61 Cal.App. 163, 214 P. 496, and argues, at length, that the rules announced in these cases compels an affirmance in the instant case.

The relationships existing between the proponents and the decedents in the cited cases were far more intimate, and gave far greater opportunity to exert undue influence, than did the relationship in the instant case. In each of them a true confidential relationship existed. The facts of the Graves' case have already been set forth. There, the decedent was completely under the control of the proponent. The facts of the Payne case are very similar to those in the Graves' case. There, the proponent took complete charge of decedent and her affairs. It was he who secured the lawyer who drafted the will. It was he who had the decedent removed to a house close to his, and it was he who arranged to have his doctor substituted for the hospital doctor. In the Anderson case the decedent was staying with the proponent when the will was executed, and at that time decedent was ill and under the care of the proponent. The will was executed in the presence of the proponent and she was the one who propped decedent up in bed so that he could sign the will. In the Nelson case the proponent met decedent about two years before the challenged will was executed. On the very day she met decedent, she and her husband moved in with decedent. There was ample evidence that proponent and her husband exerted great efforts to have decedent execute a will in favor of proponent, and that the proponent acted in a competely unscrupulous fashion. In the Gallo case the proponent lived in decedent's home, was in business with her, and frequently acted as her agent. Proponent secured his attorney to draft the will, although decedent had her own attorney. An adopted daughter, who was very close to decedent, was practically disinherited.

[5] In the present case the evidence shows but a close friendship between Sarah and Rena, not a confidential or fiduciary relationship such as existed in the above cases. See, In re Estate of Muller, 14 Cal. App.2d 129, 132, 57 P.2d 994. It must be held that there is no evidentiary support for a finding that the relationship between Sarah and Rena gave Rena the opportunity to exert undue influence upon Sarah.

Was Sarah's mental condition such as to permit a subversion of her will?

[6] There can be no doubt that Sarah was in a weakened physical and mental condition when the will was executed, but the finding that she was then of sound mind cannot be disregarded. While it is undoubtedly the law that the fact that the decedent was in a weakened condition when the will was executed must be considered on the issue of undue influence, In re Estate of Teel, 25 Cal.2d 520, 527, 154 P.2d 384; In re Estate of Payne, 94 Cal.App.2d 504, 506, 210 P.2d 916; see, 26 Cal.Jur. p. 645, § 17; 26 Cal.Jur. p. 669, § 34, such fact, standing alone, cannot support a finding of undue influence. As already pointed out, in such cases, it must be shown that influence was in fact exerted, and that such influence was a pressure which overpowered the volition of the testatrix. See, particularly, In re Estate of Trefren, 86 Cal.App.2d 139, 146, 194 P.2d 574.

Did Rena's activities in procuring the will produce an effect upon the will?

This is the basic question involved. The connection of appellant with the drafting of the will has already been described. According to the uncontradicted evidence it was Sarah who suggested making the will leaving her property to Rena. It was Sarah who asked for an attorney. While Rena secured the attorney, she did so only after consulting with Sarah's business adviser, and took the adviser's recommendation. She had no prior acquaintanceship with the attorney. She gave no instructions or suggestions to the attorney, other than to tell him that Sarah wanted to see him. She was not present when the will was executed. There is not one bit of direct or circumstantial evidence that indicates or tends to indicate that Rena exerted any influence on Sarah, or that Sarah's own will was subverted.

[7] The proper rules to be applied to such a situation are stated as follows in 26 Cal.Jur. p. 727, § 77:

"The instrument is to be sustained as a general rule where the evidence shows that the decedent personally instructed the draftsman as to the preparation of the instrument, or that the instructions emanated from him; and the case of the proponent is strengthened by the circumstance that the decedent was alone with the draftsman. * * *

"* * * Nor does any adverse inference arise from the circumstance that the draftsman was not the attorney whom the decedent customarily employed." And at p. 730, § 78: "Nor does any significance necessarily attach to the circumstance that the proponent summoned the draftsman, accompanied the decedent to the draftsman's office, paid the fee, or acquired custody or possession of the instrument. But, within the rule that a prima facie case is established by proof of activity on the part of the proponent, accompanied by other indicia of imposition, the proponent is shown to have taken an active part where it appears that he employed the draftsman, assisted at the ceremony of signing, or conducted the decedent to the draftsman's office and was present when the writing was executed."

This analysis of the various indicia of undue influence indicates that no case has been cited where the court has upheld a finding of undue influence on the type of evidence here presented. On the other hand, there are many cases where the appellate courts have refused to find undue influence where the evidence in favor of the contestant was much stronger than that presented in the instant case. Two recent cases are representative of the prevailing view on this subject.

In Re Estate of Llewellyn, 83 Cal.App. 2d 534, 189 P.2d 822, 191 P.2d 419, hearing by Supreme Court denied, the jury had found the decedent to be of unsound mind and acting under undue influence. The appellate court reversed with instructions to admit the will to probate. The proponent was a brother of the decedent; the contestants were nephews and nieces. The evidence of contestants showed that decedent was very ill and confined in a hospital when the will was executed; that decedent asked the proponent to get him a specified attorney so that a will could be drawn; that the proponent brought the attorney to the hospital but remained downstairs while the attorney visited decedent; that a will was then executed; that decedent asked the attorney to draft another will because he was not satisfied with his signature and might want to make changes; that the attorney drafted another will making proponent sole beneficiary, and when the attorney returned, proponent was present in the hospital and brought a subscribing witness into decedent's room. Two prior wills had been executed several years before, in one of which the proponent was omitted and in the other in which he was given but a share of the estate. There was ample evidence that while in the hospital the decedent's mind was confused and irrational, although the hospital records show that his mind was clear on the date the challenged will was executed. There was substantial evidence that decedent was childish, senile, and could not attend to his affairs. There was evidence that proponent kept pestering decedent to make a will; that on two occasions proponent had taken decedent to insurance companies and instructed the insurance representatives to change the beneficiaries from the contestant's to proponent's daughter; that proponent had tried previously to get decedent to sign a will prepared by proponent, but that decedent had refused; that proponent visited the decedent two or three times a day while decedent was confined in the hospital; that proponent tried to get decedent's keys to a locked box to investigate its contents; that when the will was executed the decedent was under the influence of phenobarbital; that while in the hospital decedent was very friendly to his nieces and nephews and referred to proponent as "grasping," "tight" and "stingy."

The court in discussing this evidence stated, 83 Cal.App.2d at page 561, 189 P. 2d at page 838: "The authorities in this state are numerous and harmonious to the effect that however unnatural a will may appear to be, or however much at variance with expressions by the testator as to his intentions with regard to relatives or the natural objects of his bounty, it may not be held invalid on the ground of undue influence unless there be an actual showing of some sort of pressure which overpowered the mind and mastered the volition of the testator at the very moment of execution of the will. [Cases cited.]"

At page 563 of 83 Cal.App.2d, at page 839 of 189 P.2d appears this comment: "The right of courts and juries to draw inferences is not arbitrary and unrestrained. An inference must not only be founded on a fact legally proven, but on such a deduction from that fact as is warranted by a consideration, among other things, of the propensities of people and the course of nature (Code Civ.Proc. Sec. 1960). The foregoing proven facts do not warrant a natural inference of perfidy but on the contrary, under the circumstances here present, reflect the natural propensities of one brother toward another." The court then went on to discuss some of the so-called indicia of undue influence in the following language, 83 Cal.App.2d at page 563, 189 P.2d at page 839:

"Furthermore, in the absence of evidence, it cannot be assumed that a person is guilty of wrongdoing. On the other hand, it must be presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that one is innocent of crime or wrongdoing (Sec. 1963, Sub-div. 1, Code Civ.Proc).

"Considering the foregoing factors, none of which standing alone has the effect of creating a presumption against the validity of the testamentary document, but the probative force of which in combination will make the question as to undue influence one for determination by the triers of fact, we find as to the first consideration, that it is well settled that mere opportunity, even if coupled with a motive to influence a testamentary act, is not sufficient to invalidate such an act. In re Estate of Kilborn, 162 Cal. 4, 11, 120 P. 762. And the evidence must indicate more than general influence.

"The influence necessary to invalidate a testamentary document must be a pressure which overpowered the mind and bore down the volition of the testator at the very time the will was made [Citations omitted]. From the evidence hereinbefore set forth we find no such showing. The testimony herein amounted to no more than a showing that appellant was so situated as to have an opportunity to unduly influence the mind of the testator and at the most, that the actions of appellant might be described as suspicious. Obviously, under the rulings of appellate tribunals in prior cases, such evidence is entirely insufficient to support the finding of the jury."

At page 565 of 83 Cal.App.2d at page 840 of 189 P.2d this significant language appears: "Coming now to the third factor, viz., activity on the part of the person charged with exercising undue influence, the evidence is clear and uncontradicted that appellant was not in the room when the contents of the will were discussed, nor when the testamentary document was executed. Appellant did contact the attorney who prepared the will, but that was at the request of the testator. * * * Securing of an attorney to draw a will for another has been held not to constitute participation. [Citing a case.] In the instant case the evidence conclusively shows that the will was prepared from directions given by the testator to his attorney and there is very strong evidence that it was the testator's voluntary act. * * * In the case now engaging our attention, nothing more was shown than the presence of an opportunity for appellant to influence the testator's mind with a possible interest or motive so to do. This is totally insufficient. Before a testamentary document will be overthrown because of the exercise of undue influence, the proven circumstances must be inconsistent with voluntary action on the part of the testator."

In reference to the fact that the contested will was at variance with prior wills the court stated (as in the instant case) that there was evidence to explain the variance and concluded on this phase of the case as follows, 83 Cal.App.2d at page 567, 189 P.2d at page 841: "Explanatory matters are to be found ordinarily in the events transpiring in the life of the decedent, changes in his affections, and even the peculiarities of his temperament."

The court concluded that the finding of undue influence, as a matter of law, was unsupported.

In Re Estate of Arnold, 16 Cal.2d 573, 107 P.2d 25, the trial court granted a nonsuit on the issue of undue influence, granted a judgment notwithstanding the verdict after the jury found decedent incompetent, and admitted the will to probate. The orders of the trial court were affirmed. The contestant was a nephew, the closest living relative of the decedent. The proponents, and principal beneficiaries under the will, were friends. The decedent lived with one of the proponents and she nursed him when he was ill. Decedent was a chronic alcoholic. The evidence showed that a confidential relationship existed between decedent and one of the proponents. There was no evidence that either proponent participated in the drafting of the will. The court stated the proper rule in such cases as follows, 16 Cal.2d page 577, 107 P.2d page 27: "In an action to set aside a will of a deceased person on the ground of undue influence, it is necessary to show that the influence was such as, in effect, to destroy the testator's free agency and substitute for his own another person's will. [Citing a case.] Evidence must be produced that pressure was brought to bear directly upon the testamentary act. [Citing a case.] Mere general influence, however strong and controlling, not brought to bear upon the testamentary act, is not enough; it must be influence used directly to procure the will, and must amount to coercion destroying free agency on the part of the testator. [Citing a case—emphasis is that of the court.] It is further held that mere opportunity to influence the mind of the testator, even coupled with an interest or a motive to do so, is not sufficient. [Citing a case.]" To the same effect see In re Estate of McGivern, 74 Cal.App.2d 150, 157, 168 P.2d 232; In re Estate of Trefren, 86 Cal.App.2d 139, 146, 194 P.2d 574; In re Estate of Dopkins, 34 Cal.2d 568, 575, 212 P.2d 886; In re Estate of Spaulding, 83 Cal.App.2d 15, 20, 187 P.2d 889; In re Estate of Graves, 202 Cal. 258, 262, 259 P. 935; In re Estate of Stump, 202 Cal. 308, 312, 260 P. 543.

[8] Under the rules announced by these authorities, and many more that could be cited, it must be held that, as a matter of law, there is not sufficient evidence in the record on the issue of undue influence to sustain the challenged finding. There is not sufficient evidence to sustain a finding of suspicion that Rena exerted undue influence, far less to sustain a reasonable inference that such influence was exerted.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

BRAY and FRED B. WOOD, JJ., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 191

KOLD KIST, Inc., et al. v. AMALGAMATED MEAT CUTTERS AND BUTCHERS WORKMEN OF NORTH AMERICA, LOCAL NO. 421, et al.

Civ. 17364.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Aug. 25, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 20, 1950.

Hearing Denied Oct. 23, 1950.

Kold Kist, Inc., and others sued the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butchers Workmen of North America, Locals Nos. 421 and 587, and others, to enjoin defendants from entering into an agreement in restraint of trade. From orders of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Clarence M. Hanson, J., overruling defendants' demurrer to the complaint and granting a preliminary injunction, named defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that the evidence justified the trial court's conclusion that the primary purpose of the agreement was to restrain and diminish trade in plaintiff's frozen meat, poultry and fish products by preventing retail sales thereof at times when union butchers were not selling competing fresh foods, not merely to accomplish legitimate labor objectives of limiting the number of days and hours of butchers' work, and that plaintiffs were not limited to recovery of two-fold damages under statute, but were entitled to injunctive relief.

Appeal from order overruling demurrer dismissed and order granting preliminary injunction affirmed.

1. Appeal and error ⇐920(3)
Injunction ⇐152

On application for temporary injunction, undenied allegations of complaint must be taken as true by trial court, and same rule applies on appeal from order granting writ.

2. Appeal and error ⇐920(3)

All intendments are in favor of correctness of order granting temporary injunction on appeal therefrom.

3. Monopolies ⇐24(13)

In suit to enjoin butchers' unions and retail merchants from entering into agreement in alleged restraint of trade, evidence justified trial court's conclusion that defendants' primary purpose was to restrain and diminish trade in plaintiff's frozen meat, poultry and fish products by preventing retail sales thereof at times when butchers were not selling competing fresh foods, not merely to accomplish legitimate labor objectives of limiting number of days and hours of butchers' work to insure work for union members and safeguard their health. Business and Professions Code, §§ 16720–16758.

4. Injunction ⇐101(1)

Illegality of purpose of conduct which would otherwise be permissible exercise of fundamental rights provides complete basis for injunctive relief, and where illegality consists of violation of settled public policy, as well as in other cases of illegal conduct, injured party has right to protection by injunction from imminent harmful consequence of such action.

5. Monopolies ⇐12(2)

The purpose of contract between labor unions and employers need not be directly, intentionally and specifically to restrain trade, unreasonably and illegally in a way unconcerned with accomplishment of legitimate labor objective, for contract to be deemed an illegal restraint of trade. Business and Professions Code, §§ 16720–16758.

6. Monopolies ⇐12(1)

The fact that particular combination of business competitors was induced by good intentions cannot be asserted against statutes forbidding such combinations. Business and Professions Code, §§ 16720–16758.

7. Monopolies ⇐12(1)

The letter and paramount object of anti-trust act is satisfied, if tendency of action or proposed action is to restrain trade. Business and Professions Code, §§ 16720–16758.

8. Monopolies ⇐12(1)

Illegal combinations in restraint of trade are not limited by statute to those involving price fixing or monopolies, in view of statutory provisions prohibiting combinations to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce, limit or reduce production of commodities, or prevent competition in sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or commodities. Business and Professions Code, §§ 16720–16758, 16720 (a–c).

9. Monopolies ⇐24(7)

Parties in business of selling frozen meats, poultry and fish were entitled to injunction restraining butchers' unions and retail merchants from entering into contract restraining trade by preventing retail sales of such products at times when butchers were not selling competing fresh foods as against contention that such parties were strangers to contract. Business and Professions Code, §§ 16720–16758.

10. Monopolies ⇐24(7)

Parties in business of selling frozen meats, poultry and fish have right to injunctive relief, under general equitable principles against execution of contract between butchers' unions and retail merchants, restraining trade in such products by preventing retail sales thereof at times when butchers were not selling, competing fresh foods, in view of statutory provisions authorizing injunction when pecuniary compensation would not afford adequate relief or restraint is necessary to prevent multiplicity of judicial proceedings. Business and Professions Code, §§ 16720–16758; Code Civ.Proc. § 526.

11. Monopolies ⇐24(7)

An equity court will enjoin members of illegal combination from enforcing their agreement to injury of one engaged in competitive business or whenever necessary to protect lawful business from destructive tendencies of conduct inspired by such combination. Business and Professions Code, §§ 16720–16758.

12. Monopolies ⇐24(7)

Parties in business of selling frozen meats, poultry and fish are not required to accept inadequate relief of money damages as substitute for cessation of wrongful acts destructive of their businesses by members of meat cutters' unions and retail merchants under contract restraining trade in such products by prohibiting retail sales thereof when such members are not selling competing fresh foods, but are entitled to injunction against execution of such contract. Business and Professions Code, § 16720; Code Civ.Proc. § 526.

13. Monopolies ⇐24(7)

The provision of anti-trust act that person injured in his business or property because of anything forbidden by such act may sue for and recover two-fold damages does not exclude right to injunctive relief, where statutory remedy is inadequate. Business and Professions Code, § 16750; Code Civ.Proc. § 526.

14. Monopolies ⇐24(7)

The provision of anti-trust act that person injured in his business because of anything forbidden by such act may sue and recover two-fold damages does not deprive parties in business of selling frozen meat, poultry and fish of right to injunction against execution of contract between meat cutters' unions and retail merchants to restrain trade in such products by preventing retail sales thereof at times when meat cutters are not selling competing fresh foods, as statutory remedy is inadequate and situation justifies intervention of equity court. Business and Professions Code, § 16750; Code Civ.Proc. § 526.

Charles P. Scully, San Francisco, for appellants.

Ben Gould, Latham & Watkins, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiffs, Kold Kist, Inc., Arbo Frozen Meat Products, Inc., Frank Watson and Edward Kendall, partners doing business under the name of Arbo Food Distributors, Vernon Meat & Provision Co., and Jacob Feiler, are in the business of selling frozen meats, poultry and fish. Their customers include a large number of stores and markets named as defendants in the action. Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butchers Workmen of North America Local No. 421, and Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butchers Workmen of North America Local No. 587, are unincorporated voluntary associations functioning as labor organizations and members and affiliates of American Federation of Labor. Defendant George Swan is a representative of the unions.

Upon application of plaintiffs the superior court issued a temporary injunction which restrains the defendants from entering into an agreement between the unions on the one part and the several stores and markets on the other part. This proposed agreement contains provisions which had been negotiated and agreed upon by and among the defendants, and which the court held to be in restraint of trade, in violation of law, and contrary to public policy. The unions appeal. For convenience we shall refer to them as defendants.

The gravamen of the charge of illegality consists in the alleged violation of the Business and Professions Code, sections 16720 to 16758, the provisions of which are based upon the Cartwright Act, Statutes 1907, Chapter 530, page 984.

Section 16720 provides, in part, "A trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons for any of the following purposes: (a) To create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce. (b) To limit or reduce the production, or increase the price of merchandise or of any commodity. (c) To prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or any commodity. (d) To fix at any standard or figure, whereby its price to the public or consumer shall be in any manner controlled or established, any article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce intended for sale, barter, use or consumption in this State." The remainder of the section deals with price fixing. Under subdivisions (a) and (c), combinations for restraining trade or commerce, or to prevent competition in the sale of a commodity, are trusts, even though reduction of production or increase of price is not intended or accomplished. Such combinations are trusts, against public policy, and void. Sec. 16726. Any violation of Chapter 2 is a conspiracy against trade that is punishable by fine or imprisonment or both. Sec. 16755. It provides, Sec. 16750, that anyone suffering injury to his business or property by reason of the prohibited acts may recover twofold the damages he has sustained.

It was alleged in the complaint "That the members of Defendant Unions are employees of Defendant Markets whose daily work consists of cutting, wrapping and selling fresh meat, poultry and fish kept for sale in the meat departments of the stores of Defendant Markets, said employees being hereafter for convenience referred to as 'meat clerks'."

It was also alleged that defendant merchants, to be referred to as "markets," sell at retail plaintiffs' frozen fruits, vegatables, ice cream, pies, etc., from freezers maintained at zero temperature which are equipped with sliding and transparent lids; that the customers desiring to purchase from said freezers have in view the articles contained therein, choose and remove such articles as they desire to purchase, take the same to the grocery clerks where they are checked and paid for. This "self-service" is uniform throughout defendant markets. Each of defendant markets maintains high temperature cases at approximately 35 degrees fahrenheit for the storing of fresh meat, poultry and fish, but approximately 80 per cent of the markets have no refrigeration facilities in which frozen meat, poultry and fish may be kept other than the aforementioned freezers which are maintained at zero temperature and from which all frozen products are sold. The grocery departments of the markets remain open after 6:00 o'clock p. m., and on Sundays and holidays, and substantial portions of the sales of plaintiffs' frozen meat, poultry and fish are made after 6:00 o'clock p. m., and on Sundays and holidays.

Defendants have negotiated and were prepared to execute an agreement which contained the following provisions:

"Article 15(b): Local 421 (587) shall have jurisdiction over all meats that are not cut and prepared for immediate human consumption, including packaged items of fresh, frozen and smoked meats, fresh or frozen fish, poultry and rabbits.

"Article 15 (c): Where low temperature and/or self service cases are used for any of such merchandise coming under the jurisdiction of Local 421 (587), such cases shall be serviced only by members of Local 421 (587). The opening and closing hours in Article 12 of this Agreement shall be applicable to the sale of such merchandise."

It was alleged:

"That under the terms of the proposed Articles referred to hereinabove as set forth in Paragraph VIII hereof, Defendant Markets will be unable to sell Plaintiffs' frozen meat, poultry and fish after 6:00 o'clock P. M. on week days and on Sundays and holidays, as there will be no meat clerks on duty having jurisdiction of the sale thereof, as provided in said Articles;

"That approximately 80% of Defendant Markets will be unable to store and maintain Plaintiffs' frozen meat, poultry and fish on their premises at all for the reason that if they keep the low temperature cases open after 6:00 o'clock P. M., and on Sundays and holidays, customers of Defendant Markets will attempt to purchase Plaintiffs' frozen meat, poultry and fish, by taking the same to grocery clerks who are not permitted to handle such products or will have to close said low temperature cases and stop the sale of other frozen foods kept therein; that approximately 80% of said Defendant Markets will be unable to take said frozen meat, poultry and fish out of said cases on account of the fact that they do not have storage elsewhere for frozen foods; That the confusion resulting therefrom will substantially deter many of Defendant Markets from purchasing Plaintiffs' frozen meat, poultry and fish at all, to Plaintiff's damage; that the cost of providing separate frozen food storage for the storing of frozen meat, poultry and fish after hours and on Sundays and holidays would be so prohibitive as to many of Defendant Markets as to deter them from handling Plaintiffs' frozen meat, poultry and fish;

"That it would be impractical to take out of the low temperature cases the frozen meat, poultry and fish at the end of each day and at the end of the week, as it is detrimental to the food value and fitness for consumption of such frozen foods to take them out and put them back into low temperature cases; that it has been the experience of Plaintiffs that to do so spoils and discolors frozen meat, poultry and fish."

It was alleged "that said provisions of the proposed contract are primarily designed and intended to prevent, restrict and diminish the manufacture and sale of plaintiffs' frozen meat, poultry and fish packed for sale by self service from low temperature cases contained in the stores of defendant markets," and also that the defendants "propose to enter into a contract or agreement to prevent, restrict and diminish the manufacture and sale of plaintiffs' frozen meat, poultry and fish, and unless defendants are restrained from so doing and restrained from entering into an agreement which contains the provisions set forth in paragraph VIII hereinabove, plaintiffs' businesses will be irreparably damaged as hereinabove alleged." An affidavit was filed by E. W. Jarvis, president of Kold Kist, Inc., in which he stated that a substantial portion of his company's sales of frozen meats was made after 6:00 o'clock

p. m., on week days and on Sundays and holidays; on information and belief that some time during the month of June, 1948, defendant unions informed defendant markets that said frozen meat was not to be sold after 6:00 o'clock p. m. on week days and on Sundays and holidays; that a number of defendant markets which and who are customers of said corporation have complied with the demands of said unions and have discontinued sale of said frozen meats after 6:00 o'clock p. m. on week days and on Sundays and holidays; "that as a result thereof the sales of said Corporation's frozen meats to said Defendant Markets have been substantially reduced and some of Defendant Markets have discontinued purchasing the Corporation's frozen meats altogether. That said Corporation has suffered a very substantial loss in income and business from the activities of said Defendant Unions, designed toward preventing, restricting and diminishing the output of the frozen meats of said Corporation." Two affidavits were filed on behalf of the unions. It was shown thereby that since 1942 agreements between the butcher shop industry and the unions have required the closing of meat departments at 6:00 o'clock p. m. daily and on Sundays and holidays. The affidavits denied that it was the purpose of the unions to prevent, restrict or diminish the output of frozen meats, but defendants did not deny by affidavits or answer any of the other allegations of the complaint or the affidavit filed on behalf of plaintiffs. Defendant's affidavits, however, stated: "The only purpose of the 6:00 p. m. closing is to insure work for the members of the Local and to safeguard the health of the members of the Local from excessive hours of employment."

Defendants contend: (1) That the proposed agreement would not operate to restrain trade; (2) that the sole purpose of the unions is to regulate hours of employment and that if restraint of trade should result it would be merely as an incident to the attainment of a proper labor objective by the unions and therefore the restraint of trade would not be illegal; (3) that the court is without power or jurisdiction to enjoin practices that are in restraint of trade unless such practices are engaged in for the purpose of fixing prices and creating monopoly; (4) that the recovery of double damages for injuries suffered from combinations for the restraint of trade is the exclusive remedy of an injured party.

[1, 2] The first question is whether the proposed practices of the defendants would operate as an unlawful restraint of trade. On the application for a temporary injunction the allegations of the complaint, which were undenied, were to be taken as true by the trial court and the same rule applies on appeal. Presumably the trial court concluded from these facts that the practices which would be put into effect if the agreements were entered into would interfere with, prevent, and diminish the sales of plaintiffs' products and would be in restraint of trade. Since all intendments are in favor of the correctness of the temporary injunction, we must assume that the trial court deemed it to be established, as stated in the affidavit of Mr. Jarvis (President, Kold Kist, Inc.), that a number of defendant markets have, because of the demands of the unions, discontinued the sale of plaintiffs' products after 6:00 o'clock p. m., on week days, and on Sundays and holidays, that some of defendant markets have discontinued purchasing Kold Kist's frozen meats, and that as a result thereof the sales of said plaintiffs' meats have been substantially reduced and said plaintiff has suffered a very substantial loss of income and business as a result thereof. (Other facts which must be taken as true have been mentioned above.) Another important fact which must be taken as true is that much confusion would follow if plaintiffs' customers found frozen meat, fish and poultry in the freezing cases after 6:00 o'clock p. m. on week days, and on Sundays and holidays, and although desiring to purchase them were unable to do so since the markets would be unable to sell them because of their contractual obligations with the unions. The markets, it was alleged, rather than invite and suffer the displeasure and disapproval of their customers, would discontinue the self-service sale of plaintiffs' products. This situation could not be avoided by approximately 80% of the markets, for the reason that they do not have, and would not be justified in installing, separate low temperature cases in which to store frozen meats, poultry and fish if these products should be removed from the low temperature cases now in use, from which many other frozen products and articles are sold.

That accomplishment of the plan of defendants would materially diminish the sales of plaintiffs' products must, upon the record before us, be deemed established. It will appear from our further discussion that the result would be to illegally restrain trade.

While combined action which is in restraint of trade, as the term is commonly used, is illegal, regardless of the objective of the parties, it is also illegal if it is entered into for the purpose of restraining trade. Even though it appeared to be the purpose of the unions to improve the status of their members by limiting hours of work it was a proper inquiry whether it was intended to accomplish this purpose by placing restrictions upon the trade in plaintiffs' products through the prevention of the sale thereof except through union members.

[3] Defendant unions maintain that any interference with plaintiffs' business will be merely incidental to the limitation as to days and hours when such products may be sold, and that it is entirely lawful and proper to accomplish this purpose through an agreement that the members of the union shall not be required to work on Sundays or holidays or after 6:00 o'clock p. m. on week days and the further agreement that none but members of the union may handle sales of plaintiffs' products. We think that the trial court had reason to disagree with this contention. The work of the union members consists of "cutting, wrapping and selling fresh meat, poultry and fish kept for sale in the meat department of the stores of Defendant Markets." It was not shown, in contravention of this allegation, that they have anything to do with the sale of frozen meat, poultry and fish sold from the markets' self-service cases. We infer from the briefs that it will be, and perhaps has been, the practice of the butchers to place plaintiffs' products in the low temperature cases, but it would appear that this work may be done during the agreed working hours without interfering with the sales of the products at other times. However this may be, it appears without dispute that the self-service customers make their purchases of the articles, not through the butchers, but through the grocery clerks. The provision in the proposed agreement that the unions are to have "jurisdiction" over frozen meats, fish and poultry is conceded to mean that such articles may not be sold through employees other than butchers. Thus the transfer of the sale of plaintiffs' products from the grocery clerks to the butchers would create duties for the latter which they have not heretofore performed. These duties would, of course, be assumed by them only upon condition that they would not be performed on Sundays or holidays or after 6:00 o'clock p. m. on week days.

We feel that it is significant that the agreement does not change the work hours of the union members nor does it change the conditions of their employment. The purpose of the unions in fixing 6:00 o'clock p. m. as the closing time is said to be to insure work for the members of the Local and to safeguard their health from excessive hours of employment. This is, of course, a legitimate labor objective. There is, however, no relation between the cessation of work by the union members at 6:00 o'clock p. m. and the prevention of the sale of the frozen articles after 6:00 o'clock p. m. and on Sundays and holidays, since the union members do not propose to work at all during those times. In other words, there is no true relation between the stated objective and the means proposed to be used to accomplish it. The work hours of the butchers are not the subject of dispute. The controversy does, however, affect the work of other employees who have equal rights, although this is an incidental result. To prevent others from carrying on their usual duties at times when the union members are not working would tend to curtail the volume of sales during those periods. We think the trial court would have been justified in concluding from the evidence that it is the desire of the unions, and their purpose, to gain for themselves the exclusive right to handle sales of the frozen articles solely in order to prevent them from being sold at times when the butchers are not selling the fresh articles in competition with the frozen ones. The unions have not brought to light facts indicating that they have any other purpose. It is quite reasonable to suppose that the elimination of any degree of competition of the frozen articles with traffic in the fresh ones would be of some advantage to the latter. It is more a question of the purpose and tendency of the action than of degree, but inasmuch as it is alleged that plaintiffs have suffered substantial loss it may be inferred that substantial advantage was expected to accrue to the butchers under the proposed agreement. In the absence of any other reasonable explanation of the purposes of the unions it is logical to infer that their motive was to accomplish the results which have already been accomplished to a measurable extent, and would be accomplished to a greater extent under the operation of the proposed agreement. Defendants have not furnished a satisfactory answer to the claims of plaintiffs that they have a right to have their products sold in the usual and natural course of trade to customers who find it inconvenient or impossible to make their purchases during the days and the hours to which the unions have voluntarily limited the services of their members. This is a class of trade to which the unions do not propose to cater. The fact that it is considered by them to be undesirable is not a good reason for allowing it to be destroyed. Upon the facts in evidence, the trial court was justified in concluding that the primary purpose of the defendants was and is to restrain and diminish trade in plaintiffs' products by preventing the sale thereof at times when the butchers are not selling the competing fresh foods, and by this means to secure benefits for the union members through increased sales of fresh products.

[4] In City of L. A. v. Los Angeles, etc., Council, 94 Cal.App.2d 36, 42, 210 P. 2d 305, 309, we held on the authority of the following cases: Hughes v. Superior Court, 70 S.Ct. 718, 94 L.Ed. 985; Northwestern Pac. R. R. Co. v. Lumber & S. W. Union, 31 Cal.2d 441, 189 P.2d 277; Park & Tilford I. Corp. v. International etc. of Teamsters, 27 Cal.2d 599, 165 P.2d 891, 162 A.L.R. 1426; James v. Marinship Corp., 25 Cal.2d 721, 155 P.2d 329, 160 A.L.R. 900; Riviello v. Journeymen Barbers etc. Union, 88 Cal.App.2d 499, 199 P.2d 400; Bautista v. Jones, 25 Cal.2d 746, 155 P.2d 343; Fashioncraft, Inc. v. Halpern, 313 Mass. 385, 48 N.E.2d 1; Schwab v. Moving Picture Mach. Operators Local, 165 Or. 602, 109 P.2d 600; Markham & Callow, Inc. v. International Woodworkers, 170 Or. 517, 135 P.2d 727, that: "* * * illegality of purpose provides a complete basis for injunctive relief against conduct which would otherwise be deemed a permissible exercise of fundamental rights. Where such illegality consists of violation of settled public policy, as well as in other cases of illegal conduct, the injured party has a right to be protected from the imminent harmful consequence of such action."

[5] As we have heretofore pointed out, defendants have not denied that detriment has resulted and will continue to result to plaintiffs' business in the manner and to the extent alleged in the complaint and supporting affidavit. Nevertheless they argue that even though there has been and will be restraint there is no remedy available to plaintiffs for the reason that they, the unions, are seeking only to obtain uniform working hours for all employees. They say that it must be demonstrated from the face of the contract or from the pleadings of plaintiffs that the purpose of the provisions of the contract is to "directly, intentionally and specifically" unreasonably and illegally restrain trade in a way which is unconcerned with the accomplishment of a legitimate labor objective or the contract cannot be deemed an illegal restraint of trade. This is to claim, in effect, that whenever their efforts are calculated to advance the interests of their members the effect upon others is not to be considered. This contention has frequently been advanced and rejected. If we were to agree with it, the result would be that the assertion of any lawful labor objective, regardless of the means proposed for the accomplishment thereof, would preclude the courts from making inquiry to determine whether the objective was indeed lawful.

[6, 7] In Giboney v. Empire Storage & Ice Co., 336 U.S. 490, 69 S.Ct. 684, 687, 93 L.Ed. 834, the union argued that the primary objective of their combination and picketing was to improve age and working conditions, admittedly a lawful purpose, and that "their violation of the state anti-trade restraint laws must be dismissed as merely incidental to this lawful purpose." The Court said, quoting from International Harvester Co. v. Missouri, 234 U.S. 199, 209, 34 S.Ct. 859, 58 L.Ed. 1276, 52 L.R.A., N.S., 525, "'It is too late in the day to assert against statutes which forbid combinations of competing companies that a particular combination was induced by good intentions. * * *'" It was also said that "To exalt all labor union conduct in restraint of trade above all state control would greatly reduce the traditional powers of states over their domestic economy and might conceivably make it impossible for them to enforce their antitrade restraint laws." The courts of this state have held that the letter and paramount object of the law, Cartwright Act, is satisfied if the tendency of the action or proposed action is to restrain trade. People v. Sacramento Butchers' Ass'n, 12 Cal.App. 471, 107 P. 712; Overland Pub. Co. v. H. S. Crocker Co., 193 Cal. 109, 222 P. 812.

[8] Defendants also argue that only those combinations are in unlawful restraint of trade which seek to control prices and create a monopoly. A complete answer to this contention is found in the statute itself. Under subdivisions a, b and c of section 16720, Business and Professions Code, it is unlawful for two or more persons to combine to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce; to limit or reduce the production of any commodity; or to prevent competition in the sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or any commodity. These enactments are distinct from the remainder of the section which has to do with price fixing, Although price fixing and monopolistic practices tend to affect competition, production and restrictions in trade, the legislature has not limited illegal combinations in restraint of trade to those which involve price fixing or monopoly. People v. Sacramento Butchers' Protective Ass'n, supra.

[9-11] Defendants' final contention is that plaintiffs may not have an injunction against the parties to the contract. Their argument is threefold: (1) That plaintiffs are strangers to the contract and are not entitled to injunctive relief; (2) that there is no right to injunctive relief under general equitable principles; and (3) that the legislature in giving to an injured person the right to recover twofold damages has impliedly withdrawn the right to equitable relief.

We find no merit in the first point. As to the second, section 526, Code of Civil Procedure, provides in part as follows: "An injunction may be granted in the following cases: 1. When it appears by the complaint that the plaintiff is entitled to the relief demanded, and such relief, or any part thereof, consists in restraining the commission or continuance of the act complained of, either for a limited period or perpetually; * * * 4. When pecuniary compensation would not afford adequate relief; 5. Where it would be extremely difficult to ascertain the amount of compensation which would afford adequate relief; 6. Where the restraint is necessary to prevent a multiplicity of judicial proceedings; * * *". These provisions summarize long established principles of equity. They encompass the rule stated by the Supreme Court of Georgia that "A court of equity will interpose by injunction to prevent the several members of an illegal combination from enforcing an agreement to the hurt and injury of one engaged in a competitive business." Employing Printers' Club v. Doctor Blosser Co., 122 Ga. 509, 50 S.E. 353, 357, 69 L.R.A. 90, 106 Am.St.Rep. 137, 2 Ann.Cas. 694. The courts have applied the rule whenever necessary to protect lawful business from the destructive tendencies of conduct inspired by illegal combinations. Schwartz v. Laundry &

Linen Supply Drivers' U., etc., 339 Pa. 353, 14 A.2d 438; Dothan Oil Mill Co. v. Espy, 220 Ala. 605, 127 So. 178; Tallassee Oil & Fertilizer Co. v. S. J. & J. L. Holloway, 200 Ala. 492, 76 So. 434, L.R.A.1918A, 280; Reeves v. Decorah Farmers' Cooperative Society, 160 Iowa 194, 140 N.W. 844, 44 L.R.A.,N.S., 1104; Burke Transit Co. v. Queen City Coach Co., 228 N.C. 768, 47 S.E.2d 297; Northern Wisconsin Co-operative Tobacco Pool v. Bekkedal, 182 Wis. 571, 197 N.W. 936; Jackson v. Stanfield, 137 Ind. 592, 36 N.E. 345, 37 N.E. 14, 23 L.R.A. 588; Brown v. Jacobs' Pharmacy Co., 115 Ga. 429, 41 S.E. 553, 57 L.R.A. 547, 90 Am. St.Rep. 126; see also Walsh on Equity, p. 259.

[12] One need only consider the facts to realize that if the proposed contract is executed by the parties thereto, plaintiffs' businesses will be adversely affected, in such a way that damages would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to ascertain. The public interest would also be adversely affected. Plaintiffs' business that of preparing and freezing meats, poultry and fish for the market, is one of very recent origin and anything tending to restrain the sale thereof will also impede progress and advancement in that field. The relief which plaintiffs seek here is protection against the threatened destruction of their businesses. If defendants' conduct in executing the proposed contract is wrongful by reason of the statute, Business and Professions Code, sec. 16720, as we have decided it is, the plaintiffs should not be required to accept the inadequate relief of money as a substitute for cessation of the wrongful acts which are destructive of their businesses. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 526. The injunction cases cited all recognize that in such situations equity will intervene because damages would furnish an inadequate remedy and also to prevent a multiplicity of suits.

[13, 14] The final contention is that the right to equitable relief has been withdrawn by the Code, Business & Professions Code, sec. 16750. It provides specifically that "Any person who is injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by this chapter" may sue and recover twofold any damages sustained by him. Inasmuch as we have decided that plaintiffs are injured persons within the meaning of the section, it becomes necessary to decide whether the legislature intended to exclude the right to injunctive relief because it expressly gave such an injured person the right to sue for and obtain twofold the damages suffered by him. In this connection it is unnecessary to discuss the cases cited by defendants in which injunctive relief to an injured party was denied upon the ground that the statutes under consideration limited the right to such relief to the State in actions bought on its behalf. We are of the opinion that no such result was intended in the enactment of our statutory law. The case of Orloff v. Los Angeles Turf Club, 30 Cal.2d 110, 113, 114, 180 P.2d 321, 323, 171 A.L.R. 913, directly supports this view. In that case plaintiff's action was based upon the civil rights statutes, Civ.Code, secs. 51, 52, 54, in which it is provided that anyone denied certain privileges, except for reasons applicable alike to every race and color, may sue for and recover damages of not less than $100. One of the questions presented for determination was whether the statute, Civ.Code, sec. 54, because it provided for damages, impliedly excluded the right to injunctive relief. The Court held that it did not and, in answer to the contention that the remedy of damages provided by the State was exclusive, quoted section 4 of the Civil Code: " 'The rule of the common law, that statutes in derogation thereof are to be strictly construed, has no application to this code. The code establishes the law of this state respecting the subjects to which it relates, and its provisions are to be liberally construed with a view to effect its objects and to promote justice.' " The Court also stated that a factor of importance in interpreting the statute and in applying the above mentioned common law rule of statutory construction is the adequacy of the remedy provided in the statute and that it should not apply when the remedy given by the statute is inadequate. It is clearly apparent that the remedy given by the statute is inadequate in the instant case and just as apparent that the situation is one which justifies the intervention of a court of equity.

No other points are urged which require further discussion.

The attempted appeal from the order overruling defendants' demurrer is dismissed; the order granting a preliminary injunction is affirmed.

WOOD and VALLÉE, JJ., concur.

Hearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., and TRAYNOR, J., dissenting.

99 Cal.App.2d 232

BISHOP v. BABCOCK et al.
Civ. 14242.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.
Aug. 28, 1950.

Action by Robert S. Bishop against Alfred Babcock and others for an accounting and dissolution of a partnership. Judgment was entered by stipulation against two defendants, and by default against a third. Respondents moved to vacate. From an order of the Superior Court of Alameda County, Ralph E. Hoyt, J., vacating the judgment and permitting defendants to file their cross-complaints, plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that the evidence was ample to support the action of the trial court.

Order affirmed.

1. Judgment ⇐145(4), 379(2)

On motion to set aside judgment by stipulation against two defendants and by default against a third, in action for accounting and dissolution of partnership, where defendants' affidavits and verified answer denied material allegations of complaint, and cross-complaint alleged receipt by plaintiff of partnership property in excess of his partnership interest and sought an accounting and dissolution, conclusion of trial court that defendants had meritorious defense was sufficiently supported. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

2. Appeal and error ⇐957(1)
Judgment ⇐139

Motion to set aside default judgment is addressed to sound discretion of trial court, and in absence of clear showing of abuse of discretion, will not be reviewed on appeal.

3. Appeal and error ⇐957(1)

Court on appeal will affirm order setting aside default more readily than where result would be to allow judgment by default to stand, especially when the trial court grants prompt relief and appellant has not sustained any prejudice thereby.

4. Appeal and error ⇐1008(3)

Function of court on appeal when evidence is by affidavit is same as when all or some evidence is oral, and action of trial court in resolving conflicts will not be disturbed.

5. Appeal and error ⇐837(9)

Where on hearing to vacate judgment by stipulation against two defendants and default judgment against a third, supplemental affidavit was introduced by defendants with counsel for all parties present and plaintiff did not apply to court for opportunity to reply, affidavit could be considered on appeal.

Robert L. Ward, Oakland, Frank C. S. Pederson, San Francisco, of counsel, for appellant.

Thomas B. Richardson, Oakland, for respondents.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order vacating a judgment against defendants and permitting them to file their answer and cross-complaint in the action.

On February 17, 1949, appellant commenced an action for an accounting and dissolution of a partnership and for $9,592.17 as advances made by him in excess of his partnership interest.

The complaint was served upon respondents Alfred Babcock and Ernest N. Milam on February 18 and upon Mary Babcock (wife of Alfred Babcock and mother of Milam) on March 5. On February 28, Alfred Babcock and Milam executed a stipulation for judgment in the amount prayed for in the complaint plus $30 as costs. On March 17, judgment was entered against all three respondents upon this stipulation and upon the default of respondent Mary Babcock.

On March 19, respondents filed notice of motion, under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to set aside the judgment upon the ground that it was taken through their mistake, inadvertence, surprise and excusable neglect, accompanied by their verified answer and cross-complaint and the affidavit of each. Counter affidavits by appellant and by his attorney were filed March 25. Supplemental affidavits by Milam and by Mary Babcock were filed March 25 and 29. The motion was heard on March 25 and 29 and thereupon granted.

[1] Sufficient support for the conclusion of the trial court that respondents have a meritorious defense is furnished by respondents' affidavits and their verified answer, which denies material allegations of the complaint, and by the cross-complaint, which alleges receipt by appellant of partnership property in excess of his partnership interest and seeks an accounting thereof by him and dissolution of the partnership. Beard v. Beard, 16 Cal.2d 645, 649, 107 P.2d 385; Shively v. Kochman, 23 Cal. App.2d 420, 422, 73 P.2d 637.

It appears that the stipulation for judgment was prepared by appellant's attorney and explained by him to Alfred Babcock who, according to his affidavit, had little experience in business and legal matters, was not represented by independent legal counsel and was not properly advised of his rights upon entering into the stipulation.

From Milam's affidavits it appears that when he signed the stipulation he was in a bewildered and confused state of mind and not in full possession of his faculties, as the result of several weeks' steady consumption of large quantities of intoxicating liquor; that he had not consulted nor was he represented by independent counsel and did not understand the stipulation at the time of signing.

From Mary Babcock's affidavits it appears that she was in Los Angeles County at the time the suit was filed; that on March 3 her husband called on her, advised her of the filing of the suit and of the stipulation he had signed, presenting a similar stipulation for her to sign. She refused to sign, returned to Oakland, and on March 4 consulted an attorney who referred her to another attorney, found the latter out of town but left with his secretary the copy of complaint served on Alfred and copy of the stipulation. On March 7, she and Alfred called on this attorney; told him they knew nothing regarding the matters referred to in the complaint; that only Milam could tell whether the complaint was justified; and that she had been served but did not recall the exact date thereof. She states that on March 7 and for a time prior thereto Milam was at the home of appellant and in an intoxicated state; that, after a lapse of several days and repeated requests by her, appellant brought Milam to her home, and she entered upon the process of nursing Milam and attempting to get him back on his feet; that after several days of treatment Milam partially recovered from the effects of his prolonged drinking and then advised her there were numerous good defenses to the complaint and numerous offsets against the demands of the appellant, and that he would secure the records concerning such offsets so that the same might be presented to an attorney. She and Milam then went to the office of the partnership and discovered that during the period of Milam's drinking all of the records pertaining to appellant's participation in the partnership had been removed. Thereupon she called on her attorney, told him that she had ascertained that each of the respondents had meritorious defenses to the action and made an appointment with him for that evening, on which evening her first affidavit was prepared and signed, and filed the following day. She further states that during the 10-day period following service of process upon her, her mind was in a confused, distraught and upset condition resulting from the condition of her son, which she states was brought about to a large degree by the efforts and actions of appellant; and that during said 10-day period she was primarily concerned with the well-being of her son and all of her efforts were directed toward restoring his health.

This evidence furnishes ample support for the action of the trial court in vacating the judgment and permitting the answer and cross-complaint to be filed. It is not a case of a mere change of mind by a defaulting party, whether he wishes to contest an action, coupled with a failure to present facts to indicate that a different result might be reached if the motion to vacate were granted, as was the case in Elms v. Elms, 72 Cal.App.2d 508, 164 P.2d 936, upon which appellant relies.

[2, 3] A motion to set aside such a judgment as this is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court and in the absence of a clear showing of abuse in the exercise thereof an appellate court will not disturb the order of the court below. It is the policy of the law to favor, where possible, a hearing on the merits, and appellate courts are more disposed to affirm an order when the result, as in the instant case, is to compel a trial upon the merits than when a judgment by default is allowed to stand, and it appears that a substantial defense could be made. Waybright v. Anderson, 200 Cal. 374, 377, 253 P. 148. Especially is this true when the trial court, as in the instant case, grants relief after it has been promptly sought and it does not appear that appellant has sustained any prejudice thereby. Hadges v. Kouris, 71 Cal.App.2d 213, 214, 162 P.2d 476; Weck v. Sucher, 96 Cal. App. 422, 424-426, 274 P. 579.

[4] Upon such an appeal it is not the function of an appellate court to weigh the evidence, as appellant would have us do. He urges that the evidence, being in the form of affidavits, consists merely of written documents that are susceptible to interpretation by any court, trial or appellate. It is well established that the function of an appellate court in this regard is the same as when some or all of the evidence is in the form of oral testimony. Bradley v. Davis, 156 Cal. 267, 104 P. 302. Accordingly, upon such an appeal, the action of the trial judge in resolving any conflicts between the affidavits of the opposing parties will not be disturbed. Waybright v. Anderson, supra, 200 Cal. 374, 378, 253 P. 148; Fickeisen v. Peebler, 77 Cal.App.2d 148, 152, 174 P.2d 883; Hadges v. Kouris, supra, 71 Cal.App. 2d 213, 217, 162 P.2d 476.

[5] Appellant in his brief suggests that the supplemental affidavit of Mary Babcock should not be considered upon this appeal because it was sworn to and filed on "the same day that the matter was submitted and the Order setting aside the judgments rendered," adding that "the plaintiff had no notice of said supplemental affidavit, nor an opportunity to answer it." This point is not well taken, for the record shows that this affidavit was introduced at the adjourned hearing on March 29, with counsel for all parties present, and prior to submission and decision of the motion. This record has been stipulated by the parties and certified by the clerk of the trial court as correct. It is unlike the case of Forrest v. Knox, 21 Cal.App. 363, 131 P. 894, cited by appellant, in which the court held that an affidavit filed after submission but without notice to the opposite party until after the granting of the motion, could not be considered in support of a motion to set aside a default judgment. If appellant herein desired to respond to the supplemental affidavit of Mary Babcock, he should have made application to the trial court therefor.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and BRAY, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 337

Ex parte BROWNING.
Cr. 4555.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.
Sept. 5, 1950.

Frank M. Browning filed a petition in the District Court of Appeal for a writ of habeas corpus to obtain custody of Jean Woodward Herring Browning, a minor child, and to stay proceedings in a proceeding instituted by child's mother in Superior Court to determine custody of child. The District Court of Appeal, Per Curiam, held that the Superior Court had jurisdiction to determine the issues as to custody, and that discharge of previous petition to Superior Court for a writ of habeas corpus was res judicata of questions raised in petition to appellate court.

Petition denied.

1. Parent and child ⇐2(4)

Superior Court had jurisdiction to determine the issues as to custody of minor child who was in the state as between mother, residing in the state, and father who was a resident of New York and claimed custody under New Jersey divorce decree.

2. Habeas corpus ⇐44

Appellate court had no jurisdiction to entertain petition for habeas corpus while a similar petition filed by same party was pending in superior court.

3. Habeas corpus ⇐120

Where petition to District Court of Appeal for writ of habeas corpus to obtain custody of minor child alleged no facts in addition to those presented to superior court by previous petition for such writ, discharge by superior court of the writ of habeas corpus rendered the matter res judicata so far as subsequent petition to appellate court was concerned.

4. Habeas corpus ⇐46

Habeas corpus proceedings involving a factual situation should be tried in the superior court rather than appellate court, except where questions of law only are involved.

5. Appeal and error ⇐858

Appellate courts in exercise of appellate jurisdiction are restricted to the consideration of questions of law alone, except where a question of law necessarily arises from the evidence or is presented thereby, from its very nature.

Hill, Jones & Attias, Los Angeles, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM.

Petition for writ of habeas corpus and for stay of proceedings.

Petitioner is the father of a minor child. In October, 1948, petitioner and his wife were divorced in New Jersey. The child was awarded to petitioner by the court in New Jersey April 5, 1950.

Petitioner is a resident of New York, and his former wife is a resident of California. She has the child here, and refuses to deliver the child to petitioner. While testifying in the New Jersey court she stated she would not comply with the order of custody there as to the child. Prior to the entry of the judgment in New Jersey the child was in California.

August 16, 1950, petitioner applied for a writ of habeas corpus in the Superior Court of this state in Los Angeles County. August 18, 1950, the matter was referred to Judge Doyle for hearing. After the petition for habeas corpus was filed in the Superior Court, the mother filed another proceeding in that court, praying that the custody of the child be determined, and given to her.

[1] Judge Doyle discharged the writ of habeas corpus, and gave the mother temporary custody of the child. That the Superior Court had jurisdiction to determine the issues, there can be no question.

[2] Now the father petitions this court for a writ of habeas corpus. This is the second petition in this court for the writ. The first writ was quashed because of the pendency in the Superior Court of the writ above mentioned. In re Owen, 82

Cal.App. 280, 255 P. 541; In re Shaw, 84 Cal.App. 24, 257 P. 585.

[3] The petition now presented to this court alleges no new or additional facts than those presented to the Superior Court. Therefore, the matter is res judicata so far as the present petition is concerned. In re Martin, 79 Cal.App.2d 584, 180 P.2d 383.

[4, 5] Inasmuch as a proceeding in re custody of the child is pending in the Superior Court in which the parties may have their day in court, it would seem that all would be better served by attending to that case. Except where questions of law only are involved, such cases as this, where a factual situation is involved, should be tried in the Superior Court. In the exercise of appellate jurisdiction the appellate courts are restricted to the consideration of questions of law alone, except where there necessarily arises from the evidence or is presented thereby, from its very nature, a question of law.

The petition for a writ of habeas corpus is denied.

99 Cal.App.2d 254

LIERA v. LOS ANGELES FINANCE CO. et al.

Civ. 3986.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 29, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 15, 1950.

Hearing Denied Oct. 26, 1950.

Ramon Liera sued the Los Angeles Finance Company, a corporation, and others to recover damages for wrongful attachment of plaintiff's wages and abuse of process. From an order of the Superior Court of Imperial County, L. J. Mouser, J., denying defendants' motion for change of venue, defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that individuals, appearing by denominating themselves in their demurrer to the complaint as defendants fictitiously named therein, had no right to seek a change of venue based on their residence in another county and that the corporations named as defendants in the complaint could be sued in Imperial County, wherein the obligation or liability arose or the breach occurred.

Order affirmed.

1. Associations ⇐20(1)
Corporations ⇐503(1)

The venue of action against corporations and associations is governed by constitutional provision authorizing action in county where contract is made or to be performed, where obligation or liability arises or breach occurs, or where corporation's principal place of business is situated, unless waived by plaintiff, as by designation and service of nonresident individual as party defendant. Const. art. 12, § 16.

2. Parties ⇐73

Where complaint designates some defendants by fictitious names, plaintiff, not defendants, may designate whom plaintiff intended to sue, and persons not named as parties, nor served with process as persons sued by fictitious names or otherwise made known by plaintiff as desired defendants, have no right to appear by demurrer to complaint as persons sued in such names.

3. Venue ⇐59

Where only defendants named in complaint and served with process were three corporations, individuals voluntarily appearing by denominating themselves in their demurrer to complaint as defendants designated by fictitious names therein had no right to seek change of venue on ground of their residence in county other than that in which action was brought, and no proper judgment could be obtained against them as individuals without proper amendment of complaint. Code Civ.Proc. § 474.

4. Corporations ⇐503(2)

Corporations could be sued for wrongful attachment of wages and abuse of process in county wherein obligation or liability arose or breach occurred, as provided in constitution, though their only places of business were in another county. Const. art. 12, § 16.

5. Constitutional law ⇐36

The legislature may not designate forum or county for commencement and trial of actions when such subject is covered by constitution. Code Civ.Proc. § 395; Const. art. 12, § 16.

6. Associations ⇐20(1)
Corporations ⇐503(1)

The constitutional provision that corporation or association may be sued in county where contract is made or to be performed, where obligation or liability arises or breach occurs, or where corporation's principal place of business is situated, controls suits in either contract or tort against corporations or associations. Const. art. 12, § 16.

7. Appeal and error ⇐912

On appeal from order denying motion for change of place of trial, allegations of complaint must be taken as true for purpose of motion.

A. Joseph Shapiro, Los Angeles, for appellants.

D. M. McGahey, El Centro, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Plaintiff brought an action in Imperial County for damages against defendant Los Angeles Finance Company, a corporation, Los Angeles Finance Counselors, a corporation, LeRoy's Jewelers, a corporation, and Does I to X inclusive.

The four causes of action stated against the corporations are for damages for claimed "distress in mind and body and mental anguish" due to the malicious and wrongful attachment of wages and earnings in the amount of $70 for personal service rendered within 30 days previous to the date of the attachment, and for abuse of process thereafter.

In the complaint is the usual allegation that the names of the fictitiously named defendants were not known to plaintiff and that he would ask leave to amend the complaint to show their true names and the capacity in which they acted upon ascertaining these facts. It does not appear, from the record before us, that any of the defendant corporations named or any defendant denominated Does I to X inclusive were served with summons and complaint. However, plaintiff recites in his brief that summons was only issued against the corporations named and not against any individual and that an attorney accepted service by acknowledgment on the original summons, reciting: "Received this —— day of ——, Attorney for defendants for all defendants". No attempt was made in the complaint to allege anything done by, or to state a cause of action against, any individual.

Plaintiff alleges that defendant, LeRoy's Jewelers, in doing and causing to be done the various things complained of, acted through defendant Los Angeles Finance Company and Los Angeles Finance Counselors, the corporations named. Thereafter, a demurrer was filed reciting: "Come now defendants, Los Angeles Finance Company, a corporation, Benjamin B. Shapiro, Frank P. Shapiro, and Harry Sherwood (sued herein as Doe I, Doe II and Doe III respectively), individually and as copartners doing business under the firm name LeRoy's Jewelers, and LeRoy's Jewelers, a copartnership, and demur to the complaint". In addition, each filed a notice of motion for change of venue to Los Angeles County. This was accompanied by an affidavit of merit which also recites that Harry Sherwood was president of the Los Angeles Finance Company, a corporation; that Frank P. Shapiro was vice president; that the affidavit is made on behalf of the corporation and themselves, individually, and as copartners of LeRoy's Jewelers, and that the Los Angeles Finance Company, formerly Los Angeles Finance Counselors, a corporation, and defendant LeRoy's Jewelers' principal and only place of business is in the city of Los Angeles and that the individual defendants resided there during all the times mentioned. Upon this showing the court denied the motion to change the venue.

Defendants appeal and contend (1) that all the defendants were residents of Los Angeles County and as such were entitled to have the action transferred to the county of their residence; (2) that the venue of the action is governed by section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure and does not fall within any of the exceptions therein provided; (3) that the fact that one of the defendants was a corporation did not cause the venue of the action to be governed by Article XII, section 16 of the Constitution rather than by the provisions of section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure or the fact that the individual defendants were sued under fictitious names did not deprive them of the right to have the action tried in the county of their residence.

It is plaintiff's contention that the venue of the action against corporations and associations is governed by Article XII, section 16 of the Constitution unless waived by the plaintiff; that there was no such waiver; that it was plaintiff's privilege to designate the parties defendant he intended to sue; that the parties made defendants solely for venue purposes have no venue privileges under section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and finally, that volunteers who choose to inject themselves into law suits waive venue privileges granted involuntary defendants.

[1] It is true that the venue of an action against corporations and associations is governed by Article XII, sec. 16 of the Constitution unless waived by the plaintiff. A waiver may be affected by the designation and service of a nonresident individual as a party defendant. Brady v. Times-Mirror Co., 106 Cal. 56, 39 P. 209. In the instant action the individuals appearing by demurrer were not parties defendant named in the complaint. There was no allegation that any individual committed any wrongful act but, on the contrary, it is alleged that the wrongful and malicious act was committed by the corporations named. No judgment is sought against any individual but only against the named corporations.

[2] When a plaintiff sues with fictitious defendant allegations, it is plaintiff's rather than the defendant's privilege to designate whom he intended to sue. A person not named as a party to the suit and not served as one of those sued by fictitious names or otherwise made known by the plaintiff as one of the real persons whom he desired as defendants, and whom he sued under fictitious names, has no right to appear therein by demurrer, and it is not for any or every person in the county to decide for himself whether he is the person intended. Mercantile Trust Co. of San Francisco v. Stockton Terminal etc. Co., 44 Cal.App. 558, 186 P. 1049; McKinlay v. Tuttle, 42 Cal. 570; Bachman v. Cathry, 113 Cal. 498, 45 P. 814.

[3] It would therefore appear, so far as the complaint before us is concerned, that the only defendants mentioned in the complaint and served, were the three corporations thus designated, and any individuals appearing by denominating themselves Does I, II and III would have no right, in the face of the complaint, to seek a change of venue based upon their residence. Their appearance in the action was voluntary, and without a proper amendment to the complaint, no proper judgment could be obtained against them as such individuals. Sec. 474, Code Civ. Proc.; Flores v. Smith, 47 Cal.App.2d 253, 117 P.2d 712; Union Tank & Pipe Co. v. Mammoth Oil Co., 134 Cal.App. 229, 25 P.2d 262; Roseborough v. Campbell, 46 Cal.App. 2d 257, 115 P.2d 839.

[4-6] The only remaining question is whether or not the corporations named in the complaint could be sued in Imperial County by reason of the fact that the "obligation or liability arises, or the breach occurs" in that county. Sec. 16, Art. XII Constitution. The legislature may not designate the forum or county for commencement and trial of actions when that subject is covered by the Constitution. Miller & Lux v. Kern County Land Co., 134 Cal. 586, 66 P. 856; Buck v. James McClatchy Publishing Company, Inc., 105 Cal.App. 248, 287 P. 364. The above-mentioned section of the Constitution has consistently been held to control suits either in contract or tort, brought against corporations or associations. Brady v. Times-Mirror Company, 106 Cal. 56, 39 P. 209; Griffin & Skelly Co. v. Magnolia & Healdsburg F. C. Co., 107 Cal. 378, 40 P. 495; Tingley v. Times-Mirror Co., 144 Cal. 205, 77 P. 918. The complaint only alleges that the corporations committed the acts charged.

[7] In considering an appeal from an order denying a motion for change of place of trial, for the purpose of the motion, the allegations of the complaint must be taken as true. Coley v. Hecker, 206 Cal. 22, 272 P. 1045; Yolo County Consolidated Water Co. v. Adamson, 22 Cal.App. 493, 135 P. 48.

In view of this determination it will be unnecessary to further consider the other points suggested by plaintiff justifying the order.

Order affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MUSSELL, J., concur.

Hearing denied; SCHAUER, J., dissenting.

99 Cal.App.2d 319

In re MESNER'S ESTATE.

SINGER v. CRADICK.

CRADICK v. SINGER.

Civ. 17766.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 1, 1950.

As Modified Sept. 7, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 20, 1950.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Jennie Mesner, also known as Jennie Grawoig. Charles W. Cradick, executor of the estate, filed a petition for confirmation of his sale of apartment courts belonging to the estate, and J. F. Singer filed a petition to set aside a subsequent sale of such property to him. From orders of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County vacating an order confirming the second sale and forfeiting the amount of petitioner Singer's deposit, he appealed. On motion to dismiss the appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that the order forfeiting the deposit was appealable.

Motion denied.

1. Courts ⇐202(5)
Executors and administrators ⇐358(2)

While appealable orders in probate matters generally are only those enumerated in statute and order denying petition to set aside probate court's order for sale of decedent's realty is not appealable, orders in which a party to probate proceedings has an interest are appealable. Probate Code, § 1240.

2. Courts ⇐202(5)

Probate court orders involving construction of proper exercise of administrator's duties or subjecting him to liability, if obeyed, are appealable. Probate Code, § 1240.

3. Executors and administrators ⇐358(2)

A probate court order merely vacating order for sale of decedent's realty would have been nonappealable, but became appealable when it adjudged that amount of purchaser's deposit with executor was forfeited, thereby making purchaser an interested party. Probate Code, § 1240.

4. Appeal and error ⇐76(1)

The appealability of an order is determined, not from its form, but from its legal effect.

Clarence Hansen and Vernon S. Gray, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Dailey S. Stafford, Los Angeles, for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

The executor of this estate received a bid of $79,500 for the property from Mr. and Mrs. Harry Gershan. He presented this bid to the probate court for confirmation. On the hearing which followed, Joseph P. Singer bid in open court $83,975 for the property, and it was sold and confirmed to him.

While in court, Mr. Singer signed a formal written bid, and deposited with the executor $8,500 to bind the bargain. Executor's deed was to follow upon payment of the balance of the purchase price. For the purpose of completing the transaction,

Mr. Singer caused an escrow to be set up in a bank.

But he failed to pay the money due. And he petitioned the probate court to set aside the sale on the ground of fraud; also on the ground that the Gershans, without his knowledge had withdrawn their offer before the sale to him; and, therefore, the court was without jurisdiction to proceed.

The probate court vacated the order confirming the sale, and in the same order, directed that Mr. Singer was not entitled to return of the $8,500. The court made another and additional order, based upon Mr. Singer's petition, that he was not entitled to repayment of the $8,500.

Mr. Singer appeals from both of these orders.

In the same estate an order by the probate court directing the return of the deposit of Mr. and Mrs. Gershan was affirmed by this court. Estate of Mesner, 95 Cal. App.2d 265, 212 P.2d 267.

Clerk's and reporter's transcripts and appellant's opening brief are on file. Respondent moves to dismiss both appeals upon the ground that the orders are not appealable. In support of his proposition he cites: Probate Code, § 1240; Estate of O'Dea, 15 Cal.2d 637, 104 P.2d 368; Estate of Grussing, 15 Cal.App.2d 11; 59 P.2d 152; Estate of Ryker, 92 Cal.App.2d 162, 206 P.2d 406; Estate of Brady, 32 Cal.2d 478, 196 P.2d 881.

[1] While appealable orders in probate matters in general are only those enumerated in the statute, Estate of Hathaway,111 Cal. 270, 43 P. 754, Estate of O'Dea, supra, and an order refusing to set aside an order of sale is not appealable, Estate of McCarty, 169 Cal. 708, 147 P. 941, the rule has definite limitations. Orders in which a party litigant in probate proceedings has an interest are appealable. Estate of Bradley, 168 Cal. 655, 144 P. 136.

[2] And orders involving the construction of the proper exercise of the duties of an administrator are likewise appealable. Whenever an order involves such a construction, or whenever obedience thereto might subject the administrator to liability an appeal will lie. Estate of Welch, 106 Cal. 427, 39 P. 805; Estate of Exterstein, 2 Cal.2d 13, 38 P.2d 151.

[3, 4] If the order vacating the order of sale had stopped there, it would have been non-appealable. Estate of McCarty, supra; Estate of Verwoert, 177 Cal. 488, 171 P. 105. But when the order continued, and adjudged that $8,500 was forfeited it became appealable. The appealability of an order is determined not from its form, but from its legal effect. Estate of West, 162 Cal. 352, 122 P. 953. To the extent that the order directs disposition of the $8,500 in controversy it made Mr. Singer an interested party, with the right of appeal.

The motion to dismiss both appeals is denied.

WHITE, P. J., and DORAN, JJ., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 343

GIRARD v. VEACH.
Civ. 17538.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.
Sept. 7, 1950.

Fred Girard sued Harry Ore Veach for attorney's fees. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Leroy Dawson, J., for plaintiff, defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that allowance of interest before the date of the judgment was erroneous, as interest should be only from such date.

Judgment modified and affirmed as modified.

1. Appeal and error ⇐1011(1)

The District Court of Appeal is not called on to weigh or evaluate conflicting evidence on appeal from judgment on trial court's findings, but that is trial judge's province.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1010(1)

A judgment on trial court's fact findings, substantially supported by evidence, must be affirmed on appeal.

3. Interest ⇐39(3)

In action for attorney's fees, allowance of interest before date of judgment for plaintiff was erroneous, as interest should be only from date of judgment.

George R. Maury, Alden F. Houck, and Steiner A. Larsen, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hindin, Weiss & Girard, Los Angeles, for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

Defendant is a medical doctor. He treated a fifteen-year-old girl. A man who gave his name as Gordon called at the doctor's office, and accused him of criminal and unprofessional conduct toward the girl. The doctor hotly denied the charge, and ran the man out of the office.

That evening the doctor called his insurance agent, who had sold him his malpractice insurance policy, and notified him what had happened. The agent advised him to keep quiet and do nothing for the time being.

Then an attorney at law telephoned the doctor, said that he represented the girl and her mother, and asked for a conference. The doctor advised the agent of this development. The agent advised the insurance adjusters. They suggested that in view of the possibility of criminal prosecution the doctor should secure the services of a lawyer skilled in criminal practice.

Upon this suggestion, plaintiff was called into the case. He was introduced to the doctor by the insurance agent. He moved in rapidly; secured the assurance of the District Attorney's office that if anyone asked for a criminal complaint, the doctor would be given a hearing before it issued. He participated in taking statements from the doctor's nurse, and other possible witnesses. He went over the case with defendant, and members of defendant's family; also with defendant's personal lawyer, and with the insurance agent. And he talked with the lawyer who had telephoned the doctor.

At the first interview between plaintiff and defendant, something was said about plaintiff's fee, but no figure was named. Later, and after a great deal of work had been done, plaintiff advised defendant that his fee would be $2,500. Defendant refused to pay any part of the fee; said he didn't have that much money; that it was too much; and that, anyway, plaintiff was working for the insurance company, and under his policy he was not required to pay attorneys' fees.

The policy provided that the insurance carrier was not liable for any criminal act on the part of the insured, and was not required to defend in any proceeding growing out of such act. No criminal complaint was issued; and none was asked for. After plaintiff retired from the case, a settlement between the doctor and the minor was approved by the Superior Court.

After seven days' trial, the court found for plaintiff. From the judgment which followed, defendant appeals.

[1, 2] The old, familiar rule in appellate practice must again be followed in this case. While the doctor's case may have entitled him to judgment, the trial court found against him on conflicting evidence. This court is not called upon to weigh or evaluate evidence. That is the province of the trial judge. The evidence substantially supports the findings of the trial court and the judgment. Buckhantz v. R. G. Hamilton & Co., 71 Cal.App.2d 777, 163 P. 2d 756.

It is charged on appeal that the trial court "so erred * * * in leading the witnesses, and in suggesting lines of testimony for the plaintiff, as to have demonstrated prejudicial bias." No mention of these charges was made until the opening brief on appeal was filed. The record has been carefully read, with each charge in mind. No bias of the trial judge appears. And no errors in admission of evidence, or in the conduct of the trial by the judge, are to be found.

[3] Defendant complains of the allowance of interest prior to the date of the judgment. On the authority of Johnson v. Marr, 8 Cal.App.2d 312, 47 P.2d 489, interest should be only from the date of the judgment.

The judgment is modified to provide that it shall bear interest from the date of its entry. As so modified the judgment is affirmed. Each party to bear his costs on appeal.

WHITE, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 353

POWELL et al. v. BERG et ux.

POWELL v. BERG.
Civ. 7741, 7742.
Sac. 6057, 6058.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Sept. 8, 1950.

Action by William James Powell, Oscar Nelson and another against Lars C. Berg and his wife, to recover the reasonable value of services rendered in the construction of a house and a garage upon land owned by defendant. In a separate action, William James Powell sought to recover moneys advanced by him to Lars C. Berg in the construction of house and garage. The actions were consolidated for trial and appeal. The Superior Court, Butte County, Henry Deirup, J., entered judgment in favor of plaintiffs Powell and Nelson, in first action and plaintiff in second action and defendants appealed from both judgments. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that the evidence supported finding of trial court that one of plaintiffs did not represent himself to be a licensed contractor, and that plaintiffs rendered services performed as an employee of another with wages as sole compensation.

Affirmed.

Licenses ⇐39.44

In action to recover reasonable value of services rendered in construction of a house and a garage upon land owned by defendants, evidence sustained finding that one of plaintiffs did not represent himself to be a licensed contractor and sustained finding that such plaintiff rendered services performed as an employee of another with wages as sole compensation. Business and Professions Code, §§ 7026, 7031.

Morris Oppenheim, San Francisco, for appellants.

Matthew E. Marsh, Chico, for respondents.

PEEK, Justice.

By their action plaintiffs Powell, Nelson and Tansey sought to recover the reasonable value of their services in the construction of a house and garage upon land owned by defendants Berg and to have the amounts thereof adjudged to be liens against said property. From the judgment which was entered in behalf of plaintiffs Powell and Nelson defendants have appealed. 3 Civil 7741. No appeal was taken by plaintiff Tansey from the judgment entered against him. Plaintiff Powell by a second and separate action successfully sought to recover moneys advanced by him in the construction of said dwelling and for the value of the use in such construction work of a truck owned by him. From this judgment defendant likewise has appealed. 3 Civil 7742. The foregoing actions were consolidated for trial and appeal and are now before this court upon a single reporter's transcript.

Following the overruling of defendants' demurrer in the first action, 3 Civil 7741, an answer was filed denying the material allegations of plaintiffs' complaint and affirmatively alleging that Powell had represented himself to be a licensed contractor but that he was not so licensed; that he had orally agreed to construct the house at cost and that Berg would sell the same and divide the profits with Powell. In regard to plaintiff Nelson, the answer alleged that he had been fully compensated for his work, and in regard to plaintiff Tansey it was alleged that for a valuable consideration he had released defendants from all claims or demands. Although the answer of defendant in the second action, 3 Civil 7742, does not appear in the record before us, defendants state in their opening brief that an answer was filed denying generally the allegations of the complaint and realleging all of the special defenses set forth in the first action. The consolidated cases proceeded to trial upon the issues so raised. At the conclusion thereof the trial court adopted findings of fact favorable to plaintiffs Powell and Nelson, but found in favor of defendants in regard to plaintiff Tansey.

Appellants' primary contention is that the judgment as to Powell must be reversed for insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings of fact. In particular, it is argued that the evidence establishes as a matter of law that Powell was "a contractor" within the meaning of Section 7026 of the Business and Professions Code, and since he admittedly was not licensed as such he could not recover. Sec. 7031, Bus. & Prof. Code. Appellants' argument in support of such contention is merely an attack upon the weight of the evidence. However, since the record discloses substantial evidence in support of the findings, their contention is utterly without merit. Suffice it to say that there is more than ample evidence that Powell did not represent himself to be a licensed contractor and that he rendered the services performed as an "employee of another with wages as the sole compensation." Sec. 7026. Additionally, there is more than ample evidence establishing defendants' control of the building operations and of the persons employed therein and the actual exercise of such control by defendants.

Appellants' second contention is as equally devoid of merit as their first. It appears to be merely that as to plaintiff Nelson the evidence is insufficient to sustain the judgment solely for the reason that, in their words, Nelson "literally reeks with alcohol" and "admits he was addicted to the use of intoxicants". From such statements defendants then draw the conclusion that Nelson performed no services. We know of no such rule. Again, suffice it to say that there is more than ample evidence to support the findings and judgment so attacked.

The judgments are affirmed.

ADAMS, P. J., and VAN DYKE, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 285

PUCHTA v. ROTHMAN et al.

Civ. 14338.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 31, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 30, 1950.

Margaret Jane Puchta, a minor, by Stanley J. Puchta, her guardian ad litem, sued N. Rothman and Rough Rider, Inc., for injuries the minor plaintiff sustained in a building under construction when plaintiff fell through an opening in second floor of building onto a concrete floor beneath. The Superior Court in and for the County of San Mateo, A. R. Cotton, J., held that defendants were not liable under the attractive nuisance doctrine, or as having wilfully injured minor.

Judgment affirmed.

Dooling, J., dissented.

1. Negligence ⇐39

Defendants engaged in construction of a building were not liable under attractive nuisance doctrine for injuries received by minor who trespassed upon building by going up stairway to second floor of building, and who stepped upon tar paper above a concealed hole in floor and fell through to first floor.

2. Negligence ⇐119(1)

In action for injuries resulting when minor trespassed upon building by going up stairway onto second floor, and stepped upon tar paper above a concealed hole in floor and fell through to first floor, minor had burden to obviate what otherwise would be legal consequences of trespass by alleging and proving all facts necessary to remove effect of trespass as an objection to recovery.

3. Negligence ⇐39

The attractive nuisance doctrine does not require an owner to destroy or impair usefulness of his property in order to safeguard trespassing children.

4. Negligence ⇐33(1, 3)

Landowner need not keep his premises safe for either adult or minor trespassers.

5. Negligence ⇐11

Where retention of barricade, erected at foot of stairway leading to second floor of building under construction to protect children from danger would have destroyed purpose for which stairs were built, and would retard completion of building, and minor trespassed in building by climbing stairs in order to play on second floor, and minor fell through tar paper covering hole in second floor, defendants who were constructing building and who removed barricade were not liable for injuries as having wilfully injured minor.

6. Pleading ⇐252(2)

An amended complaint superseded original complaint and original complaint after amendment performed no function as a pleading and could not be looked to for issues to be tried.

Dolwig & Gaudio, South San Francisco, for appellants.

F. E. Hoffmann, San Mateo, for respondents.

GOODELL, Justice.

Appellant sued for $50,000, for injuries sustained in a building which was under construction, when she fell through an opening in the second floor thereof onto a concrete floor 12 or 13 feet beneath. A general demurrer was sustained (with leave to amend) to each of the two counts of the amended complaint. Appellant declined to amend and judgment was entered for respondents for costs. This appeal followed.

Appellant's statement of facts as alleged in the complaint is as follows: "On or about the 6th day of February, 1947, the defendants were engaged in the construction of a building in South San Francisco * * * The building was partially completed on that date and the second floor was overlaid with a sheet of tar paper. Under this tar paper and totally concealed by it was a hole for a proposed ventilator or skylight. The stairway had already been completed so that access to the second floor was easy and convenient. Children had, to defendants' knowledge, played upon this structure and knowing this, defendants had in fact erected a barricade to protect them from this known danger. On or about the 6th day of February, 1947, defendants removed this protective barricade and plaintiff Margaret Jane Puchta, ten years of age, went to the second floor of the building to play and while so engaged, stepped upon the tar paper above the concealed hole, plunging through to the first floor, suffering severe personal injury."

Appellant concedes that it is "the general rule that a land owner owes no duty of care to trespassers" and states that the first count is based on the attractive nuisance doctrine, which is an exception to that rule.

The attractive nuisance doctrine was first applied in California in Barrett v. Southern Pacific Co., 91 Cal. 296, 27 P. 666, 25 Am. St.Rep. 186, where the Supreme Court, with two rules on the subject from which to choose, selected the rule followed by the United States Supreme Court, and by Pennsylvania, Michigan, Missouri, Kansas and Minnesota, and rejected that of New Hampshire. It is a typical attractive nuisance case since it involved a turntable.

Cahill v. E. B. & A. L. Stone & Co., 153 Cal. 571, 96 P. 84, 19 L.R.A.,N.S., 1094, involved a push-car used in laying a railroad track in a city street which car, without any brake, was left unguarded, unenclosed and unlocked, and a 12-year old boy was injured while playing thereon while it was in motion. A demurrer to his complaint was sustained but the judgment was reversed on the authority of the Barrett case. The court in 153 Cal. at page 574, 96 P. at page 86, said: "The rule of course is not to be confined to turntables, but applies to any attractive and dangerous machinery * * * It is true that in this state the rule has been strictly limited to the particular character of cases mentioned in the Barrett Case. In Peters v. Bowman, 115 Cal. [345] (349, 47 P. 113, 598, 56 Am.St. Rep. 106), wherein it was held that the owner of a lot was not liable for the death of a boy drowned in a pond on his premises, Mr. Justice McFarland, speaking of the so-called 'turntable cases,' says: 'The rule as thus applied rested on the ground that the immature judgment of a young child could not well determine or provide against the danger of meddling with such machinery, and that therefore the railroad company was liable for legal negligence in erecting it and leaving it exposed as an attraction to children, and a temptation to them to intermeddle with it.' It is further stated that the principle of these 'turntable cases,' while well established in this state, is an exception to the general rule that the owner of land is under no legal duty to keep it in safe condition for others than those whom he invites there."

"Originally, the attractive nuisance doctrine was applied only to machinery under certain circumstances, but in this state its application has been extended to various appliances and contrivances." Hernandez v. Santiago etc. Ass'n, 110 Cal.App. 229, 233, 293 P. 875, 877. Thus it was applied in Pierce v. United G. & E. Co., 161 Cal. 176, 118 P. 700, where a loose guy wire came in contact with a live wire; in Skinner v. Knickrehm, 10 Cal.App. 596, 102 P. 947, where a wagon was attached to the rear of a house being moved through city streets; in Faylor v. Great Eastern Q. M. Co., 45 Cal.App. 194, 187 P. 101, where unlocked ore cars were left in an unguarded, unused, mining tunnel; in Sandberg v. McGilvray-Raymond Granite Co., 66 Cal.App. 261, 226 P. 28, where a railroad train was slowly backing; in Morse v. Douglas, 107 Cal.App. 196, 290 P. 465, where a trailer and vat of boiling tar were left unguarded in a city street, and in Lambert v. Western Pacific R. R. Co., 135 Cal.App. 81, 26 P.2d 824, where an abandoned box of dynamite caps was left on a railroad right of way under construction.

The courts have refused to extend the rule to such things as ponds and reservoirs, Peters v. Bowman, supra; Polk v. Laurel Hill Cemetery Ass'n, 37 Cal.App. 624, 174 P. 414; Reardon v. Spring Valley Water Co., 68 Cal.App. 13, 228 P. 406, storm drains; Melendez v. Los Angeles, 8 Cal. 2d 741, 68 P.2d 971; Beeson v. Los Angeles, 115 Cal.App. 122, 300 P. 993, a stable; Giannini v. Campodonico, 176 Cal. 548, 169 P. 80, a dance hall; Doyle v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 6 Cal.2d 550, 59 P.2d 93, an icing platform; Hernandez v. Santiago etc. Ass'n, 110 Cal.App. 229, 293 P. 875 supra.

An unfinished building has none of the characteristics of turn-tables, moving cars or wagons, live wires, or "dangerous and attractive machinery." Respondents' assertion in their brief that they have found no case holding such a structure to be an attractive nuisance virtually challenged their adversary to produce one, but since no reply brief was filed none was forthcoming.

In Peters v. Bowman, supra, 115 Cal. 345, 349–350, 47 P. 113, 114, the court said: "the rule of the Turntable cases is an exception to the general principle that the owner of land is under no legal duty to keep it in a safe condition for others than those whom he invites there, and that trespassers take the risk of injuries from ordinary visible causes; and it should not be carried beyond the class of cases to which it has been applied", and added in 115 Cal. at page 356, 47 P. at page 599, in denying a rehearing: "The owner of a thing dangerous and attractive to children is not always and universally liable for an injury to a child tempted by the attraction. His liability bears a relation to the character of the thing, whether natural and common, or artificial and uncommon: to the comparative ease or difficulty of preventing the danger without destroying or impairing the usefulness of the thing; and, in short, to the reasonableness and propriety of his own conduct, in view of all surrounding circumstances and conditions." (Emphasis added.)

In Loftus v. Dehail, 133 Cal. 214, 218, 65 P. 379, 380, the court said: "But it by no means follows, * * * that anything or everything which a jury may find, or a court may determine, to be attractive as a playground or plaything for children casts a responsibility of guard and care upon the owner of that thing. * * * Venturesome boys and even girls make playgrounds of unfinished buildings, climb perilous heights, and scamper over insecure boards and rafters. If an owner became responsible, merely because children were attracted, it would burden the ownership of property with a most preposterous and unbearable weight." (Emphasis added.) The last quotation, which used unfinished buildings as an example, while merely a dictum, was repeated 35 years later in Doyle v. Pacific Electic Ry. Co., 6 Cal.2d 550, 552, 59 P.2d 93, supra. In the latter case a 13 year old boy trespasser ventured onto a canvas-covered sky-light opening and fell through it, in much the same way as appellant fell through this paper-covered opening.

When the cases speak of guarding the dangerous contrivance, they are not speaking of a warning of "danger" or a notice to "keep out", but of something that will physically prevent children and others from going upon the premises. This is indicated by the case of Faylor v. Great Eastern Q. M. Co., 45 Cal.App. 194, 187 P. 101, supra, where the mining property was enclosed with a barbed wire fence, and where there was posted in a conspicuous place on the gate "a sign 6 feet long and 18 inches wide, and with the word 'Danger' painted thereon in letters 1 foot high, and the words 'No Admittance' about 8 inches high." Notwithstanding these precautions the court held that the mining company should have sealed up the mouth of the unused tunnel. It is indicated also in the Barrett case, 91 Cal. 296, 27 P. 667, supra, where the turntable was equipped "with a latch and slot, such as is in common use on such tables, to keep it from revolving" which was fastened at the time, but since it "was not protected by any inclosure" or guarded, the defendant was held liable.

It is self-evident that any barricade at the foot of the stairway of this building, of sufficient size and strength to keep children from going up the stairs, would destroy the very purpose for which the stairs were built and retard the completion of the building.

Appellant quotes the Restatement of the Law of Torts, § 339, and argues that the California rule on attractive nuisances is substantially in accord with it. Generally speaking it is, but the cases which we have cited show the lines of distinction which the California courts have drawn. A building under construction, being immobile for one thing, is readily distinguishable from an attractive, moving vehicle or piece of machinery. In applying the rule our courts draw the line at a situation where the protective measure would destroy or impair the usefulness of the property itself. The Faylor case, 45 Cal.App. 194, 187 P. 101, supra, relied on by appellant, involved (a) an idle, non-operating mine, and (b) it is one of the cases where moving things —push-cars in an unused mining tunnel— were the attraction; a building under construction is in nowise comparable, for both reasons.

[1] Under the California cases the first count states no cause of action within the doctrine of attractive nuisances, and the demurrer thereto was properly sustained.

The second count is grounded, appellant's counsel say, "upon the entirely different doctrine that a landowner owes a duty to refrain from wilfully inflicting injury upon a known trespasser."

[2] In Bradley v. Thompson, 65 Cal. App. 226, 229, 223 P. 572, 573, the court said: "Inasmuch as the injury caused by the offending instrumentality in this class of cases is the result of a trespass committed by the child, it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to obviate what otherwise would be the legal consequences of the trespass by alleging and proving all the facts which are necessary to remove the effect of the trespass as an objection to a recovery." This applies with equal force here.

The charging part of plaintiff's allegations is that defendants "wilfully removed a stair-way barricade, theretofore erected by said defendants as a safety measure, and wilfully failed to guard, enclose, or block said stairway and roof."

Instead of stating facts from which the court could conclude for itself whether or not these acts were wilful, the pleader simply adds "wilfully" as a descriptive epithet. An allegation, for instance, that, in order to teach trespassers a lesson, the owner had planted some contrivance or trap on the premises, would state facts showing a wilful act. See Peters v. Bowman, supra, 115 Cal. 345, 348, 47 P. 113, 598, 56 Am.St.Rep. 106, which instances a spring gun and Bourie v. Spring Valley Water Co., 8 Cal.App. 588, 592, 97 P. 530, which instances a ditch.

[3-5] Obviously, the removal of a barricade which had "enclosed" and "blocked" the stairway, would restore the stairway to usefulness as a means of access to the unfinished second floor—a perfectly normal and legal act of ownership which could hardly be called wilful. Even under the attractive nuisance rule an owner is not expected to destroy or impair the usefulness of his property in order to safe-guard trespassing children. Peters v. Bowman, supra, 115 Cal. 345, 350, 355, 47 P. 113, 598; Polk v. Laurel Hill Cemetery Ass'n, supra, 37 Cal.App. 624, 637, 174 P. 414. That being so, then surely he cannot be held to such an onerous duty where the property is not an attractive nuisance, the rule being "that the owner of land is under no duty to keep his premises safe for trespassers." Peters v. Bowman, supra, 115 Cal. 345, 348, 47 P. 114.

Moreover, the allegation that defendants knew that children played in and about the building (squinting, as it does, at the attractive nuisance rule) adds nothing at all to the claim of wilfulness. The rule now under discussion applies to children as well as to adults. To again quote Peters v. Bowman, 115 Cal., at page 349, 47 P. at page 114: "'The rule is that, ordinarily, the owner of premises owes no duty of immunities to trespassers, though the latter be infants.' (Whittaker's Smith on Negligence, 2d ed., 67, note, and cases there cited.)"

The demurrer to the second count was properly sustained.

[6] Appellant presents an argument respecting the third count. There were three counts in the original complaint, the last of which pleaded special damages arising from medical and hospital expenses, in the sum of $1613.25. This third count was apparently abandoned, as it does not appear in the amended complaint. The amended complaint of course superseded the original complaint and the latter performs no function as a pleading and cannot be looked to for the issues to be tried. 21 Cal.Jur. p. 214.

The judgment is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., concurs.

DOOLING, Justice.

I dissent. Our Supreme Court reiterated only the other day the well settled rule that under the liberal provisions of our code "(i)t is not necessary in this state to plead with the exactitude required at common law." Steiner v. Rowley, 35 Cal. 2d 713, 221 P.2d 9. Certainly judged by this standard, and in my opinion by any reasonable standard, the first count of the complaint states a cause of action under the attractive nuisance doctrine. It alleges that the minor plaintiff is ten years of age; that the defendants on or about February 6, 1947 were engaged in constructing a building; that prior to the injury herein complained of children had been attracted to the unfinished building for the purpose of playing therein "and had played in and about said stairway and uncompleted roof, all of which, at all times herein mentioned, was well known to the defendants; * * that the second story of said structure was incomplete * * * and at that time was covered by a sheet of tar paper covering, which tar paper covering also was laid over a proposed ventilation opening or skylight, totally concealing the same"; that the minor plaintiff was attracted, with other children, to the building as a place to play and "without knowledge or notice of the existence of said covered ventilator shaft * * * fell into the concealed ventilation opening * * * through the temporary tar paper covering * * *." (Emphasis mine.)

These allegations fit the concealed peril or "trap" phase of the attractive nuisance doctrine expounded by the courts in Sanchez v. East Contra Costa Irr. Co., 205 Cal. 515, 271 P. 1060, and Faylor v. Great Eastern Q. Min. Co., 45 Cal.App. 194, 187 P. 101, like a glove tailored to the hand.

It is a too mechanical application of the rules of law to say that because the cases have held that to bring the ordinary perils of an unfinished building within the attractive nuisance doctrine "would burden the ownership of property with a most preposterous and unbearable weight", ergo no sort of trap or concealed peril in an unfinished building can come within that doctrine. The removal of a piece of tar paper from a ventilator opening would not burden the ownership of property with a "preposterous and unbearable weight" or any appreciable weight at all, particularly when measured against the lives and safety of little children known to have played in the building.

With the knowledge that little children were in the habit of playing about the building, according to the pleaded facts, the defendants covered the entire second story floor, including the ventilator opening, with tar paper thus giving the deceptive appearance of a safe flooring to the ventilator opening and the minor plaintiff deceived by the appearance fell through the opening and was injured, thus springing the "trap".

The courts of this state have held over and over again that an open body of water on a defendant's land is not within the attractive nuisance doctrine and yet the court in Sanchez v. East Contra Costa Irr. Co., supra, had no difficulty in finding that a concealed trap in an open canal came within the doctrine. The court made the distinction between the obvious dangers and the trap or concealed peril in the following words, 205 Cal. at page 517–518, 271 P. at page 1061: "In the instant case, the canal with its shallow water was the bait of the trap. The defendant knew that children lived close by and the opening of the syphon might have been easily guarded. It is a matter of common knowledge that children playing on the edge of a shallow body of water will be tempted to play in the water and to reach into it, and, while the defendant need not have guarded against this open and obvious stream of water, under numerous California decisions, we think a different rule applies where an apparently harmless, shallow stream of water contains a large opening into which anyone might slip, which opening is wholly unguarded and completely concealed from view. * * * The children assumed the risk of the open, obvious, notorious danger incident to the canal, containing about three feet of water; but they did not assume the risk of an unknown, concealed, and unguarded danger."

Substitute "unfinished building" for "canal" and you have the pleaded case. Nor can I agree that Doyle v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 6 Cal.2d 550, 59 P.2d 93 is a comparable case. There a canvas did conceal a skylight, but it was in the attic of a finished building used as a public ballroom which could only be reached by a ladder from the spectators' gallery and a catwalk of planks, a situation very different from an unfinished building open to playing children and in which, according to the allegations of the complaint the fact that children "had played * * * was well known to the defendants." The facts of the two cases readily distinguish them.

I would reverse the judgment.

99 Cal.App.2d 322

KAUFFMAN et ux. v. BOBO & WOOD et al.
Civ. 7790.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Sept. 1, 1950.

Action by John W. Kauffman and wife against Bobo & Wood, copartnership composed of A. W. Bobo, sometimes also known as Alexander W. Bobo, and W. M. Wood; A. W. Bobo, individually, and W. M. Wood, individually, for fraud. The Supreme Court, San Joaquin County, George F. Buck, J., sustained a demurrer on both general and special grounds, without leave to amend, and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Adams, P. J., held that complaint stated cause of action.

Reversed with directions.

1. Pleading ⇐204(2)

General demurrer must be overruled if, on any theory, complaint states cause of action.

2. Pleading ⇐225(1)

General demurrer shall not be sustained without leave to amend if complaint is subject to amendment to state cause of action.

3. Pleading ⇐225(1)

It is error to sustain special demurrer without leave to amend if cause of action is stated or can be stated.

4. Pleading ⇐34(1), 235

Pleadings and amendments thereto should be allowed and construed liberally with object of affording every litigant his day in court and to render substantial justice between parties.

5. Pleading ⇐367(2)

If complaint is good as against general demurrer, trial court may in its discretion require clarification of uncertainties or ambiguities therein.

6. Appeal and error ⇐917(1)
Pleading ⇐214(2)

On appeal from judgment on demurrer it must be assumed that all facts are as alleged since filing of demurrer constitutes admission that all allegations well pleaded are true.

7. Fraud ⇐41

Complaint for fraud must show fraudulent representations, that they were known by defendant to be false or were made under circumstances not warranted by his knowledge, that they were actually false, that they were made with intent to deceive plaintiff, or with intent to induce him to enter into transaction, that plaintiff relied upon representations, believing them to be true, and that he was injured.

8. Partnership ⇐104

Action by one partner against the other partner is not permissible, during existence of partnership.

9. Partnership ⇐104

Where plaintiffs alleged promise of defendants to effect partnership and failure by defendants to perform their part of agreement to create such partnership, an existing partnership was not alleged, and, therefore, principle that one partner may not sue another member of existing partnership was inapplicable.

10. Fraud ⇐41
Pleading ⇐225(1)

Where complaint alleged that defendants entered into fraudulent conspiracy to acquire ownership of certain depot restaurant business, that plaintiffs relied upon representation by defendants that defendants would pay half of cost, that half of cost was never paid by defendants, that defendants then forced plaintiffs on threat of revocation of franchise to consent to agreement whereby defendants would purchase restaurant business making plaintiff manager and then partner, that defendants never intended to perform and that plaintiff was never made manager nor partner with intention of forcing him to forfeit franchise, complaint stated cause of action or could be amended to state cause of action, and therefore sustaining general demurrer, and special demurrer on ground of uncertainties and ambiguities, without leave to amend was error.

Chadeayne & Wilkinson, Tracy, for appellants.

Popper & Burnstein, Oakland, for respondents.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

On this appeal the sufficiency of the third cause of action contained in plaintiffs' second amended complaint is alone involved. To that count the trial court sustained a demurrer, on both general and special grounds, without leave to amend. The only question presented here is whether or not the said court erred.

[1-3] It is well established that a general demurrer must be overruled if, on any theory, it states a cause of action, Lord v. Garland, 27 Cal.2d 840, 853, 168 P.2d 5; Johnson v. Clark, 7 Cal.2d 529, 536, 61 P.2d 767; and that it shall not be sustained without leave to amend if it is subject to amendment to state a cause of action, People v. Turlock Home Tel. & Tel. Co., 200 Cal. 546, 550, 253 P. 1108; Finch v. McKee, 18 Cal.App.2d 90, 95, 62 P.2d 1380; Starr v. Slaney, 11 Cal.App.2d 311, 314, 53 P.2d 395; Tann v. Western P. Ry. Co., 39 Cal.App. 377, 381, 178 P. 971; and that it is error to sustain a special demurrer without leave to amend if a cause of action is stated or can be stated, Guilliams v. Hollywood Hospital, 18 Cal.2d 97, 104, 114 P.2d 1; Columbia Pictures Corp. v. DeToth, 26 Cal. 2d 753, 762, 161 P.2d 217, 162 A.L.R. 747; Olivera v. Grace, 19 Cal.2d 570, 579, 122 P. 2d 564, 140 A.L.R. 1328; Wennerholm v. Stanford Univ. School of Medicine, 20 Cal. 2d 713, 719, 128 P.2d 522, 141 A.L.R. 1358; Jensen v. City of Modesto, 89 Cal.App.2d 835, 837, 202 P.2d 332; Kraft v. Smith, 24 Cal.2d 124, 132, 148 P.2d 23.

[4] Also pleadings and amendments thereto should be allowed and construed liberally with the object of affording every litigant his day in court and to render substantial justice between the parties. Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters, 29 Cal. 2d 34, 42, 172 P.2d 867; Buxbom v. Smith, 23 Cal.2d 535, 542, 145 P.2d 305; Jackson v. P. Gas & Elec. Co., 95 Cal.App.2d 204, 208, 212 P.2d 591.

[5] If a complaint is good as against a general demurrer, a trial court may in its discretion require the clarification of uncertainties or ambiguities therein. Columbia Pictures Corp. v. DeToth, supra; Guilliams v. Hollywood Hospital, supra.

[6] Also it is elementary that on appeal from a judgment on demurrer it must be assumed that all the facts are as alleged since the filing of the demurrer constitutes an admission that all allegations well pleaded are true. Jensen v. City of Modesto, supra, 89 Cal.App.2d at page 837, 202 P.2d 332, and cases there cited.

Plaintiffs' prayer was for the sum of $80,000 and for general relief, it being alleged that plaintiffs suffered loss to that extent by reason of fraudulent promises and acts on the part of defendants. Defendants assert in their brief that the fraud alleged by plaintiffs consists only of promises made by defendants to perform acts in the future which, when not fulfilled, are not actionable unless made without any intent, at the time same were made, to perform same.

The third cause of action alleged: That defendants were copartners, operating certain food and novelty sales concessions in various Greyhound Bus depots in California and were administrative and supervisorial employees of Pacific Greyhound Lines, Inc.; that plaintiffs had been operating a hotel and restaurant in Colfax, California, where they also acted as ticket sales agent for Greyhound on a commission basis; that a new bus depot was to be built in Tracy, California, and that defendants entered into a fraudulent and corrupt conspiracy and agreement to acquire ownership and control of the restaurant business and ticket agency to be established in that depot, by persuading plaintiffs to give up their Colfax business and come to Tracy to operate the restaurant and ticket agency, whereupon defendants, by means of economic pressure and their position of authority with the Greyhound Lines would force plaintiffs out of the business and that defendants would then acquire said business for no or only nominal consideration; that defendants' fraudulent conspiracy was effectuated by having defendant Wood approach plaintiffs and represent to them that he would help them get the Tracy station, and that he would also put up one-half of the money needed, but as a silent partner so that Greyhound Co. would not know of defendant Wood's connection with the business; that plaintiffs relied on defendant Wood's representations, sold their Colfax business, and went into the Tracy operation; that while plaintiffs were expending large sums of money (cash and debts) totaling about $60,000, they continually called on defendant Wood to put up his share and he finally contributed a total of only $8,500; that this put plaintiffs in a precarious financial position, so as to be subject to the aforementioned economic pressures; that plaintiffs were not aware of defendant Bobo's connection as defendant Wood's partner until about the time they opened the Tracy business in October, 1946; that in January, 1947, plaintiffs were informed that the $8,500 which Wood had provided was not money belonging to defendants, but came from a corporation—Swiss Maid—and had to be repaid to that corporation; that defendants then represented and promised plaintiffs that if plaintiffs would pay back the $8,500 to Swiss Maid, plus $1,500 more to pacify the stockholders of Swiss Maid, defendants would pay their full share into the business shortly and would help plaintiffs to borrow enough money to pay off the business debts; that defendants would also acquire certain real property to be rented to plaintiffs as parking space, and would also convey to plaintiffs an undivided one-third interest in food and novelty concessions in Greyhound depots at Merced, Madera and Fresno; that plaintiffs thereupon paid $6,000 in cash and made a note for $4,000; that defendants made only a very slight token compliance (detailed in the complaint) with these latest promises; that defendants did not even have any interest in the concessions at Madera, Merced and Fresno; that finally, in further pursuance of their fraudulent and corrupt conspiracy to cheat and defraud plaintiffs, defendants proposed an agreement which would settle and adjust the rights of all the parties in all the properties and businesses heretofore involved, which provisions were that the defendants would purchase the Tracy business from the plaintiffs for a sum equal to the cost thereof to plaintiffs; that plaintiff John W. Kauffman be retained as manager of the business at a salary of $400 per month until defendants had paid the entire amount of the purchase price, at which time the parties would enter into an agreement of partnership whereby defendants would own two-thirds of the business and plaintiffs would own one-third; that defendants asserted that if plaintiffs did not agree to the settlement proposed by defendants, said defendants would, by virtue of their position of authority with Greyhound Co., cause Greyhound to cancel plaintiffs' "franchise" for the Tracy depot; that plaintiffs were thereby forced to submit to defendants' fraudulent duress and signed the agreement proposed by defendants; but that defendants neglected and refused to perform their part of the agreement and prevented and thwarted plaintiff John W. Kauffman from acting as manager, but have had him doing very menial chores as laborer, janitor, etc., all directed towards forcing him to breach the sale agreement and suffer the forfeitures therein provided; that all of defendants' acts were done pursuant to a fraudulent conspiracy to cheat and defraud plaintiffs, and that the promises when made, were made with no intention of keeping them, but for the purpose of putting plaintiffs into a position where defendants could squeeze them out.

[7] The essential averments necessary to a cause of action for fraud are set forth in 12 California Jurisprudence 806 et seq., section 64, as follows: "The pleadings must, of course, show the fraudulent representations; that they were known by the defendant to be false or were made under circumstances not warranted by his knowledge; that they were actually false; that they were made with intent to deceive the plaintiff, or with intent to induce him to enter into the transaction; that the plaintiff relied upon the representations, believing them to be true; and that he was injured."

We think that these averments are all made in plaintiffs' complaint. It is definitely alleged that defendants made promises which were made without intention to perform them; and, under Sections 1710 and 1572 of the Civil Code, this constitutes actionable fraud. Also see Union Flower Market, Ltd. v. So. Cal. Flower Market, Inc., 10 Cal.2d 671, 676, 76 P.2d 503; Bedell Engineering Co. v. Rouse, 57 Cal.App. 2d 734, 135 P.2d 404; Scafidi v. Western Loan & Bldg. Co., 72 Cal.App.2d 550, 165 P.2d 260; Wilson v. Rigali & Veselich, 138 Cal.App. 760, 33 P.2d 455; Prosser on Torts, 764, sec. 89; Restatement of Torts, secs. 530, 544.

Respondents in their brief do not deny the existence of the foregoing rule of law, but ignore the allegations of the complaint that when defendants made the various alleged promises they had no intention of keeping them; they urge, only, that the promises as alleged were only for future action, and failure to keep them did not constitute actionable fraud; and they assert that the mere fact of failure or refusal to perform does not raise an inference of an intent at the time promises were made, not to perform them. They also assert that some of the promises were kept. We need not pass upon the principles of law there asserted, since we are satisfied that plaintiffs did allege the making of promises not kept, which defendants did not, at the time they were made, intend to keep; that they allege a good cause of action for damages based on the causing of plaintiffs to transfer their property in reliance upon such promises, and through duress and compulsion, and on defendants' purchasing the Tracy property with the preconceived intention not to pay for it; that defendants' acts, alleged as a series of acts committed in the execution of a scheme and conspiracy to defraud, which conspiracy plaintiffs alleged was entered into between Bobo and Wood, on or about December 1, 1945, and before or at the time they began their negotiations with plaintiffs, gave rise to a cause of action; and, as for the special demurrer, if same was in any respect well founded, the trial court, in its discretion, could and should have required a clarification of uncertainties or ambiguities appearing.

[8, 9] Respondents, in opposition to appellants' claim for relief, assert that the latter, in their petition alleged an existing partnership, but made no showing that same had been dissolved and an accounting had; and that, such partnership existing, their action could not be sustained since such an action by one partner against the other is not permissible.

The answer to this contention appears to be, not that the principle of law is wrong, but that the petition does not allege the actual coming into existence of a partnership, but the promise on the part of respondents that it would be effected and a failure on their part to perform their part of the agreement to create such a partnership. In short, we do not find in the petition any allegation that a partnership actually ever was established.

[10] Assuming the truth of the allegations of the complaint filed by appellants, we cannot say that it does not state a cause of action. Certainly it cannot be said that if it fails in any respect, it cannot be amended to state a cause of action. And as for the allegations of the demurrer as to uncertainties and ambiguities the trial court should, if the demurrer on that ground be meritorious, require the clarification of the complaint by appropriate amendments, to the end that petitioners have their day in court as to the merits of their complaint.

The judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to reverse its order in so far as it denies plaintiffs leave to amend their third cause of action, and to grant leave to amend on such terms as it may direct in the exercise of its discretion.

VAN DYKE and PEEK, JJ., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 281

OVERACKER v. KEY SYSTEM et al.

Civ. 14314.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 31, 1950.

Edwin Overacker sued Key System, a corporation, and others, for injuries received when plaintiff was struck while walking across the street in unmarked crosswalk at intersection. The Superior Court for the County of Alameda, James R. Agee, J., rendered a judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that negligence of plaintiff was for jury under the evidence, and that jury was properly instructed on the last clear chance doctrine.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and error ⇐930(1)

On defendants' appeal from judgment for plaintiff in action for injuries resulting when plaintiff was struck by a bus while plaintiff was walking across a street at intersection, evidence will be taken most favorable to plaintiff.

2. Automobiles ⇐245(72)

Where a pedestrian looks in direction of approaching traffic before stepping into street, and sees vehicle approaching, if he misjudges its distance or its speed and proceeds, without again looking, into street and is there struck by vehicle, question of whether pedestrian was guilty of negligence is for jury.

3. Automobiles ⇐160(4)

If a pedestrian is crossing at intersection in unmarked crosswalk driver of automobile approaching intersection must yield right of way to pedestrian. Vehicle Code, § 560(a).

4. Automobiles ⇐245(72)

In action for injuries resulting when plaintiff pedestrian was struck by bus while plaintiff was walking across a street at intersection in unmarked crosswalk, negligence of plaintiff was for jury under evidence that plaintiff looked to his left at curb and saw bus approaching about 125 feet away, took his eyes off bus and stepped into unmarked crosswalk and took about 6 steps without again looking toward bus, when plaintiff was struck by bus. Vehicle Code § 560(a).

5. Negligence ⇐83.7

Unawareness of peril may bring last clear chance doctrine into play.

6. Automobiles ⇐246(58)

In action for injuries resulting when plaintiff pedestrian was struck by bus while plaintiff was walking across street at intersection in unmarked crosswalk, jury was properly instructed on doctrine of last clear chance under evidence that plaintiff looked to his left at curb and saw bus approaching about 125 feet away, took his eyes off bus and stepped into unmarked crosswalk and took about 6 steps without again looking toward bus, when plaintiff was struck by bus, and that bus driver saw plaintiff from time plaintiff was 100 to 125 feet from crosswalk. Vehicle Code § 560(a).

7. Automobiles ⇐227(3)

In action for injuries resulting when plaintiff pedestrian was struck by a bus while plaintiff was walking across street at intersection in unmarked crosswalk, fact that plaintiff's negligence, if any, was continuous to time of injury, did not preclude application of last clear chance doctrine. Vehicle Code § 560(a).

Donahue, Richards, Rowell & Gallagher and George E. Thomas, all of Oakland, for appellants.

Elmer P. Delany, Martin J. Jarvis, San Francisco, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice.

[1] Plaintiff had judgment for personal injuries after a jury trial and defendants appeal. Taking the evidence most favorable to plaintiff, as is our settled duty, plaintiff with his wife approached the intersection of Union Street and Santa Clara Avenue in the City of Alameda. They were walking on the sidewalk on Union Street, plaintiff somewhat in advance of his wife, and when plaintiff arrived at the curb he looked to his left and saw the defendants' bus approaching on Santa Clara Avenue about 215 feet away. He took his eyes off the bus and stepped into the unmarked crosswalk leading across Santa Clara and had taken about six steps, without again looking toward the bus, when he was struck by it. The driver of the bus testified that he saw plaintiff from the time that the bus was from 100 to 125 feet from the crosswalk.

[2] Where a pedestrian looks in the direction of approaching traffic before stepping into the street and sees a vehicle approaching, if he misjudges its distance or its speed and proceeds, without again looking, into the street and is there struck by the vehicle the question whether or not he was guilty of negligence is one for the jury. White v. Davis, 103 Cal.App. 531, 542, 284 P. 1086; Ladas v. Johnson's B. & W. Taxicab Co., 43 Cal.App.2d 223, 229, 110 P.2d 449; Sanker v. Humborg, 48 Cal.App.2d 203, 119 P.2d 431; Goodwin v. Foley, 75 Cal.App.2d 195, 170 P.2d 503; other cases are collected in Scott v. City & County of San Francisco, 91 Cal.App.2d 887, at page 890, 206 P.2d 45.

[3,4] Plaintiff and his wife testified that he was at all times in the unmarked crosswalk. If so the duty was cast on the driver of the bus to yield to the plaintiff. Vehicle Code, § 560(a). Whether in the failure to do so defendants were guilty of negligence was certainly a jury question. Plaintiff at one point testified that he last saw the bus after taking five or six steps into the street but on cross-examination he clearly testified that he observed the bus while on the sidewalk, then immediately stepped into the street and did not look toward the bus again after leaving the curb. The jury was entitled to accept this version.

[5-7] The jury was instructed on the doctrine of last clear chance. Defendants' witnesses testified that plaintiff ran diagonally into the intersection in front of the bus. They argue that these facts are the only ones to which the last clear chance instruction could apply and that the time involved under that testimony was too brief for a clear chance to avoid the injury. The last clear chance instruction was not limited to the facts shown by defendants' witnesses. On the evidence "most favorable to plaintiff's case", Bonebrake v. McCormick, 35 Cal.2d 16, 19, 215 P.2d 728, 729, he observed the bus 215 feet away and then without looking toward it again walked in the crosswalk to the point where he was struck. Under the cases above cited this left a jury question as to plaintiff's negligence. If the jury believed plaintiff's testimony, as we must assume, and found plaintiff guilty of negligence on that testimony then they might also find that the bus driver, observing a pedestrian proceeding across the path of the bus without looking toward it should have realized that he was unaware of his peril and taken steps to avoid striking him. Unawareness of peril may bring the last clear chance doctrine into play, and this rule has been applied to negligently inattentive pedestrians crossing the path of vehicles over and over again. Center v. Yellow Cab Co., 216 Cal. 205, 13 P.2d 918; Meincke v. Oakland Garage, Inc., 11 Cal.2d 255, 257-258, 79 P.2d 91; Cooper v. Smith, 209 Cal. 562, 565-566, 289 P. 614; Darling v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 197 Cal. 702, 707 et seq., 242 P. 703; Lee v. Market Street Ry. Co., 135 Cal. 293, 67 P. 765; Ladas v. Johnson's B. & W. Taxicab Co., supra, 43 Cal.App.2d 223, 229, 110 P.2d 449; Bailey v. Wilson, 16 Cal.App.2d 645, 61 P.2d 68; Olson v. Combs, 1 Cal.App. 2d 260, 36 P.2d 708; Baldock v. Western Union Tel. Co., 127 Cal.App. 141, 15 P.2d 199; Moore v. Bishop, 113 Cal.App. 25, 295 P. 580; Bence v. Teddy's Taxi, 112 Cal. App. 636, 642, 297 P. 128; Atkins v. Bouchet, 86 Cal.App. 294, 260 P. 828; O'Farrell v. Andrus, 86 Cal.App. 474, 482, 260 P. 957.

The fact that plaintiff's negligence, if the jury found him negligent, was continuous to the time of the injury does not prevent the application of the last clear chance doctrine. It is pointed out in many of the cases above cited that in every case of negligent unawareness plaintiff's negligence continues to the very time of the injury, but if the elements of the last clear chance doctrine are present that rule none the less applies. Girdner v. Union Oil Co., 216 Cal. 197, 203-204, 13 P.2d 915; Center v. Yellow Cab Co., supra, 216 Cal. 205, 207-208, 13 P.2d 918; Paolini v. City & County of S. F., 72 Cal.App.2d 579, 586-587, 164 P.2d 916; Gillette v. City of San Francisco, 58 Cal.App.2d 434, 439-441, 136 P.2d 611; Bailey v. Wilson, supra, 16 Cal.App.2d 645, 649-650, 61 P.2d 68; Baldock v. Western Union Tel. Co., supra, 127 Cal.App. 141, 144, 15 P.2d 199.

Judgment affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and GOODELL, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 328

Ex parte BREES.

Cr. 2214.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Sept. 1, 1950.

Proceedings in the matter of the application of Leonard E. Brees, for a writ of habeas corpus to have portion of judgment declaring petitioner to be a habitual criminal adjudged void and without effect. The District Court of Appeal, Adams, P. J., held that petitioner had not served separate prison terms after he had been twice convicted for separate robberies and was improperly adjudged to be a habitual criminal, but he was not entitled to be released where he had not served term imposed for latest robbery conviction.

Writ discharged.

1. Habeas corpus ⇐29

Habeas corpus could be resorted to for purpose of determining that portion of judgment declaring petitioner to be a habitual criminal was void.

2. Criminal law ⇐1202(1)

Where petitioner was convicted and sentenced for a second robbery offense in 1943 and his imprisonment term therefor was to begin after termination of sentence imposed in 1939, and in 1947, adult authority fixed his terms to effect discharge before sentence imposed in 1943 was commenced, he had not served a separate term of imprisonment for his second conviction, within habitual criminal statute, and that portion of judgment adjudicating him an habitual criminal after conviction for robbery in 1948 was void. Pen.Code, § 644.

Richard J. Lawrence, Sacramento, for petitioner.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, Gail A. Strader, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

Petitioner is incarcerated in what is generally known as the Folsom prison, by reason of a conviction in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County of first-degree robbery, the judgment of that court providing for his imprisonment for the term prescribed by law and adjudging him to be an habitual criminal.

Petitioner in this proceeding does not claim that he is entitled to be released from prison, but does seek a decision that the portion of the judgment declaring him to be an habitual criminal is void and without effect, and that he should be dealt with, hereafter, as a prisoner who has not been so adjudged.

[1] That habeas corpus may be resorted to for the purpose of securing such relief was determined in Re McVickers, 29 Cal. 2d 264, 270, 176 P.2d 40. Here the facts conceded by respondent to be true are that on October 6, 1939, petitioner was convicted in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County of robbery of the first degree, and sentenced to San Quentin for the term prescribed by law. He was thereafter paroled and while on parole was, on February 24, 1943, again convicted of robbery in Los Angeles County and sentenced for the term prescribed by law, it being decreed that sentence was "to run consecutively with any unexpired term defendant may be required to serve." Petitioner was thereupon remanded to the custody of the warden of San Quentin prison, the action granting conditional parole having been rescinded in January, 1943, prior to the conviction of February 24 of 1943. In August, 1944, Brees was granted a special service parole and after his honorable discharge from the service the Adult Authority, on August 1, 1947, fixed his "'terms" to effect discharge on August 8, 1947. On June 3, 1948, the sentence under which he is now serving was imposed.

[2] From the foregoing it becomes apparent that the term of imprisonment decreed on February 24, 1943, which was to be served after the termination of the term imposed on October 6, 1939, was never commenced, and that during the period when he was incarcerated after the conviction of February 24, 1943, he was, in fact, serving under the term imposed by the judgment of October 6, 1939.

Section 644 of the Penal Code provides, not only that to constitute one an habitual criminal he must be twice or more convicted of offenses there enumerated upon charges separately brought and tried, but that he shall have served separate prison terms therefor. It is conceded by respondent that petitioner did not serve a separate term of imprisonment for his second conviction, and that the adjudication that he is an habitual criminal does not find support in the record. See People v. Gump, 17 Cal. App.2d 221, 224, 61 P.2d 970.

For such benefit as may accrue to petitioner it is therefore adjudged that the portion of the judgment of June 3, 1948, which declared petitioner to be an habitual criminal is of no force and effect, and that in fixing petitioner's term of imprisonment and in determining his eligibility for parole the Adult Authority shall disregard the prior adjudication that he is an habitual criminal. In re Kingsbury, 74 Cal.App.2d 959, 963, 170 P.2d 82.

It appearing, however, that petitioner is not entitled to his release from the imprisonment imposed after his conviction on June 3, 1948, the writ of habeas corpus heretofore issued is discharged and petitioner is remanded to the custody of the warden of the California State Prison at Folsom.

VAN DYKE and PEEK, JJ., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 348

SHOOK v. PEARSON et al.

Civ. 4069.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Sept. 7, 1950.

Action by Marvin Shook against Roland Pearson, doing business as Airplane Vapor Spray Company, and others, to recover unpaid commissions under exclusive agency contract and general and special damages for breach of contract to manufacture and sell airplanes to plaintiff. The Superior Court of Tulare County, Frank Lamberson, J., sustained a demurrer to the amended complaint without leave to amend and entered a judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, Acting P. J., held that complaint stated causes of action for relief sought in both counts and that neither count was subject to general demurrer for failure to allege the items of special damages claimed, but that cause of action for breach of contract was subject to special demurrer for uncertainty in so far as it related to special damages.

Judgment reversed.

1. Principal and agent ⇐89(5)

Complaint stated a cause of action for unpaid commissions under oral exclusive agency contract.

2. Sales ⇐411

Complaint stated a cause of action for general damages for breach of oral agreement to manufacture airplanes in accordance with plaintiff's specifications and sell them to plaintiff for specified prices.

3. Pleading ⇐204(1)

A demurrer which attacks entire pleading should be overruled if one of the counts therein is not vulnerable to the objection.

4. Pleading ⇐204(1)

If any count or cause of action in a complaint setting up several counts or causes of action is good as against demurrer, a judgment of dismissal for insufficiency of the complaint cannot be sustained.

5. Damages ⇐142

Failure to allege items of special damages in count seeking recovery of general and special damages for breach of contract to sell airplanes did not render another count of complaint for unpaid commissions under exclusive agency contract vulnerable to general demurrer for uncertainty.

6. Damages ⇐157(6)

Where plaintiff seeks recovery of general damages in one count, the fact that he also seeks special damages does not preclude recovery of general damages.

7. Damages ⇐142

Special damages must be specially set forth in complaint and allegation that by reason of breach of contract plaintiff has suffered special damages in a named sum is not sufficient.

8. Damages ⇐142

The facts as to special damages and the amount of such damages must be stated with particularity.

9. Damages ⇐142

Where special damages depend on proof of different circumstances from the general damages, the grounds of such claim should be alleged.

10. Damages ⇐142

Recovery may be had for damages not covered by the general liability for breach of contract only where the facts are specially pleaded showing that the injury was one reasonably within the contemplation of the parties and that the conditions likely to result in the special injury complained of were brought to the attention of defendant at time contract was made.

11. Pleading ⇐205(1)

Failure to allege items of special damages in count seeking recovery of general and special damages for breach of contract to manufacture airplanes according to plaintiff's specifications and sell them to plaintiff did not render that count of complaint vulnerable to general demurrer.

12. Pleading ⇐209

In action to recover general damages for breach of contract to manufacture and sell airplanes to plaintiff and special damages for expenditures made in obtaining contracts to sell and deliver such airplanes to others, complaint which did not state what items went to make up the sums allegedly expended or that they were necessarily expended with defendants' knowledge or within the reasonable contemplation of the parties was vulnerable to special demurrer for uncertainty in so far as it related to special damages.

David S. Folsom, Corcoran, for appellant.

Wild, Carlson & Reeve and Robert M. Barnard all of Fresno, for respondents.

GRIFFIN, Acting Presiding Justice.

The trial court made an order of dismissal after sustaining defendants' demurrer to plaintiff's fourth amended complaint without leave to amend. Plaintiff appealed.

The first cause of action alleges that defendants, in May, 1948, in consideration of plaintiff's agreement to act as sales agent for them, entered into an oral contract whereby defendants granted plaintiff the exclusive agency for the marketing of defendants' products; that plaintiff performed all of the terms and conditions of the agreement on his part; and that defendants agreed to pay plaintiff 10 per cent of the list price of such products sold during the term of such exclusive agency (such list was attached to the complaint and referred to as Exhibit A). It was then alleged that the contract was terminated in October, 1948, and during such term of exclusive agency there accrued to plaintiff, for his unpaid commissions, the sum of $2015.

As a second cause of action plaintiff alleges that on October 1, 1948, plaintiff and defendants entered into an oral agreement whereby defendants agreed to manufacture for plaintiff, in accordance with plaintiff's specifications, certain airplanes known as "dusters" and "spray rigs" and to sell to plaintiff the entire production thereof for certain alleged specified prices; that plaintiff paid defendant $3,000 to apply on the purchase price, and in reliance on said agreement, plaintiff entered into binding contracts to sell and deliver seven dusters and spray rigs; that these contracts were approved and confirmed by defendants; and that plaintiff, in relying upon defendants' agreement, expended $1182 in obtaining said contracts and in anticipation of additional contracts to be obtained in the future for said airplanes. The complaint then avers that plaintiff was unable to specify the items of expenditure contained in said sum of $1182; that in January, 1949, defendants notified plaintiff that they would not deliver or sell to plaintiff any of the airplanes contracted for at the price agreed upon, and demanded of plaintiff a higher price; that plaintiff performed his part of the agreement and was able and willing to accept delivery at the contract price and pay the balance of the purchase price; that by reason of the premises plaintiff suffered damages in the sum of $15,000, plus $1182 special damages heretofore mentioned, in addition to the $2015 claimed as damages in the first count.

Defendants demurred to both causes of action only on the ground that the facts stated were not sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and on the ground of uncertainty. The trial court made a general order sustaining the demurrer to plaintiff's fourth amended complaint, without leave to amend.

Plaintiff does not complain that he was not granted further time to amend. He requested that if the demurrer be sustained, it be sustained without leave to amend so that the issue here involved could be squarely presented to the appellate court. He states in his brief that there is only one issue on this appeal, i. e., whether, under the second cause of action and in particular the portion alleging special damages in the sum of $1182, in the face of the demurrer for uncertainty, plaintiff was required to allege how or in what manner or for what purpose plaintiff expended that sum.

Defendants' position is that a demurrer for uncertainty as to this count was proper and that plaintiff, having failed to allege the items of damage, the demurrer was properly sustained and that where special damages are sought, it is necessary to plead the facts which would show that the pleader has sustained damages of the character alleged, citing Hamberger-Polhemus Co. v. Hind, Rolph & Co., 81 Cal.App. 624, 627, 254 P. 615; and Casaretto v. DeLucchi, 76 Cal.App.2d 800, 174 P.2d 328.

Plaintiff claims otherwise and argues that since the total amount claimed to have been expended was alleged, it was not necessary to allege the various items making up such total, but if defendants desired such information they could have demanded a bill of particulars if they were so advised, citing sec. 454, Code Civ. Proc.; that the failure to supply such detailed information in the complaint may not be subject to attack by demurrer for uncertainty and plaintiff's refusal to so amend would not support an order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend, citing Gaddis v. Grant, 39 Cal.App. 437, 179 P. 410; Henning v. Clark, 46 Cal.App. 551, 189 P. 714; Jacobson v. Oakland Meat & Packing Company, 161 Cal. 425, 119 P. 653, Ann.Cas. 1913B, 1194; and Brea v. McGlashan, 3 Cal.App.2d 454, 459, 39 P.2d 877. Section 454 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies principally to the pleading of accounts. 1 Cal.Jur. p. 157, sec. 18; 21 Cal.Jur. p. 69, sec. 43.

[1, 2] From an examination of the amended complaint a cause of action is stated against defendants both as to the first and second counts, as applied to the general damages sought. This fact is not questioned in the briefs.

[3-10] It is the general rule, as adopted by this court in Bacon v. Wahrhaftig, 97 Cal.App.2d 599, 218 P.2d 144, (hearing in the Supreme Court denied), that a demurrer which attacks an entire pleading should be overruled if one of the counts therein is not vulnerable to the objection, citing Lord v. Garland, 27 Cal.2d 840, 853, 168 P.2d 5. If any count or cause of action in a complaint setting up several counts or causes of action is good as against demurrer, a judgment of dismissal for insufficiency of the complaint cannot be sustained. Armstrong v. Adams, 102 Cal.App. 677, 283 P. 871. The ruling on the general demurrer as to the first count should be reversed. The same is true as to the second count pertaining to the general demurrer, insofar as it relates to the general damages claimed, unless plaintiff's refusal to further amend as to that count in respect to the claimed special damages would preclude such a ruling. The general rule is that when a plaintiff seeks the recovery of general damages in one count, the fact that he also seeks special damages does not preclude the recovery of general damages. Hamer v. Ellis, 40 Cal. App. 57, 180 P. 30; 8 Cal.Jur. 749, sec. 19. A defendant cannot be presumed to be aware of the special damage resulting from his act, and therefore, in order to prevent a surprise on him, this sort of damage must be specially set forth in the complaint, or the plaintiff will not be permitted to give evidence of it. 8 Cal.Jur. p. 889, sec. 127. And an allegation that by reason of the breaches of contract the party has suffered special damages in a named sum, is not enough. Judson Manufacturing Co. v. Lutge, 174 Cal. 566, 163 P. 1017; 8 Cal. Jur. 891, sec. 128. The facts as to special damages must be stated with particularity. The amount of such damages must be stated with particularity. The amount of such damages must be given, and the means of occasioning them must be set forth. When such damages depend on proof of different circumstances from the general damages, the grounds of each claim should be alleged. 8 Cal.Jur. 890, sec. 127. It is a well recognized rule of law that recovery may be had for damages not covered by the general liability for breach of contract, only where the facts are specially pleaded showing that the injury was one reasonably within the contemplation of the parties. Cohn v. Bessemer G. E. Co., 44 Cal.App. 85, 89, 186 P. 200; Chitty on Pleading, 410, 411. To this general rule must be added the statement that: "to cover the requirements in such a case * * * there must also be pleaded facts which show that the conditions likely to result in the special injury complained of were brought to the attention of the defendant at the time the contract was made." (Italics ours.) Cohn v. Bessemer G. E. Co., supra, 44 Cal.App. at page 90, 186 P. at page 203.

In Mitchell v. Clarke, 71 Cal. 163, 11 P. 882, 60 Am.Rep. 529, it was held that evidence of special damages is inadmissible, without an averment in the complaint of special circumstances entitling the plaintiff thereto, of which the defendant had knowledge at the time of entering into the contract. The purpose of such averment is that such special damages, if they have occurred, will give notice to the defendant thereof so that he may be prepared to contest them. While it is here alleged that in reliance upon defendants' agreement plaintiff made binding contracts with others to sell and deliver dusters and spray rigs and that these contracts were known to and approved by defendants, there is wholly lacking the allegation that defendants had knowledge of or in any way had notice of the fact that plaintiff was expending any sum in obtaining said contracts or in anticipation of additional contracts. It likewise is not specially averred what items went to make up the sum claimed to have been expended, or that they were necessarily expended with the knowledge of defendants or within the reasonable contemplation of the parties. In fact, the allegation is that plaintiff was "unable to specify the items of expenditure." Counsel for plaintiff freely concedes, according to the record before us, "that there is nothing further that I can add to my complaint."

[11, 12] The conclusion must be then that the court erroneously sustained the general demurrer as to both counts pertaining to the allegations of general damage, and that the judgment of dismissal as to those counts must be reversed. The sustaining of the special demurrer for uncertainty was proper insofar as it related to the special damages.

Judgment reversed.

MUSSELL, J., concurs.

BARNARD, J., being disqualified, did not participate herein.

99 Cal.App.2d 330

HOBSON v. MUTUAL BENEFIT HEALTH & ACCIDENT ASS'N, Inc.

Civ. 14396.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 5, 1950.

Ivan B. Hobson sued the Mutual Benefit Health & Accident Association, Inc., on a health and accident insurance policy. From a judgment of the Superior Court in and for the County of Alameda, James R. Agee, J., on a jury's verdict for plaintiff in an unsatisfactory amount, plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that a provision in the policy that monthly total accident disability benefits, specified in a previous clause, should be reduced 10% when insured became 56 years old and further reduced in equal amount with each additional attained year of age to and including 60, did not modify such clause or, if it did, was repugnant thereto and must be disregarded.

Judgment reversed with instruction.

1. Evidence ⇐405(1)

An accident insurance policy, providing for payment of $100 monthly total disability benefits so long as insured lived and suffered total loss of time, and for 10% reduction of such benefits when insured became 56 years old, with further reduction of equal amount with each additional attained year of age to and including 60, was not ambiguous, so that parol evidence was unnecessary and inadmissible for interpretation thereof.

2. Insurance ⇐530

A provision in accident insurance policy that $100 monthly total disability benefits, provided for in previous clause during insured's lifetime, should be reduced 10% when he became 56 years old, with further reduction of equal amount with each additional attained year of age to and including 60, did not modify such previous clause and require such reductions when insured, who was injured before attaining age of 56, reached ages of 56 to 60, inclusive, but policy entitled him to $100 monthly so long as he lived and was wholly disabled, where he was under 56 years old at time of injury.

3. Insurance ⇐146(3)

Where two constructions of insurance policy are reasonable, that most favorable to insured should be adopted.

4. Insurance ⇐146(2)

An insurance policy should be read as a layman would read it, not as an attorney or insurance expert might read it.

5. Insurance ⇐530

A provision of accident insurance policy that monthly total disability benefits should be reduced 10% when insured became 56 years old and equal amount with each additional attained year of age to and including 60 was repugnant to previous clause, providing for payment of fixed monthly indemnity so long as insured lived and suffered total loss of time, and must be disregarded, if it modified such previous clause.

6. Insurance ⇐530

Use of words, "as herein limited and provided," in caption of accident insurance policy, and words "subject however to all the provisions and limitations hereinafter contained" in insuring provision on first page thereof, did not connect additional provision for reduction of monthly total disability benefits by stated percentages when insured reached certain ages with preceding clause providing for payment of such benefits so long as insured lived and suffered total loss of time, but reduction clause could not stand.

7. Contracts ⇐162

The first of two repugnant clauses of agreement must be received and later clause rejected.

8. Insurance ⇐146(3)

Where two clauses of insurance policy are repugnant, clause affording most protection to insured will control and be given effect.

9. Contracts ⇐162

In construing contract, proviso utterly repugnant to and irreconcilable with body of contract will be rejected and clause irreconcilable with previous clause and repugnant to general purpose and intent of contract will be set aside.

Robert E. Nisbet, Oakland, for appellant.

Horace T. Beverly, Leonard S. Lurie, San Francisco, for respondent.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, T. A. Westphal, Jr., Deputy Attorney General, Harold B. Haas, Deputy Attorney General, for Wallace K. Downey, as Insurance Com. of California, amici curiæ.

BRAY, Justice.

In an action upon a health and accident insurance policy issued by defendant to plaintiff and tried before a jury, the jury found in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $3,730. Plaintiff appealed, on the ground that the amount awarded was less than he was entitled to under the terms of the policy.

Questions Presented.

Were the terms of the policy ambiguous and hence extrinsic evidence should have been admitted to interpret them, and if not, was the court's interpretation correct?

Facts.

The facts are not disputed. On December 2, 1941, defendant issued plaintiff, who was then 53 years of age, a "Lifetime Income Protection Policy" which provided "Benefits for Loss of Life, Limb, Sight or Time, by Accidental Means, or Loss of Time by Sickness as Herein Limited and Provided." Its terms as they affect this litigation will be set forth hereafter. In December, 1942, plaintiff was injured. The jury found that plaintiff "was wholly and continuously disabled by bodily injuries resulting directly and independently of all other causes and through purely accidental means from December 23, 1944, to and including May 22, 1949." This finding is not challenged. Plaintiff became 56 years of age on September 18, 1944. Defendant paid plaintiff $100 per month from the date of the accident until December, 1944, and then stopped payment. The record is not clear as to whether this was because defendant believed plaintiff had fully recovered, or because plaintiff would not accept payments at a reduced monthly sum. This action was then brought. At the trial defendant took the position, as it does now, that the policy provided that when the insured became 56 years of age the monthly payments were reduced 10% each year until the insured should become 60, and thereafter would be $50 per month. Plaintiff's position was and is (1) that the policy provides for payment of $100 per month without reduction; (2) that if the policy is construed as contended by defendant, then the policy is repugnant to the California Insurance Code; and (3) that at worst, the policy is ambiguous and therefore the court erred in refusing to permit plaintiff to introduce parol evidence to explain the ambiguity. The trial court took the position that the policy was not ambiguous, construed it in accordance with defendant's contention, and so instructed the jury. The amount awarded by the jury was in accordance with this construction.

Terms of Policy.

The terms relevant here follow: The association "Does Hereby Insure Ivan B. Hobson * * * against loss of life, limb, sight or time, resulting directly and independently of all other causes, from bodily injuries sustained during any term of this Policy, through purely Accidental Means (Suicide, sane or insane, is not covered), and against loss of time beginning while this Policy is in force and resulting from disease contracted during any term of this Policy, respectively, subject, however, to all the provisions and limitations hereinafter contained." After the words "Does Hereby Insure," on either side of the policy appears in large type the following:

"Monthly Benefits $100.00	Death Benefit $2,500
"Maximum Monthly Benefits $200.00	Maximum Death Benefit $5,000"

On the top of page 2, is part D, a crucial clause in this case. The clause reads:

"Part D. Total Accident Disability Benefits For Life

"If such injuries, as described in the Insuring Clause, do not result in any of the above mentioned specific losses but shall wholly and continuously disable the Insured for one day or more, the Association will pay a monthly indemnity at the rate of One Hundred ($100.00) Dollars per month so long as the Insured lives and suffers said total loss of time."

On the third page, under the heading "Additional Provisions" appears the following: "(c) The term of this policy begins at 12 o'clock noon, Standard Time, on date of issue to the Insured against accident and on the thirty-first day thereafter against disease and ends at 12 o'clock noon on date any renewal is due. No reduction in the benefits of this policy shall be made during the lifetime of the Insured on account of age except in Parts D and K which shall be reduced ten per cent when the Insured is or becomes fifty-six years of age, with further reduction of an equal amount effective with each additional attained year of age to and including age sixty." The italicized portion of this clause is in heavier type than the first sentence.

Interpretation.

[1, 2] The basic question is the effect of this last clause (which for convenience will be called "the reduction clause") on "Part D" which provides for indemnity at $100 per month for life. The trial court was correct in its finding that the policy did not require parol evidence for its interpretation, and therefore, that such evidence was inadmissible. However, the court was in error in its construction of the disputed clause. It held that additional provision (c) modified part D, so that when an insured who had been injured prior to his attaining age 56, reached that age, the $100 monthly payments would be reduced to $90; at age 57 they would be reduced to $80, and so on until from age 60 on they would be $50.

[3] In construing an insurance policy it must be borne in mind that where two constructions are reasonable, that which is most favorable to the insured should be adopted. Frenzer v. Mutual Ben. H. & A. Ass'n, 27 Cal.App.2d 406, 416, 81 P.2d 197; Island v. Fireman's Fund Indemnity Co., 30 Cal.2d 541, 548, 184 P.2d 153, 173 A.L.R. 896; 14 Cal.Jur. 443; Norton v. Farmers A. Inter-Ins. Exch., 40 Cal.App.2d 556, 566, 105 P.2d 136.

[4] The policy should be read as a layman would read it and not as an attorney or an insurance expert might read it. From an examination of the policy it is obvious that a layman would reasonably conclude that it provided that were he less than 56 years of age at the time of injury, he would receive $100 per month as long as he lived and was wholly and continuously disabled. Were he 56 years of age when injured, he would receive $90 per month as long as the disability continued; were he 57 years of age when injured he would receive $80 per month for such period, and were he 60 years of age or older at the time of injury, he would receive $50 per month for such period.

A layman reading the policy would first be struck with the statement on the first page of the policy, in bold type and large figures "Monthly Benefits $100.00 Maximum Monthly Benefits $200.00." Then in large letters at the top of page 2 he would see "Part D. Total Accident Disability Benefits For Life" followed by the paragraph stating that he would be paid "a monthly indemnity at the rate of One Hundred ($100.00) Dollars per month so long as the Insured lives and suffers said total loss of time." In view of these eye-catching positive statements, his interpretation of the reduction clause would undoubtedly be as we have above set forth.

Cases like Taff v. Atlas Assur. Co., 58 Cal.App.2d 696, 137 P.2d 483, and Kahn v. Royal Indemnity Co., 39 Cal.App. 180, 178 P. 331, cited by defendant, which hold that an assured is bound by the terms of the policy he accepts and cannot complain that he did not read the policy, are not in point. This is not a case of the policy not being read, but one of the interpretations a person reading the policy would reasonably give it.

[5] If the court's interpretation of the policy were correct, then additional provision (c) is repugnant to part D, and under well-established principles of insurance law must be disregarded. Part D clearly states that the indemnity to be paid is $100 per month as long as the insured lives, and the disability continues. There is nothing in part D or the insuring clause or clauses that modifies this statement in any way.

The language in Frenzer v. Mutual Ben. H. & A. Ass'n, supra, 27 Cal.App.2d 406, 81 P.2d 197, applies here. There the court was discussing the repugnancy of part K of that policy to part A. Of part A the court said in 27 Cal.App. at page 415, 81 P.2d, at page 202: "It purports to be a complete method of dealing with the specific losses there mentioned. It does not refer to Part K or to any portion of the policy for clarification." Substitute part D and additional provisions (c) of our policy for part A and part K and the quotation fits exactly.

[6] If additional provision (c) attempts to modify this positive statement it is repugnant to it. That the clauses are repugnant to each other is well shown by the case of Boillot v. Income Guaranty Co., 231 Mo.App. 531, 102 S.W.2d 132. In that case the contract in part B called for a monthly indemnity "at the rate of the monthly indemnity hereinbefore specified for the period of such continuous total disability." 102 S.W.2d, at page 144. Additional provision N. contained a reduction clause. The court said in 102 S.W.2d at page 145: "The latter clause of additional provision N whereby it undertakes to reduce the amount of such monthly indemnities from $100 to $66.-66⅔ per month is clearly repugnant to the provisions of part B of the policy, which precedes it and fixes the amount of the monthly indemnity at $100. By part B, the agreement to pay is unequivocal, as likewise is the amount agreed to be paid monthly. * * * The latter clause of additional provision N, under such circumstances, cannot stand. Under such circumstances, part B governs." The Boillot case is an answer to defendant's contention that the use of the words "as Herein Limited and Provided" in the caption of the policy in question here, as well as "subject, however, to all the provisions and limitations hereinafter contained" set forth in the insuring provision on the first page of our policy, ties in additional provision (c) to part D. In the Boillot case the policy used the language that it provided indemnity for loss of time by accidental means "to the extent herein provided", 102 S.W.2d at page 144, and insured plaintiff "subject to all of the provisions and limitations thereinafter contained in the policy", 102 S.W.2d at page 144. Nevertheless, the court there held that the reduction clause could not stand.

[7-9] There are three legal principles which apply to this situation: (1) Where two clauses of an agreement are repugnant, "the first shall be received and the latter rejected." 12 Am.Jur. 778, § 243; Burns v. Peters, 5 Cal.2d 619, 55 P.2d 1182. (2) That clause "which affords the most protection to the insured will control and be given effect." 1 Couch, Cyclopedia of Insurance Law, 369; Frenzer v. Mutual Ben. H. & A. Ass'n, supra, 27 Cal.App.2d 406, 81 P.2d 197. (3) "* * * a proviso which is utterly repugnant to the body of the contract and irreconcilable with it will be rejected; likewise, a subsequent clause irreconcilable with a former clause and repugnant to the general purpose and intent of the contract will be set aside." Jones v. Pennsylvania Casualty Co., 140 N.C. 262, 52 S.E. 578, 579, 5 L.R.A.,N.S., 932, 111 Am. St.Rep. 843.

Defendant relies on language in Security T. & S. Bk. of San Diego v. New York Indem. Co., 220 Cal. 372, 31 P.2d 365, which supports his position that the additional provision should be given full effect. The essential facts in that case were that plaintiff bank brought an action on an indemnity bond against the indemnity company to recover on a loan which it had made on the basis of forged documents. Insuring clause B of the policy covered any losses of property through theft. Section 2(a), a later provision in the policy, provided that the bond did not cover "Any loss effected directly or indirectly by means of forgery. * * *" The Supreme Court found that theft was present, but reversed a judgment in favor of plaintiff, basing its reversal on Section 2(a). The court said in 220 Cal. at page 377, 31 P.2d at page 368: "We are unable to ascribe to the reasoning which suggests that, because the general coverage clause B insures against all thefts, the exception or limitation clauses excluding losses resulting from forgery or growing out of a loan, must be so construed as to exclude such losses only when there is an absence of the elements of theft. To so interpret the bond would be novel, to say the least, and would serve to nullify the exception or limitation clauses in important particulars. The very purpose of exception or limitation clauses is to exclude risks otherwise covered by general coverage clauses." It does not appear whether the makeup of the policy there was such as here as to give an impression that the coverage was unlimited. However, life insurance policies are different than indemnity bonds. The latter are given generally to business men who are trained and accustomed to read and consider all their provisions, whereas insurance policies are sold to the general public who are not so trained, and who are more likely to consider only the obvious provisions. The rule applicable to insurance policies is well stated in State ex rel. Mills Lumber Co. v. Trimble, 327 Mo. 899, 908, 39 S.W.2d 355, 358 (quoting from Mathews v. Modern Woodmen, 236 Mo. 326, 343-344, 139 S.W. 151, Ann.Cas.1912D, 483): "'Policies are contracts, elaborately and shrewdly prepared in advance by calculating and astute experts. They are tendered, ready-made, to and accepted out of hand by plain people, the uninformed and unlearned, the unwary and confiding. Insurance policies swarm with intricate technical provisions, stipulations, exceptions, conditions, provisos, limitations, hedging liability about and looking to its avoidance. It is not singular, then that courts incline to pit judicial astuteness against the astuteness of the policy maker; the latter planting forfeitures in ambush or open, and the former striving to avoid them.'"

In view of our holding that the above is a reasonable interpretation of the provisions of the policy as they appear upon its face, it becomes unnecessary to consider the contentions of plaintiff and of the attorney general raised in the amicus curiæ brief, as to whether the form of the policy, that is, the sizes of the type and the physical relationship of the various paragraphs, complies with the Insurance Code and the rules of the Insurance Commissioner. If the insured had been 56 years of age or over when injured, these matters would become important on the question of whether the reduction clause would be illegal, but are not necessary to be determined here.

The judgment is reversed. Inasmuch as defendant has not appealed from the judgment based upon the verdict to the effect that plaintiff was wholly disabled through accidental means for the period from December 23, 1944, to May 22, 1949, the trial court is instructed to enter judgment in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $100 per month for the said period of disability, together with interest and costs.

PETERS, P. J., and FRED B. WOOD, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 346

DESERT CLUB et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

Civ. 18039.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 7, 1950.

Proceeding by the Desert Club, a corporation, and Edward Glick against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Los Angeles, for review of the action of the Superior Court appointing a provisional director of petitioning corporation pending outcome of litigation. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that action of Superior Court in failing to make findings and conclusions of law, and rendering decision upon affidavits only and not upon evidence, were errors in exercise of jurisdiction and could not be annulled on certiorari.

Writ denied.

1. Certiorari ⇐4, 28(1)

Writ of certiorari or review is available only if there is an excess of jurisdiction on part of an inferior tribunal, no right of appeal and no other plain, speedy and adequate remedy. Code Civ.Proc. § 1067.

2. Appeal and error ⇐101(1)

Order by Superior Court appointing a provisional director of a corporation pending litigation so as to meet immediate needs of corporation was an appealable order. Code Civ.Proc. § 963.

3. Certiorari ⇐29

Action of Superior Court in failing to make findings and conclusions of law and rendering decision on affidavits only and not upon evidence, were errors in exercise of jurisdiction and could not be annulled on certiorari. Code Civ.Proc. § 1067.

Harold D. Geffen, Beverly Hills, for petitioners.

H. W. Kennedy, County Counsel, William E. Lamoreaux, Deputy County Counsel, Los Angeles, for respondent.

Julius Mackson, Los Angeles, for Frank Stone, real party in interest.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

The Desert Club is a California corporation, with but two directors. The company is authorized to have three directors, but has no third director qualified to act as such. Petitioner Edward Glick and Frank Stone are the directors, and each holds an equal amount of stock.

These two parties have been unable to agree as to the management of the affairs of the corporation, or the appointment of a third director. So one of them brought this proceeding in the Superior Court, under Section 819 of the Corporations Code, and prayed the court to appoint an impartial person to act as a director.

The matter was heard by the court on order to show cause and affidavits. No evidence was taken, and no findings were made. The court ordered the appointment of a provisional director.

The other party, owner of stock and director, petitions for a writ of review, upon the ground that no trial was had, the issues being decided upon affidavits only, and there being no findings of fact or conclusions of law.

No trial procedure is prescribed to carry out the provisions of Section 819 of the Corporations Code. The section was enacted in 1947, and was based upon former Civil Code, sec. 404, subd. C, enacted in 1931. No cases have been called to the attention of the court relative to the procedure to be followed by the Superior Court in matters arising under this statute.

Counsel for Frank Stone now concedes that a trial in the usual manner provided by our law was necessary. It is suggested, however, that the court has the power to appoint a provisional director—a director pendente lite—to meet the immediate needs of the corporation.

[1] These matters are not to be reviewed in this proceeding. The Writ of Certiorari, or Review, Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1067, is available in this state only if the following conditions are present: (1) an excess of jurisdiction on the part of an inferior tribunal; (2) no right of appeal; and (3) no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy. Redlands High School Dist. v. Superior Court, 20 Cal.2d 348, 125 P.2d 490; Shrimpton v. Superior Court, 22 Cal.2d 562, 139 P.2d 889.

[2] The order complained of was an appealable order. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 963.

[3] Decision of the case in the Superior Court upon affidavits only, and not upon evidence, and the failure to make findings and conclusions of law, are errors in the exercise of jurisdiction, and cannot be annulled on certiorari. 4 Cal.Jur. 1036 and cases cited.

The writ is denied.

WHITE, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 277

DUHART et al. v. O'ROURKE et al.
Civ. 17427.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Aug. 30, 1950.

As Modified Sept. 5, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 20, 1950.

Hearing Denied Oct. 26, 1950.

John Duhart and Lottie Duhart sued Harold John O'Rourke, sometimes known as Major John O. Rourke, Lizzie O'Rourke, Abbot C. Bernay, Maurice T. Leader, Richard H. Sampson, A. W. Appel, and Northwest Casualty Company, a corporation, and others, for a declaration of rights with respect to a parcel of realty standing of record in the name of Lizzie O'Rourke, a married woman, as her sole and separate property. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Le Roy Dawson, J., rendered a judgment for the plaintiffs and the named defendants other than the O'Rourkes appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that finding that money fraudulently obtained by one defendant found its way into realty on which wife of such defendant executed a declaration of homestead, after such defendant and his wife, as joint tenants, executed deed granting the realty to wife as her sole and separate property, so as to make homestead subject to execution and sale, was not shown to be not supported by the evidence.

Affirmed.

1. Fraudulent conveyances ⇐52(1)

The principles of fraudulent conveyances do not apply to declarations of homestead.

2. Homestead ⇐97

A homestead may be successfully attacked by creditor where money fraudulently obtained from creditor is invested in and constitutes part of homestead, and under such circumstances right of defrauded creditor is paramount to that of owner of homestead, depending upon facts, and property homesteaded is not exempt from execution or sale.

3. Homestead ⇐107

Evidence sustained finding that money fraudulently obtained by one defendant found its way into realty on which wife of such defendant executed declaration of homestead after such defendant and his wife, as joint tenants, executed deed to realty granting realty to wife as her sole and separate property, so as to make homestead subject to execution and sale.

4. Homestead ⇐129(1)

Where suit was brought to recover value of property allegedly obtained from plaintiffs by fraud, and attachment was levied against realty acquired partly with proceeds of alleged fraud, and on which declaration of homestead had subsequently been executed, and attachment lien ripened into judgment and plaintiffs bought realty at execution sale, rights of plaintiffs in realty were prior to rights acquired by holders of trust deeds which had been executed after attachment by person who homesteaded realty, although holders had no notice of attachment proceedings.

Guerin, MacKay & Tendler and Max Tendler, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Rupert B. Turnbull, Los Angeles, M. C. Yearing, Los Angeles, for respondents.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal by defendants Abbot Bernay, Maurice T. Leader, Richard H. Sampson, A. W. Appel, and Northwest Casualty Company, a corporation, from a judgment for plaintiffs in an action in which plaintiffs sought a declaration of rights with respect to a parcel of realty standing of record in the name of Lizzie O'Rourke, a married woman, as her sole and separate property.

Prior to October 21, 1946, the property stood of record in the names of John O'Rourke and Lizzie O'Rourke, husband and wife, as joint tenants. On October 19, 1946, a deed was executed by them granting the property to Lizzie O'Rourke as her sole and separate property. On the same day she executed a declaration of homestead on the property. The deed and the declaration of homestead were recorded October 21, 1946.

Appellants claim a superior interest in the property as lien holders under trust deeds executed by Lizzie O'Rourke. Respondents, judgment creditors of John O'Rourke, assert a superior interest by reason of their purchase of the property at execution sale.

The litigation stems from the following: Between August 28 and September 6, 1946, John O'Rourke and Albert Daener, by false representations, defrauded plaintiffs of 2000 sacks of wheat, valued at $10,000. They sold the wheat for $9,600 and retained the proceeds.

On November 21, 1946, plaintiffs commenced an action in the superior court of Los Angeles County (No. 521905) against John O'Rourke and Albert Daener for the value of the wheat fraudulently obtained by them and caused a writ of attachment to be levied on the real property involved here. The attachment was levied against the property standing in the name of Lizzie O'Rourke and against the interest of John O'Rourke therein. Lizzie O'Rourke filed a complaint in intervention alleging the property was her sole and separate property and praying that the writ of attachment be released. Plaintiffs answered, alleging that the deed of October 19, 1946, was executed to hinder, delay and defraud the creditors of John O'Rourke, including plaintiffs, and to prevent them from reaching the property. Plaintiffs recovered judgment against O'Rourke and Daener. Lizzie O'Rourke was denied any relief. The court found that the attached property was conveyed in fraud of the creditors of John O'Rourke, including plaintiffs, and that the property, irrespective of its record title, was the community property of the O'Rourkes, and concluded that the attachment was in force as an attachment against their community property. Judgment was accordingly rendered November 25, 1947. No appeal was taken from the judgment and it has since become, and was at the time of the filing of the present action, final.

On October 26, 1947, Lizzie O'Rourke executed a trust deed, duly recorded, in favor of appellants Sampson, as trustee, and Appel, as beneficiary, as security for the repayment of an obligation set forth therein, i. e., to secure Appel upon the payment by him of any losses sustained by Northwest Casualty Company upon a forfeiture of its bail bond securing the appearance of John O'Rourke in criminal proceedings instituted against O'Rourke and Daener as a result of their fraud against plaintiffs. See People v. Daener, 96 Cal.App.2d 827, 216 P.2d 511.

On October 29, 1947, Lizzie O'Rourke executed another trust deed, duly recorded, in favor of appellants Bernay and Leader, beneficiaries, as security for the payment of $1,000 attorneys' fees for services rendered and to be rendered O'Rourke in the criminal proceedings.

On February 9, 1948, plaintiffs purchased the property at execution sale in action No. 521905. The proceeds thereof were applied on their judgment, and the writ of execution was returned wholly satisfied. The time for redemption expired February 9, 1949.

On March 19, 1948, the present action was filed by plaintiffs against appellants, the O'Rourkes, and others, seeking a determination of their rights in the property. The complainant alleged facts concerning the fraud of O'Rourke and Daener, the recovery of judgment in action No. 521905, and the subsequent proceedings culminating in the sale of the attached property to plaintiffs. The complaint further alleged that the declaration of homestead executed individually by Lizzie O'Rourke was void because (1) the judgment in action No. 521905 determined that the deed under which she claimed title had been made in fraud of creditors and was therefore void, and (2) the consideration for the acquisition of the property sought to be impressed with the homestead was acquired partly with funds fraudulently obtained from plaintiffs which the O'Rourkes had used "in acquiring a clear title to real property, which they * * * in turn exchanged for the real property" involved here. The complaint further alleged that the trust deeds in favor of appellants were junior to the rights of plaintiffs because the attachment had been levied prior to the giving of the trust deeds, which attachment had ripened into a final judgment upon which execution sale had occurred. Appellants filed answers. The O'Rourkes defaulted.

The court, among other things, found and concluded that: the interest of the O'Rourkes in and to their equity in the property was acquired by funds which O'Rourke obtained from plaintiffs by fraud, to-wit, the proceeds of the 2000 sacks of grain; the homestead filed by Lizzie O'Rourke was a void homestead and did not at any time impress the property with any rights in favor of the O'Rourkes or any of the defendants; plaintiffs acquired a lien upon the property by virtue of the writ of attachment levied in November of 1946, which lien ripened into a judgment; the execution sale held on February 9, 1948, was valid; unless the property was redeemed by some party in interest within the period provided the sheriff was directed to issue a deed to plaintiffs on February 10, 1949; all of the trust deeds executed in favor of appellants are junior to plaintiffs' interest acquired by virtue of the execution sale. Judgment was entered accordingly.

Appellants contend the court erred in finding the homestead was void, the execution sale was valid, and their rights were junior to those of plaintiffs.

[1, 2] The question of the validity or invalidity of the homestead was not an issue in action No. 521905. That action merely adjudged that the conveyance to Lizzie O'Rourke was in fraud of O'Rourke's creditors and the property was the community property of the parties. This determination, however, in nowise affected the homestead, if otherwise valid, for the principles of fraudulent conveyances do not apply to declarations of homestead. Montgomery v. Bullock, 11 Cal.2d 58, 62, 77 P.2d 846; Parker v. Riddell, 41 Cal.App. 2d 908, 914, 108 P.2d 88. A homestead may, however, be successfully attacked by a creditor where money fraudulently obtained from him is invested in and constitutes part of the homestead. Under such circumstances, the right of the creditor so defrauded becomes paramount to that of the owner of the homestead, depending upon the facts of the case, and the property so homesteaded is not exempt from execution or sale. Kemp v. Enemark, 194 Cal. 748, 753, 230 P. 441; Ohio Electric Car Co. v. Duffett, 48 Cal.App. 674, 679, 192 P. 298; Shinn v. Macpherson, 58 Cal. 596; Parker v. Riddell, 41 Cal.App.2d 908, 914, 108 P.2d 88.

[3] In the present case the court found that funds fraudulently obtained by the O'Rourkes found their way into the homestead. Appellants contend there is no evidence to support this finding, relying on the oral testimony and documentary evidence received as exhibits. There was evidence that $7,600 of the money obtained from the sale of the wheat was received by O'Rourke and that part of it found its way into the homestead.

[4] Appellants' contention that the court erred in not finding their liens superior to the rights acquired by plaintiffs because they were bona fide encumbrancers without notice of the attachment proceedings, is conclusively answered by Bank of South San Francisco v. Pike, 53 Cal.App. 524, 200 P. 752, in which the applicable principles are stated and discussed at length.

The foregoing renders unnecessary a discussion of other points raised by appellants.

Affirmed.

SHINN, P. J., and WOOD, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 246

CITY OF SAN DIEGO v. ALPHA SECURITIES CORPORATION et al.

Civ. 3976.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 29, 1950.

Action by the City of San Diego, a municipal corporation, against Alpha Securities Corporation, a corporation; C. C. Pease and others to quiet title. The Superior Court of San Diego, L. N. Turrentine, J., entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that a judgment, entered over seventeen years previously for defendants' predecessor, the taxpayer, following tax sale, was not res judicata as to issues in instant action because it was not a final judgment but was only an interlocutory and conditional judgment dependent upon taxpayer's acceptance of its terms within a reasonable time, that curative statutes would apply upon showing of defects, and that one year statute of limitations for attacking validity of tax deeds applied.

Affirmed.

1. Judgment ⇐564(2)

Where land had been sold to state for delinquent taxes and taxpayer had recovered judgment which permitted redemption, but redemption never had been made notwithstanding expiration of approximately seventeen years, in action by purchaser of tax deed against taxpayer's successor to quiet title, the judgment was not res judicata since it was not final judgment but only interlocutory and conditional upon taxpayer's acceptance of its terms within reasonable time.

2. Taxation ⇐699

Where land had been sold to state for delinquent taxes and taxpayer recovered judgment authorizing redemption with no time limit fixed within which redemption might be effected, by implication there was a reasonable period of time within which provisions of judgment were to be complied with, which period of time had elapsed after expiration of seventeen years. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 3518, 3631.

3. Taxation ⇐788(1)

A deed from state, which had purchased at tax sale, duly acknowledged and proved is conclusive evidence, except against actual fraud, of the regularity of all other proceedings from assessment of assessor to execution of deed, both inclusive. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 3518, 3631.

4. Appeal and error ⇐1008(1)
Taxation ⇐789(4)

In action by purchaser of tax deed against taxpayer's successor, introduction in evidence of tax deed to state and deed from state to purchaser established prima facie title in purchaser and question whether taxpayer's successor satisfactorily rebutted such prima facie case and sustained burden of proving that such deeds were void was question of fact for trial court to determine, and trial court's finding would not be disturbed on appeal.

5. Taxation ⇐688, 770

Validating Acts of 1943, 1945, and 1947 which provided for confirmation and declaration of legal effectiveness of acts of taxing agencies in assessing, levying taxes and making tax sales and tax deeds, were applicable to tax sale of land to state in 1932, for delinquent taxes, tax deed to state in 1937, and sale and deed by state to plaintiff in 1941. Gen. Laws, Acts 8443–8443b.

6. Taxation ⇐805(1)

In action by city holding land through deed received nine years previously from state which acquired tax deed over twelve years previously, against taxpayer's successor, attack against validity of deed to state and against proceedings leading thereto was barred by one year statute of limitations. Revenue and Taxation Code, § 3521.

C. C. Pease, San Diego, for appellants.

J. F. DuPaul, City Attorney, Thomas J. Fanning, Deputy City Attorney, San Diego, for respondent.

MUSSELL, Justice.

Action to quiet title.

Plaintiff, purchaser of a tax deed, commenced this action against the defendant to quiet title to Lot "A" in Crown Point in the City of San Diego. The complaint is in the usual form. In the answer and amendments thereto it is alleged that by reason of a prior suit entitled "C. C. Pease v. City of San Diego", No. 105388, pending between the same parties, the instant action was barred; that in an action filed in San Diego county entitled "S. L. Tripp et al. v. Board of Supervisors et al.," No. 73237, it was adjudicated that the amounts assessed and required to be paid for the taxes on the lot in question were illegal and void. It was further alleged that the city obtained no title to the property involved because of the invalidity of the tax assessments. By stipulation the prior action filed by Pease against the city, No. 105388, was consolidated for trial with the instant action. In this connection it appears that action No. 105388, pleaded as a bar to the instant action, was dismissed by the trial court and the judgment of dismissal affirmed on appeal by this court. Pease v. City of San Diego, 93 Cal.App.2d 706, 209 P.2d 843.

The trial court found on substantial evidence that the property here involved was duly assessed for taxation in the year 1931 and was thereafter, on June 29th, 1932, duly sold to the State of California by the tax collector of San Diego County for the nonpayment of delinquent taxes which had been legally levied; that in 1941, no redemption having been consummated, the property was conveyed by the tax collector to the plaintiff; that there was no defect in the proceedings leading up to and including the deed to the State of California and no subsequent defect in the proceedings leading up to the deed to the City of San Diego; that the judgment entered in the "Tripp" action is both interlocutory and conditional, has not become final, and there has never been a compliance with the conditions thereof; that more than a reasonable time within which to have made redemption under said judgment has passed. The court concluded that the city is the owner of the property and entitled to possession; that the defendant has no right, title or interest therein; that the curative acts and statute of limitations were applicable and constituted a bar to an attack on the tax proceedings; and that the Tripp judgment is invalid as to the real property involved. Judgment was entered quieting title in the plaintiff and defendant appeals, contending that the trial court erred in finding that the Tripp judgment was interlocutory; in finding that the curative statutes applied to the case; and in holding that the statute of limitations was applicable.

Plaintiff's title is based on a tax deed to the State of California and a deed from the state to the plaintiff. Defendant claims title as successor in interest of the former fee owner. The lot in controversy was sold to the State of California on June 29, 1932, for the delinquent city and county taxes of 1931. Pursuant to such sale it was deeded to the state July 23, 1937, and subsequently sold and deeded by the state to the plaintiff on October 2, 1941. It was stipulated at the trial that the defendant is the owner of the lot in question unless his title was divested by the tax deed to the state and the deed from the state to the plaintiff.

The judgment in the Tripp case, so far as material here, is as follows:

"It is ordered, adjudged and decreed that the valid legal charges against the property described in plaintiff's complaint are as follows: * * * making a total of $8,241.30. * * * That the plaintiffs be, and they are hereby granted authority to redeem said property, and the County Auditor be and he is hereby directed to issue a certificate of redemption to the plaintiffs in the sum of

* * * ($8,241.30), and the County Treasurer is hereby authorized to accept said sum of * * * ($8,241.30) in full payment of the taxes, costs and interest against the property described in plaintiff's complaint.

"Done in open Court this 17 day of February, 1933.

"C. N. Andrews
Judge of Superior Court."

[1] An examination of the provisions of this judgment leads us to conclude that it is not res adjudicata as to the issues in the instant action and is not a final judgment. It is interlocutory in substance and effect. Citizens Nat. T. & S. Bank v. Brown, 54 Cal.App.2d 688, 129 P.2d 466; Craig of California v. Green, 89 Cal.App.2d 829, 831, 202 P.2d 104; Bakewell v. Bakewell, 21 Cal.2d 224, 130 P.2d 975.

It cannot be determined from the judgment whether the taxpayer would elect to redeem the property under its terms and obviously the title to the lot here involved was not finally adjudicated by the decree.

It is admitted that Pease failed to redeem lot A under the terms and provisions of the Tripp judgment and as the court found, there has never been a compliance with the conditions of said judgment. After having failed to pay the Tripp judgment or any part thereof for approximately seventeen years, Pease filed suit to quiet title against the city (action No. 105388) instead of attempting to redeem the lot in question pursuant to the terms of the Tripp judgment.

In Newcomb v. City of Newport Beach, 12 Cal.2d 235, 238, 83 P.2d 21, 23, the court said: "The proper decree in the event the owner fails to pay the amount fixed by the court within the time limited is not an adjudication that the purchaser at the void tax sale owns the land, but a denial of any relief to the owner. In the usual situation this is accomplished through a dismissal of the action." (Citing cases.) Citizens Nat. T. & S. Bank v. Brown, supra, 54 Cal.App.2d at page 690, 129 P.2d 466.

In the instant case the trial court found and concluded that the time which had elapsed since the making and entry of the Tripp judgment was more than a reasonable time within which to have made the redemption provided for therein and properly concluded that the Tripp judgment was invalid as to the real property involved herein. In this connection, it appears that no time limit was fixed within which redemption might be effected.

Section 3631 of the Revenue and Taxation Code refers to judgments similar in form and substance to the Tripp judgment. It is there provided that the interlocutory decree shall require the payment to be made within six months and if not so made, the final decree shall be entered.

[2] It would seem that the Tripp judgment included in its terms, by implication, a reasonable period of time within which its provisions were to be complied with. That period of time has long since elapsed without any compliance being made as to lot A. The defendant herein offered no evidence at the trial to show that the taxes and assessments, or any part of them, were actually excessive or illegal.

[3] Under the provisions of section 3518 of the Revenue and Taxation Code a deed from the state duly acknowledged and proved is conclusive evidence, except against actual fraud, of the regularity of all other proceedings from the assessment of the assessor to the execution of the deed, both inclusive.

[4] The introduction in evidence by the plaintiff of the tax deed to the State of California and the deed to plaintiff established a prima facie title in the plaintiff and the question whether the defendant satisfactorily rebutted such prima facie case and sustained the burden of proving that such deeds were void was a question of fact for the trial court to determine and its finding will not here be disturbed. Luberco, Ltd. v. Boswell, 96 Cal.App.2d 946, 217 P.2d 105.

[5] Defendant's contention that the curative statutes are not applicable to the facts in this case is probably well taken because there was no showing made of any defects sufficient to invalidate the tax sale and the tax deed. However, if any defects had been shown, we see no reason which would prevent the application of the 1943, 1945 and 1947 validating acts. Stats. 1943, p. 1993, Chap. 458, in effect August 4, 1943, Deering's Gen. Laws 1944, Act 8443, Vol. 3, p. 2994; Stats. 1945, p. 2176, Chap. 1134, in effect September 15, 1945, Deering's Gen. Laws 1944, 1949 Supp., p. 115, Act 8443a, Stats. 1947, p. 1615, Chap. 605, in effect September 19, 1947, Deering's Gen. Laws 1944, 1949 Supp., p. 116, Act 8443b. Chambers v. Duvall, 26 Cal.2d 139, 143, 156 P.2d 921; Elbert, Ltd. v. Nolan, 87 Cal.App.2d 24, 29, 196 P.2d 88; Howard v. Judson, 86 Cal. App.2d 128, 194 P.2d 138. These acts apply to all tax proceedings consummated prior to their respective effective dates and apply to the instant case. Barrett v. Brown, 26 Cal.2d 328, 331, 158 P.2d 567.

[6] Defendant's final argument that the court erred in holding that the statute of limitation was inapplicable to the instant case is likewise without merit. Section 3521 of the Revenue and Taxation Code limits the time within which actions attacking the validity of a deed such as is before us to one year after recording the deed and the provisions of this section bar any attack against the validity of the deed to the state and against the proceedings leading thereto. Jones v. Bartlett, 94 Cal.App. 2d 418, 419, 420, 210 P.2d 903; Davault v. Essig, 80 Cal.App.2d 970, 972, 183 P.2d 39.

Judgment affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J. concur.

35 Cal.2d 886

HOWARD GREER CUSTOM ORIGINALS v. CAPRITTI et al.

L. A. 21406.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

Sept. 13, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 9, 1950.

Action by Howard Greer Custom Originals, a corporation, against J. C. Capritti, doing business under the fictitious firm name and style of Rose Marie of California, and Rose Marie of California, Inc., sued as Black & White Company, and others, to recover certain personalty and damages for breach of contract. Rose Marie of California, Inc., sued as Black & White Company, filed a cross-complaint. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Stanley N. Barnes, J., denied a motion of the defendant Capritti to set aside the default judgment, and defendant Capritti appealed. The Supreme Court, Edmonds, J., held that defendants' motion to set aside the default and their appeal from the subsequent denial of notice of motion to set aside the default judgment were not attacks on the default, and that where entry of default, from which Capritti did not seek relief by the appeal, stood of the record against him, plaintiff was entitled to a judgment upon its complaint.

Order affirmed.

Prior opinion 213 P.2d 78.

Judgment ⇐128

Where defendants' motion to set aside default was denied and judgment was rendered against them, but neither motion to set aside default judgment nor appeal from denial of defendants' subsequent notice of motion to have default judgment set aside on ground that it was taken against them through inadvertence and surprise was an attack on default or order refusing to set it aside, and vacation of judgment would be an abortive act because entry of default stood of record against defendants, plaintiff was properly granted judgment on its complaint.

Geo. W. Rochester, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Abraham Gottfried, Los Angeles, for respondent.

EDMONDS, Justice.

Howard Greer Custom Originals sued J. C. Capritti, doing business under the fictitious name of Rose Marie of California. He has appealed from an order denying his motion to set aside a default judgment entered against him.

The complaint, to recover certain personal property and damages for breach of contract, named a number of defendants fictitiously. Prior to service of the summons, an amended complaint was filed and a writ of attachment issued against the property of "J. C. Capritti, d. b. a. Rose Marie of California." The writ was levied upon furniture, fixtures and merchandise "belonging to the defendant." As an individual, he filed an undertaking to discharge the attachment. Rose Marie of California, a corporation, "sued as Black and White Company" appeared by answer and also filed a cross-complaint.

Later the summons on the amended complaint was served upon Capritti, and no appearance having been made by him within the time allowed therefor, his default was entered. Meanwhile demurrers to the answer and cross-complaint of the corporation were sustained with leave to amend. Shortly thereafter the corporation filed a petition in bankruptcy.

Capritti then moved to set aside the default which had been entered against him, specifying as the ground for such relief "mistake and surprise." The motion was supported by an affidavit averring that he "was under the impression that * * * [the answer filed on behalf of the corporation] would be sufficient and that there was no need for affiant to file an Answer in his individual and personal capacity." He also declared that when he discovered the entry of default, he requested counsel for the corporation to prepare an answer for him. However, the record shows that his answer was filed after the default was entered.

The motion was denied and judgment rendered against Capritti. He immediately filed a notice of motion to have the judgment set aside upon the ground that it was taken against him "through inadvertence and surprise." In an affidavit stating facts assertedly justifying such relief, he gave as the ground for his "impression" in regard to the sufficiency of the answer of Rose Marie, assurance by the corporation's attorney "that plaintiff and plaintiff's counsel understood the situation." He added that he has a meritorious defense to the action in that he was plant manager of the corporation but at no time did he do business as an individual under its name.

Before the matter came on for hearing, Capritti filed a proposed answer to the complaint in support of his motion. This pleading is substantially the same as the one previously filed. He alleged that he had never done business "under the fictitious firm name and style of Rose Marie of California * * * [but] was employed by Rose Marie of California; * * * that his employment was that of manager of the plant operated by said corporation * * * and he had no other business other than as afore described and did not at any time enter into any agreements, contracts or understandings of any kind whatsoever with the plaintiff herein."

The facts stated in the affidavits filed on behalf of the Greer Company sharply conflict with those presented by Capritti. It is averred that officers of the company visited the premises occupied by Rose Marie on the day before the first complaint was filed. At that time, it is said, Capritti stated to them that he was the owner of Rose Marie. Other allegations are that an attorney representing Capritti telephoned to one of Greer's counsel, and after stating that he "would enter an appearance for Mr. J. C. Capritti", requested a copy of the summons and complaint. There was never any understanding between the Greer Company and any attorney for Capritti, the affiant declared, that the action was intended to be solely against the corporation and not against the appellant as an individual.

As grounds for the reversal of the order adverse to him, Capritti contends that the denial of his motion was an abuse of discretion which deprived him of his day in court and the opportunity to present a meritorious defense. The Greer Company argues that no appeal lies from the determination of the motion, and a motion to set aside a judgment must be denied where the court has refused to set aside the entry of default. The respondent also asserts that the record shows no clear abuse of discretion, and, for that reason, the action of the trial court should be affirmed.

The only order sought to be reversed by this appeal is the one denying defendant Capritti's motion to set aside the default judgment. Neither that motion nor this appeal is an attack upon the entry of default or the order refusing to set it aside.

It is apparent that even if the judgment were now vacated, such action would be abortive. The entry of default, from which Capritti does not seek relief by this appeal, stands of record against him and entitles the Greer Company to a judgment upon its complaint. As stated in Brooks v. Nelson, 95 Cal.App. 144, 147–148, 272 P. 610, 611: "The setting aside and vacating the judgment alone, which was all the relief sought in said motion, would have been an idle act because the default * * * would have stood undisturbed. The default cut off defendants from making any further opposition or objection to the relief which plaintiff's complaint shows he is entitled to demand. A defendant against whom a default has been entered is out of court, and is not entitled to take any further steps in the cause affecting plaintiff's right of action; he cannot thereafter, until such default is set aside in a proper proceeding, file pleadings or move for a new trial or demand notice of subsequent proceedings. [Citing cases.] If the judgment were vacated, it would be the duty of the court immediately to render another judgment of like effect, and the defendants, still being in default, could not be heard in opposition thereto. * * *" Bowman v. Bowman, 29 Cal.2d 808, 178 P.2d 751, 170 A.L.R. 246; Christerson v. French, 180 Cal. 523, 182 P. 27; Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. King Land & Improvement Co., 162 Cal. 44, 120 P. 1066.

The order is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CARTER, TRAYNOR, SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

Rehearing denied; SHENK and CARTER, JJ., dissenting.

35 Cal.2d 858

INDEPENDENT IRON WORKS, Inc. v. AMERICAN PRESIDENT LINES, LIMITED, et al.

S. F. 17971.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.

Sept. 12, 1950.

The Independent Iron Works, Inc., a corporation, brought action against American President Lines, Limited, a corporation, and others to quiet title to cable in possession of the named defendant under a contract of carriage. The Superior Court of San Francisco County, Milton D. Sapiro, J., rendered an order granting a motion for a change of venue, and the plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court, Spence, J., held that the named defendant which had its principal place of business in San Francisco County, was not only a proper party defendant but a necessary party, though it claimed only a possessory lien on the cable for carriage charges, and that therefore certain of the other defendants who were nonresidents, were not entitled to a change of venue on ground that the named defendant was not a real party in interest, but only a stakeholder.

Order reversed.

Prior opinion, 211 P.2d 326.

1. Venue ⇐41

A defendant is not entitled to have an action removed to county of his residence unless it appears that none of the other defendants are residents of county where action is brought. Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

2. Venue ⇐41

Even when all defendants join in a demand for or consent to a change of venue the cause will be retained if complaint attempts in apparent good faith to state a cause of action against a defendant who resides in county where action was commenced. Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

3. Venue ⇐41

When a defendant who resides in county in which action is brought is a necessary and proper party defendant, it is immaterial that another and the principal defendant resides in another county. Code Civ. Proc. § 395.

4. Quieting title ⇐34(1)

In action against steamship company and others to quiet title to cable in possession of steamship company under a contract of carriage, complaint alleging that plaintiff was the owner of the cable, that all defendants asserted claims to the cable adverse to the plaintiff but that they were without right, title or interest therein, and requesting a decree adjudging that plaintiff be the owner and entitled to immediate possession of the cable, stated a cause of action to quiet title against all defendants. Code Civ.Proc. § 738.

5. Venue ⇐41

In action in San Francisco County against foreign steamship company having its principal place of business in San Francisco County, and against other defendants who were residents of Los Angeles County, steamship company, which filed an answer alleging that its possession of the cable was rightful under a contract of carriage and that it had a possessory lien on cable for carriage charges, was not only a proper party defendant but a necessary party, and therefore the other defendants were not entitled to a change of venue to Los Angeles County on ground that steamship company was not a real party in interest but only a stakeholder. Corporations Code, §§ 6401, 6403; Code Civ.Proc. §§ 379, 395.

Heller, Ehrman, White & McAuliffe, Lloyd W. Dinkelspiel and Caspar W. Weinberger, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Balter & Balter and William E. Balter, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SPENCE, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from an order granting a motion for a change of venue from the city and county of San Francisco to the county of Los Angeles. There is no dispute as to the material facts, and it appears therefrom that plaintiff's objection to the venue change is well taken.

This is an action to quiet title to certain personal property—31 reels of cable—brought against defendants American President Lines, Ltd. (hereinafter referred to as President Lines), as the party now in possession of the cable; Eastern Iron & Metals Co., Ltd. (hereinafter referred to as Eastern); and Max Peterman, doing business as Economy Pipe & Supply Company (hereinafter referred to as Peterman). Plaintiff alleged that it was the owner of the cable; that all of the defendants asserted claims to the cable adverse to plaintiff but that they were without right, title or interest therein; and accordingly, plaintiff asked for a decree adjudging it to be the owner and entitled to the immediate possession of the cable.

Defendant President Lines filed an answer, wherein it alleged that it was a Delaware corporation, with its principal place of business in San Francisco; that it now had possession of the cable at Wilmington, California; that its possession was rightful under a contract of carriage whereby the cable had been delivered to it for shipment to Los Angeles in accordance with a bill of lading; and that it had a possessory lien on said cable for carriage charges, but "except as [so] alleged * * * it ha[d] no estate, right, title or interest whatsoever in said personal property * * *." As a separate and distinct answer and defense, said defendant President Lines set forth certain facts showing that the cable was now claimed by plaintiff and defendants Eastern and Peterman; and stated that it could not safely determine ownership as between said claims without great hazard to itself, but offered to deliver the cable into court in order that the claimants might interplead and thereby settle and adjust their claims among themselves. Defendant President Lines then prayed that it be discharged from all liability to any of said claimants and in accordance with its alleged possessory lien for ocean freight, storage, and other charges, it asked the court to order the prevailing party claimant to pay it all such charges, together with costs and attorney fees.

Thereafter defendants Eastern and Peterman filed a demurrer and moved for a change of venue to Los Angeles County upon these grounds: (1) their residence in said county; and (2) the claim that President Lines "was not a real party in interest, but only a stakeholder." Defendant President Lines opposed the motiton for change of venue, as did plaintiff. By counter-affidavit, said President Lines set forth various procedural steps it had taken in compliance with the laws of California for authorization to do business within the state and for the establishment of its residence in San Francisco as its principal place of business. Corporations Code, secs. 6401, 6403, based on former Civ.Code, sec. 405. These matters were not disputed. The court granted the motion for change of venue. From the order accordingly entered, plaintiff has appealed.

Respondents Eastern and Peterman do not contest the sufficiency of appellant's complaint in stating a cause of action against the President Lines, or the latter's place of residence as San Francisco upon its qualifying as a foreign corporation to do business within the state. Bohn v. Better Biscuits, Inc., 26 Cal.App.2d 61, 64–65, 78 P.2d 1177, 80 P.2d 484; Eckles v. Justice's Court, 84 Cal.App.2d 269, 271, 190 P.2d 224; also Western-Knapp Engineering Co. v. Gilbank, 9 Cir., 129 F.2d 135, 136. However, they do challenge the sufficiency of the interest of the President Lines in the outcome of this litigation, maintaining that it is classifiable as no more than a stockholder, a status which does not entitle it to have the case tried in the county of its residence in opposition to respondents' demand for a change of venue. On the other hand, appellant contends that defendant President Lines is a proper and necessary party to the complete adjudication of the entire controversy, that it was not joined as a defendant in the action for the purpose of keeping the place of trial in San Francisco, and therefore the order for the change of venue to Los Angels County cannot be sustained. The record confirms the propriety of appellant's position.

[1-3] Section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides, among other things, that "the county in which the defendants, or some of them, reside at the commencement of the action, is the proper county for the trial of the action." So pertinent are these general rules governing the determination of the venue issue as stated in White v. Anderson, 50 Cal.App.2d 634, at page 636, 123 P.2d 543, at page 544: "A defendant is not entitled to have an action removed to the county of his residence unless it appears that none of the other defendants are residents of the county where the action is brought. Donohoe v. Wooster, 163 Cal. 114, 124 P. 730. Even when all of the defendants join in a demand for or consent to a change of venue the cause will be retained if the complaint attempts in apparent good faith to state a cause of action against a defendant who resides in the county where the action was commenced. McClung v. Watt, 190 Cal. 155, 211 P. 17. When a defendant who resides in the county in which an action is brought is a necessary and proper party defendant it is immaterial that another and the principal defendant resides in another county. Hellman v. Logan, 148 Cal. 58, 82 P. 848."

[4] Unquestionably, appellant's complaint stated a cause of action to quiet title against all defendants. Code Civ.Proc. § 738. However, despite the sufficiency of appellant's pleading, respondents argue that appellant cannot prevail here on the venue issue because "the right to a change of place of trial to the residence of a defendant must necessarily be determined by the status of the parties joined as defendants in the action as revealed by the pleadings existing at the time the party claiming the right first appeared in the action." McClung v. Watt, supra, 190 Cal. 155, 159, 211 P. 17, 19; also, Nelson v. Marsh, 100 Cal.App. 578, 583, 280 P. 695; Konnoff v. Fraser, 62 Cal.App.2d 788, 791, 145 P.2d 368.

At the time respondents first appeared in this action, defendant President Lines had already filed its answer, which respondents claim revealed its status to be merely that of a stakeholder, and so one not having such an interest in the litigation as would justify consideration of its residence in determining the venue issue. Smith v. Smith, 30 Cal.App.2d 70, 85 P.2d 473. But respondents misconstrue the purport of the answer filed by defendant President Lines in setting forth its position. Thus, after asserting its possessory lien for "all charges" due under its "contract of carriage" covering the cable now in its possession, defendant President Lines made this statement in its answer: "Except as herein alleged, defendant admits that it has no estate, right, title or interest whatsoever * * *." (Emphasis added.) Nor is President Lines properly classifiable as a disinterested party in the outcome of the litigation coincident with its offer to deliver the cable into the custody of the court pending the determination of the controversy. This is not a case where "a defendant * * * at any time before answer" has "appl[ied] to the court for an order to substitute [a third party claimant] in his place, and discharge him from liability to either party, on his depositing in court * * * or delivering the property or its value to such person as the court may direct * * *." Code Civ.Proc. § 386; emphasis added. Rather here, President Lines in its answer made the offer to deliver the cable into court and asked to have the parties interpleaded, and hence the court had no opportunity to make the order contemplated by the cited statute before an answer was filed and in discharge of the applicant defendant's liability; and President Lines remains a defendant in this action. There also seems to be no place for the substitution of a third party claimant in this litigation, for appellant apparently has joined all claimants as defendants herein.

[5] Moreover, as the record here stands, President Lines, so long as it has possession of the cable and asserts its possessory lien thereon, appears to be not only a proper party defendant, but a necessary party in order that a complete determination of the controversy may be had in the single quiet title action upon the adjudication of all adverse claims to the property involved. Code Civ.Proc. § 379; also, 22 Cal.Jur. sec. 26, p. 142. Nor can it be said, as respondents urge, that the interest of President Lines is only "incidental" to the main issue in the case and so insufficient to defeat respondents' demand for a change of venue. Rather, it may well be that the possessory lien asserted by President Lines will be opposed upon the ground that the assessed charges are excessive or that the duties and obligations of President Lines as carrier and bailee have not been properly performed; and, in addition, there are the items of costs and attorney fees which President Lines also seeks to recover in this action. All of these matters are open to challenge herein, and every claim of President Lines adverse to appellant should be determined in this action. See Winter v. McMillan, 87 Cal. 256, 265, 25 P. 407, 22 Am.St.Rep. 243.

The cases upon which respondents rely are wholly distinguishable: Sayward v. Houghton, 82 Cal. 628, 23 P. 120, where the complaint failed to show that the resident corporation was "in any sense interested in [the] action", 82 Cal. at page 630, 23 P. at page 120; Smith v. Smith, supra, 30 Cal.App.2d 70, 85 P.2d 473, where the court found that the resident defendant, a "title company * * * sued as stakeholder of corporate stocks deposited by [the individual] defendant", with it, 30 Cal.App.2d at page 71, 85 P.2d at page 474, had "been joined solely for the purpose of having the action tried in the county of its residence", 30 Cal.App.2d at page 72, 85 P.2d at page 474; Sourbis v. Rhoads, 50 Cal.App. 98, 194 P. 521, where it was stated that "a defendant * * * moving for a change of venue" was entitled to show that he was "the only real party in interest in the controversy," and that the plaintiff's claim against a codefendant was "a mere pretense" and nominally made "for the fraudulent purpose of" defeating a demand for a change of venue from "the county where the complaint [was] filed", 50 Cal.App. 98 at page 101, 194 P. at page 522; and Modlin v. Walter's Fur Shop, 83 Cal.App.2d 384, 188 P.2d 805, where the "resident defendant was joined as defendant solely because he refused to be joined as a plaintiff and no cause of action was stated as against him", 83 Cal.App.2d at page 387, 188 P.2d at page 807. Rather here, it appears (1) that a cause of action has been pleaded against President Lines; (2) that President Lines is a proper and necessary party defendant in the complete settlement of the controversy involved in this quiet title action; and (3) that President Lines, a foreign corporation, maintains its place of residence in this state in the city and county of San Francisco. It follows that the trial court erred in granting respondents' motion for a change of venue to Los Angeles County. White v. Anderson, supra, 50 Cal.App.2d 634, 636, 123 P.2d 543; Dallman Supply Co. v. Sweet, 86 Cal.App.2d 780, 784, 195 P.2d 864; Stokes v. Newsom, 89 Cal.App.2d 147, 149-150, 200 P.2d 17.

The order is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, CARTER, TRAYNOR, and SCHAUER, JJ., concur.

35 Cal.2d 863

Ex parte ETHERINGTON.

Cr. 5070.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

Sept. 12, 1950.

Freda Mickelson brought habeas corpus proceedings for release of her minor son, Norman Etherington, from custody after his commitment to the California Youth Authority by the Superior Court of Nevada County, sitting as a juvenile court, James Snell, J. The Supreme Court, Spence, J., held that petitioner waived any insufficiency of notice to her of the hearing resulting in the commitment by personally appearing and participating therein without objection as to the timeliness of the notice, and that the court had jurisdiction to make the order of commitment depriving petitioner of the minor's custody.

Writ discharged and the minor remanded to custody.

Carter and Schauer, JJ., dissented.

1. Infants ⇐16.7

A minor's mother, appearing personally and by counsel at juvenile court hearing in proceeding to adjudge minor a ward of court and commit him to state Youth Authority on day until which proceedings were continued at her request on preceding day, and making no request for further continuance or protest against failure to give her statutory notice of hearing at least 24 hours before time stated therefor, waived any insufficiency of notice as jurisdictional requirement. Welfare and Institutions Code, § 726.

2. Infants ⇐16.11

Where petition in juvenile court proceedings alleged facts bringing minor within statutory provision extending juvenile court's jurisdiction to any minor violating state law, evidence supporting specific charges of law violation by him was adduced, his mother's fitness to retain parental control of minor was directly put in issue, and court, after observing that minor did not deny such charges, stated that he had had five different brushes with the law and that that could not be permitted to go on, court had jurisdiction to adjudge minor a ward of court and commit him to state Youth Authority, thereby depriving mother of his custody. Welfare and Institutions Code, §§ 700(m), 739(d).

Arthur De Beau Carr, Sacramento, for petitioner.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, and C. J. Scott, Assistant Attorney General, for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice.

By means of habeas corpus, Freda Mickelson, the mother of Norman Etherington, a minor, seeks his release from custody after he was adjudged by the Juvenile Court of Nevada County to be a ward of the court and committed to the California Youth Authority. She challenges upon these grounds the jurisdiction of the court to make the order of commitment: (1) failure to serve notice of the hearing of the juvenile court proceedings upon her as required by law (Welf. & Inst.Code, § 726); and (2) insufficiency of the findings to justify removal of said minor from her custody (Welf. & Inst.Code, § 739). Neither point of objection is well taken under the record before this court.

Subdivision (m) of section 700 of the Welfare and Institutions Code provides that the jurisdiction of the juvenile court extends to any person under the age of twenty-one years "who violates any law of this State or any ordinance of any town, city, or county, of this State defining crime."

The original petition for a writ of habeas corpus sets forth that Freda Mickelson is the mother of Norman Etherington, who was then seventeen years of age; that on November 30, 1949, said minor was brought before the Juvenile Court of Nevada County for hearing on charges of (1) speeding and (2) resisting arrest committed in November, 1949, in the city of Grass Valley, and (3) contributing to the delinquency of a minor within Nevada County as accused by a warrant of arrest issued against said minor some two months previously, but of which neither said minor nor his mother was informed until said minor's arrest in said November; that at the time of the issuance of said warrant, said minor and his mother were domiciled in Nevada City but that after October 19, 1949, they moved their residence to Sacramento, all of which facts were known to the Grass Valley and Nevada City police; that said minor's mother was not notified of the scheduled November 30 hearing on the charges against said minor until 9:00 a. m. of said day, when said minor at Grass Valley was allowed to telephone her at her home in Sacramento to tell her that he was "being taken to court" an hour later or at 10:00 a. m.; that she arrived in Nevada City in the courtroom at about 11:30 a. m., at which time the proceedings had started and testimony was being taken; that at her request, the judge at 12:00 noon that day continued the proceedings to the following day, December 1, 1949, at 10:00 a. m. so as to allow her time to employ counsel; that in the limited time available she did engage an attorney for the defense of said minor, and that she and said attorney were present in court the next morning, December 1, when the case was completed and the adjudication made declaring said minor to be a ward of the court and committing him to the California Youth Authority.

Upon such representation in the petition as to the manner of notice of the juvenile court proceedings that was given to the mother of the minor as "the person charged with his custody," this writ was issued. The return and answer to the writ was then filed, and included therewith is the record of the proceedings in the juvenile court. It appears therefrom that a verified petition was filed in the Juvenile Court of Nevada County by Thos. J. Barrett, probation officer, on November 28, 1949, setting forth facts as would bring said Norman Etherington, alleged to be seventeen years of age, within the provisions of said above-mentioned subdivision (m) of section 700 of the Welfare and Institutions Code: more particularly, that said minor had on November 18, 1949, committed a misdemeanor through the operation of his motor vehicle in a residential area of the city of Grass Valley at a speed of 56 miles per hour; that on said date he had wilfully and unlawfully resisted arrest by the apprehending police officer; and that on September 13, 1949, he did contribute to the delinquency of two minor girls in committing acts which "would cause or tend to cause said minor persons to lead idle, dissolute, lewd or immoral lives." The petition contained the further allegation setting forth the Nevada City address of Freda Mickelson as the mother of said Norman Etherington and "the person * * * having the custody or control" of him. It also appears that the court issued its order fixing the 30th day of November, 1949, at the hour of 11:00 a. m. as the time for the hearing and directed that a citation be issued to said Freda Mickelson as "the person having the custody and control of said Norman Etherington," directing her to appear for the hearing; that said Freda Mickelson did not arrive at the courtroom for the hearing until 11:35 a. m. of said day, and that after her objection to her failure to receive notice of the hearing until "right close to ten o'clock" that morning and her statement of her desire to employ counsel in the matter, the judge continued the proceedings until the next day, December 1, at 10:00 a. m.; that on December 1, as scheduled, the court convened, said Freda Mickelson and her counsel were present, oral and documentary evidence was introduced in support of the petition, witnesses were produced on behalf of said Norman Etherington—including said minor and his mother, Freda Mickelson—the matter was submitted for decision, the court made written findings that due "notice of the * * * hearing of said petition ha[d] been given," that the "truth" of the alleged facts "ha[d] been established to [the court's] satisfaction," and the said minor, Norman Etherington, was adjudged "a ward of the Juvenile Court" and "committed, until the further order of the court, to the care and custody of the Probation Officer of Nevada County * * * until delivery to the California Youth Authority."

Thereafter an amended petition for a writ of habeas corpus was filed with this court, wherein it was further alleged that said Juvenile Court of Nevada County ordered the commitment of said minor, Norman Etherington, without making such finding of fact as would authorize its exercise of jurisdiction over him as a ward of the court and his removal from the custody of his mother. Section 739 of the Welfare and Institutions Code provides that "no ward of the juvenile court shall be taken from the custody of his parent or legal guardian without the consent of the parent or guardian, unless the court finds one of the following facts: (a) That the parent or guardian is incapable of providing or has failed or neglected to provide proper maintenance, training, and education for the person. (b) That the person has been tried on probation in such custody and has failed to reform. (c) That the person has been convicted of crime by a jury. (d) That the welfare of the person requires that his custody be taken from his parent or guardian." The return and answer to the amended petition expressly denied "any lack of jurisdiction on the part of said Juvenile Court to make the order" of commitment and "in that respect" alleged that "said Juvenile Court complied with subdivision d, section 739, Welfare & Institutions Code, by certain oral findings made in open court and reflected by the transcript of the proceedings herein," as theretofore filed "as a part of [the] return to the original petition."

An examination of the record discloses that the jurisdiction of the court to order the commitment in question is not vulnerable to attack in these habeas corpus proceedings.

[1] Petitioner's first point of objection rests upon the claim that the court was without jurisdiction to adjudge the minor a ward of the juvenile court because she was not given notice of the hearing of the proceedings as required by section 726 of the Welfare and Institutions Code. That section requires that "a citation * * directing the parent * * * having the custody or control of the [minor] * * to appear at the [scheduled] hearing" be served "at least 24 hours before the time stated" therefor. It is undisputed here that petitioner, who concededly had the custody of Norman Etherington, did not receive such prerequisite notice; that, in fact, she learned of the scheduled proceedings only an hour or so before they commenced and that, at her request, they were continued until the next day, allowing petitioner a period of twenty-two hours to employ counsel. However, the record of the juvenile court proceedings affirmatively establishes that when the matter was heard the next day, petitioner and her counsel were present in the court, neither she nor her counsel made any request for a further continuance or any protest about the failure to give the notice specified by the statute, and the case was presented entirely anew just as though the previous hearing had never commenced and with the single witness who had testified on the prior day being recalled to the stand for the purpose of restating his testimony in full. The cited code section expressly provides that "Service of citation may be waived by any person by a voluntary appearance entered in the minutes of the court". The minutes of the proceedings on December 1 show the presence of petitioner, Freda Mickelson, in court during the full day's hearing and the fact of her testimony therein. In such circumstances, petitioner's conduct—her personal appearance at the reset hearing and her participation therein without objection as to the timeliness of the notice to her as the only person entitled thereto under the statute—must be deemed to have constituted a waiver of any insufficiency in that respect as a jurisdictional requirement. In re Staser, 84 Cal.App. 2d 746, 753, 191 P.2d 791; In re Orosco, 92 Cal.App.2d 352, 356, 207 P.2d 656; see, also, People v. Spiers, 17 Cal.App.2d 477, 484, 62 P.2d 414.

[2] Likewise without merit is petitioner's challenge of the jurisdiction of the court to make the order of commitment depriving petitioner of the custody of said minor. The parties agree that the validity of the order stems from a consideration of the sufficiency of the court's findings in relation to section 739, subdivision (d), of the Welfare and Institutions Code, as distinguished from the other classifiable situations under the statute which the record herein concededly does not purport to establish.

As above stated, the petition in the juvenile court proceedings alleged facts bringing the minor, Norman Etherington, within subdivision (m) of section 700 of the Welfare and Institutions Code: (1) speeding; (2) resisting an officer; and (3) contributing to the delinquency of a minor. Testimony was adduced in support of these specific charges and, in addition, the files relating to five other occasions when proceedings had been instituted against said minor for various acts of "theft and malicious mischief" in the course of some five years were admitted in evidence. On behalf of the minor in question, there was his own testimony along with that of petitioner, his mother, and other witnesses were called for the purpose of attesting to his conduct and character. In such presentation of the case the fitness of petitioner to retain parental control of said minor, her son, was directly put in issue and in response to such situation, the court, upon careful consideration of the entire proceedings, summarized its conclusions on this basis: After observing that the "defendant hasn't denied the last escapade"—the speeding charge, his apprehension, escape and re-arrest—and that there "wasn't any denial" by him of his "wrong doing of taking" certain minor girls to a cabin for several days in relation to the charge of contributing to their delinquency, the court, in the presence of the parties and their respective counsel, made these pertinent remarks bearing directly on the welfare of the minor in question: "[There is] a background here, commencing in 1944 and running up to the present time which makes a total of five different brushes with the law, and in most of them Norman has been treated very, very leniently. There were two or three occasions in which he himself admitted that he was guilty of the offenses charged against him. I do not believe, as Judge of this Court, that that can be permitted to go on. There finally comes a time when something has to be done and at this time I am going to make Norman a ward of this court. He will be placed in the immediate custody of the Probation Officer, who will have authority to confine him in such place as may be necessary until he can be taken by the Youth Authority and a commitment will issue committing him to the Youth Authority at that time." (Emphasis added.)

Implicit in the foregoing quoted language is the finding that the minor's welfare required that he be taken from the custody of petitioner, as a prerequisite to the court's jurisdiction to make the order of commitment to the California Youth Authority. The authenticity of the complete record of the juvenile court proceedings herein filed is in nowise disputed by petitioner. Under such circumstances and as the pertinent language has been noticed in constituting a finding of the prescribed fact in compliance with the statute's specification, Welf. & Inst. Code, § 739, subd. (d), petitioner may not prevail here. In re Ortiz, 74 Cal.App.2d 810, 813-817, 169 P.2d 664; In re Hartman, 93 Cal. App.2d 801, 807, 210 P.2d 53.

The writ is discharged and the minor, Norman Etherington, is remanded to custody.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concur.

CARTER, Justice.

I dissent. It is conceded by the majority that a finding by the trial court is a jurisdictional requisite to depriving petitioner, Norman Etherington's mother, of her parental right to his custody, he being a minor. There is no finding that the welfare of said minor requires that his mother be deprived of his custody. The majority opinion relies upon some oral remarks made by the trial judge at the conclusion of the hearing. Such remarks do not purport to be the findings of the court contemplated by the statute. It made its written findings in its order making Norman a ward of the court. It there stated, after reciting the fact of a hearing: "The court now finds the following facts, and each of them, to be true: That the said Norman Etherington is within the County of Nevada, State of California, and is a person under the age of twenty-one years, to wit: of the age of 17 years; That he did operate a motor vehicle in the residential district of Grass Valley at the speed of 56 miles an hour in a 25 mile an hour zone and did wilfully and unlawfully resist officer Townsend and did escape after apprehension. And did contribute to the delinquency of a minor female by concealing her from her parents, and is a person coming within the provisions of subdivision M of section 700 of said Welfare and Institutions Code."

Not one word is said in said findings about the boy's welfare requiring that his mother no longer have his custody or that she is not fit or capable of being his custodian. To rely upon the oral comments of the trial court as constituting the essential findings required by the statute, not only violates the statutory requirement that findings be in writing, but is clearly contrary to express intention of the court.

The Welfare and Institutions Code requires that the court find the facts (sec. 739). It also provides that when the court shall adjudge the minor to be a ward of the court, its findings, and "All commitment * * * orders shall be in writing, and * * * signed by the judge * *." Wel. & Insts. Code, sec. 735. It is the general rule that findings must be in writing and signed by the judge, See Code of Civ. Proc. sec. 632; Millard v. Supreme Council American Legion of Honor, 81 Cal. 340, 22 P. 864, and the oral opinion of the court cannot take the place of findings. In re Ingram Estate, 99 Cal.App. 660, 279 P. 208. The remarks of the court relied upon by the majority opinion are, at the most, no more than its oral opinion. It follows, therefore, that Norman's detention is unlawful and he should be discharged from custody.

SCHAUER, J., concur.

35 Cal.2d 889

Ex parte WELLS.

Cr. 5114.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.
Sept. 13, 1950.

Proceeding in the matter of the application of Wesley Robert Wells for a writ of habeas corpus to secure release from custody on grounds that execution of the sentence imposed on him would deprive him of life without due process of law, and violate other state and federal constitutional provisions. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that where the trial court allowed a defense to be presented, even though relevant evidence was erroneously excluded, and the Supreme Court on appeal appraised the effect of the erroneously excluded evidence, the requirements of due process were satisfied.

Writ denied.

Edmonds, Carter and Traynor, JJ., dissented in part.

1. Criminal law ⇐1208(9)

Sentence of five years to no fixed maximum was a life sentence and it was within discretion of Adult Authority to maintain such sentence as a life sentence by refraining from remitting any portion of it, or to reduce sentence by fixing or tentatively fixing a span of years.

2. Convicts ⇐5

Statute providing death penalty for life prisoner in a state prison who with malice aforethought commits assault on another, by any means of force likely to produce great bodily injury, applied to felon serving indeterminate sentence with no fixed maximum. Pen.Code, § 4500.

3. Criminal law ⇐1208(9)

Action of Adult Authority charged with power and duty to determine length of time of imprisonment of felons, in refusing to reduce indeterminate sentence of desperate and dangerous felon to term for years, was reasonable, in light of knowledge and facilities available to the authority.

4. Constitutional law ⇐266

In prosecution of life prisoner under mandatory death sentence statute, where trial court allowed a defense to be presented, even though relevant evidence was erroneously excluded, and Supreme Court appraised effect of the evidence erroneously excluded by trial court, requirements of procedural due process were satisfied. Pen. Code, § 4500.

5. Constitutional law ⇐250

In prosecution of life prisoner under mandatory death sentence statute, actions of trial court in erroneously excluding relevant evidence and of Supreme Court in applying section of state constitution authorizing refusal of new trial where error does not result in miscarriage of justice, were not discriminatory and did not deny equal protection. Const. art. 6, § 4½; Pen. Code, § 4500; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

6. Jury ⇐37

In prosecution of life prisoner under mandatory death sentence statute, where trial court allowed defense to be presented, but erroneously excluded relevant evidence, and Supreme Court considered effect of excluded evidence and applied section of state constitution authorizing refusal of new trial where error does not result in miscarriage of justice, prisoner was not deprived of jury trial. Const. art. 6, § 4½; Pen. Code, § 4500.

7. Jury ⇐31(11)

Constitutional right to jury trial does not include absolute right to have all relevant evidence before the jury in every case.

8. Criminal law ⇐1213

Where prisoner, who had been sentenced to five years to no fixed maximum, was convicted for committing violent assault on prison guard, imposition of mandatory death penalty was not cruel and unusual punishment. Const. art. 1, § 6; Pen. Code, § 4500; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

C. K. Curtright, Philip C. Wilkins, Sacramento, and Charles R. Garry, San Francisco, for petitioner.

No appearance for respondent.

SCHAUER, Justice.

Wesley Robert Wells, who is confined in San Quentin State Prison under sentence of death, seeks habeas corpus on the grounds that execution of the sentence will deprive him of life without due process and violate other provisions of the federal and state Constitutions. We have concluded that his petition is devoid of merit.

[1] The death penalty was imposed, pursuant to the mandate of the statute, upon Wells' conviction of violation of section 4500 of the Penal Code: "Every person undergoing a life sentence in a State prison * * * who, with malice aforethought, commits an assault upon the person of another * * * by any means of force likely to produce great bodily injury, is punishable with death." The conviction was affirmed by this court on appeal (People v. Wells (1949), 33 Cal.2d 330, 202 P.2d 53), and the United States Supreme Court denied certiorari (338 U.S. 836, 70 S.Ct. 43, 94 L.Ed. 510). Wells had committed a non-fatal but violent battery on a prison guard while he was serving an indeterminate sentence of five years to no fixed maximum. No year-span limitation had been fixed by the Adult Authority; on the contrary the Authority had considered petitioner's case and, as pointed out in our opinion on the appeal (People v. Wells (1949), supra, page 336 of 33 Cal.2d, at page 57 of 202 P.2d), had acted on the case "by refraining from reducing such length of time [of imprisonment] to a term of years." Under the law of this state it is within the discretion of the Authority to either maintain such a sentence as a life sentence by refraining from remitting any portion of it, or to reduce such sentence to a fixed, or tentatively fixed, span of years. See, e. g., People v. McNabb (1935), 3 Cal.2d 441, 456, 45 P.2d 334; People v. Jones (1936), 6 Cal.2d 554, 556, 59 P.2d 89; People v. Ralph (1944), 24 Cal.2d 575, 578, 150 P.2d 401; In re Quinn (1945), 25 Cal.2d 799, 803, 154 P.2d 875; People v. Williams (1945), 27 Cal.2d 216, 219, 163 P.2d 441; In re Cowen (1946), 27 Cal.2d 637, 648, 166 P.2d 279.)

After affirmance of the judgment by this court and denial of certiorari by the Supreme Court of the United States, Wells sought habeas corpus in a United States District Court, D.C., 90 F.Supp. 855, 858. The judge who heard the matter announced his view that "By deliberate and designed inactivity, the administrative body known as the Adult Authority of California kept the petitioner in an indefinite and indeterminate status for the purpose of making it possible to impose the death penalty upon him in the event that he committed an offense under section 4500 of the California Penal Code. It must be concluded that this is not the kind of process that comports with 'the deepest notions of what is fair and right and just.' It may be appropriately characterized as 'overzealousness in an attempt to reach, through the criminal process (and indeed to destroy) those whom we may regard as undesirable citizens.'" The district judge further declared that he reserved final ruling on the petition and ordered execution of the death penalty stayed "in order to enable petitioner to pursue his state remedies by petition for a writ of habeas corpus or other corrective process."

The present petition for habeas corpus was filed pursuant to the above quoted suggestion. It presents the argument embodied in the views of the district judge as above quoted. Furthermore, petitioner contends, the trial court's erroneous exclusion of evidence as to Wells' state of mind, and the holding of this court that such error did not result in a miscarriage of justice, violated due process, equal protection, and deprived Wells of his right to jury trial of the issue whether he acted with "malice aforethought"; and imposition of the death sentence is cruel and unusual punishment. It is to be noted that on his appeal Wells contended, among other things, that "Section 4500 was never intended to apply to persons, such as he, serving an unfixed, indeterminate sentence for a maximum term of life imprisonment, and to apply it to him is to deprive him of equal protection of the laws in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution." (See page 334 of 33 Cal.2d, at page 55 of 202 P.2d) However, in part, the precise contentions now advanced by petitioner were not, although they could have been, presented on his appeal.

[2] The People of the State of California, through their Legislature, established the non-discretionary punishment of death for the offense denounced by section 4500 of the Penal Code. (See People v. Finley (1908), 153 Cal. 59, 62, 94 P. 248; Finley v. People of State of California (1911), 222 U.S. 28, 31, 32 S.Ct. 13, 56 L. Ed. 75.) Thereafter, the People, through their Legislature, gave to the Board of Prison Terms and Paroles, which agency by later legislation has become the Adult Authority, the power and duty to determine, within statutorily defined limits, the length of time of imprisonment of felons sentenced to a state prison on judgments not imposing the death penalty. (See In re Lee (1918), 177 Cal. 690, 693, 171 P. 958; People v. Hale (1923), 64 Cal.App. 523, 535, 222 P. 148; In re Northcott (1925), 71 Cal.App. 281, 284, 235 P. 458; In re Collins (1926), 198 Cal. 508, 509, 245 P. 1089; People v. Stratton (1934), 136 Cal.App. 201, 207, 28 P.2d 695). As previously indicated it is well settled that the non-discretionary death penalty applies to a felon who, while serving an indeterminate sentence with no fixed maximum term of years, commits an assault of the sort described in section 4500. (People v. McNabb (1935), supra, pp. 456–458 of 3 Cal.2d at pages 340–341 of 45 P.2d; see also In re Quinn (1945), supra, p. 800 of 25 Cal.2d, at page 876 of 154 P.2d; People v. Williams (1945), supra, p. 219 of 27 Cal.2d, at page 442 of 163 P.2d; People v. Wells (1949), supra, p. 337 of 33 Cal.2d, at page 57 of 202 P.2d.) As said in People v. McNabb (1935), supra, pp. 456–457 of 3 Cal.2d, at pages 340–341 of 45 P.2d: "The authorities of this and many sister states which have an indeterminate sentence law similar to ours hold that a statute which prescribes * * * no maximum is in law a life sentence until and unless a court or executive board charged with the duty of fixing prison terms remits a portion of the life term."

[3] Here, as already stated, no portion of the prisoner's life term had been remitted but before petitioner committed the assault which resulted in the conviction now attacked, the Adult Authority had considered the matter of fixing his term and had declined to reduce it to a term of years. For the purpose of this opinion we accept the view, asserted by Wells in his petition and accepted by the district judge, that the Authority's action in refraining from fixing a term of years was intended to make, or to keep, petitioner a life-termer, under the holding of People v. McNabb (1935), supra, because petitioner was a dangerous, apparently incorrigible prisoner from whom acts of violence were anticipated. It does not follow that the Authority's action was arbitrary, repugnant to traditional concepts of fairness, or designed to "destroy" petitioner. The fact that Wells is a striking example of the failure of our penological system to reform a convicted person or to deter him from further acts of violence should not lead us to the unsound conclusion that the operation of that system was, in Wells' case, unconstitutional, or that the act of the Authority indicates malfeasance, misfeasance or nonfeasance. The Authority was dealing with a desperate and dangerous man (Wells had on separate previous occasions killed a fellow prisoner, severely injured another prisoner, committed a number of vicious assaults and batteries on guards and inmates, and wantonly destroyed state property). The Authority was administering a system which combines the theory of reformation and the theory of punishment. Such system has long (more than 30 years in California [In re Lee (1918), supra, 177 Cal. 690, 171 P. 958]) been accepted in this state and in many other states as constitutional, and is generally regarded as a modern and enlightened approach to those elements of the problems of penology with which it deals. (See 15 Am.Jur., p. 169; 24 C.J.S., Criminal Law, § 1975, p. 1182.) Unfortunately Wells, under that system apparently did not become susceptible of reform or amenable to discipline. With the knowledge and facilities available to the Authority, its action in refusing to reduce the length of petitioner's imprisonment to a term of years was reasonable; indeed, it might well have concluded that the only reasonable course open to it was the stern (and, as it developed, ineffective) one of placing before petitioner the threat of even more severe punishment—the extreme penalty—should he continue his violent behavior.

[4] As to petitioner's contention that rulings of law by the trial court and this court deprived him of due process, it should first be noted that the solution of the question does not depend on the correctness of those rulings. (See Howard v. Com. of Kentucky (1906), 200 U.S. 164, 173, 26 S. Ct. 189, 50 L.Ed. 421; Paterno v. Lyons (1948), 334 U.S. 314, 320, 68 S.Ct. 1044, 92 L.Ed. 1409.) It is petitioner's position that the exclusion of evidence of his state of mind, offered to show lack of "malice aforethought," deprived him of procedural due process by denying his right to present his defense. (See Matter of Lambert (1901), 134 Cal. 626, 633, 66 P. 851, 55 L.R.A. 856, 86 Am.St.Rep. 296.) The trial court's ruling was an error of law merely; there was no refusal to allow Wells to present a defense, but only a rejection of some evidence concerning the defense. Petitioner cites no authority, and we find neither authority nor reason, which suggests that the hearing requirement of due process is not satisfied by this court's appraisal of the effect of the erroneously excluded evidence. The contention that petitioner was denied due process by this court's holding (People v. Wells (1949), supra, pp. 357–358 of 33 Cal.2d, at pages 69–70 of 202 P.2d) that "the rejection of the physician's proffered testimonies [as to Wells' state of mind at the time of the assault] did not result in a miscarriage of justice" is, in effect, a contention that this court, while carefully scrutinizing and sharply differing among some of the justices as to the effect of the error, ignored the most fundamental concepts of fairness and justice. We need refer only to the opinions on which our previous decision rested (the dissenting opinions as well as the majority opinion) to show that affirmance of the judgment of conviction was not wanting in due process.

[5] The trial court did not discriminate against Wells in ruling on the admissibility of evidence, and this court did not discriminate against him in applying section 4½ of article VI of the state Constitution; therefore, there was no denial of equal protection. (See Howard v. Com. of Kentucky (1906), supra, p. 176 of 200 U.S., at page 192 of 26 S.Ct., 50 L.Ed. 421; State v. Burke (1928), 126 Or. 651 [269 P. 869, 270 P. 756, 759], where defendant contended that application of provisions of the Oregon Constitution and statute similar to art. VI, § 4½, violated the Fourteenth Amendment; appeal dismissed on the ground that the asserted federal question was frivolous, 279 U.S. 811, 49 S.Ct. 262, 73 L.Ed. 971.)

[6, 7] It is true, as petitioner asserts, that he was entitled to a jury trial on the issues of fact raised by his plea of not guilty, including the question whether he acted with "malice aforethought." He was accorded such trial, and our decision did not retroactively deprive him of it. Petitioner is mistaken in his suggestion that the right of jury trial under the Constitution of this state includes the absolute right to have all relevant evidence before the jury in every case.

[8] In support of his contention that imposition of the death penalty in the present situation is cruel and unusual punishment, petitioner cites only the Eighth Amendment of the United States Constitution [1] and section 6 of article I of the state Constitution, which forbid infliction of such punishment. In People v. Oppenheimer (1909), 156 Cal. 733, 737, 106 P. 74, imposition of the death penalty on a prisoner who committed a battery under circumstances materially similar to those here was upheld against the objection that it amounted to cruel and unusual punishment. We are convinced that that case was correctly decided. (See also In re Finley (1905), 1 Cal.App. 198, 203, 81 P. 1041.)

For the reasons above stated the application for the writ of habeas corpus is denied.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

EDMONDS, Justice (concurring and dissenting).

I concur in the conclusion that Wells, at the time he attacked the prison guard, was "* * * undergoing a life sentence in a State prison * * *" within the meaning of section 4500 of the Penal Code. The decisions of this court uniformly declare that a sentence for a minimum term of years is one for life unless and until reduced. The penal history of Wells conclusively shows that in refusing to remit any portion of his sentence, the Adult Authority committed no abuse of discretion but, on the contrary, exercised sound judgment.

However, the second ground of Wells' petition presents a question which, if more broadly stated, would require a reexamination of the evidence upon which he was convicted. He asserts that he was denied due process of law by the decision of this court upon rulings of the trial judge excluding testimony. I agree that upon the appeal from the judgment, the "appraisal of the effect of the erroneously excluded evidence" did not violate any constitutional guaranty. This answer meets the narrow issue tendered by the allegations of the petition but ignores the basic question which is stated in the points and authorities in support of Wells' demand for relief upon constitutional grounds.

In the petitioner's brief that question is presented as follows:

"A. Petitioner at his trial * * * was not allowed to present to the jury his only major defense; i. e., evidence regarding his state of mind and intent at the time of the alleged act;

"B. The matter of the intent with which an act is done is within the exclusive province of the jury." Strictly speaking, these charges are not pleaded as one of the formal grounds for habeas corpus. But unquestionably counsel is not basing his claim of lack of due process solely upon the action of this court in considering the evidence tendered at the trial. His argument challenges the rulings of the trial judge and is built upon the premise that intent is an essential element of the crime of which Wells was convicted.

Under such circumstances, and particularly with human life at stake, niceties of pleading should not be the decisive factor in this court's conclusions. Justice requires a determination of the question as to whether the exclusion of the evidence offered by Wells upon the trial violated constitutional guarantees. As to that question, I again state my conclusions concerning it as follows: "The refusal to admit such evidence allows one to be convicted of the crime defined by section 4500 of the Penal Code without proof of the requisite mental intent specified by the statute and constitutes a denial of due process of law * * " and " * * the ruling necessarily constitutes a miscarriage of justice within the meaning of section 4½ of Article VI of the Constitution." (People v. Wells, 33 Cal.2d 330, 359, 202 P.2d 53.)

For these reasons, in my opinion the writ of habeas corpus should issue.

CARTER and TRAYNOR, JJ., concur.

1. Infliction of barbarous punishment would not violate the Eighth Amendment; it might violate the Fourteenth. (See State of Louisiana ex rel. Francis v. Resweber (1947), 329 U.S. 459, 462, 463, 470, 67 S.Ct. 374, 91 L.Ed. 422.)

In re NEWTON'S ESTATE.

KUCHEL v. NEWTON.

L. A. 20827.

Supreme Court of California, in Bank.

Sept. 7, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 2, 1950.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Arthur B. Newton, deceased, wherein the widow of deceased, Beverly M. Newton, filed objections to a part of the report of the inheritance tax appraiser. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Harold B. Jeffery, J., sustained objections of the widow and Thomas H. Kuchel, Controller of the State of California, appealed. The Supreme Court, Shenk, J., held that intangible personalty, which was held in New York, and transferred by special power of appointment to wife of donee under will of donee, who was a resident of California at death, was subject to California inheritance tax.

Order reversed.

Prior opinion, 210 P.2d 551.

1. Wills ⇐77, 589

The exercise of a power of appointment occurs at time of donor's death, because a will only takes effect as of time of death of testator.

2. Taxation ⇐878(2)

Intangible personalty, which was held in New York, and transferred by special power of appointment to wife of donee under will of donee, who was a resident of California at death, was subject to California inheritance tax. Revenue and Taxation Code, §§ 13692, 13693.

James W. Hickey, Sacramento, Morton L. Barker, Los Angeles, Vincent J. McMahon, Sacramento, for appellant.

Leon W. Delbridge, Pasadena, Brady & Nossaman, and Walter L. Nossaman, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

McCutchen, Thomas, Matthew, Griffiths & Greene, San Francisco, amici curiæ.

SHENK, Justice.

The state controller has appealed from an order sustaining objections to the report of the inheritance tax appraiser and fixing inheritance tax in the sum of $14.08, which was less by $31,105.19 than the amount fixed in the report.

The facts are not in dispute. A testamentary trust was created in the state of New York by Charles E. Newton, the decedent's father, who died a resident of that state on October 19, 1921. The trust provided for an income to the decedent during his life. Further provisions gave him the power by will to appoint his wife to take on his death a specified proportion of the trust assets. The decedent executed a will in New York on May 2nd, 1930, whereby he appointed his wife as the beneficiary. Later he and his wife removed to California where as a resident he died on March 11, 1943, leaving his widow, the respondent herein. His will was admitted to probate.

The assets of the trust subject to the appointment consist entirely of intangibles valued at $412,510.36 held in trust by New York trustees. There are no shares of California corporations. The widow objected to the controller's report on the ground that under the decision in Re Estate of Bowditch, 189 Cal. 377, 208 P. 282, 23 A.L.R. 735, the state was without jurisdiction to impose the portion of the tax measured by the appraised value of the intangibles held in New York.

[1] There is no merit in the contention that the exercise of the power of appointment occurred at the time the decedent made his will in New York. Since a will takes effect as of the time of the death of the testator there can be no question that the death of the decedent determined the time of the exercise of the power. Nichols v. Emery, 109 Cal. 323, 329, 41 P. 1089, 50 Am.St.Rep. 43.

Prior to 1922 the history regarding the taxation in this state of transfers of property through the gift or exercise of powers of appointment was substantially the following:

The Inheritance Tax Act of 1905, Stats. 1905, p. 341, section 1, made taxable the exercise of powers of appointment as a transfer of property by will from the donee of the power. (Provisions regarding non-exercise of the power will not be noted.) The Inheritance Tax Act of 1913, Stats. 1913, p. 1066, repealed that provision with a saving clause, and in section 3 provided that the gift of a power of appointment was a taxable transfer of property from the doner to the donee upon the death of the donor. In 1917, Stats.1917, p. 880, the 1913 enactment was repealed with a saving clause and the legislature reverted to the 1905 provision, again making taxable the transfer by the exercise of the power, section 2(6), and it remained so until 1935. In the 1917 act, sec. 1(2), the words "estate" and "property" included all personal property of resident decedents within or without the state.

In August 1922 this court decided In re Estate of Bowditch, supra, 189 Cal. 377, 208 P. 282, 23 A.L.R. 735. The resident decedent, Charlotte Bowditch, was the donee of a power to appoint and did appoint by will the beneficiary of a trust created under the will of her father, a Massachusetts domiciliary. The trust assets amounting in value to some $299,000 consisted entirely of personal property, the nature of which was not disclosed in the opinion, located in Massachusetts. The facts were in essence parallel to those of the present case and the appeal brought to this court the question whether the state had jurisdiction to include the transfer by the decedent's exercise of the power of appointment as a taxable transfer. The court recognized that a succession to property effected independently of the authority of a particular state was not taxable by that state and was not within the purview of its inheritance tax acts. In applying the test it was observed that the state had plenary power over the administration and disposition of estates of persons domiciled here including personal property wherever situated, and that jurisdiction to exercise the taxing power attached when there was actual or constructive situs of the property within the state. The court concluded, however, that under the facts the state could not tax the transfer effected through the exercise of the power by the decedent. The court relied on United States v. Field, 255 U.S. 257, 41 S. Ct. 256, 65 L.Ed. 617, 18 A.L.R. 1461, Walker v. Treasurer & Receiver General, 221 Mass. 600, 109 N.E. 647, and Shattuck v. Burrage, 229 Mass. 448, 118 N.E. 889, in making the following statement: "But personal property which is the subject of a power of appointment does not acquire a constructive situs in the state of the domicile of the donee of the said power under this theory [i.e. that personal estate wherever situated is deemed to have the situs of the domicile of the owner], for such property is no part of the estate of the donee. 'When a donor gives to another power of appointment over property, the donee of the power does not thereby become the owner of the property. The donee has no title whatever to the property. The power is simply a delegation to the donee of authority to act for the donor in the disposition of the latter's property.' * * * Therefore, for the purpose of testamentary succession and distribution, the property here involved has acquired no situs in this state, either actual or constructive, and the laws of Massachusetts alone control the transfer thereof under the will of Charlotte Bowditch." [189 Cal. 377, 208 P. 283]. Thus the theory was that since the interest of the transferee was derived from the will of the Massachusetts donor, there was no resort to the sovereignty of this state for the transfer of the property interest through the decedent's exercise of the power of appointment. See In re Estate of Dillingham, 196 Cal. 525, 533–534, 238 P. 367.

In 1923, Stats.1923, p. 693, sec. 1(2), the following italicized words were added in the definition of "estate" and "property" to include "all personal property within or without the state or subject to the jurisdiction thereof."

Between that year and the next statutory change the United States Supreme Court decided Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. v. Doughton, 1926, 272 U.S. 567, 47 S.Ct. 202, 71 L.Ed. 413. The facts were somewhat similar to those in the Bowditch case. The donor died in Massachusetts leaving a will probated there. A trust created thereby, located and administered in Massachusetts, gave to the donor's daughter the power to appoint the beneficiary of trust assets consisting of intangibles valued at nearly $400,000. The donee appointed beneficiaries by will and died a resident of North Carolina. The question of the jurisdiction of North Carolina to tax the exercise of the power under a statute designating the exercise thereof as a transfer taxable in the same manner as though the property belonged absolutely to the donee was presented to the Supreme Court. The court noted the principles of the cases above cited, among others, as those commonly accepted as controlling the question of the constructive situs of the intangibles in the taxing state and concluded that no right exercised by the donee was conferred by North Carolina; therefore that North Carolina did not have jurisdiction to impose the tax. Mr. Justice Holmes stated his dissenting view that the result was irreconcilable with Bullen v. Wisconsin, 240 U.S. 625, 36 S.Ct. 473, 60 L.Ed. 830, where the general power was considered to have the same effect as ownership.

In 1935, Stats. 1935, p. 1266, the legislature amended section 2(6) to make the gift of the power a taxable transfer as in the 1913 statute. As amended the section read: "Whenever any person or corporation shall be given a power of appointment by virtue of any disposition of property made before or after the passage of this act, such gift of power of appointment shall, under the provisions of this act, be deemed a taxable transfer made from the donor of said power to the donee thereof at the date of the donor's death; provided that where the donor of a power of appointment dies prior to the taking effect of this amendment and the power is exercised thereafter the exercise of said power of appointment shall be deemed a transfer taxable as provided in subdivision 6 of section 2 of the Inheritance Tax Act of 1921 as amended in 1929." At the same time the definition of "estate" and "property", sec. 1(2), was amended to include "all intangible personal property of resident decedents within or without the State or subject to the jurisdiction thereof."

The foregoing provisions of section 2(6), with the addition of the words "general or limited" preceding the words "power of appointment", were in effect retained by the amendment of 1941, Stats. 1941, p. 1222, now embodied in secs. 13692 and 13693, Rev. and Tax Code. The 1935 act as amended in 1941 was the statute in force at the time of the decedent's death in 1943. The result was to impose the tax on a transfer by the gift of the power of appointment made by a resident donor, except that the imposition of the tax on a transfer through the exercise of the power by a resident donee was saved where the donor had died prior to the effective date of the 1935 amendment. The death of the donor, decedent's father, prior to the effective date of the 1935 statute calls for the application of the saving clause to the decedent's exercise of the power. There is no question of the correctness of the inheritance tax appraiser's computation of the tax if the statute applies to impose it.

In 1938 the Supreme Court decided Curry v. McCanless, 307 U.S. 357, 59 S.Ct. 900, 83 L.Ed. 1339, 123 A.L.R. 162, and Graves v. Elliott, 307 U.S. 383, 59 S.Ct. 913, 83 L.Ed. 1356. In the McCanless case the question was whether Tennessee as well as Alabama might constitutionally impose death taxes upon the transfer of an interest in intangibles held in trust in Alabama but passing by testamentary appointment under a donated power exercised by a decedent domiciled in Tennessee. The decedent was both the donor and the donee of the power. By statute Tennessee imposed a tax on transfers of resident decedents' intangible property wherever located including transfers under powers of appointment. The Supreme Court noted the nature of intangibles, the practical difficulties in applying to them a physical situs, and the sovereign power which extends over intangibles of a domiciled decedent although they have no physical location within the state exercising the power. It was declared that a jurisdiction which does not depend on physical presence within the state is not lost by declaring that it is absent. It was held that the power to tax the intangibles was not lost because the court might choose to say that they were located elsewhere; that the decedent's power to dispose of intangibles was a potential source of wealth and therefore property in his hands; and that there was no substantial difference between that and any other case in which at the moment of death the evidences of intangibles passing under the will of a decedent domiciled in one state were physically present in another. The conclusion followed that the transfer was taxable under the Tennessee statute. The Elliott case determined that New York might constitutionally tax a domiciliary's relinquishment at death of a power to revoke a trust of intangibles held by a Colorado trustee. Following the McCanless decision it was held that the right to revoke the trust had the attributes of property and was a potential source of wealth; that the legal interest in the intangibles held in trust in Colorado was not so dissociated from the person of the decedent as to be beyond the taxing power of the state of domicile any more than the decedent's other rights in intangibles. The court said that, as in the case of any other intangibles, control over the person and estate of the decedent at the place of domicile and the duty of decedent to contribute to the support of government there, afforded adequate constitutional cases for the imposition of a tax measured by the value of the intangibles transmitted or relinquished at death. The fact that the power was donated by another was held to be without significance. Reliance was in part on Bullen v. Wisconsin, 240 U.S. 625, 36 S.Ct. 473, 60 L.Ed. 830, invoked as support for the dissenting view in the Wachovia case. See also Orr v. Gilman, 1901, 183 U.S. 278, 22 S.Ct. 213, 46 L.Ed. 196; Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U.S. 189, 23 S.Ct. 277, 47 L.Ed. 439; Chanler v. Kelsey, 205 U.S. 466, 27 S.Ct. 550, 51 L.Ed. 882. Cf. Brooke v. City of Norfolk, 277 U.S. 27, 48 S.Ct. 422, 72 L.Ed. 767; Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Virginia, 280 U.S. 83, 50 S.Ct. 59, 74 L.Ed. 180, 67 A.L.R. 386.

The foregoing declarations disclosed the fundamental error in arriving at a contrary conclusion in the Wachovia and Bowditch cases by the failure to ascribe the recognized proprietary attributes to similar acts. Consequently in Graves v. Schmidlapp, 1942, 315 U.S. 657, 62 S.Ct. 70, 86 L.Ed. 1097, 141 A.L.R. 948, the Supreme Court overruled the Wachovia case in applying the Bullen, McCanless and Elliott decisions to sustain the constitutional power of New York to tax the transfer effected by a resident decedent's exercise of a power of appointment created by the will of a nonresident donor in respect to intangibles held in trust in Massachusetts. In reversing the New York Court of Appeals; In re Thayer's Estate, 286 N.Y. 596, 35 N.E.2d 937, affirmance of the Surrogate's decree, 172 Misc. 426, 15 N.Y.S.2d 208, which reduced the assessed estate tax on the authority of the Wachovia case, the Supreme Court said: "The conclusion there reached and the reasons advanced in its support cannot be reconciled with the decision and the reasoning of the Bullen, the McCanless and the Elliott cases. It is plain that if appropriate emphasis be placed on the orderly administration of justice rather than blind adherence to conflicting precedents, the Wachovia case must be overruled. There is no reason why the state should continue to be deprived of revenue from a subject which from the beginning has been within the reach of its taxing power; a subject over which we cannot say the state's control has been curtailed by the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. No interest which could be served by so rigid an adherence to stare decisis is superior to the demands of a system of justice based on a considered and a consistent application of the Constitution." [315 U.S. 657, 62 S. Ct. 875]

[2] Points of similarity or difference in the various cases are immaterial because they also are of no significance here. There can now be no question of the power of California to impose the tax in question; and conflicting declarations which led to a contrary result in the Bowditch case are overruled. The statute clearly provides that the exercise of the power of appointment is deemed "a transfer taxable under the provisions of this act, in the same manner as though the property to which such appointment relates belonged absolutely to the donee of such power, and had been bequeathed or devised by such donee by will." Inheritance Tax Act of 1921, as amended in 1929, sec. 2(6), Stats. 1929 p. 1834. The statutory provision as incorporated in the 1935 act is applicable here and supports the imposition of the tax reported by the inheritance tax appraiser.

The order is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS, CARTER, TRAYNOR, SCHAUER, and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

I concur, but deem it advisable to spell out with particularity the reasons for my concurrence.

The Inheritance Tax Acts of this state plainly provide for the imposition of the tax in the present case. Section 2 of the Inheritance Tax Act of 1935, as amended in 1941, by which this appeal is governed, provides:

"A tax shall be and is hereby imposed upon the transfer of any property, real or personal, or of any interest therein or income therefrom, in trust or otherwise * * said taxes to be upon the market value of such property at the date of death of the decedent and at the rates hereinafter prescribed * * *

"(6) Powers of appointment. Whenever any person or corporation shall be given a general or limited power of appointment by virtue of any disposition of property made before or after 5 p. m. of June 25, 1935, such gift of power of appointment shall, under the provisions of this act * * * be deemed a taxable transfer made from the donor of said power to the donee thereof at the date of the donor's death, except that:

"(a) Where the donor of a power of appointment died prior to 5 p. m. of June 25, 1935, and the power is exercised thereafter, the exercise of said power of appointment shall be deemed a transfer taxable as provided in Subdivision (6) of Section 2 of the Inheritance Tax Act of 1921, as amended in 1929." 3 Deering's Gen. Laws, Act 8495, § 2, pp. 3207–3208.

Subdivision (6) of Section 2 of the Inheritance Tax Act of 1921 as amended in 1929 provides: "Whenever any person, trustee or corporation shall exercise a power of appointment derived from any disposition of property made either before or after the passage of this act, such appointment, when made, shall be deemed a transfer taxable under the provisions of this act, in the same manner as though the property to which such appointment relates belonged absolutely to the donee of such power, and had been bequeathed or devised by such donee by will." Stats.1929, c. 844, pp. 1836–1837. Italics added.

Subdivision (2) of Section 1 of the 1935 act provides that " 'property' as used in this act * * * shall include all intangible personal property of resident decedents within or without the State or subject to the jurisdiction thereof." 3 Deering's Gen. Laws, Act 8495, § 1(2), p. 3206.

Decedent's father, the donor of the power, died in 1921. Decedent died domiciled in California on March 11, 1943, leaving a will executed in New York in 1930 appointing his wife, respondent herein, beneficiary under his power of appointment of the trust assets. His will was probated in California. Since the donor of the power died before June 25, 1935, and the power was exercised after that date, the 1921 and 1935 acts clearly impose a tax on the transfer of the trust assets from decedent to his wife by virtue of decedent's exercise of the power of appointment since the appointment is "deemed a transfer taxable under the provisions of this act, in the same manner as though the property to which such appointment relates belonged absolutely to the donee of such power, and had been bequeathed or devised by such donee by will."

Respondent contends, however that, notwithstanding the express statutory provisions for the taxation of the transfer, the transfer is not taxable under the decision of this court in Re Estate of Bowditch, 189 Cal. 377, 208 p. 282, 23 A.L.R. 735. In her view, the Bowditch case, unlike Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. v. Doughton, 272 U.S. 567, 575, 47 S.Ct. 202, 71 L.Ed. 413, did not decide that there is a constitutional impediment to the imposition of the tax. She views Estate of Bowditch as a decision that the California Inheritance Tax Acts do not apply to transfers of property by one who, under California property law, is not the owner of the property transferred. She asserts that since the Bowditch case decided only that the statute did not impose such a tax, it is unaffected by the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Graves v. Schmidlapp, 315 U.S. 657, 62 S.Ct. 870, 86 L.Ed. 1097, 141 A.L.R. 948, that the Fourteenth Amendment does not prohibit its imposition.

Respondent's contention finds no support in the language of the statute or in the decision of this court in Estate of Bowditch. The imposition of an inheritance or estate tax does not depend on the decedent's ownership of the property under common-law principles. The tax is not imposed on the property, but on the decedent's transfer of that property. When, as in the present case, the statute expressly makes the transfer of property taxable "in the same manner as though the property * * * belonged absolutely" to the decedent, it is irrelevant that under common-law concepts of property ownership the property did not belong absolutely to the decedent. The only question then is whether the imposition of such a tax is within the constitutional power of the state.

Since 1901 it has been recognized that the state may properly tax the transfer of property by the donee of the power to his appointee under its plenary power to control succession to the estates of its domiciliaries. "Whatever be the technical source of title of a grantee under a power of appointment, it cannot be denied that, in reality and substance, it is the execution of the power that gives to the grantee the property passing under it. * * * When David Dows, Sr., devised this property to the appointees under the will of his son, he necessarily subjected it to the charge that the state might impose on the privilege accorded to the son of making a will. That charge is the same in character as if it had been laid on the inheritance of the estate of the son himself; that is, for the privilege of succeeding to property under a will." Orr v. Gilman, 183 U.S. 278, 282–283, 22 S.Ct. 213, 215, 46 L.Ed. 196; Chanler v. Kelsey, 205 U.S. 466, 474–475, 477, 27 S.Ct. 550, 51 L.Ed. 882.

"Decedent's * * * power to dispose of the intangibles at death was property in his hands in New York, where he was domiciled. Graves v. Elliott, supra. He there made effective use of the power to bestow his bounty on the widow. Its exercise by will to make a gift was as much an enjoyment of a property right as would have been a like bequest to his widow from his own securities. See Helvering v. Horst, 311 U.S. 112, 117, 61 S.Ct. 144, 147, 85 L.Ed. 75, 131 A.L.R. 655. * * * Taxation of such enjoyment of the power to dispose of property is as much within the constitutional power of the state of his domicile as is the taxation of the transfer at death of intangibles which he owns.

"Since it is the exercise of the power to dispose of the intangibles which is the taxable event, the mere fact that the power was acquired as a donation from another is without significance. We can perceive no ground for saying that its exercise by the donee is for that reason any the less the enjoyment of a property right, or any the less subject to taxation at his domicile. The source of the power by gift no more takes its exercise by the donee out of the taxing power than the like disposition of a chose in action or a share of stock, ownership of which is acquired by gift." Graves v. Schmidlapp, 315 U.S. 657, 662–663, 62 S.Ct. 870, 874, 86 L.Ed. 1097, 141 A.L.R. 948.

Graves v. Schmidlapp did not alter any concepts of property ownership. The taxability of transfers of property by a donee's exercise of a power of appointment was established by the Orr and Chanler cases under statutes identical with section 2(6) of the 1921 act under which Estate of Bowditch was decided. See also, Bullen v. Wisconsin, 240 U.S. 625, 36 S.Ct. 473, 60 L.Ed. 830. Nor did United States v. Field, 255 U.S. 257, 41 S.Ct. 256, 257, 65 L.Ed. 617, 18 A.L.R. 1461, announce a different rule. In that case, the court was not concerned with a statute expressly taxing the transfer of property by the donee's exercise of a power of appointment such as those before it in the Orr and Chanler cases or that before the California Supreme Court in Estate of Bowditch. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue sought to include in the decedent's gross estate the value of property subject to the decedent's power of appointment derived from her husband's will, on the theory that the donee of a power of appointment was the owner of property subject thereto within the meaning of section 202(a) of the Revenue Act of 1916.[1] He relied, not on a statutory provision taxing the transfer of property by the exercise of a power of appointment, but on the general provision including in a decedent's gross estate all property owned by the decedent at the time of his death. The court held that there was no question "as to the power of Congress to impose a tax upon the passing of property under testamentary execution of a power of appointment," regarding that question as settled by Chanler v. Kelsey. It held that the only question was whether Congress had done so. The exercise of the power, in the absence of specific statutory provision therefor, did not of itself require the inclusion of the appointed property in the gross estate of the donee, and the court held that since Congress had not expressly authorized the inclusion of the appointed property in the decedent's gross estate the tax could not be sustained. United States v. Field, 255 U.S. 257, 263, 41 S.Ct. 256, 257, 65 L.Ed. 617, 18 A.L.R. 1461. Since the decision in the Field case, and without any change in concepts of property ownership, Congress has enacted legislation including in the donee's gross estate property subject to his power of appointment as if he were the absolute owner thereof. Internal Revenue Code § 811(f). There has been no change in the concept of property ownership enunciated by the Field case; that decision is still applicable to powers of appointment exercised before the enactment of section 811(f). Helvering v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co., 316 U.S. 56, 63, 62 S.Ct. 925, 86 L.Ed. 1266, 139 A.L.R. 1513. Congress did, however, under the same concepts of property ownership underlying the Field decision, enact a statute by which property transferred by the exercise or nonexercise of a power of appointment is deemed transferred by the donee of the power and included in his gross estate. Helvering v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co., 316 U.S. 56, 65, 62 S.Ct. 925, 86 L.Ed. 1266, 139 A.L.R. 1513.

The basis of the decision in the Bowditch case is not that the transfer of property by appointment may not be taxed as a transfer by will from the donee, but that California did not have the constitutional power to tax the transfer if the evidences of ownership of the intangible personal property transferred were located outside the state. The court expressly held that the plenary power of the state to tax succession to property could not be asserted in that case for the reason that "both the physical and constructive situs of the [appointed] property" was outside the state. Since the legal title was held by nonresident trustees and the evidences of ownership of the intangibles transferred in that case were located outside the state, the court held that California did not have jurisdiction to tax the transfer of that property by the will of a resident decedent. The tax could be sustained "only in the event that the personal property which is the subject of the said power is within the jurisdiction of the state." In re Estate of Bowditch, 189 Cal. 377, 380, 208 P. 282, 284, 23 A.L.R. 735. The court's determination of California's "jurisdiction to impose an inheritance tax" was cited with approval in the 1926 decision of the United States Supreme Court holding that the imposition of a similar tax under an identical statute was beyond the constitutional power of the state of North Carolina. Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. v. Doughton, 272 U.S. 567, 575, 47 S.Ct. 202, 71 L.Ed. 413.

The error of the decisions in the Bowditch and Wachovia Bank & Trust cases arose out of the reasoning that intangible personal property must have a situs or physical location. Although the situs of realty or tangible personal property controls the jurisdiction of a state to tax the transfer thereof, Frick v. Pennsylvania, 268 U.S. 473, 489, 45 S.Ct. 603, 69 L.Ed. 1058, 42 A.L.R. 316; Treichler v. State of Wisconsin, 338 U.S. 251, 70 S.Ct. 1, 3–4, "very different considerations, both theoretical and practical, apply to the taxation of intangibles, that is, rights which are not related to physical things. Such rights are but relationships between persons, natural or corporate, which the law recognizes by attaching to them certain sanctions enforceable in courts. The power of government over them and the protection which it gives them cannot be exerted through control of a physical thing. They can be made effective only through control over and protection afforded to those persons whose relationships are the origin of the rights. See Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Sturm, 174 U.S. 710, 716, 19 S.Ct. 797, 799, 43 L.Ed. 1144; Harris v. Balk, 198 U.S. 215, 222, 25 S.Ct. 625, 626, 49 L.Ed. 1023, 3 Ann.Cas. 1084. Obviously, as sources of actual and potential wealth—which is an appropriate measure of any tax imposed on ownership or its exercise—they cannot be dissociated from the persons from whose relationships they are derived. They are not in any sense fictions. They are indisputable realities.

1. Now section 811(a) of the Internal Revenue Code, 26 U.S.C.A. § 811(a), requiring the inclusion in the decedent's gross estate of all property "to the extent of the interest therein of the decedent at the time of his death."

"The power to tax 'is an incident of sovereignty, and is co-extensive with that to which it is an incident. All subjects over which the sovereign power of a state extends, are objects of taxation; but those over which it does not extend, are, upon the soundest principles, exempt from taxation.' McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 429, 4 L.Ed. 579. But this does not mean that the sovereign power of the state does not extend over intangibles of a domiciled resident because they have no physical location within its territory, or that its power to tax is lost because we may choose to say they are located elsewhere. A jurisdiction which does not depend on physical presence within the state is not lost by declaring that it is absent. From the beginning of our constitutional system control over the person at the place of his domicile and his duty there, common to all citizens, to contribute to the support of government have been deemed to afford an adequate constitutional basis for imposing on him a tax on the use and enjoyment of rights in intangibles measured by their value. Until this moment that jurisdiction has not been thought to depend on any factor other than the domicile of the owner within the taxing state, or to compel the attribution to intangibles of a physical presence within its territory, as though they were chattels, in order to support the tax." Curry v. McCanless, 307 U.S. 357, 365–367, 59 S.Ct. 900, 905, 83 L.Ed. 1339, 123 A.L.R. 162; Graves v. Elliott, 307 U.S. 383, 386, 59 S.Ct. 913, 83 L.Ed. 1356.

It follows, therefore, that since California did have the power to tax the transfer of the appointed property by the donee and plainly provided for such a tax, and since its jurisdiction to impose the tax did not depend upon "the attribution to intangibles of a physical presence within its territory," the fact that the legal title to the intangibles was held by nonresident trustees and the evidences of ownership of the securities subject to Charlotte Bowditch's power of appointment were physically located outside the state should not have deprived California of jurisdiction to tax their transfer. In the light of its decision in Curry v. McCanless, the United States Supreme Court in Graves v. Schmidlapp, 315 U.S. 657, 662–663, 665, 62 S.Ct. 870, 86 L.Ed. 1097, 141 A.L.R. 948, overruled its earlier decision in the Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. case and held that the state's jurisdiction to tax the transfer of the appointed property was not lost because the "intangibles * * * have no geographical location" within its territory, so long as the donee of the power was domiciled in the taxing state. The court held that there was no question that the statute there under consideration, essentially identical with section 2(6) of the 1921 act, taxed the transfer as one from the donee of the power of appointment,[2] or that New York had the constitutional power to enact such a statute. Chanler v. Kelsey, 205 U.S. 466, 477, 27 S.Ct. 550, 51 L.Ed. 882. Since the transfer by the donee of the power was the taxable event, the residence of the donor was immaterial. "The mere fact that the power was acquired as a donation from another is without significance." 315 U.S. at pages 662, 663, 62 S.Ct. 870, 874, 86 L.Ed. 1097, 141 A.L.R. 948. Since the jurisdiction to tax intangibles is not dependent on physical presence within the state, Curry v. McCanless, supra, it was held that neither the residence of the trustees nor the location of the evidences of ownership of the appointed intangibles affected the jurisdiction of the taxing state. 315 U.S. at pages 664–665, 62 S.Ct. 870, 86 L.Ed. 1097, 141 A.L.R. 948. For these reasons, the New York statute, admittedly valid as to property located within the state, was held valid as to resident donees irrespective of the "physical and constructive situs" of the property. With the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Graves v. Schmidlapp, the decision of this court in Estate of Bowditch that California did not have the constitutional power to tax the transfer therein has been as conclusively repudiated as the similar decision of the New York Court of Appeals, In re Thayer's Estate, 286 N.Y. 596, 35 N.E. 2d 937, which was reversed in Graves v. Schmidlapp. The question therefore is not, as respondent asserts, whether Estate of Bowditch as a decision on statutory construction should be overruled, but whether Estate of Bowditch as a decision on California's constitutional power to tax contrary to the latest decision of the United States Supreme Court must be overruled. As a decision predicated on the due process clause of the United States Constitution, Estate of Bowditch cannot survive Curry v. McCanless and Graves v. Schmidlapp.

2. "We are here concerned with a tax on the transfer of property from a decedent who by virtue of her power of appointment is, by the express language of the statute [the same as section 2(6)], deemed the absolute owner of the property to which her power of appointment relates." In re Estate of Rohnert, 244 Wis. 404, 409, 12 N.W.2d 684, 686.

Respondent, however, contends that "even if Estate of Bowditch has been overruled by a 1942 decision [Graves v. Schmidlapp] as to any constitutional question involved, the 1935 act and the 1941 amendments were made in view of, and adopted the rule of that case." It is her view that the reenactment of section 2 (6) of the 1921 act after Estate of Bowditch without change therein was "obviously motivated by a desire to conform the statute to the Court's decision," for, had the Legislature disapproved the decision therein, it would have expressly repudiated it. It is in effect contended that the perpetuation of an erroneous interpretation of the United States Constitution may be achieved by legislative failure to defy the decisions of this court and of the Supreme Court of the United States announcing that interpretation.

Section 2 (6) of the 1921 act insofar as it governs the present case was not amended in 1935; it was incorporated into the 1935 act just as it read at the time the Bowditch case was decided. The shifting of the tax from the exercise of the power by the donee to the creation of the power by the donor was expressly made applicable only to powers created by donors dying after June 25, 1935, the effective date of the amendment; as to powers created by donors dying before that date but exercised thereafter, the exercise of the power remained "a transfer taxable under the provisions of this act, in the same manner as though the property to which such appointment relates belonged absolutely to the donee of such power". The express language of the statute negatives any inference that the Legislature repealed the provision taxing the transfer by the exercise of the power because of the construction and application it was given by Estate of Bowditch. How, in the face of the fact that the Legislature incorporated the earlier statute verbatim into the 1935 act, can it be said that it repealed the provision? The Legislature could not more clearly demonstrate an intention to stand by the method of taxing such transfers so far as it constitutionally could do so. That intention is also demonstrated by the 1923 amendment of section 2 (1) of the 1921 act, Stats.1923, c. 337, p. 694, providing for the taxation of all transfers at death of intangible personal property of resident decedents "within or without the state or subject to the jurisdiction thereof". Italicized words added by the 1923 amendment. By that amendment the Legislature clearly expressed an intention to tax all transfers at death to the full extent of California's jurisdiction to tax. No other construction of legislative intention can be maintained consistently with this amendment.

Whatever merit there may be in the theory that the re-enactment of a statute without change adopts the judicial construction thereof, cf. Girouard v. United States, 328 U.S. 61, 69, 66 S.Ct. 826, 90 L.Ed. 1084; Cleveland v. United States, 329 U.S. 14, 22-23, 67 S.Ct. 13, 91 L.Ed. 12; Helvering v. Hallock, 309 U.S. 106, 119, 60 S.Ct. 444, 84 L.Ed. 604, 125 A.L.R. 1368, it is limited to cases in which the preceding decision has purported to interpret the statute. It has no application when the decision was that enforcement of the statute was beyond the state's constitutional power. Estate of Bowditch did not interpret section 2 (6) of the 1921 act; it decided that, as properly interpreted, the statute prescribed a tax that was beyond California's jurisdiction to impose. The decision therein was so interpreted by a later decision of this court, Estate of Dillingham, 196 Cal. 525, 534, 238 P. 367, and was cited by the United States Supreme Court as authority for its decision that a similar application of an identical statute by North Carolina was beyond its constitutional power. Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. v. Doughton, 272 U.S. 567, 575, 47 S.Ct. 202, 71 L.Ed. 413; see also, Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. v. Doughton, 189 N.C. 50, 55, 126 S.E. 176; Trowbridge, Recent Inheritance Tax and Estate Tax Decisions, 14 Cal.L. Rev. 1, 8; Nossaman, State Taxation of Intangibles, 18 Cal.L.Rev. 345, 369. It would be an anomalous doctrine that legislative re-enactment of a statute held partially unconstitutional adopts the decision on the issue of constitutionality as part of the statute. This court is not estopped to correct its own error merely because the Legislature has not chosen to defy the court's interpretation of the United States Constitution.

For the same reasons, it cannot be inferred from the Controller's failure to reassert the provisions of section 2 (6) in cases such as Estate of Bowditch that his inaction constitutes an administrative interpretation of the statute the same as that now urged by respondent. The Controller's failure after Estate of Bowditch to attempt to tax such transfers did not demonstrate an interpretation of the statute, but only the recognition that under Bowditch and Wachovia the application of the statute according to the plain meaning of its provisions would be unconstitutional. The Controller can no more be required to defy the decisions of this court and the United States Supreme Court on the constitutionality of a statute than can the state Legislature. The Controller did not unduly delay in asserting the jurisdiction that the United States Supreme Court in 1942 asserted that he has; this proceeding was begun in 1943. It cannot reasonably be said that this is a case in which administrative or legislative inaction demonstrates an intention to accept an interpretation of the statute at variance with its plain meaning and the interpretation given identical statutes by the United States Supreme Court and the courts of other states. Graves v. Schmidlapp, 315 U.S. 657, 662-663, 62 S. Ct. 87, 86 L.Ed. 1097, 141 A.L.R. 948; Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. v. Doughton, 189 N.C. 50, 53, 126 S.E. 176; Pitman v. Pitman, 314 Mass. 465, 469, 50 N.E.2d 69, 150 A.L.R. 509; National Shawmut Bank v. Joy, 315 Mass. 457, 472, 53 N.E.2d 113; Pennsylvania Co. v. Kelly, 134 N.J.Eq. 120, 133, 34 A.2d 538; Estate of Rohnert, 244 Wis. 404, 409, 12 N.W.2d 684.

Amici curiæ on behalf of respondent contend that if section 2 (6) of the 1935 act is construed to apply to the transfer in the present case, the statute violates the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment in that it arbitrarily discriminates between resident donees exercising powers of appointment created by donors dying before June 25, 1935, and resident donees exercising powers created by donors dying after that date. It is contended that, since the taxability of the exercise of the power by the donee depends upon the date of death of the donor, the statute is invalid for the reasons stated in Binney v. Long, 299 U.S. 280, 57 S.Ct. 206, 81 L.Ed. 239.

Binney v. Long involved a 1909 Massachusetts statute under which the transfer of property by the exercise or nonexercise of a power of appointment created by a donor dying before 1907 was taxed, but no tax was imposed if the power was created after 1907. A divided court, Justices Cardozo and Brandeis dissenting, held that the statute was invalid in that it arbitrarily selected a past date and discriminated between powers of appointment created before that date and those created thereafter. It is clear that the invalidity of the statute was not predicated upon the selection of a date upon which the taxability or nontaxability of the transfer depended, but upon the fact that the selection of the date bore no reasonable relation to any legitimate legislative purpose. "Upon its face the statute arbitrarily selects a past date, taxing the beneficiaries of an act if done prior to, and leaving untaxed beneficiaries of a precisely similar act if done subsequent to that date." Binney v. Long, 299 U.S. 280, 289, 57 S.Ct. 206, 210, 81 L.Ed. 239.

Binney v. Long has since been limited to the particular situation with which it was concerned and held not to apply to a statute in which the date upon which taxability is made to depend is not arbitrarily selected but is designed to effectuate a legitimate legislative purpose. Whitney v. State Tax Comm. of New York, 309 U.S. 530, 541, 60 S.Ct. 635, 84 L.Ed. 909. In the Whitney case the court held constitutional a New York statute similar to that in the present case in which the taxation of transfers of property subject to a power of appointment was shifted from the exercise of the power to the gift thereof, and in which an unintended tax immunity was averted by the provision that powers created before the effective date of the change but exercised thereafter would be taxed under the statute in effect at the time of their creation. In 1930 the New York Legislature shifted the tax on transfers of property subject to a power of appointment from the exercise by the donee to the creation by the donor. Powers created before 1930 but exercised after that date were immune from taxation, since they were created at the time the tax was imposed upon their exercise and they were exercised at the time the tax was imposed on their creation. By amendment to the inheritance tax act in 1932, New York specifically provided that as to such powers the method of taxation prevailing before 1930 should govern, just as the California Legislature has done in the 1935 and 1941 amendments of section 2 (6). The court upheld the statute against the contention that it was invalid under the doctrine of Binney v. Long, supra, in that it discriminated between donees whose powers were created before 1930 and who were taxed on the exercise thereof, and those whose powers were created after 1930 and were exempt from taxation on their exercise. The Binney case was distinguished on the ground that the date upon which taxation depended was arbitrarily selected whereas in the Whitney case it was the date upon which the change in method of taxation became effective, and the classification of powers into those created before 1930 and those created thereafter was reasonably related to the legislative purpose of preventing an unintended tax immunity. It was this statute that, as applied to resident donees of powers created by nonresident donors, was upheld by the United States Supreme Court in Graves v. Schmidlapp, 315 U.S. 657, 62 S. Ct. 870, 86 L.Ed. 1097, 141 A.L.R. 948.

The Whitney case cannot be distinguished on the ground that the power there considered was created by a resident donor. There, as in the present case, the statute unequivocally imposed the tax on the exercise of the power by the resident donee whether the donor was a resident of the state or not. The statute was upheld on the ground that it was merely a continuation of the method of taxation in force at the time of their creation for powers created before 1930 but exercised thereafter. Such a tax may be properly imposed even though the donor of the power was a nonresident and the transfer would not have been taxable had the power been created after 1930. Graves v. Schmidlapp, supra, 315 U.S. 657, 62 S.Ct. 870, 86 L.Ed. 1097, 141 A.L.R. 948. Since the residence of the donor does not control the imposition of a tax upon the transfer by the donee, it cannot be material to a claim that equal protection of the laws has been denied.

This appeal is therefore governed by Whitney v. State Tax Commission and not by Binney v. Long. Before June 25, 1935, the exercise of the power of appointment was made the taxable event; after that date, the tax is imposed upon the creation of the power. In cases such as the present, however, where the donor died before the effective date of the change and the donee exercised the power after that date, neither tax would apply and the same unintended tax immunity would be created as in the New York statute before its amendment. The California Legislature took the same course as the New York Legislature and provided that as to such powers the tax would be imposed under the statute previously in effect. Section 2 (6) of the 1921 act, as amended in 1929. In this manner, the Legislature created the same two classes of resident donees as those approved in the Whitney case. Given the legislative purpose to be achieved by the classification, the equal protection clause only requires that the classification be reasonably related to the achievement of that purpose and that all persons within each class be treated alike. In re Estate of Elston, 32 Cal.App.2d 652, 658–659, 90 P.2d 608.

99 Cal.App.2d 492

WETMORE et al. v. BRIG LUMBER MILLS CO. et al.

Civ. 14318.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 19, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 19, 1950.

Hearing Denied Nov. 16, 1950.

P. T. Wetmore and Margaret Wetmore brought action against the Brig Lumber Mills Company (a partnership) and others to recover damages for breach of contract to cut timber sold by plaintiff to defendants for $2 per 1,000 feet board measure of manufactured salable lumber. The Superior Court in and for the County of San Mateo, Ralph McGee, J., rendered a judgment for the plaintiffs, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that lumberman was entitled to give his opinion as to the quantity of timber on the land in question, and that evidence sustained finding that at time of breach of contract there were 1,500,000 feet of commercially, marketable timber left, entitling plaintiffs to $3,000 damages.

Affirmed.

1. Evidence ⇐474(5), 568(1)

In action for breach of contract to cut timber, lumberman who had spent ten years in felling timber, and who was familiar with the timber involved in the suit, was entitled to give his opinion as to the quantity of timber on the land, and his failure to cruise the timber went to the weight of his testimony only.

2. Logs and logging ⇐8(5)

In action for breach of contract to cut timber sold by plaintiffs to defendants for $2 per 1000 feet board measure of manufactured salable lumber, evidence sustained finding that at time of breach of contract by defendants there were 1,500,000 feet of commercially marketable timber left on the land, entitling plaintiffs to $3,000 damages.

Henry F. Wrigley, San Francisco, James A. Himmel, San Francisco, of counsel, for appellant.

Wallace S. Myers, San Anselmo, for respondents.

BRAY, Justice.

The issues on this appeal by defendants from a judgment for $3,250 in favor of plaintiffs in an action for breach of a contract to cut timber have by express concession of counsel for defendants been narrowed to the one question: Is there sufficient evidence to support the court's finding that at the time of the breach of the contract there was 1,500,000 feet of commercially marketable timber?

Facts.

On May 2, 1946, the parties entered into a written agreement whereby plaintiffs sold and defendants bought all the timber located on described land in Trinity County at the price of $2 per 1000 feet board measure of manufactured salable lumber. Defendants agreed to remove all lumber, tree tops and trimmings so that the "property shall be clean and free from Second Party's lumbering operation debris * * *." After removing approximately 213,000 feet of timber, for which they paid plaintiffs the agreed price, defendants abandoned the contract, and refused to cut any more timber or to clean up the debris. The court found the foregoing facts and gave judgment for plaintiffs in the sum of $250 damages for defendants' failure to remove the tree tops, trimmings, etc., and in the sum of $3000 damages for the breach of contract. This sum was based upon its finding that there was left 1,500,000 feet of commercially marketable timber, upon which the court allowed the contract price of $2 per 1000 feet.

Sufficiency of Evidence.

[1] While other questions are discussed in defendants' briefs, their closing brief stated (p. 11): "If the respondents by a preponderance of the evidence at the time of the trial had proved that there was 1,500,000 feet of merchantable marketable lumber on the respondents' land, appellant would be liable for the damages of $2.00 per thousand feet. But such is not the evidence in the instant case." On page 7 substantially the same concession is made. At oral argument, defendants' counsel, in response to a direct question by the court, conceded that the sole question before the court was the sufficiency of the evidence to support the court's finding as to the amount of marketable timber left. Therefore, we are confining our opinion to that single question. Plaintiff P. T. Wetmore testified that prior to the signing of the agreement, defendant Fisher and he went to the premises with a Mr. Moore who was employed by defendants as "their woodsman" and that after going over the property he stated to defendant Fisher that there were eight to twelve million feet of timber. This conversation was not denied. Plaintiff P. T. Wetmore also testified, without objection, that Jack Woods who "was in charge of the lumbering operations for the defendants" stated that he was willing to bet a hundred dollars "they would get 4 million feet out of there." This statement was not denied. Witness Hardin testified, without objection, that for ten years he had been engaged in the timber business, felling timber, trucking and sawing logs, and that there were between two and three million feet of marketable timber there. On cross-examination he testified that he had had no experience in cruising timber to find the quantity in a given area, and had not cruised the timber on the Wetmore property to find the exact amount thereon. When asked if he knew how much timber there was on the property he stated, "Well, no, not exactly." He had previously testified that he had gone on the property many times and observed the timber that was there. A lumberman who has spent ten years in felling timber is entitled to give his opinion as to the quantity of timber on land with which he is familiar. His failure to cruise the timber went to the weight of his testimony only.

[2] Witness, Stevens, who formerly lived on the property and had worked in the timber there, testified, without objection, that he estimated that there were two million feet. On cross-examination he testified that he did not know how much lumber was made out of the logs actually hauled from the property. Defendant Kalajian testified that in January or February, 1947, he sent two timber contractors, experienced cruisers, to look at the property, and they told him there were about two million feet—"One of them said there wasn't 2 million feet, but it was all good; the other said there was 2 million feet." Later he testified: "I know from what different men came down and told me. Three of them came down and told me there was around 2 million feet, so I assumed it is 2 million feet." Again he testified: "I found out we had at that time spent about $48,000 there and only had two million feet of timber * * *." Defendants offered no evidence as to the amount of timber remaining. Deducting from the two million feet (which was the lowest estimate given of the amount of merchantable timber on the property at the time of the contract) the amount of timber which defendants removed before abandonment, and the difference in footage between standing timber and manufactured lumber, left approximately 1,587,000 feet. Apparently the court in this manner arrived at its finding of 1,500,000 feet. It is obvious from the foregoing recital of the evidence that there was sufficient to justify the court's finding.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and FRED B. WOOD, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 393

STERLING DRUG, Inc. v. BENATAR et al.

Civ. 14198.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 14, 1950.

Hearing Denied Nov. 9, 1950.

The Sterling Drug, Inc., brought suit against Morris V. Benatar, doing business as Benatar's Cut Rate Stores, and others, to obtain an injunction under the Fair Trade Act. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Thomas M. Foley, J., rendered a judgment for plaintiff, and the named defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, P. J., held that the act applied to war surplus tooth powder, that sales of war surplus tooth powder were not "close out sales" exempted by the act, that war surplus tooth powder was not exempted by the act on ground that it was damaged or deteriorated in quality, that plaintiff was not precluded from recovery of punitive damages, that injunction granted was not too broad in scope, and that evidence sustained findings that plaintiff had not waived its fair trade rights.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Statutes ⇐234½

The Fair Trade Act is applicable to war surplus goods, though war surplus goods did not exist at time of enactment of the Fair Trade Act. Business and Professions Code, § 16900 et seq.

2. Statutes ⇐234½

Where a statute deals with a genus, and the thing which afterward comes into existence is a species thereof, the language of the statute will generally be extended to the new species, though it was not known and could not have been contemplated by the legislature when the statute was passed.

3. Statutes ⇐228

When the Legislature has made exceptions to a general rule, it must be deemed to have included in its exceptions all that it intended to except.

4. Constitutional law ⇐70(3)

Question whether, in the interest of an efficient and advantageous disposal of war surplus goods, exemption of such goods from the Fair Trade Act is desirable, belongs solely to the province of the legislature. Business and Professions Code, § 16900 et seq.

5. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇐68(2.21)

Where, at the time a druggist sold war surplus tooth powder, he also had for sale the same tooth powder which was bought through regular channels, and though there were some differences in the packaging and cans of the war surplus and regular supply, the trade-mark, brand and name, quantity, quality, and all other characteristics were the same, the sales of the war surplus were not "close out sales" within meaning of exemption in the Fair Trade Act. Business and Professions Code, § 16902(b).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Close Out Sales".

6. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇐68(2.21)

Where druggist advertised war surplus tooth powder as guaranteed to be in 100 percent perfect condition, the tooth powder was not exempted from provisions of the Fair Trade Act on ground that it was damaged or deteriorated in quality and that notice was given to the public thereof. Business and Professions Code, § 16902(b).

7. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇐92

In suit for injunction under the Fair Trade Act, allegations of complaint that defendant acted wilfully and knowingly and in defiance of repeated protest and notices of plaintiff and that defendant's conduct was oppressive and malicious and for purpose of annoying and injuring plaintiff and damaging plaintiff's business were sufficient basis for recovery of exemplary damages. Business and Professions Code, § 16900 et seq.; Civ. Code, § 3294.

8. Stipulations ⇐14(7)

Stipulation that plaintiff should be deemed to have filed affidavits supporting all allegations of the entire complaint and that such stipulation should have the same force and effect as sworn oral testimony applied to and gave evidentiary support to allegations in suit for injunction under the Fair Trade Act that defendant acted wilfully and knowingly and in defiance of plaintiff's repeated protest and notices and that defendant's conduct was oppressive and malicious and for purpose of annoying plaintiff and damaging plaintiff's lawful business. Business and Professions Code, § 16900 et seq.

9. Stipulations ⇐14(1)

A valid stipulation is binding on the parties and precludes objection to matters concerning procedure and evidence which have been expressly or impliedly agreed on.

10. Damages ⇐87(2)

Exemplary damages are generally not recoverable in absence of a showing of actual damages.

11. Damages ⇐8, 87(2)

Nominal damages are not only recovered where no actual damage resulted from an ascertained violation of right but also where actual damages have been sustained, the extent of which cannot be determined, and the granting of exemplary damages in cases of the latter kind is not inconsistent with the rule that actual damage is a necessary predicate of punitive damages. Civ. Code, § 3294.

12. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇐98

Where it was established in suit for injunction under the Fair Trade Act that the result of conduct of defendant caused a great and irreparable damage to business of plaintiff and good will pertaining thereto and to trade-marks, brands and names of drugs sold by plaintiff, but it was extremely difficult to ascertain the amount of compensation which would afford adequate relief to plaintiff for such damage, fact that only $1 nominal damages were allowed to plaintiff did not preclude the granting of $200 punitive damages. Business and Professions Code, § 16900 et seq.; Civ. Code, § 3294.

13. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇐97

Injunction granted in suit under the Fair Trade Act was not too broad in scope because it listed 23 articles of fair trade commodities of plaintiff which it enjoined defendant from selling at less than listed price whereas it was proved only that defendant sold one of those commodities at less than listed price. Business and Professions Code, § 16900 et seq.

14. Injunction ⇐102

Generally, when one has been found to have committed acts in violation of law he may be restrained from committing other related and unlawful acts.

15. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇐93(3)

In suit for an injunction under the Fair Trade Act, evidence sustained finding that plaintiff proceeded diligently to prevent price cutting by others than defendant, and that plaintiff did not by lack of diligence waive its fair trade rights. Business and Professions Code, § 16900 et seq.

Noal R. Gray, San Francisco, for appellant.

Landels & Weigel, Stanley A. Weigel, San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal by defendant from a final judgment and decree of permanent injunction under the Fair Trade Act, Business and Professions Code, Div. 7, Pt. 2, Ch. 3, certain orders modifying findings and judgment and denying modification in other respects and from the judgment as modified. As the preliminary steps have no separate importance and no separate errors have been submitted the appeal will be treated as one from the judgment as modified.

The complaint alleges in effect that defendants (sued under several fictitious names) with knowledge of the Fair Trade agreements signed and maintained between plaintiff's predecessors and a great number of California retail dealers but rejected by defendants, and despite plaintiff's repeated protests, sell commodities the subject of these contracts and identified by trade marks, brands or names belonging to plaintiff, among others Dr. Lyon's Tooth Powder, at prices substantially less than the prices stipulated in said contracts; that defendants purchased huge stocks of one or more of these commodities with the plan of selling them at cut-rate prices under the pretense of "close-out" sales; that they plan to continue such price cutting, and, as a second cause of action, that defendants committed acts of unfair competition by advertising and selling Dr. Lyon's Tooth Powder below the minimum price stipulated in said contracts; that the conduct of defendants described in both causes of action was oppressive and malicious and intended to injure plaintiff and damage its business, with prayer for a permanent injunction, temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction and compensatory and exemplary damages.

The case was decided below on stipulations to the effect that the hearings on the motion for a preliminary injunction should be deemed the final trial of the action, evidence introduced by affidavits should have the force of oral testimony, the complaint should be deemed an affidavit as well as a pleading and plaintiff should be deemed to have filed affidavits supporting all allegations of the entire complaint, defendant should be deemed to have denied those allegations of the complaint denied or controverted by affidavits actually filed in its behalf and moreover certain specified allegations, to have filed affidavits supporting all of those denials and to have alleged affirmatively that defendant's acts complained of involved only "war surplus" goods, that plaintiff discriminated against defendant by bringing this action against it alone, whereas it had otherwise waived its fair trade rights with regard to "war surplus" goods by not proceeding with reasonable diligence to prevent such sale by others, and that sales of "war surplus" goods, even if within the Fair Trade Act, are close-out sales which are and continue within an exception of the Fair Trade Act.

The court found in all respects in accordance with the complaint restricting its allegations to defendant Benatars, a California corporation, and made moreover specific findings as to the oppressive and malicious character of said defendant's conduct, the character of the commodity so sold by defendant and plaintiff's diligence in stopping violations of its rights under the Fair Trade Act by others. It issued a permanent injunction against cut rate selling etc. by defendant of any of the stated commodities distributed by plaintiff except where all reference to trade-marks, brands etc. showing derivation from plaintiff were omitted or under circumstances bringing the transaction under one of the three exceptions of sec. 16902 subd. (b) of the Business and Professions Code and granted plaintiff $1 as nominal damages, $200 as exemplary damages and costs.

Appellant's main argument is that the sales in dispute related only to war surplus property purchased by appellant indirectly from the War Assets Administration and that such property is not subject to the California Fair Trade Act. This argument is not based on any express exemption in the statute but on contentions that war surplus goods are a kind of commodity separate and distinct from regular merchandise and unknown in the year 1941 when the Fair Trade Act was added to the Business and Professions Code and that the legislature would not have made the Act applicable to war surplus goods had they existed at the time because the application would seriously hamper the sale of these goods by the United States government and would be detrimental to the general public both as taxpayer and as consumer. In support of the separate character of war surplus goods appellant points to certain statutory enactments in this state, among which section 17531.5 of the Business and Professions Code added by Statutes 1945, Chapter 1144 which requires advertisement of sales of war surplus material clearly to indicate the war surplus character thereof.

[1-3] The contentions are without merit. Even if it were accepted that war surplus goods form a separate species of the genus "commodities" which are the subject of the act and that that species was unknown at the time when the act became law, such would not exclude the applicability of the act. "Where a statute deals with a genus, and the thing which afterward comes into existence is a species thereof, the language of the statute will generally be extended to the new species, although it was not known and could not have been contemplated by the legislature when the act was passed; * * *." 59 C.J. 973-974; Hurley v. Inhabitants of South Thomaston, 105 Me. 301, 74 A. 734, 736; McCleary v. Babcock, 169 Ind. 228, 82 N.E. 453, 457; Crawford, Statutory Construction, p. 268. There is no reason why that rule should not be followed here. The statute is generally applicable to "any commodity", defined as "any subject of commerce." Sec. 16901, Business and Professions Code. The exceptions to the prohibition of cut rate selling contained in sec. 16902, subd. (b), do not include any exception relating to the manner in which the seller acquired them. Moreover the fact that the legislature in the year 1945 when it was aware of the problems of disposition of war surplus material added new provisions in that respect to the Business and Professions Code, §§ 17531.5, 17533.5, Statutes 1945, Chapter 1144, supra, but did not add an exception to the chapter containing the Fair Trade Act may well indicate the legislature did not desire the exception advocated by appellant. Under the above circumstances for the court to add an exception in no way expressed in the statute would be a wholly unwarranted invasion of the function of the legislature. In this respect the well settled principle may be mentioned "that when the Legislature has made exceptions to a general rule it must be deemed to have included in its exceptions all that it intended to except." Rothschild v. Superior Court, 109 Cal.App. 345, 348, 293 P. 106, 108.

[4] The question whether in the interest of an efficient and advantageous disposal of the war surplus goods exemption from the state Fair Trade Act is desirable evidently also belongs solely to the province of the legislature. It is not contended that any federal statute excludes the applicability. It may nevertheless be pointed out that the federal government has given no indication whatever that it desires such exemption. As set out at length in the opinion of the learned trial judge the Surplus Property Act of 1944, 50 U.S.C.A. Appendix, § 1611 et seq., mentions in effect among its declared objectives, sec. 1611, orderly disposal without dislocation of markets, dumping speculation or excessive profits and utilizing normal channels of trade and commerce; there is in that statute no mention whatever of an exception to fair trade laws, although the federal provision which permits minimum price agreement for trade-marked commodities, 15 U.S.C.A. § 1, is referred to as applicable in sec. 1629. Moreover the position taken by the War Assets Administration is shown clearly by its "General Disposal Letter No. 20", which instructs its regional and district offices to give notice that the resale or use of branded or trade-marked drug and cosmetic items offered for sale and/or sold by the government may be affected by applicable state "Fair Trade" Practice Acts, or other similar regulatory laws.

[5] Appellant further maintains that its sales of war surplus material below fair trade prices were "close out sales" as exempted in sec. 16902, subd. (b) (1), Business and Professions Code, arguing that the government sales of war surplus goods were "close out sales" and that its sales of goods indirectly acquired from the government retained the same character. The provision referred to permits deviation from fair trade prices: "(1) In closing out the owner's stock for the purpose of discontinuing delivering any such commodity." It does not give a general exemption from fair trade prices for goods bought at a close out sale independent from the circumstance whether the reseller himself also intends to discontinue delivering any such commodity. It seems very doubtful whether a merchant who, like appellant, bought large quantities of a war surplus commodity for the express purpose of selling them below fair trade price, can be said to be "closing out the owner's stock", even if he does not intend to further carry the same commodity. See National Distillers Products Corporation v. Louis Greenwalds Liquors, D.C.Colo.1939.[1] But appellant intended to continue selling Dr. Lyon's Tooth Powder, also after his war surplus lot would be exhausted. It is undisputed that appellant at the same time at which he advertised and sold the war surplus Dr. Lyon's Tooth Powder, also had for sale Dr. Lyon's Tooth Powder in containers of the same size, bought through the regular channels and that he intended to continue carrying this regular commodity. The court found that there were some differences between the packaging and cans of the war surplus and the regular supply but that trade-mark, brand and name, quantity, quality and all other characteristics of the two supplies were the same, and that all differences were due to shortages of material and production problems which since World War II caused variations in the cans, whether war surplus or not. It cannot be said that such small differences caused the regular supply not to be "any such commodity" as the war surplus supply and the court was justified in finding in accordance with the plaintiff's allegation that appellant did not have any intention of closing out its stock for the purpose of discontinuing delivery. To hold otherwise would undermine the purpose of the statute.

[6] It is true that sec. 16902, subd. (b), Business and Professions Code contains also an exemption from fair trade prices "When the goods are damaged or deteriorated in quality, and notice is given to the public thereof" and that according to appellant the fact that goods were war surplus indicated in itself that such goods were damaged and deteriorated. However appellant advertised the war surplus supply here involved as guaranteed "to be in 100% perfect condition", a fact which evidently prevents it from bringing them under the last mentioned exemption.

[7–9] Next appellant urges that it could not be liable for exemplary damages because it believed in good faith that it had the right to sell war surplus goods at less than fair trade prices and did so openly and therefore did not act with malice, fraud or oppression which section 3294, Civil Code, requires for the allowance of such damages. The complaint alleged and the court found otherwise. It was alleged among other descriptions of appellant's intent and purpose that appellant acted wilfully and knowingly "and in defiance of plaintiff's repeated protest and notices" and further that its conduct "was oppressive and malicious and for the purpose of annoying and injuring plaintiff and damaging plaintiff's lawful business." Such allegations are a sufficient basis for the recovery of exemplary damages. Morgan v. French, 70 Cal.App.2d 785, 788 et seq., 161 P.2d 800; Kouff v. Bethlehem-Alameda Shipyard, 90 Cal.App.2d 322, 325, 202 P.2d 1059. The stipulation that "plaintiff shall be deemed to have filed affidavits supporting all allegations of the entire complaint" together with the stipulation to the effect that such stipulations shall have the same force and effect as sworn oral testimony applies also to said allegations and gives them evidentiary support, which necessarily creates a conflict in the evidence with respect to appellant's good faith and supports the findings made responsive to plaintiff's allegations. Moore v. Moffatt, 188 Cal. 1, 4, 204 P. 220; O'Hare v. Peacock Dairies, Inc., 42 Cal.App. 2d 788, 793, 110 P.2d 90; and compare People v. Blacks Food Store, 16 Cal.2d 59, 61–62, 105 P.2d 361. "A valid stipulation is, of course, binding upon the parties, and precludes objection to matters concerning procedure and evidence which have been expressly or impliedly agreed upon." 23

1. No opinion for publication.

Cal.Jur. 826; Corbett v. Benioff, 126 Cal. App. 772, 777, 14 P.2d 1028.

[10, 11] Appellant also claims that exemplary damages must be based on actual damages and that where only $1 nominal damages were allowed no punitive damages or at least no punitive damages disproportionate to that $1 could be granted. It is true that exemplary damages are generally not recoverable in the absence of a showing of actual damages, but upon the question whether the money extent of the actual damages must be found to permit a finding of punitive damages there is a hopeless conflict in the decisions, Clark v. McClurg, 215 Cal. 279, 282, 9 P.2d 505, 81 A.L.R. 908; 15 Am.Jur. 707; 25 C.J.S., Damages, § 118, page 714, and also upon the related question whether an award of nominal damages will support punitive damages. 15 Am.Jur. 707–708; 25 C.J.S., Damages, § 118, page 715; Annotations 33 A.L.R. 400 et seq.; 81 A. L.R. 917. Nominal damages are not only recovered where no actual damage resulted from an ascertained violation of right but also where actual damages have been sustained, the extent of which cannot be determined. Gray v. Craig, 127 Cal.App. 374, 378, 15 P.2d 762, 16 P.2d 798. The granting of exemplary damages in cases of the latter kind is not inconsistent with the rule that actual damage is a necessary predicate of punitive damages. 15 Am.Jur. 708.

Clearly the case before us is of the latter kind. The court found to be true the allegations of Paragraph XI of the complaint which recite among other things that the result of defendants' conduct "has been and will continue to be, great and irreparable damage to plaintiff's business and the goodwill pertaining thereto and to the said trade marks, brands and names" and also that "[i]t would be extremely difficult to ascertain the amount of compensation which will afford adequate relief to plaintiff for the damage which, as herein alleged, is resulting and will continue to result from said scheme, plan and acts of defendants." Even without the support of the stipulations mentioned before the truth of the allegations with respect to the damage caused by defendant's cut rate sale of large quantities of plaintiff's fair trade goods is obvious. The question in this case therefore is not whether punitive damages can be recovered where no actual damage was suffered, but whether such punitive damages are recoverable when actual damage has been sustained and that fact found but the extent of the damage not determined because of the difficulty in ascertaining it.

[12] Although, as stated, there is a split in the authorities on this point we answer the question in the affirmative. In so doing we follow what according to 15 Am.Jur. 708, supra, is the weight of authority and what we think is the better reasoning. The reason given for the rule that punitive damages are not recoverable in the absence of actual damage is that they are mere incidents to the cause of action and never constitute the basis thereof. Clark v. McClurg, supra; 15 Am.Jur. 706. Where there is an invasion of legal right and actual damages the amount of which cannot be ascertained but which entitles plaintiff to a nominal recovery there appears to be a sufficient basis for an action independent of the exemplary damages. The recent decision of our Supreme Court in Finney v. Lockhart, 35 Cal.2d 161, 217 P.2d 19, though not directly in point because specifically concerned with damages for defamation per se where general damages are presumed, points in the same direction. Among the authorities there cited with respect to the relation of actual and punitive damages is State ex rel. St. Joseph Belt R. Co. v. Shain, 341 Mo. 733, 108 S.W. 2d 351, not a defamation case but an action for damages because of the malicious failure to give a proper service letter to a workman on his discharge, for which a judgment of $1 actual damages and $4000 punitive damages is upheld, the court stating that punitive damages may be assessed though the actual damages recovered are only nominal or not ascertained and that there is no fixed relation between the amount of actual damages and of punitive damages, which serve different purposes. It is pointed out that the actual damages assessed do not furnish a guide for the amount of punitive damages recoverable especially where the amount of $1 actual damages is only found because of the inability to prove the amount of damages actually suffered. In the opinion in the Finney case itself it is stated that the fact that the jury awarded only nominal damages in the compensatory class does not necessarily imply a finding that no more actual damage was sustained. 217 P.2d 21. It is further held that the rule that the exemplary should bear a reasonable relation to the actual damages is only for the purpose of guarding against excess, that there is no fixed proportion which is proper between the two classes of damages, and that with respect to punitive damages as well as actual damages the appellate court can only declare an award excessive when the amount at first blush suggests passion or prejudice. The award in our case of $1 nominal damages and $200 punitive damages for the continued illegal cut rate selling of large quantities of goods does not convey any such suggestion. It seems an expedient and just way of overcoming the difficulty of finding the exact extent of the actual damage in a case where exemplary damages are recoverable.

[13, 14] Appellant contends that the injunction granted is too broad in scope because it deprives appellant of the right to sell below fair trade prices also in the situations excepted in sec. 16902 of the Business and Professions Code and because it lists 23 articles of plaintiff's fair trade commodities which appellant is enjoined from selling at less than listed price whereas it was proved with respect to only one of these commodities that appellant actually so sold it. The first contention is frivolous as the injunction carefully provides for all statutory exceptions. The second contention is also wholly without merit. The general rule in this respect is that when one has been found to have committed acts in violation of a law he may be restrained from committing other related unlawful acts. The scope of the injunction must depend upon the circumstances of each case, the purpose being to prevent violations, the threat of which in the future is indicated because of their similarity or relation to the unlawful acts found to have been committed. National Labor Relations Board v. Express Publishing Co., 312 U.S. 426, 436, 61 S.Ct. 693, 85 L.Ed. 930. In this case there can be no doubt of the similarity of the acts enjoined and the existence of a threat of violation as to all. Appellant refused to stop selling below listed price, giving as its reason an assumed and unfounded rule of law that war surplus goods were exempt from the Fair Trade Act. There was as much danger that appellant would next apply its theory to another of respondent's commodities as to the same one. Undue restrictions of the injunction would invite multiplicity of suits, the prevention of which is one of the statutory purposes of the injunction. Code of Civil Procedure, § 526, first par. subd. 6. Weisstein v. Freeman's Wines & Liquors, Inc., 169 Misc. 391, 7 N.Y.S.2d 234 upholding an injunction of the same scope as the one before us, as against a similar contention of a fair trade price violator is directly in point.

[15] Finally appellant contends that respondent was not entitled to an injunction because respondent did not proceed diligently to prevent price cutting by others, and thereby waived its fair trade rights, which it cannot be allowed to enforce discriminatorily against appellant only. Contrary to this contention the court found "that plaintiff has diligently and impartially acted to stop, and has actually stopped, all violations of its rights under the Fair Trade Act which have come to plaintiff's attention", and further in substance that plaintiff's Fair Trade contracts were generally observed by dealers and that its rights under the Fair Trade Act have not been waived. Said findings find substantial support in the evidence, especially in the supplemental affidavit of C. R. Danielson, plaintiff's Pacific Coast Manager, dated March 15, 1948. Appellant's last contention therefore lacks all factual basis.

The judgment is affirmed.

GOODELL and DOOLING, JJ., concur.

Hearing denied; SCHAUER, J., dissenting.

99 Cal.App.2d 376

PROCTOR & SCHWARTZ, Inc. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR SAN MATEO COUNTY et al.

Civ. 14541.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 12, 1950.

Proctor & Schwartz, Incorporated, filed a petition against the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of San Mateo, Honorable A. R. Cotton, Judge thereof, and others, for writ of prohibition or, alternatively, review or mandate, to halt further proceedings in the case of John C. Turner v. Proctor & Schwartz, Incorporated, pending in the Superior Court in San Mateo County. The District Court of Appeal, Goodell, J., held that a motion filed by petitioner to quash service of summons was not a general appearance and that petitioner was not doing business in the state of California so as to be subject to service of process.

Order in accordance with opinion.

1. Appearance ⇐9(1)

If a party appears and objects only to consideration of the case or any procedure in case because court had not acquired jurisdiction of defendant or party, appearance is a "special appearance", but if party appears and asks for any relief which could be given only to a party in a pending case, or which itself would be a regular proceeding in case, the appearance is a "general appearance" regardless of how adroitly, carefully or directly the appearance may be denominated or characterized as special.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "General Appearance" and "Special Appearance".

2. Appearance ⇐9(5)

Ground of motion of foreign corporation to which papers were forwarded by Secretary of State after trial court in action for injuries ordered service of summons on Secretary of State, that summons did not state nature of action alleged against foreign corporation, and that neither summons nor complaint stated facts sufficient to show that foreign corporation was amenable to processes of California courts, was neither a general nor a special demurrer, nor a demurrer for lack of jurisdiction of subject matter, and ground sought no relief which would be had only in a pending case, so that motion did not constitute a "general appearance."

3. Corporations ⇐673

Where it appears that a defendant is a foreign corporation, and validity of service of process is challenged, plaintiff has burden to prove that such defendant was doing business in state.

4. Commerce ⇐40(1)

A contract whereunder foreign corporation agreed to sell manufacturing machinery to California corporation and to loan an employee to supervise installation of machinery by buyer's employees in California after its shipment from sister state to California, was a transaction in "interstate commerce".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Interstate Commerce".

5. Corporations ⇐642(4½)

Where foreign corporation contracted to sell manufacturing machinery to California corporation, and to loan an employee to supervise installation of machinery by buyer's employees in California after shipment of machinery from sister state to California, services rendered by such employee in supervising installation did not constitute "doing business" in California by foreign corporation, and did not subject foreign corporation to service of process through Secretary of State of California.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Doing Business".

Keith, Creede & Sedgwick, San Francisco, for petitioner.

Edmund J. Holl, San Francisco, for respondents.

GOODELL, Justice.

Petitioner seeks a writ of prohibition or, alternatively, review or mandate, to halt further proceedings in the case of John C. Turner v. Proctor and Schwartz, Incorporated, pending in the Superior Court in San Mateo County.

That action is to recover $100,000 damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff Turner at the plant of Consolidated Chemical Industries, Inc., in San Mateo County, where he was employed. From the complaint it appears that a contract had been entered into between Proctor and Schwartz, Inc., a Pennsylvania corporation, as seller, and Consolidated, as buyer, for the sale of certain chemical manufacturing machinery, devices and equipment, for installation in Consolidated's plant, which contract provided that Proctor would send out a man to supervise the installation. It alleges that a man was sent out and during such installation and because of his negligence plaintiff Turner sustained serious bodily injuries.

On plaintiff's motion the court ordered service of summons on Secretary of State. On August 16, 1949 service was so made and he forwarded the papers to petitioner in Pennsylvania, whereupon the latter appeared specially and moved to quash the service. The motion was denied, and the present application was filed.

Respondents contend that the court properly denied the motion because one of the grounds thereof went beyond the bounds of a special appearance and converted it into a general appearance.

The language claimed by respondents to constitute a general appearance is contained in the third ground of the motion to quash, reading as follows: "3rd. That said summons does not state the nature of the so-called action alleged against the defendant, nor does the summons or complaint state facts sufficient to show that the defendant is amenable to the processes of the courts of the State of California."

[1] If this is no more than an objection, phrased in the language of a demurrer, on the ground that the court had not acquired jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, then it is nothing but a special appearance. Judson v. Superior Court, 21 Cal.2d 11, 13, 129 P.2d 361, 362, so holds when it says: "* * * The test is—Did the party appear and object only to the consideration of the case or any procedure in it because the court had not acquired jurisdiction of the person of the defendant or party? If so, then the appearance is special. If, however, he appears and asks for any relief which could be given only to a party in a pending case, or which itself would be a regular proceeding in the case, it is a general appearance regardless of how adroitly, carefully or directly the appearance may be denominated or characterized as special. In re Clarke, 125 Cal. 388, 58 P. 22. * *" See also Lacey v. Bertone, 33 Cal.2d 649, 651, 203 P.2d 755.

In support of their position respondents rely on a group of cases wherein the so-called special appearance contained what amounted to either a general or special demurrer, or a demurrer on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction of the subject matter of the action, for which reason they are readily distinguishable from the third ground of the motion in this case. They are: Raps v. Raps, 20 Cal.2d 382, 384–385, 125 P.2d 826; Security Loan & Trust Co. of Southern California v. Boston, etc., Co., 126 Cal. 418, 58 P. 941, 59 P. 296; Maclay Co. v. Meads, 14 Cal.App. 363, 369, 112 P. 195, 113 P. 364, infra; Roberts v. Superior Ct., 30 Cal.App. 714, 159 P. 465; Taylor v. Superior Ct., 93 Cal.App. 445, 269 P. 727; Morte v. Justice's Court, 139 Cal.App. 605, 34 P.2d 748; MacPherson v. Superior Ct., 22 Cal.App.2d 425, 71 P.2d 91.

Other cases cited by respondents where, on the motion to quash, or to dismiss, or other special appearance, relief was sought "which could be given only to a party in a pending case, or which itself would be a regular proceeding in the case" are: Childs v. Lanterman, 103 Cal. 387, 37 P. 382, 42 Am.St.Rep. 121 (motion to set aside findings and judgment and to strike out answer); Zobel v. Zobel, 151 Cal. 98, 90 P. 191 (appearance in court of defendant's attorney to request continuance of motion to strike out pleadings); Nisbet v. Clio Mining Co., 2 Cal.App. 436, 83 P. 1077 (motion to retax costs and to strike items from cost bill); Maclay Co. v. Meads, 14 Cal.App. 363, 112 P. 195, 113 P. 364, supra (objection to judgment as unsupported by complaint); Shelley v. Casa De Oro, Ltd., 133 Cal.App. 720, 24 P.2d 900 (motion on ground that judgment was not supported by findings); Burrows v. Burrows, 10 Cal. App.2d 749, 52 P.2d 606 (motion to strike parts of interlocutory decree); Nelson v. Superior Ct., 75 Cal.App.2d 372, 171 P.2d 52 (motion to vacate order appointing receiver).

Respondents also cite Wall v. Superior Court, 48 Cal.App. 564, 192 P. 134, which went to the length of holding that a demurrer on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction of the person amounted to a general appearance. None of the three cases which it cites so holds. That case simply failed to discriminate between two different grounds of demurrer; it has never been cited (according to Shepard) in any reported case, and it is out of line with all the cases heretofore discussed.

[2] The third ground of the motion to quash is certainly neither a general nor a special demurrer; nor a demurrer for lack of jurisdiction of the subject matter; nor does it seek any relief which could be had only in a pending case, hence there is no merit in the claim that it constituted a general appearance.

The real question presented is whether the showing on the motion to quash warranted the holding that Proctor and Schwartz, Incorporated, was doing business in California, which was the ultimate inquiry before the trial court. Respondents in their brief merely state the point, assert that the corporation was doing business, and let it go at that, without discussing the facts shown in the complaint and affidavits or citing any authority supporting the affirmative side of the issue. The petitioner invited a full discussion of this, the main question, when its counsel asserted in their brief that on the motion the burden rested on the plaintiff to prove that the corporation was transacting business in California, and that such burden had not been sustained, citing Hollywood Garment Corp. v. J. Beckerman, Inc., 61 Cal.App.2d 658, 143 P.2d 738. Instead of facing that issue and meeting it head-on, respondents have briefed the case only on the question just disposed of, namely, whether the appearance was special or general.

In West Publishing Co. v. Superior Court, 20 Cal.2d 720, 726, 128 P.2d 777, 780, our Supreme Court says: "Whatever the form of a particular statute authorizing service of process upon the agent of a foreign corporation which has not complied with the qualifying laws of a state, it is a fundamental requisite under the federal Constitution that the corporation shall be 'doing business' in the jurisdiction where the service is made to sustain its validity. [Citations.]"

[3] It is settled in this state that when it appears that a defendant is a foreign corporation, and the validity of the service of process is challenged, the burden is upon the plaintiff to prove that such defendant was doing business in the state. Jameson v. Simonds Saw Co., 2 Cal.App. 582, 585-586, 84 P. 289, followed in Carpenter v. Bradford, 23 Cal.App. 560, 562-563, 138 P. 946 and Fuller v. Lindenbaum, 29 Cal.App.2d 227, 232, 84 P.2d 155; see, also, Hollywood Garment Corp. v. J. Beckerman, Inc., supra, 61 Cal.App.2d 658, 660, 143 P.2d 738.

The verified complaint in the Turner case and the affidavit of Edmund J. Holl, attorney for Turner (filed in support of the motion for service on the Secretary of State), allege that Proctor and Schwartz, Incorporated, was at all times therein mentioned "engaged in the business of manufacturing, selling and installing certain types of machinery * * * in the State of Pennsylvania, and other states * * * including the State of California." Both the complaint and the affidavit then show, by the language they use, that the doing of business by the corporation was confined to the single transaction alleged in the complaint. This is made clear by the pleader's use of the words "in that" in the following allegation: "That on the 6th day of August, 1948, and for some time prior thereto, the exact period of time which to this plaintiff is unknown, said defendant Proctor and Schwartz, Incorporated, was engaged in doing business in the State of California, * * * in that it had entered into a contract with a certain firm known as the Consolidated Chemical Industries, Inc., whose main office is located at 111 Sutter Street" in San Francisco "which contract involved the selling, delivering and installation in the factory of said Consolidated * * * located * * * in the County of San Mateo * * * certain chemical manufacturing machinery devices and equipment, among which was certain apparatus known as a glue dryer machine; that said installation required expert services, which said defendant * * * upon accepting said contract, and thereby availing itself of the privilege of doing business in the State of California, agreed to and did furnish, in the person of James R. Kraus, its servant, agent and employee, who had exclusive supervision, direction and control, as an engineer, of installation of said machinery chemical devices and equipment, as aforesaid, under the employment of said defendant * * *" (Emphasis added.)

The affidavit of Attorney Holl, which adopts the allegations of the complaint, fails to show any transaction beyond that alleged in the complaint, and it repeats the language of the complaint to which attention has just been drawn when it deposes that the corporation "was engaged in doing an intrastate business * * * in that it had entered into a contract or contracts with * * * Consolidated * * *" (emphasis added) and continuing on with substantially the same allegation as that contained in the complaint just quoted. The Holl affidavit shows that Proctor and Schwartz, Incorporated, "after doing business in the State * * * thereafter withdrew from said State". That circumstance was one of the grounds on which service on the Secretary of State was based. § 6504, Corporations Code.

In support of its motion to quash, the corporation filed an affidavit made by W. E. Sedgwick, one of its attorneys, in which he deposes that Proctor and Schwartz, Incorporated, is a Pennsylvania corporation, and that at all times therein mentioned, including the date of the accident and the date of the service, the corporation did not maintain, and had not maintained, any office, place of business, showrooms, or warehouses, in California, or any agent, officer, or any other person therein upon whom service of summons could be made; that on July 14, 1947, the corporation countersigned at Philadelphia, a contract effective that date between itself and Consolidated, which provided that it would furnish Consolidated, as purchaser, certain machinery for an agreed price f. o. b. car, company's plant, Philadelphia. The affidavit states, further, that at no times mentioned in the affidavit did the corporation maintain a sales force, or any salesmen, in California, and at no times therein mentioned could any employee or representative of said corporation in California collect money; that the purchase price for all machinery sold in California was received by the corporation in Philadelphia; that it maintained no bank account in California; that all statements and invoices sent to the purchaser in California were sent from Philadelphia; that no credit was extended to a purchaser in California on behalf of the corporation by any person in California and that it borrowed no money in California. The affidavit concludes: "That affiant is informed and believes, and therefore states, that at all times herein mentioned said corporation was not engaged in doing business in * * * California and was not engaged in doing an intra-state business in * * * California; that it did not enter into any contracts in * * * California and that it did not enter into any contract of sale and did not deliver and install machinery in the factory of said Consolidated Chemical Industries, Inc., in the County of San Mateo, State of California, or otherwise."

The Sedgwick affidavit quotes in part the contract between Proctor and Consolidated as follows: "The purchaser shall supply sufficient good mechanics, under competent supervision to erect the machinery in a reasonable length of time. The company will lend one of its employees to the purchaser to assist in such erection, the company making no charge at [for?] the time of such loaned employee, but the purchaser shall pay the traveling expenses from Philadelphia, * * * and return, his board and incidental expenses" and then adds that pursuant thereto one Crouse, an employee of the corporation, whose contract of hire was made in Philadelphia, was sent out to the Consolidated's plant in San Mateo County to assist in the erection of the machinery and who was on said premises in said capacity on the date of the accident and was the only employee of the corporation performing services for it in California at that time and in connection with the contract.

The corporation also filed an affidavit of T. J. Wilson, the San Francisco machinery broker who negotiated the contract of sale between Proctor and Consolidated, which affidavit shows that Wilson was not an officer, agent, or employee of Proctor, and received no salary, but operated merely on a commission basis. It shows, also, that he represents other eastern manufacturing concerns as well.

The case of York Mfg. Co. v. Colley, 247 U.S. 21, 38 S.Ct. 430, 62 L.Ed. 963, 11 A.L.R. 611, controls this case. There York Mfg. Co., a Pennsylvania corporation, entered into a contract with Colley, a resident of Texas, to sell and install in Texas an ice plant, and wherein the seller agreed to furnish an engineer to assemble and erect the machinery and make a practical efficiency test before complete delivery. The services of the engineer in supervising the installation were to be paid for by the purchaser at the rate of $6 per day. When the seller sued in Texas for the contract price of the plant, the defendant-purchaser set up the defense that the seller—because of its activities in supervising the installation through its engineer—was doing business in Texas and since it had not obtained a permit to do so it could not sue in that state. The Texas courts so held, but the Supreme Court of the United States reversed, holding that the services of the engineer in Texas were relevant and appropriate to the interstate contract of sale of the ice plant, and were inherently part of it, hence such services did not constitute the doing of business in Texas within the meaning of that state's requirement of a license.

[4] The presence of Crouse in Consolidated's plant was in pursuance of the contract, which contract unquestionably constituted a transaction in interstate commerce, Charlton Silk Co. v. Jones, 190 Cal. 341, 342, 212 P. 203; W. W. Kimball Co. v. Read, 43 Cal.App. 342, 345, 185 P. 192; Indian Refining Co. v. Royal Oil Co., Inc., 102 Cal.App. 710, 715, 716, 283 P. 856.

[5] If in York Mfg. Co. v. Colley the services of the engineer who was sent from Pennsylvania to Texas admittedly to supervise the erection of the ice plant, did not constitute the doing of business by the corporation in Texas, then certainly the services of Crouse who, according to the contract was "lent" to Consolidated to "assist" its own employees in the installation, cannot be held to constitute the doing of business by the corporation in California.

At first blush there would seem to be a conflict between the allegations of the complaint (and the Holl affidavit) that Crouse had the supervision of the installation, and those of the Sedgwick affidavit, quoting the contract itself, that he was only lent by Proctor to assist Consolidated's employees in the installation. There is no real conflict, however, since under either theory Crouse's services were, under the rule of York Mfg. Co. v. Colley, inherently part of, and incidental to, the interstate contract.

As stated at the outset, the petitioner seeks a writ of prohibition or, alternatively, review or mandate. We are satisfied for the reasons and on the authorities cited herein that the petitioner was not at any time doing business within this state, and that the motion to quash the service of summons on the Secretary of State should have been granted. The error in denying that motion can be adequately corrected by a writ of mandate.

Accordingly a peremptory writ of mandate should issue, directing the Superior Court to vacate and set aside its order denying said motion to quash, and in lieu thereof to enter its order granting said motion. It is so ordered.

NOURSE, P. J., and DOOLING, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 356

JORDAN et al. v. BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF TULARE COUNTY et al.

Civ. 4070.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Sept. 8, 1950.

Hearing Denied Nov. 2, 1950.

Action by J. E. Jordan and others against the Board of Supervisors of the County of Tulare and others, for an injunction to prevent the construction of a county court house outside the city limits of Visalia. The Superior Court of Tulare County, Robert B. Lambert, J., rendered judgment for defendants and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that where Visalia was an unincorporated area with no definite boundaries when selected as the county seat, subsequent incorporation of a city of Visalia did not affect the location of the county seat, and the building of a new court house on property adjacent to, but outside the corporate limits was not a removal of the county seat and did not require an election as provided by the State Constitution in cases of removal.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Counties ⇐28

Where statutes merely recognized county seats of respective counties of state and another statute provided the county seat of Tulare was Visalia, and statutes did not use word "city", the statutes did not indicate that county seat of Visalia was within the corporate limits of the city of Visalia. Government Code, §§ 23600, 23654; Pol.Code, § 3975b.

2. Counties ⇐28

Platting, and fixed boundaries, were not necessary to selection of county seat and selection of Visalia was legal and operative when well-known place which was only such place in county was designated, although its boundaries were unfixed and indefinite.

3. Counties ⇐30

Where county seat is legally located in unplatted area with unfixed boundaries, subsequent incorporation of territory and municipal action changing boundaries of corporation would not affect location of county seat.

4. Counties ⇐28

It is not necessary that a county seat should be located within territory occupied by an incorporated city.

5. Counties ⇐37, 107

In absence of limitations, board of county commissioners has exclusive power over county property and may remove and designate new sites for county buildings within limits prescribed for county seat, as they existed at time of location and establishment of county seat at that place.

6. Counties ⇐37

Where Visalia was unincorporated and had no definite boundaries, when selected as county seat, finding of trial court that tract of land adjacent to but outside incorporated city of Visalia proposed for new county courthouse, was at Visalia, was not erroneous as matter of law.

7. Counties ⇐30, 32

Where Visalia was unincorporated with no definite boundaries, when designated as county seat, subsequent proceedings incorporating city of Visalia, did not affect county seat location, and building of proposed new courthouse on tract adjacent to but outside corporate limits was not a "removal of county seat" within provision of state constitution, that no county seat shall be removed unless two-thirds of that county's qualified electors vote in favor of removal. Const. art. 11, § 2.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Removal of County Seat".

H. A. Savage, Fresno, for appellants.

R. N. Nickerson and Leroy McCormick, Visalia, for respondents.

MUSSELL, Justice.

Action for injunction to prevent the construction of a county court house on property adjacent to the corporate limits of the city of Visalia.

Plaintiffs, as taxpayers of Tulare county, brought this action to enjoin the board of supervisors of Tulare county from erecting and constructing a new county court house on a tract of land outside of the present corporate limits of the city of Visalia and to restrain the county auditor and treasurer from expending any county funds in so doing. The action was tried before the court without a jury and plaintiffs appeal from the judgment rendered against them.

The county of Tulare was organized under the provisions of Chapter 153 of the Statutes of 1852 and section 2 of that statute established the seat of justice of the county temporarily at Woodsville. In 1853 the legislature enacted Chapter 46 of the Statutes of 1853 which provided in part that at the next general election the permanent location of the seat of justice of Tulare county should be submitted to the voters. At the next general election, held on September 7, 1853, there were 44 votes cast for Visalia and 41 for Woodsville. At the time of this election, Visalia had no definite designated boundaries and the area embraced by it was unincorporated.

On December 9, 1853, the supervisors took possession of a quarter section of land at Visalia and appointed it the seat of justice of the county of Tulare. In August of 1857 the supervisors selected this quarter section as a site for the county seat and caused the land to be laid out and divided into town lots. This is the quarter section upon which the present court house, erected in 1857, is now located.

On September 28, 1948, a contract was executed between the Hyde Development Company and the county of Tulare for the construction of a new county court house on a site approximately one and one-half miles west of the present court house on property adjacent to the present city limits of the city of Visalia. This contract was cancelled by agreement of the parties on May 5, 1950, and the question of its legality has become moot. However, it is conceded that unless restrained, the county of Tulare will proceed to build a court house on the new site (which has been deeded to the county) without submitting the proposition to the electors at a general election as provided in Article XI, section 2, of the State Constitution. This section provides that "No county seat shall be removed unless two-thirds of the qualified electors of the county, voting on the proposition at a general election, shall vote in favor of such removal * * *."

The question before us is whether the provisions of the State Constitution relative to the removal of a county seat are applicable in the instant case.

[1] The plaintiffs first contend that the legislature in 1907 designated the city of Visalia as the county seat of the county of Tulare by enacting section 3975b of the Political Code, and that in 1947, by enacting sections 23600 and 23654 of the Government Code, the legislature again designated the city of Visalia as the county seat. However, section 3975b of the Political Code merely states that "The county seats of the respective counties of the state, as now fixed by law, are hereby recognized as, and declared to be, the county seats of the respective counties." Section 23600 of the Government Code provides that "The county seats of the respective counties of the State, as fixed by law and designated in this article, are declared to be the county seats of the respective counties." And section 23654 of the same code provides that "The county seat of Tulare is Visalia." The word "city" is not used in any of the three quoted sections and there is nothing in the language used indicating that the county seat of Visalia is within the corporate limits of the city of Visalia.

[2, 3] When "Visalia" was selected by the voters of Tulare county as the county seat, its boundaries were unfixed and indefinite and it was not necesary to its selection that it should have been platted or have fixed and definite boundaries. The selection was legal and operative when it designated a place which was well known and which was the only such place in the county. 20 C.J.S., Counties, § 55, p. 810. When the county seat was thus located, it could not be changed by the proceedings incorporating the territory or by subsequent municipal action changing the boundaries of the incorporated city.

[4] As was said in State ex rel. Kellogg, Attorney General, v. County Commissioners of Atchison County, 44 Kan. 186, 24 P. 87, 88:

"When a county-seat is located, its exact location is fixed, and it cannot be changed by the subsequent mutations of the municipal corporation within whose territory it may happen to be located. * * *"

"It is not necessary, however, in any case, that a county-seat should be located within or upon territory occupied by an incorporated city, or within the territory of a city at all. * * *"

[5] In the absence of limitations on such power, a board of county commissioners, or a county court, having exclusive power over the property of the county may remove and designate new sites for county buildings, within the limits prescribed for the county seat, that is, the boundaries of the town as they exist at the time of location and establishment of the county seat at that place. 15 C.J. 444, Sec. 91, 20 C.J.S., Counties, § 73.

In Matkin v. Marengo County, 137 Ala. 155, 34 So. 171, it was held that the terms "courthouse site" and "county site", as used in the statute, should be construed to signify a seat of government of the county, and hence that such statute did not apply to or require an election for the removal of the courthouse of the county from one lot of ground to another within the boundaries designated as the county seat.

In Board of Revenue of Covington County v. Merrill, 193 Ala. 521, 68 So. 971, 977, it was held that the board of revenue could lawfully remove the court house from its site in the public square of Andalusia to another lot within the town, within the meaning of a constitutional provision providing that no court house or county site should be removed except by a majority vote of the qualified electors of the county and that the provision did not forbid the erection of a new court house on a different site or lot in the same county seat or town.

Murdoch v. Klamath County Court, 62 Or. 483, 126 P. 6, 7, is an Oregon case in which the action was brought to restrain the erection of a court house upon a parcel of land outside of Linkville, Oregon. Linkville was established as the county seat in 1884 and five years later was incorporated and its boundaries were particularly described. In 1893, by an act to incorporate the town of Klamath Falls and to repeal the act incorporating the town of Linkville, the name of the county seat was changed and the boundary lines perfected. Since the last-mentioned date, Klamath Falls has been the name of the county seat of Klamath County and the city limits now extend far beyond the first corporate boundaries. The county proposed to erect a new court house upon a tract of land within an addition to Klamath Falls, outside of the limits of the original town plat of Linkville. The statutes of Oregon provided that whenever the inhabitants of any county of the state desired to remove the county seat of the county from the place where it was fixed by law, or otherwise, an election for that purpose should be called by the county court and held by the electors of the county. The court held that the new site was not outside of the legal bounds of the county seat; that the phrase "at the town of Linkville" was equivalent to near or in proximity to that place.

[6] In the instant case the trial court found that the tract of land upon which the new court house is proposed to be erected was at Visalia and we cannot say, as a matter of law, that the court's finding in this respect is erroneous.

The word "at" was defined in Clark County Fiscal Court v. Powell County Fiscal Court, 223 Ky. 10, 2 S.W.2d 1039, 1041, as follows: "The primary idea in the word 'at' is 'nearness' or 'proximity,' and it is commonly used as the equivalent of 'near' or 'about.' Fayette County Board of Education v. Tompkins, 212 Ky. 751, 280 S.W. 114." In that case a state statute required the establishment of a county high school at the county seat and the court held that when the location was in reasonable proximity to the corporate limits of the county seat, the intention and purpose of the legislature was complied with and the requirement as to the location was fulfilled; that the word "at", in referring to place, primarily means "near to" that place and not necessarily within.

[7] Since Visalia at the time of its selection as a county seat was not incorporated and had no definite or specific boundaries, the action of the electorate in designating Visalia as the county seat fixed its location at the place known as "Visalia". The new building site can reasonably be said to be "at" Visalia and the proceedings by which the corporate limits of the city of Visalia were fixed and by which they may be changed from time to time do not change the location of the county seat. The erection and construction of a new court house on the site selected is not, in our opinion, a removal of the county seat within the meaning of the language used in Article XI, Section 2 of the State Constitution.

Judgment affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 428

PEOPLE v. CHAPMAN.

Cr. 2201.

District Court of Appeal. Third District. California.

Sept. 16, 1950.

Marian Dell Chapman was convicted of burglary. From an order of the Superior Court, Stanislaus County, B. C. Hawkins, J., denying defendant's petition for the issuance of a writ of error coram nobis, defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Adams, P. J., held that the evidence sustained finding of trial court that defendant's plea of guilty was not induced by threats, coercion, or intimidation by her husband or by promises of leniency by responsible officials.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal law ⇐997

The issue of petitioner's guilt or innocence could not be tried in a proceeding for a writ of error coram nobis.

2. Criminal law ⇐997

Evidence sustained finding of trial court that petitioner's plea of guilty was not induced by threats, coercion or intimidation by her husband or by promises of leniency by responsible officials, and therefore trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying application for writ of error coram nobis.

Marian Chapman, Tehachapi, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Attorney General, by Gail A. Strader, Deputy Attorney General, for respondent.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from an order of the Superior Court of Stanislaus County, denying to this appellant the issuance of a writ of error coram nobis.

In the petition there filed it was set forth that on or about June 14, 1948, petitioner was charged with burglary, that she entered a plea of guilty, and on July 7, 1948 was sentenced to the California Institution for Women. Petitioner then alleged that her plea of guilty was induced solely by reason of threats, coercion, wrongful persuasion, duress and intimidation of her husband, Jack Chapman; that she did not, in fact, commit the offense charged in the information but entered her plea of guilty at the request and command of her said husband, and in an effort to prevent his being prosecuted, and that had she not been so acting she would have had a trial by jury and been acquitted.

A hearing on said petition was had at which testimony was taken, petitioner being represented by counsel. She testified that shortly after her arrest and while she was, for about one hour, detained in the county jail at Sonora, her husband occupied an adjoining cell, and that they conversed out the windows of their respective cells; that her husband then advised her to plead guilty as that would make it easier for him; that he assured her that she would receive probation; that she was afraid of her husband (though he was then serving a term in the penitentiary), and also that she was under the impression when she pleaded guilty that she was only admitting that she had been in her husband's car during his commission of the burglary. She also urged that in return for her guilty plea she had been promised probation by the county sheriff. This was not alleged in her petition on file, and was denied by the official mentioned.

Regarding petitioner's fear of her husband she admitted that they had been married for about twenty years, and that during their marriage he had been convicted of several crimes. The date of petitioner's conversation with her husband was May 18th, and she said that she then decided to plead guilty. She was then taken to Modesto and jailed there. Her plea of guilty was entered June 14th, at which time she was represented by counsel; and in the interim her husband had been taken to San Quentin so she did not see him again. She petitioned for probation which was denied, and she was sentenced July 7, 1948. No appeal was taken from the judgment.

This proceeding was filed October 10, 1949.

[1] During the hearing petitioner sought to show that she was not guilty of the crime charged, but the trial court held that the issue of her guilt or innocence could not be tried in this proceeding. In that respect its ruling was correct. People v. Shorts, 32 Cal.2d 502, 513, 197 P.2d 330; People v. Adamson, 34 Cal.2d 320, 326–327, 328, 210 P.2d 13; People v. Tuthill, 32 Cal.2d 819, 821–822, 198 P.2d 505; People v. Schuman, 98 Cal.App.2d 140, 219 P.2d 36; People v. Malone, 96 Cal. App.2d 270, 215 P.2d 109; People v. Chapman, 96 Cal.App.2d 668, 216 P.2d 112; People v. Coates, 95 Cal.App.2d 78, 212 P.2d 263; In re Rogers, 91 Cal.App.2d 394, 205 P.2d 667.

[2] As for the issue of whether her plea of guilty was induced by threats, coercion or intimidation by her husband or by promises of leniency by responsible officials, assuming but not deciding that such issue was properly triable in this proceeding, the evidence adduced presented to the trial court for its determination issues of fact, alone, which it resolved against her; and the only question for this court is whether its conclusion is supported by the evidence. We are satisfied that it is, and that there was no abuse of discretion in denying the application for the writ. People v. Tidwell, 75 Cal.App. 2d 476, 171 P.2d 565.

The report of the probation officer, which is made a part of the record here, recited that for several years Jack Chapman had been in and out of several penitentiaries; that on several occasions petitioner had accompanied her husband and other co-defendants while burglaries were committed by them; that she used articles which had been stolen from various parties, and that a large amount of loot was located in the hotel which was operated by petitioner and her husband. Also a letter which she wrote to a friend while she was in jail showed that she put the blame for her husband's conviction upon her young daughter, and stated that if released she intended to use her efforts to assist her husband and avenge herself upon her daughter. Also she admitted to the sheriff that she had been with her husband and one Nelson when they committed several burglaries and carried off stolen goods, such as a sewing machine, clothing, a vacuum cleaner, a radio and costume jewelry. She was also in possession of a watch stolen by her husband; and at the time this petition was filed she had already stood trial in Alameda County for burglaries there, at which time Chapman was convicted and the jury disagreed as to her. People v. Chapman, 93 Cal.App.2d 365, 209 P.2d 121. And her husband had also been convicted of an offense in Tuolumne County, at the commission of which she testified she was present in his car with him. People v. Chapman, 91 Cal.App.2d 854, 206 P.2d 4.

Far from indicating that petitioner was afraid of her husband, the record indicates that she was a willing participant in his various crimes.

The order is affirmed.

VAN DYKE and PEEK, JJ., concur.

HENDERSHOTT et al. v. SHIPMAN et al.

Civ. 17415.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Sept. 18, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 11, 1950.

Hearing Granted Nov. 16, 1950.*

Loyal L. Hendershott and another brought action against Benjamin W. Shipman and another to quiet title to real property. A judgment refusing to quiet title to the property in plaintiffs but adjudging that plaintiffs were owners of a certificate of sale and that certificate was a valid and subsisting lien upon the property was entered by the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, A. W. Ashburn, J., and the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Wood, J., held that where plaintiffs were claiming title to realty through a city treasurer's deed given after a sale under Street Improvement Act, and it was found that treasurer's deed was void, judgment should not have included a provision that certificate of sale issued to plaintiff was a valid lien against the property, in absence of any request by defendants for affirmative relief.

Modified and affirmed.

1. Municipal corporations ⇐579

The certificate of sale of real property issued by treasurer of City of Los Angeles, following foreclosure of street improvement bond by treasurer pursuant to Improvement Act, which was subject to right of redemption by property owners, could not have been a proper basis for an action by plaintiffs to quiet title to the property. Streets and Highways Code, § 6550.

2. Quieting title ⇐10(1)

In action to quiet title, plaintiff must recover upon strength of his own title and not upon weakness of defendant's claim.

3. Municipal corporations ⇐579

In action to quiet title, where plaintiffs were claiming title to realty through city treasurer's deed given after a sale under Street Improvement Act, upon finding that treasurer's deed was void, judgment should not have included a provision that plaintiffs were owners of a certificate of sale and that certificate was a valid and subsisting lien upon the property, in view of fact that defendants were not seeking any affirmative relief. Streets and Highways Code, §§ 6442, 6508, 6531, 6550, 6572.

Charles Murstein, Los Angeles, for appellants.

John F. Bender and Gizella M. Allen, Los Angeles, for respondents.

WOOD, Justice.

Action to quiet title to real property. In the complaint it is alleged that plaintiffs are the owners and entitled to possession of certain real property in Los Angeles; and that defendants claim some right, title or interest in the property adverse to plaintiffs but the defendants have no right, title or interest in any part thereof.

The defendants in their answer deny generally and specifically the allegations of the complaint to the effect that plaintiffs are the owners and entitled to the possession of the property; they admit that they claim the right as owners in fee of the property; they deny that they have no right or title or interest in the property, but on the contrary they allege that the plaintiffs have no right, title or interest in any part thereof. As a further defense they allege that the claims of plaintiffs to the property are without right and the said claims are invalid and void; that any proceedings upon which plaintiffs' claims are based are invalid and void and are barred by the statutes of limitations. They pray that plaintiffs take nothing by the complaint; that the complaint be dismissed; that the defendants be awarded costs, and such other relief as the court deems proper.

* Subsequent opinion 231 P.2d 481.

The court found that it is not true that plaintiffs are the owners of the property and it is not true that plaintiffs are entitled to possession thereof; that plaintiffs are the owners of certificate of sale No. 3322 issued by the treasurer of the City of Los Angeles on May 31, 1946, following the foreclosure of a street improvement bond which was issued on August 31, 1928, by said treasurer pursuant to the Improvement Act of 1911; that the treasurer's deed which was issued by said treasurer on July 7, 1947, was issued without there first having been filed with the treasurer an affidavit showing service upon the owner of the property of any notice in respect thereto; that at no time was any affidavit filed with the treasurer stating that a redemption notice which stated any of the matters specified in section 6550 of the Streets and Highways Code was at any time served upon the owner of the property or an agent of the owner; that defendant Mr. Shipman is the owner of the property.

The court adjudged that the plaintiffs are owners of said certificate of sale; that "said Certificate, and the amount due thereon, is a valid and subsisting lien upon" said real property, but plaintiffs are not entitled to a judgment quieting their title to the property; that said treasurer's deed is void; that the defendants Mr. and Mrs. Shipman recover their costs.

Defendants appeal from the judgment and from that portion of the judgment which adjudges that plaintiffs are owners of the certificate of sale, and that "said Certificate, and the amount due thereon, is a valid and subsisting lien upon" said real property. The appeal is upon the judgment roll.

[1, 2] Appellants contend that it was error to include in the judgment the provision that plaintiffs are the owners of the certificate of sale and that "said Certificate, and the amount due thereon, is a valid and subsisting lien upon" the property. It appears that appellants (defendants) did not seek affirmative relief by cross-complaint or otherwise. The issue herein was whether plaintiffs were entitled to a judgment quieting their alleged title to the property. They based their claim of title upon the treasurer's deed. The court found that plaintiffs are not the owners of the property and adjudged that the treasurer's deed is void. There was no issue herein as to the condition of appellant's title. The certificate of sale, which was issued subject to the right of redemption by the appellants, could not have been a proper basis for an action by plaintiffs to quiet title to the property. "In an action to quiet title, the plaintiff must recover upon the strength of his own title and not upon the weakness of the defendant's claim." Tanner v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 20 Cal.2d 814, 825, 129 P.2d 383, 389. In Warden v. Harker, 212 Cal. 775, 300 P. 965, 966, the plaintiff claimed title through a treasurer's deed given after a sale under the provisions of the Street Improvement Act. The defendant therein contested the title of plaintiff on the ground that the sale proceedings and the deed were invalid. The court therein so found and rendered judgment for defendant, but the plaintiff contended on appeal that the court erred in failing to find that plaintiff had a lien upon the property for the amount of the assessment which he had paid at the time of sale. In that case the court said: "Plaintiff in his complaint alleged that he was the owner of the property; and he did not amend to claim a lien, nor did he make the point in presenting his case. At all times he stood on his claim of title, and refused the tender made by defendant both before and during the trial, of the amount expended by plaintiff, which sum now forms the basis of his contention on this appeal. In addition, it seems obvious that, where the whole proceedings are invalid, no lien attaches to the property sold." In District Bond Co. v. Pollack, 19 Cal.2d 304, 121 P.2d 7, the District Bond Company sought to foreclose a street improvement bond. The respondent therein, in a complaint in intervention, sought to quiet his alleged title to the property. The appellant, who was named as a defendant in intervention, denied respondent's ownership of the property and asked that title be quieted in his favor as against respondent. The trial court therein decreed that title to the property should be quieted in appellant's favor and that respondent should have a lien against the property for a certain sum which he had expended in payment of a sewer bond and taxes. The appellant contended on appeal that it was error to include in the judgment the provision that respondent had a lien against the property. The reviewing court said, 19 Cal.2d at page 307, 121 P.2d at page 9: "Appellant contends that the relief afforded respondent was outside the issues raised by the pleadings. Appellant, however, in his answer affirmatively requested the trial court to quiet title to the property in his favor. [Citing cases.] A party who requests equitable relief must satisfy the equitable claims interposed by the opposing party." In Roma v. Elbert, Ltd., 73 Cal.App.2d 338, 166 P.2d 294, plaintiffs sought to quiet their title to real property but the judgment quieted the defendant's title against the claims of plaintiffs and did not require defendant to pay plaintiffs a certain sum which plaintiffs had paid for taxes. On appeal by plaintiffs it was held that the defendant should have been required to reimburse plaintiffs (appellants) for the amount paid by them for taxes. The court said, 73 Cal.App.2d at page 341, 166 P.2d at page 296: "Respondent [defendant] might have rested on the invalidity of appellants' title and defeated the action without the necessity of repaying the taxes. [Citing case.] It was not content to resist appellants' action but in its answer respondent denied their title and affirmatively alleged its own title as having been acquired by reason of the separate foreclosure of two street improvement bonds. The answer prayed for a decree that respondent was the owner of the property and that appellants had no right, title or interest therein. Evidence was offered in support of said allegations, following which the court made findings in accordance therewith and rendered a judgment quieting respondent's title against all claims of appellants. * * * Where equitable relief is sought by a property owner against a purchaser at a tax sale the party seeking relief must do equity, and the repayment of the amount of the taxes paid by the purchaser at the tax sale does no more than to satisfy the equitable requirement. This rule obtains where the property owner as plaintiff initiates an action seeking relief against the tax deed [citing cases], or where the holder of a tax deed is plaintiff and the defendant denies the validity of the tax title and seeks affirmative relief against the same." As above stated, in the present case defendant did not ask for affirmative relief. There was no allegation in the pleadings regarding a lien or any payments by plaintiffs or anyone upon an assessment, or for interest, penalties, or expenses. There was no finding that plaintiff or anyone had paid any amount in connection with the street bond assessment. The provision of the judgment that the certificate of sale and the amount due thereon constituted a valid lien upon the property was an adjudication that the amount stated in the certificate was in fact the amount due upon the bond as principal, interest, penalties and expenses. As above stated, there was no issue in this quiet title action as to whether the title of appellants was clear or encumbered.

It might be argued, however, that, under the provisions of section 6572 of the Streets and Highways Code, it was proper to include in the judgment a provision that the certificate of sale and the amount due thereon constituted a lien upon the property. That section provides: "If any sale of lands for delinquency in the payment of principal or interest of any bond is held illegal or invalid, or any deed issued to the purchaser at any such sale is held illegal or invalid for any reason whatsoever, the lands described in the bond shall not be released from the lien of the assessment but shall be and remain subject to further proceedings for the enforcement of the assessment, and the further proceedings may include additional sales or the issuance of new deeds. In any event, however, the lien of the assessment shall continue only until a valid sale is had and a valid deed issued, or until the expiration of two years after such sale or deed is held illegal or invalid, whichever is sooner." It is to be noted that said section states that "the lien of the assessment" shall continue after a deed is held to be void. It does not state that the certificate of sale or the amount stated therein is a lien which shall continue after the deed is held to be void. The lien of the assessment, mentioned in the section, is not necessarily the certificate of sale and the amount stated therein—or the amount stated therein. It might be shown, in a trial of the issue as to whether the amount stated in the certificate was the amount due on the bond, that the amount stated in the certificate is not correct. A redemption of the property, under the lien stated in the judgment, namely, the certificate of sale and the amount due thereon, may be made by paying "the following, together with interest at the rate of 1 per cent a month from the date of sale": purchase money and costs, the moneys paid for taxes, assessments or liens, and the fee for recording the certificate of sale. See Streets and Highways Code, sec. 6531. Prior to a sale the amount required to remove the "lien of the assessment", referred to in said section 6572, and cancel the bond, is the unpaid principal, the interest thereon compounded semiannually at the rate named in the bond, the penalty on delinquent instalments, and the cost of publication. See Streets and Highways Code, sec. 6508. The penalty on delinquent instalments prior to sale is 1 per cent a month of the total amount of delinquent instalments and interest. Streets and Highways Code, sec. 6442. It therefore appears that the amount required to remove the lien mentioned in the judgment is more than the amount required to remove "the lien of the assessment" prior to the sale.

Furthermore, it is to be noted that said section 6572, as amended in 1945, provides that: "In any event, however, the lien of the assessment shall continue only until a valid sale is had and a valid deed issued, or until the expiration of two years after such sale or deed is held illegal or invalid, whichever is sooner." It is also to be noted that there is no limit of time stated in the judgment as to the duration of the lien. Even if a provision regarding a lien should have been included in the judgment, the provision should have limited the duration of the lien to said period of two years.

[3] The judgment should not have included the provision regarding a lien or the provision that the plaintiffs are owners of the certificate of sale. The judgment should be modified by striking out those provisions. It is ordered that the judgment be and it is modified as follows: (1) By striking from the second paragraph thereof the following, "plaintiffs are the owners of Certificate of Sale No. 3322, issued by the City Treasurer of the City of Los Angeles, on May 31, 1946, following the foreclosure of Street Improvement Bond No. 22, Series 1, for the improvement of Columbus Avenue (and portions of other streets), which said bond was issued on August 31, 1928, by the City Treasurer of the City of Los Angeles, pursuant to the provisions of the Improvement Act of 1911. That said Certificate, and the amount due thereon, is a valid and subsisting lien upon the real property as described in said certificate, and as more particularly described as follows:

"Lot 239 of Tract No. 2800, as per map recorded in Book 28, Pages 53 and 54 of Maps, Records of Los Angeles County, but that"; and (2) By adding at the end of the second paragraph thereof, after the word "property," the following: "particularly described as follows: Lot 239 of Tract No. 2800, as per map recorded in Book 28, Pages 53 and 54 of Maps, Records of Los Angeles County, California."

As so modified the judgment is affirmed. Appellants to recover costs on appeal.

SHINN, P. J., and VALLÉE, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 425

MARTINEZ v. MARTINEZ et al.

Civ. 4213.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Sept. 15, 1950.

Action by Leonard Martinez, and Leonard Martinez doing business as Vernon Ship Supplies, against Julian Martinez, and Julian Martinez doing business as Julian Ship Provisions, and others, to reform a contract by adding agreement that defendant would refrain from engaging in similar business in San Diego County and to enjoin defendant from engaging in such business. The Superior Court, San Diego County, Robert B. Burch, J., entered order denying defendant's motion for change of venue from San Diego County to Los Angeles County, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that defendant was entitled to have place for trial of action transferred from San Diego County to Los Angeles County.

Order reversed.

1. Venue ⇐46

In action by purchaser of San Diego business against vendor to reform contract by adding agreement that defendant would refrain from engaging in similar business in San Diego County and to enjoin vendor from engaging in such business, where vendor's residence was in Long Beach, chattel mortgage was acknowledged in Long Beach, note provided that all payments were to be made in Long Beach, and purchaser did not deny that written contract was executed in Long Beach, vendor was entitled to have place of trial of action transferred from San Diego County to Los Angeles County. Code Civ. Proc. § 395.

2. Venue ⇐7

Under statutory exception providing that county in which obligation was incurred by a defendant would be deemed to be county in which it was to be performed unless there was special contract in writing to contrary, action to reform contract, allegedly executed in Los Angeles County, by adding agreement that vendor of San Diego business would refrain from engaging in similar business in San Diego and to enjoin vendor from engaging in such business, did not come within exception. Code Civ. Proc. § 395.

3. Venue ⇐16½

When cause of action for relief in personam is joined with another cause of action which is local in character, the defendant is entitled to have the action transferred to county of his residence.

4. Reformation of Instruments ⇐30

An action to reform contract, and for an injunction in accordance with such relief, is proceeding in equity and is essentially a personal action.

Geo. W. Trammell, Long Beach, for appellant.

Alfred Einstein, V. Lustig, National City, for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from an order denying a motion for change of venue.

The complaint alleged the sale to the plaintiff by the defendant of a ship supply business located in San Diego, under a written contract which was set forth in full; that it was the agreement, intent and purpose of the parties that the defendant was not to re-engage in a similar business in San Diego County; that by mutual mistake a clause to that effect was not included in the agreement; that by mutual mistake, or by the mistake of the plaintiff and the fraud of the defendant, the agreement did not embody the actual agreement as theretofore made; and that the written agreement does provide for the sale of all of the vendor's interest in said business "including the good will." In a second cause of action, it was alleged that the phrase "including the good will" meant that the defendant would not engage in a similar business in San Diego County; that the defendant knew that the plaintiff would not have bought the business without an agreement to that effect; that such a clause was omitted from the contract either by mutual mistake or through the fraud of the defendant; and that the defendant, in October, 1949, re-engaged in a similar business at another location in San Diego and has since solicited plaintiff's customers. The prayer is that the written agreement be reformed to express the true intention of the parties as set out in the complaint, and that the defendant be enjoined from continuing in the ship supply business in San Diego. The agreement attached to the complaint provides for the sale of personal property only, this business with certain fixtures and including the good will, and for the payment of the purchase price in monthly instalments.

The defendant demurred, and moved to have the action transferred to the superior court of Los Angeles County. His affidavit in support of the motion alleges that his residence is and was at the time of the commencement of the action in Long Beach; that the written agreement attached to the complaint was executed in Long Beach; and that a note and chattel mortgage securing the payments to be made were also executed in Long Beach at the same time the agreement was executed. Copies of this note and chattel mortgage were attached and by reference made a part of the affidavit. The note provides that the amounts due are to be paid to the defendant at a certain address in Long Beach. The chattel mortgage makes no reference to the place at which it was executed, but it was acknowledged before a notary public in Los Angeles County on the same day the note and mortgage are dated. The plaintiff filed an affidavit in opposition to the motion which, so far as material here, merely states that the property referred to in the note and chattel mortgage is situated at a certain address in the city of San Diego. The court denied the motion for change of venue, and this appeal followed.

The complaint does not allege that the contract was executed in San Diego County, and the contract itself does not disclose where it was executed. The defendant's statement that it was executed in Long Beach was not denied. There is no showing to the contrary, and upon the contract as written nothing further was to be done by the vendor. The note and mortgage were executed at the same time, the mortgage being acknowledged in Long Beach, and the note providing that all payments were to be made in Long Beach. The fact that the defendant resided in Long Beach was not disputed and is not questioned.

[1] On the face of the complaint and the contract as executed, the proper place for the trial of the action was Los Angeles County, under section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure. With respect to the matter of reforming the contract, the main question here is whether this action comes within one of the exceptions mentioned in that section. This exception provides that when a defendant "has contracted to perform an obligation in a particular county" that county is the proper place for trial "of an action founded on such obligation," and that the county in which "such obligation is incurred shall be deemed to be the county in which it is to be performed unless there is a special contract in writing to the contrary."

In this case it does not yet appear that the defendant has contracted to perform an obligation in San Diego County, that being the basic fact which the plaintiff is seeking to establish through this action. So far as now appears, the action is not founded on an obligation which the defendant has contracted to perform in San Diego County. Nor does it now appear that any such obligation was incurred in San Diego County. So far as now appears any obligation assumed by the defendant was incurred in Los Angeles County.

[2] As disclosed by the complaint and as matters now stand, this was a personal and transitory action to change the terms of a contract by adding an obligation which, if added, would relate to a performance in San Diego County. The primary purpose of the action was to determine whether or not such an obligation exists at all, and the enforcement of the obligation which may be created is incidental. If it be found that the plaintiff is not entitled to reformation, he would not be entitled to any of the relief prayed for. So far as the reformation issue is concerned the action does not come within the exception in question. Turlock Theater Co. v. Laws, 12 Cal.2d 573, 86 P.2d 345, 120 A.L.R. 786.

[3, 4] The injunction phase of the action is incidental to its primary purpose and is inapplicable until and unless that purpose is accomplished. Any issue in that connection is not sufficient to bring the action within the exception above mentioned. When a cause of action for relief in personam is joined with another cause of action which is local in character, the defendant is entitled to have the action transferred to the county of his residence. Turlock Theater Co. v. Laws, 12 Cal.2d 573, 86 P.2d 345, 120 A.L.R. 786; Goosen v. Clifton, 75 Cal.App.2d 44, 170 P.2d 104. An action to reform a contract, and for an injunction in accordance with such relief, is a proceeding in equity and is essentially a personal action. Bardwell v. Turner, 219 Cal. 288, 25 P.2d 978.

The order appealed from is reversed.

GRIFFIN and MUSSELL, JJ., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 338

HOLLYWOOD STATE BANK v. COOK et al.

Civ. 3991.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Sept. 6, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 27, 1950.

Hearing Denied Nov. 2, 1950.

The Hollywood State Bank brought action against D. D. Cook, administrator of the estate of Cal A. Cook, deceased, and others, to foreclose two chattel mortgages. From an adverse judgment of the Superior Court of San Diego County, C. M. Monroe, J., the bank appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that where two chattel mortgages and unrecorded collateral security agreements did not refer to each other, and the mortgages did not indicate an intent to secure future loans, the collateral agreements did not enlarge the terms of the mortgages as security for future advances and the bank acquired no liens as against general creditors by virtue of the agreements.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Chattel mortgages ⇐83

Purpose of statute requiring recordation of chattel mortgages is to prevent secret liens and interests in personal property. Civ. Code, § 2957.

2. Chattel mortgages ⇐196

Even if unrecorded collateral security agreements were regarded as extending chattel mortgages to secure future loans, agreements, not being recorded, would be void as against creditors of mortgagor. Civ. Code, § 2957.

3. Chattel mortgages ⇐84, 197(1)

Chattel mortgage to secure future advances is valid between mortgagor and mortgagee even though not recorded, but void as to creditors of mortgagor who have acquired a lien thereon and who may take advantage of failure to record. Civ. Code, § 2957.

4. Chattel mortgages ⇐110

Chattel mortgage does not protect mortgagee as to future advances unless it appears from the mortgage itself that it is given to secure future advances, and unless maximum is expressed. Civ. Code, § 2957.

5. Chattel mortgages ⇐110, 197(1)

Where each of two chattel mortgages to bank described particular note it secured and stated it was security for such note, and neither mortgage indicated intent to secure future advances or other loans or referred to unrecorded collateral security agreements, and security agreements were not entitled "mortgages", security agreements did not enlarge terms of chattel mortgages to cover future advances and mortgagee acquired no lien as against general creditors by virtue of security agreements. Civ. Code, § 2957.

Walter G. Danielson, Los Angeles for appellant.

James Don Keller, District Attorney, and Duane J. Carnes, Deputy District Attorney, San Diego, for respondent San Diego County.

Theron Lamar Caudle, Assistant Attorney General and Ellis N. Slack, Helen Goodner and Virginia H. Adams, Special Assistants, Ernest A. Tolin, United States Attorney, and E. H. Mitchell and Bernard B. Laven, Assistants, all of Los Angeles, for respondent, United States.

MUSSELL, Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiff from an adverse judgment in an action to foreclose two chattel mortgages given by Cal A. Cook covering certain machinery located in San Diego. These mortgages secured two notes given in February and May, 1946, and were duly recorded.

At the time each of these mortgages was executed, Cook also executed a "collateral security agreement" providing in part: "In consideration of any financial accommodations given, or to be given, or continued to the undersigned by Hollywood State Bank (hereinafter called the Bank) and as collateral security for the payment of any indebtedness, obligation or liability of the undersigned to said bank now or hereafter existing * * * the undersigned does hereby assign, transfer to, and deposit with the said bank all property this day delivered by the undersigned to the bank, or which may now be held by the bank, or which may hereafter be delivered by the undersigned to the bank during the existence of this agreement * * * the power of sale and other powers hereinafter given shall apply to all collaterals of any kind, nature or description, including * * * negotiable instruments * * * at any time during the existence of this agreement in possession or control of said bank * * * belonging to, for the account of or subject to the order of the undersigned."

Between October 16, 1946 and April 2, 1947, Cook borrowed additional moneys from the bank, signing five notes therefor, totaling about $47,000.

The United States government acquired various tax liens on the property of Cook amounting to $7,920.75, the first assessment being levied on November 6, 1946, and notice being recorded three days later. Subsequent to April 2, 1947, it acquired additional tax liens, totaling $13,552.66. County taxes also accrued amounting to $2,778.06 for 1947–1948 and $1,711.05 for 1948–1949. None of the county or government taxes have been paid.

At the time of his death, Cook was indebted to plaintiff in a large amount. By stipulation of the parties, the property covered by these mortgages was sold by the administrator for $18,158.75, from which the plaintiff was paid $5,549.60, being the full balance specifically covered by the mortgages. The remaining $12,609.15 is held by the administrator pending the outcome of this action. It is admitted that the estate is further indebted to the plaintiff in the amount of $41,071.93 on the five notes issued from and after October, 1946.

There is no substantial dispute as to the facts. The court found that the plaintiff had been paid in full to the extent of its secured claims and that the remaining debts were not secured by these mortgages.

The plaintiff contends that these mortgages, together with the "collateral security agreements", were intended as and constitute security for all indebtedness of decedent to plaintiff at the time the mortgages were executed or which was thereafter created.

The principal questions here presented are whether the mortgages can be held to be security for future advances, and if so, whether the plaintiff has the prior lien with respect to the federal and county taxes.

Each of the two chattel mortgages involved described the particular promissory note it secured and stated that it was security for that note. Neither mortgage indicated that it was security for any future advances or for any other loan. Neither mortgage referred to the collateral security agreements and neither of these agreements made any reference to the chattel mortgages. The collateral agreements were not recorded and were not entitled "mortgages" and did not, in our opinion, enlarge the terms of the chattel mortgages.

Section 2957 of the Civil Code provides in part that:

"A mortgage of personal property * * is void as against creditors of the mortgagor and subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers of the property in good faith and for value, unless: * * *

"4. The mortgage * * * is recorded in the office of the recorder of the county where the mortgagor resides at the time the mortgage is executed, and also in the county where the property mortgaged is located. * * *

"5. Each such mortgage is clearly entitled on the face thereof, apart from and preceding all other terms of the mortgage, to be a mortgage of * * * chattels * * *."

[1] The purpose of the statute in requiring recordation of chattel mortgages is to prevent secret liens upon and interests in personal property. Ruggles v. Cannedy, 127 Cal. 290, 297, 53 P. 911, 59 P. 827, 46 L.R.A. 371.

[2] If the collateral security agreements were to be regarded to extend the mortgages to secure future loans, those agreements, not being recorded, would be void as against creditors of the mortgagor. Wolpert v. Gripton, 213 Cal. 474, 480, 2 P.2d 767.

The correctness of the trial court's conclusion that the chattel mortgages secured only the two notes which were paid in full is further supported by evidence that the bank treated the first three loans as "coll. secured" and the remaining four notes as "unsecured". Moreover, the evidence shows that other security was given by the decedent to the bank, to wit: an assignment to the bank of the contract on account of which all of the loans were made. It also appears that the bank withheld from the assigned account amounts which were credited to decedent's notes.

Plaintiff cites the case of Rutherford v. Edward L. Eyre & Co., 174 Or. 162, 148 P.2d 530, 152 A.L.R. 1172, in support of its claim that the chattel mortgages were to secure loans other than those described therein. However, that case is distinguishable from the case at bar in that in the Rutherford case the chattel mortgages stated that they were for future advances. The amount of the contemporaneous loan was set forth as was the maximum amount to be loaned (a larger amount than the contemporaneous loan). The contemporaneous agreement referred to in the mortgage stated that the mortgage was security for future loans.

Likewise, in Weiser Loan & Trust Co. v. Comerford, 41 Idaho 172, 238 P. 515, cited by plaintiff, the agreement signed contemporaneously with the chattel mortgage stated that it was executed in conjunction with the mortgage and left no doubt as to the intent of the parties that the chattel mortgage was made to secure future loans by a contemporaneous agreement, which agreement was not acknowledged.

[3] In Lemon v. Wolff, 121 Cal. 272, 53 P. 801, and Wolpert v. Gripton, supra, it is held that a mortgage which does not comply with the requirements of section 2957 of the Civil Code is void as to creditors of the mortgagor who have acquired a lien on mortgaged property. In Lemon v. Wolff, supra, it was held that a mortgage to secure future advances is valid as between the mortgagor and mortgagee even though not recorded and that only creditors of the mortgagor may take advantage of the failure to comply with the recording statute.

In Tully v. Harloe, 35 Cal. 302, 95 Am. Dec. 102, also cited by plaintiff, it was contended that a mortgage in the amount of approximately $3,000, given as security for a present loan of $1,704 was void. The court rejected this contention, holding that the obvious intention in that case was to secure future advances in the amount of the difference between $3,000 and $1,704.

[4] Plaintiff argues that section 2975 of the Civil Code protects a mortgagee as to future advances up to the maximum amount stated therein. However, the wording of the section indicates that it must appear from the mortgage itself that it is given to secure future advances, and that an "expressed maximum" must also appear.

It is conceded that the chattel mortgages were recorded prior to the tax liens, but they did not cover future advances, and the future advances were made after the government recorded its liens.

[5] We are impelled to the conclusion that the chattel mortgages in question were not security for future advances and that the bank acquired no lien as against general creditors by virtue of them. Since we have arrived at this conclusion, it is not necessary to consider the other questions raised on this appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

BARNARD, P.J., and GRIFFIN, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 391

SIPE v. HOLLINGSWORTH & CO. et al.

Civ. No. 17541.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 13, 1950.

Partition action by Frank R. Sipe against W. I. Hollingsworth & Co., a corporation, and others, and John C. Rotchford and Marie E. Rotchford. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Daniel N. Stevens, J., entered a judgment of petition and ordered a sale and the defendants Rotchford appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that a plaintiff to whom was given by payee for collection a street improvement bond which was issued as lien on realty had sufficient title to bring partition action against defendants whose record title to such realty came from purchaser at tax sale.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Bills and notes ⇐524

Possession of commercial paper, with endorsement, makes a prima facie case of delivery by the endorser to the holder, and of ownership of the latter. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subds. 11, 12.

2. Evidence ⇐87

A disputable presumption raises a conflict sufficient to support a finding in accordance therewith. Code Civ.Proc. § 2061, subd. 2.

3. Partition ⇐16

A plaintiff to whom was given by payee for collection a street improvement bond which was issued as lien on realty had sufficient title to bring partition action against defendants whose record title to such realty came from purchaser at the tax sale. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subds. 11, 12; § 2061, subd. 2.

John C. Rotchford and Hiram T. Kellogg, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Robt. E. Rosskopf, John F. Bender, and Gizella M. Loshoncy, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

After trial in the Superior Court plaintiff was found owner of a street improvement bond lien for $912.98 upon real property belonging to defendants Rotchford. Defendants Rotchfords' record title came from a purchaser at a tax sale. An interlocutory decree of partition and order of sale followed, directing that the property be sold, and the proceeds applied to expenses of sale, payment of the lien, and the balance to defendants Rotchford. From this judgment defendants Rotchford appeal.

Defendants claim that plaintiff failed to prove title in the bond sufficient to bring the action; and that the proceeding in partition was unlawful.

Upon the trial it was conceded that possession of the bond by plaintiff was prima facie proof of ownership. Defendants withdrew their objection to the introduction in evidence of the bond, and it was received in evidence. Moreover, plaintiff testified that the bond was given to him for collection by the payee.

[1] Possession of commercial paper, with endorsement, makes a prima facie case of delivery by the endorser to the holder, and of ownership of the latter. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1963, subds. 11 and 12; Linder Hardware Co. v. Pacific Sugar Corp., 17 Cal.App. 81, 118 P. 785, 789; Moore v. Craig, 5 Cal.App.2d 283, 42 P.2d 647.

[2] A disputable presumption will raise a conflict sufficient to support a finding in accordance therewith. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 2061, subd. 2; Grantham v. Ordway, 40 Cal.App. 758, 182 P. 73.

[3] Defendants' second contention is refuted by the case of Elbert, Ltd. v. Nolan, 32 Cal.2d 610, 197 P.2d 537.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 388

BROTEMARKLE v. SNYDER et al.

Civ. 17450.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 13, 1950.

Winfield M. Brotemarkle brought action against Robert A. Snyder and Elinor V. Snyder for injuries sustained by plaintiff when defendants' dog unleashed and unattended dashed into plaintiff's motor scooter and caused plaintiff to be thrown to the pavement. An order dismissing the action was entered by the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Arnold Praeger, J., and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that complaint which alleged that plaintiff was thrown from his motor scooter when defendants' dog, unleashed and unattended, dashed into the motor scooter and violation of city ordinance requiring every owner of dog to keep animal exclusively upon his own premises unless under control of a competent person and restrained by chain and leash was sufficient to state cause of action.

Order reversed and cause remanded with directions.

1. Pleading ⇐214(1)

On demurrer, all of the allegations of a complaint are deemed to be true.

2. Negligence ⇐108(2)

Negligence is pleaded by alleging violation of a duty imposed by statute.

3. Animals ⇐74(2)

For purpose of pleading negligence, city ordinance requiring every owner of dog to keep the animal exclusively upon his own premises unless under control of a competent person and restrained by a chain or leash is not to be restricted to injuries from dog bites only.

4. Automobiles ⇐238(4)

A complaint, which alleged that plaintiff was thrown from motor scooter which he was riding when defendants' dog unleashed and unattended dashed into plaintiff's motor scooter, and violation of city ordinance requiring every owner of a dog to keep animal exclusively upon his own premises unless under control of a competent person and restrained by chain or leash, was sufficient to state cause of action.

George W. Downing, Jr., Los Angeles, for appellant.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, By Richard E. Davis, Los Angeles, for respondents.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

Plaintiff was riding a motor scooter near the intersection of two streets in Los Angeles. A dog "unleashed and unattended * * * dashed into and collided" with plaintiff's motor scooter. Plaintiff was thrown to the pavement, suffered painful and serious injuries. His hospital bill was nearly a thousand dollars.

Complaint was filed in the Superior Court against the owners of the dog, alleging the collision and the injuries, and violation of a city ordinance which requires every person, owner of a dog, to keep the animal "exclusively upon his own premises." The ordinance further provides that a dog may be off such premises if under the control of a competent person and restrained by a chain or leash.

Demurrer to the complaint was sustained. No amended complaint was filed within the time allowed by the court. Under the provisions of Section 581(3) of the Code of Civil Procedure, the action was dismissed.

Plaintiff contends that pleading the accident, plus violation of the ordinance, states a cause of action. Defendants assert that the ordinance was adopted for the limited purpose of guarding the public against being bitten by dogs—not against collisions between dogs and vehicles; therefore, plaintiff does not plead himself within the class protected by the ordinance.

In the case of Satterlee v. Orange Glenn School Dist., 29 Cal.2d 581, at page 590, 177 P.2d 279 at page 284, appears a fair statement of defendants' position: "But there is, of course, a further question in connection with the issue of negligence. Although a violation of a statute is not excusable under the particular circumstances of the case, liability is also dependent upon proof that a duty was owed to persons in the class of the plaintiff * * *."

The early case of Siemers v. Eisen, 54 Cal. 418, has been cited and approved in California jurisprudence ever since 1880. See Hopper v. Bulaich, 27 Cal.2d 431, 164 P.2d 483; Satterlee v. Orange Glenn School Dist., supra.

In the Eisen case, a horse, harnessed to a light buggy, ran away, and injured a pedestrain. A city ordinance required that all horses standing in the streets must be tied to hitching posts. The horse was left standing in the street and was not tied up. The court held that failure to perform a duty imposed by statute was negligence per se.

"But" say defendants, "cases involving animals other than dogs are not controlling here. Anybody knows that if a horse is not tied up, he may run away and hurt somebody; or if a cow, or a bull, roams at large on city streets, trouble is sure to follow. And a good way to wreck an automobile is to encounter a hog loose on a traveled road. With dogs it is different. Dogs have run at large from time immemorial, and except for biting, never, except in extraordinary cases, have hurt anybody."

[1, 2] The argument is interesting, and persuasive. It would seem that one who rides a scooter must bear the hazards incident to that mode of locomotion. But here we have a question of pleading. On demurrer all of the allegations of a complaint are deemed to be true; and negligence is pleaded by alleging violation of a duty imposed by statute. Restatement, Torts, sec. 286.

[3, 4] The ordinance forbids the owner to allow his dog to be at large, except upon a leash. In our great, metropolitan areas, it is no longer possible to enjoy many things which were part and parcel of human life in earlier times, and still are in suburban and rural communities. Whatever may be said about the affection which mankind has for a faithful companion, modern city conditions no longer permit dogs to run at large. For the purpose of pleading negligence, the ordinance is not to be restricted to injuries from dog bites only. Hicks v. Sullivan, 122 Cal.App. 635, 10 P.2d 516. Therefore, the complaint, alleging the accident and violation of the dog-leash ordinance, states a cause of action.

In Eigner v. Race, 54 Cal.App.2d 506, 129 P.2d 444, a Great Dane dog was on a leash held by a small girl. In a friendly, bumbling way, he bumped into a woman and knocked her down. Judgment of nonsuit was affirmed on the theory that plaintiff's injuries were caused by an unavoidable accident. But in that case it was stated that violation of the dog-leash ordinance of the City of Beverly Hills was evidence of negligence.

The order is reversed, and the cause remanded, with direction to the Superior Court to overrule the demurrer, and allow defendants a reasonable time within which to answer the complaint herein if they be so advised.

WHITE, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 370

MAJORS et ux. v. BUTLER.

Civ. 3999.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Sept. 11, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 9, 1950.

Hearing Denied Nov. 9, 1950.

Action by Clyde Majors and wife against Mittie L. Butler to quiet title to realty sold to defendant. The Superior Court of San Diego County, Arthur L. Mundo, J., entered judgment in favor of plaintiffs, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that the action presented questions of fact as to whether vendors were negligent in failing to diligently prosecute action to quiet their title to realty as against earlier contracts for sale thereof to another and whether such negligence created a situation without which loss of purchase money deposited in escrow with title company which was later adjudged a bankrupt would not have occurred, and that the finding that escrow holder was purchaser's agent and that therefore purchaser must bear the loss was not necessarily controlling.

Judgment reversed.

1. Quieting title ⇐44(3)

In action to quiet title to realty as against purchaser, evidence that, though vendors had deposited deed to realty in escrow, their title was subject to an old contract to sell the realty to another which had been recorded but not released, was insufficient to sustain finding that vendors had placed in escrow sufficient deeds to convey title within meaning of escrow agreement requiring a good title.

2. Quieting title ⇐47(2)

In action to quiet title to realty as against purchaser after escrow holder had been adjudged a bankrupt, finding that purchaser had filed in bankruptcy proceeding and never withdrawn a claim for the amount of purchase money deposited in escrow did not fully reflect the fact that such claim was conditional and expressly made contingent on an adverse outcome of quiet title action.

3. Quieting title ⇐44(3)

In action to quiet title to realty as against purchaser after escrow holder of deed and purchase money had been adjudged a bankrupt, evidence did not sustain finding that purchase money could not be traced and was nonexistent at time of bankruptcy, though escrow holder had commingled the purchase money in its general account.

4. Quieting title ⇐44(3)

Evidence did not justify an inference that any act of purchaser, not knowing of bankruptcy of escrow holder, in thereafter obtaining from escrow holder deed to realty was sufficiently culpable to bar her from equitable relief in action by vendors to quiet title to the realty as against purchaser.

5. Escrows ⇐8(1)

Escrow holder is the agent of both parties until the conditions of the escrow are complied with and up to that time any loss of the money caused by such agent must be borne by the one who still owned it, unless the act or negligence of one of the parties is the basic cause of the loss or is a factor without which the loss would not have happened.

6. Principal and agent ⇐131

A principal, though not himself at fault, is bound by the acts of his agent.

7. Quieting title ⇐47(2)

Action by vendors to quiet title to realty as against purchaser after escrow holder had been adjudged a bankrupt presented questions of fact, which might be controlling, as to whether vendors were negligent in failing to diligently prosecute action to quiet their title as against earlier contract for sale of realty to another and whether such negligence created a situation without which loss of purchase money deposited in escrow would not have occurred, and finding that escrow holder was purchaser's agent and therefore loss must fall on purchaser was not necessarily controlling.

8. Quieting title ⇐44(3)

Evidence that vendors, after instituting action to quiet title to realty as against earlier contract for sale thereof to another, did nothing to prosecute such action for a period of almost 15 months preceding bankruptcy of escrow holder, in absence of reasonable excuse for such delay, was sufficient to show that vendors were negligent in failing to comply with escrow agreement to furnish within 30 days or at earliest possible date thereafter anything necessary to show good title, and should therefore bear loss of purchase money resulting from bankruptcy of escrow holder, if such negligence created a condition without which such loss would not have occurred.

9. Escrows ⇐5

Under escrow instructions providing that, if a policy of title insurance could not be issued within 30 days, escrow should be completed at the earliest possible date thereafter, unless written demand for return of deposits was made with joint consent in writing of both the vendors and purchaser, vendors had only a reasonable time in which to clear their title to realty, and failure of purchaser to demand return of purchase money deposited in escrow did not extend such time indefinitely, since such demand would have been ineffective without written consent of vendors.

10. Quieting title ⇐49

Purchaser's rights should not be completely terminated by judgment quieting vendor's title to realty as against purchaser without first affording purchaser an opportunity to make up any shortage in purchase money resulting from bankruptcy of escrow holder.

Ruel Liggett, Burton D. Wood, San Diego, for appellant.

Hunter M. Muir, San Diego, Henry F. Walker, Los Angeles, for respondents.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment quieting the plaintiffs' title and denying any relief to the defendant. The plaintiffs listed a house with a realtor who sold it to the defendant for $4500. On July 12, 1946, an escrow was opened in the office of a title company, the plaintiffs depositing a deed and the defendant $4500. The instructions provided that the company was to use these provided it was able to issue within 30 days a policy showing title vested in the defendant; that the realtor's commission was then to be paid; and that the plaintiffs agreed to furnish any other "instruments" necessary to show good title. They further provided that if such a policy could not be issued within 30 days the escrow was to be completed "at the earliest possible date thereafter," unless written demand for a return of deposits was made; and that no "demand shall be of any effect without joint consent in writing" of both sellers and buyer.

With the acquiescence of the plaintiffs the defendant took possession of the property which she has since occupied and improved as a home. Shortly after the escrow was opened the title company discovered that an old contract to sell the property to one Ellis had been recorded but never released. It informed the plaintiffs, who brought an action to quiet their title on October 22, 1946, publication of summons being commenced on November 2, 1946. The record discloses nothing further in that action until after the present action was filed. A substitution of attorneys was made on April 9, 1948, and a decree quieting their title against Ellis was entered on August 13, 1948.

This title company was adjudged a bankrupt and a trustee appointed on January 7, 1948. On January 8, 1948, while the doors were open and the trustee's agent in charge, the realtor took Mrs. Butler to the office where she signed a change in her instructions by which she would accept title subject to the old Ellis contract, and the "chief searcher" recorded the deed to her.

On January 21, 1948, at the request of the trustee's agent, she signed a quitclaim deed and a letter, dictated by him, stating that it was delivered to place the escrow in status quo, without waiving any of her rights, and was to be used only if it should later be decided that the deed to her had been improperly recorded.

This action was filed on March 12, 1948. The complaint alleged the creation of the escrow; that the money was to be paid over when a title guarantee could be issued; that none was ever issued; that the title company was adjudged a bankrupt and a trustee placed in charge; that the next day the defendant obtained the deed and caused it to be recorded; that her possession of the deed through her agents was unauthorized, of no legal effect, and without consideration; that the escrow holder is insolvent and all of the $4500 deposited with it "is nonexistent"; and that the defendant has never had any interest or right in said land. There was no allegation that the plaintiffs had done their part, except for placing a deed in escrow.

So far as material here, the answer admitted the creation of the escrow, the bankruptcy and the obtaining of the deed; alleged that the $4500 had been fully paid by placing it in escrow at plaintiffs' direction and for their use; and denied that the $4500 so deposited is nonexistent. It was further alleged that the title to the property was not merchantable because of the recorded Ellis contract; and that any loss or damage resulting from the bankruptcy was caused by the negligence of the plaintiffs in failing to prosecute their action against Ellis with diligence, and thus failing to furnish a title in accordance with their agreement.

The action was tried on July 25, 1949, while the bankruptcy was still pending. In addition to the general facts as to the creation of this escrow, and the bankruptcy, the court found that on July 12, 1946, the plaintiffs delivered to the escrow holder "sufficient deeds of conveyance" to convey title to the defendant; that the escrow was never closed and no title policy was ever issued; that the defendant filed a claim for $4500 in the bankruptcy proceeding, which she has never withdrawn; that she illegally obtained the deed on January 8, 1948, and its recordation conveyed no right or title to her; that the escrow holder had commingled the $4500 in its general account; that these funds could not be traced and were "nonexistent in said escrow" at the time of bankruptcy; and that the loss must fall on the defendant since the escrow holder was her agent. No finding was made on the issue raised as to plaintiffs' negligence.

[1, 2] Some of the findings are either unsupported or fail to reflect the facts shown by the evidence. The finding that the plaintiffs placed in escrow "sufficient deeds * * * to convey title" is without support if it was intended to mean a good title, as required by the agreement. The defendant did file a claim in the bankruptcy proceeding, at the last minute, but it was conditional and expressly made contingent on an adverse outcome of the present action. A title policy was never issued because the plaintiffs had not cleared their title.

[3] While the escrow holder had placed the $4500 in its general account, the evidence does not sustain the finding that these funds could not be traced or that they were nonexistent at the time of the bankruptcy. The only evidence is that of the trustee's agent, who had been in charge since January 7, 1948. He testified that such an item could be traced. He also testified that the bank balance was $21,300 on January 7; that the "escrow liability" was then greatly in excess of that amount; and that the last four deposits made probably exceeded that amount. He refused to say the last deposits were escrow money, saying they included all receipts. There is no evidence that these last deposits were escrow money or had not been checked out, and none as to whether other escrow owners were in a position to assert their claims as against the rights of the defendant. So far as the evidence shows, all or some of the money deposited by the defendant may have been available. Keeney v. Bank of Italy, 33 Cal.App. 515, 165 P. 735; Armstrong v. Schoenborn, 130 Cal.App. 501, 20 P.2d 79.

[4] While the finding that a deed was illegally obtained may be correct, the evidence in no way justifies any inference that any act of Mrs. Butler in that connection was sufficiently culpable to bar her from equitable relief. It appears without conflict that on January 8 an employee in the title office, then in charge of the trustee, suggested to the realtor that something should be done to close the escrow; that the realtor persuaded Mrs. Butler to change her instructions; that he did this solely because he was the broker; that he did not then know of the bankruptcy, and believed that the escrow could then be closed and the money paid; that Mrs. Butler merely cooperated with him, knowing nothing of the circumstances; and that she executed a quitclaim deed when informed by the trustee's agent that the transaction was questionable. The evidence indicates that an employee of the trustee acted and delivered the deed in an "attempt to close" the escrow, and that someone later became alarmed. The trustee's agent, who was in charge, testified that the office was closed on January 5 and 6; that up to that time escrows were opened and closed and money paid in the regular way; and that the office was open on January 8 "not to take any new escrows—we ceased to accept new business—but the trustee did continue to attempt to close the business he acquired in the bankruptcy."

The plaintiffs, who were seeking equitable relief, were in effect permitted to withdraw from this escrow contrary to its express terms, when the defendant had fully complied, when they had not done so, and when the escrow could have been completed in ample time had they complied with their part of the agreement, and to do this without a clear showing that the money was entirely lost. The findings clearly indicate that the case was decided solely on the ground that the escrow holder was still the agent of the defendant since a title policy had not been issued.

[5, 6] The general rule that the escrow holder is the agent of both parties until the conditions of the escrow are complied with, and that up to that time any loss of the money caused by such agent must be borne by the one who still owned it, is well established. Hildebrand v. Beck, 196 Cal. 141, 236 P. 301, 39 A.L.R. 1076; Shreeves v. Pearson, 194 Cal. 699, 230 P. 448. This general rule is based upon the doctrine that a principal, although not himself at fault, is bound by the acts of his agent. The reason for the rule ceases, and it should not be solely relied on, when the act or negligence of one of the parties is the basic cause of the loss, or is a factor without which the loss would not have happened. In Crum v. City of Los Angeles, 110 Cal. App. 508, 294 P. 430, such a situation appeared and was held to bring the case within the code provision, Sec. 3543, Civil Code, that: "Where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he, by whose negligence it happened, must be the sufferer."

[7] In this case the escrow holder was also the agent of the plaintiffs, and while they are not responsible under the agency rule, they would be under the other rule if by their own negligence they "created a situation which made it possible for the later loss to occur" and without which it would not have happened. The issue of negligence, raised by the pleadings, presented an important question of fact which called for a finding on that issue, and the agency finding on which the judgment rests was not necessarily controlling.

[8, 9] There is ample evidence that these plaintiffs were negligent in failing to comply with their agreement to furnish anything necessary to show good title, and to do this within 30 days or "at the earliest possible date thereafter." The time was not indefinitely extended because the defendant did not demand a return of her deposit, as they argue. Her hands were tied and she could make no such demand without their written consent. The only extension was to "the earliest possible date." While this doubtedless gave plaintiffs a reasonable time within which to clear their title, it would not justify such an unreasonable delay as seems to have occurred. Plaintiffs' quiet title action against Ellis could have been completed in a few months, apparently. While it was successfully completed within a short time after it was given attention, nothing was done during a period of nearly 15 months preceding the bankruptcy. No reasonable excuse for this delay appears. The mistaken idea that the time for closing the escrow was indefinitely extended, would not be sufficient to excuse the delay. The issue as to plaintiffs' negligence, and its causal effect, was one which could well be controlling and which should have been fully considered, and then decided.

[10] In any event, under these circumstances, the defendant should not in equity be penalized for being unwilling to again pay the full purchase price, before the full facts are known and her rights determined. Assuming that a finding adverse to her on the negligence issue might be made, an interlocutory decree should be entered permitting her to make up any shortage, if she desires, before her rights are completely terminated at the request of the plaintiffs who, whether responsibly negligent or not, are seeking full equitable relief without ever having complied with their agreement.

The judgment is reversed.

GRIFFIN and MUSSELL, JJ., concur.

Hearing denied; CARTER and SPENCE, JJ., dissenting.

99 Cal.App.2d 431

FOLEY v. RIVERSIDE IRON & STEEL CORPORATION et al.

Civ. No. 17171.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 18, 1950.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 16, 1950.

Hearing Denied Nov. 16, 1950.

E. T. Foley brought an action against Riverside Iron & Steel Corporation, Vinnell, Dunton, and others, for a declaratory judgment as to the proper division of the proceeds of the sale of a leasehold interest in certain mining property. Under a cross-complaint filed by the Riverside Corporation, Kaiser, the vendee of the leasehold, was made a party to the action. Vinnell, Dunton and other defendants filed counterclaims and cross-complaints. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, William J. Palmer, J., held that the sale was valid and was not contrary to agreement or made in breach of duty, that the leasehold interest did not have a value in excess of the sum received, and that the price paid by Kaiser was fair and adequate and the best obtainable under the circumstances, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that the solution arrived at by the trial court was reasonable and supported by the evidence.

Affirmed.

1. Trusts ⇐110

In declaratory judgment action brought by vendor to determine rights in proceeds of sale of leasehold interest in mining property, evidence sustained trial court's finding that vendor had not violated his fiduciary duties by failing to consult with his assignor who had retained interest in leasehold under trust agreement.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1011(1)

Where trial court's findings are supported by substantial evidence, fact that there was some conflict in evidence affords no ground for reversal.

3. Trusts ⇐110

In declaratory judgment action brought by vendor to determine rights of parties in proceeds of sale of leasehold interest in mining property, evidence sustained trial court's findings that such sale was valid and not contrary to trust agreement previously entered into by parties, that leasehold interest did not have value in excess of sum received, and that price paid by vendee was fair and adequate and best obtainable under circumstances.

4. Trusts ⇐107

In declaratory judgment action brought by vendor to determine rights in proceeds of sale of leasehold interest in mining property, where assignor, who had retained interest in leasehold under trust agreement entered into subsequent to assignment to vendor, filed cross-complaint to have sale invalidated insofar as such sale related to his interest in leasehold and to declare trust in reference thereto, said assignor assumed burden of proving that vendor had breached contractual and fiduciary duties owing to assignor.

George R. Schmidt, Los Angeles, Alley, Cole, Grimes & Friedman, Herbert Dannett, Roger Hinds, and F. C. Mebane, Jr., New York City, of counsel, for appellants.

Cosgrove, Cramer, Diether & Rindge, Los Angeles, for respondent.

Thelen, Marrin, Johnson & Bridges, San Francisco, and Philip Grey Smith, Los Angeles, for respondent Kaiser Co., Inc.

Guthrie, Darling & Shattuck, Los Angeles, for respondents H. S. West and W. L. Long.

Gerald Bridges, Los Angeles, for respondents A. S. Vinnell and C. W. Dunton, d. b. a. Minerals Materials Co.

DORAN, Justice.

The controversy herein relates to a tract of land in Riverside County containing iron ore deposits, commonly referred to as the Iron Chief property. In April, 1940, the Southern Pacific Company, owner of the fee, executed a complicated lease and sale agreement of this property for a ten year term to Bralowe Corporation which had been organized by appellant Harlan H. Bradt and defendants West and Long. Bralowe immediately assigned the agreement to Riverside Iron and Steel Corporation of which Bradt owned all the stock. In the agreement Bralowe had undertaken to prosecute mining operations, paying the lessor stated royalties with a guaranteed minimum. It was further provided that after ten years, if the agreement had not been previously terminated, "The lessor would sell and the lessee would purchase said mining property for a purchase price of $1,500,000.00, all sums theretofore paid by the lessee as royalties to be credited on account of said purchase price". The assignee, Riverside, assumed all the lessee's obligations.

Thereafter, Riverside and Harlan H. Bradt, owner of all Riverside stock, approached the respondent Foley, seeking financial assistance and to interest Foley in the project, and on November 11, 1942 the parties entered into option contract, which was amended on February 19, 1943. This option contract, as amended, granted Foley the privilege of purchasing the interest of Riverside-Bradt in the lease and sale agreement executed to Bralowe by the Southern Pacific, for a consideration of $109,983.24. Riverside-Bradt accepted as consideration for granting this privilege, the sum of $15,000. Foley elected to exercise the option, paying Southern Pacific $24,983.24 as agreed, and paying Riverside-Bradt an additional $10,000, whereupon Riverside-Bradt in writing transferred to Foley all interest in the lease and sale agreement. For the purpose of protecting Foley in the event that Southern Pacific refused to consent to the assignment, Bradt indorsed and delivered to Foley certificates for all the Riverside stock, namely 1,000 shares. In February, 1944, Southern Pacific, for a consideration of $1,000,000 conveyed to Kaiser the fee in the Iron Chief property subject to the lease and sale agreement hereinbefore mentioned.

On July 11, 1944 Riverside-Bradt and Foley entered into a so-called "Clarification Agreement" under which Foley agreed to protect the leased property against forfeiture, retaining, however, the right to reconvey the leasehold to Riverside-Bradt and be absolved from obligation by serving a six months notice of withdrawal. It was provided that "Foley shall have a 75% interest and Riverside and Bradt shall have a 25% interest" in net profits derived from operation of the property, "in the proceeds of a sale or other disposition of the entire leasehold", and in the fee to the property "should the leased property be acquired pursuant to the Lease and Sale Agreement".

The clarification agreement obligated Foley to furnish Bradt with copies of operation reports, operating agreements and agreements for sale of ore, "and whenever feasible the same shall be mailed to Bradt prior to the execution of said agreements or leases". However, Foley was to have exclusive control and direction of the leased premises including the sole right to determine the terms and conditions of all such agreements, as is conceded in appellant's brief. Furthermore, the agreement expressly provided that "After consultation with Bradt and hearing fully Bradt's views, Foley shall have the sole right of determining when and at what price the leasehold shall be sold or leased". (Italics added.) The present controversy to a large extent involves a consideration of the italicized provision and the question whether Foley complied therewith in selling the leasehold to Kaiser.

Concurrently with the execution of the clarification agreement, Foley addressed to Riverside-Bradt a so-called "Trust Letter" reading as follows: "In consideration of the agreement between us this day, and in lieu of the 25% interest going to you as therein provided, I agree upon your written request, to hold a 25% undivided interest in the leasehold estate and Lease and Sale Agreement heretofore assigned to me in trust for you, whenever the consent of the lessor under the Lease and Sale Agreement is obtained. I do not hereby assume any obligation to procure consent; I do not waive any right to withdrawal under the option contract."

On March 10, 1944, Foley retained the defendants Vinnell and Dunton doing business as Mineral Materials Company, to mine the property on a cost-plus basis which agreement was approved in writing by Riverside-Bradt. Mining operations were commenced on March 15, 1944 and were discontinued May 25, 1944, and as a result of this operation Vinnell and Dunton became counterclaimants in the present controversy. The cross-complainants West and Long assert certain claims arising out of agreements made with Riverside-Bradt in reference to promoting the Iron Chief.

After some negotiation, a written memorandum was executed on December 11, 1945, setting forth the terms on which Foley would sell to Kaiser the lease and sale agreement for a consideration of $1,132,811.35. The period for accepting this agreement of sale was, on February 21, 1946, extended for a thirty day period, and on April 10, 1946 Kaiser advised Foley of the former's acceptance. An escrow was thereafter opened, and the sale to Kaiser consummated.

Bradt-Riverside later repudiated the sale of the leasehold to Kaiser, contending that Foley had violated the terms of the various agreements in reference thereto. Agreements between Riverside-Bradt and West and Long were likewise repudiated. Foley instituted the present action for declaratory relief for the purpose of determining the proper division of the $1,132,811.35 received from Kaiser. Under a cross-complaint filed by Riverside-Bradt just prior to trial, Kaiser was made a party to the action. Foley's complaint sets forth that out of the amount received from Kaiser appellant Riverside-Bradt is entitled to receive $75,000 as reimbursement under the agreement, and a further sum of $198,325.66, or a total of $273,325.66 together with the pledged stock in Riverside; that defendants Vinnell and Dunton are entitled to $59,710.96; that plaintiff is entitled to the balance, which amounts are tendered into court.

The trial court found that the sale of the leasehold by Foley to Kaiser was not made without the knowledge of Riverside-Bradt as alleged by appellant; that such sale was valid and was not contrary to agreement or in breach of duty; that the lessee's interest in the Iron Chief did not have a value in excess of the sum received, and that the price paid by Kaiser was fair and adequate and the best obtainable under the circumstances. Riverside-Bradt was found to be entitled to $198,418.82, plus reimbursement of $75,000; that out of said sums defendant Long was entitled to $81,898.48, defendant West was entitled to $76,898.48. It was further found that Vinnell and Dunton were entitled to $84,919.74.

Appellant's contentions, in brief, are that Foley, as fiduciary, violated the fiduciary duties owing to Riverside, by failing to diligently mine and prospect the Iron Chief property; by selling the Iron Chief lease to Kaiser at an inadequate price; by failing to disclose material facts and by misrepresenting valuation of the property, and by concealing and suppressing from Kaiser the existence of the so-called Trust Letter. It is also claimed that Foley failed to consult with Bradt and hear fully the latter's views concerning the proposed sale to Kaiser, as stipulated in the agreement; and that Kaiser took with both actual and constructive knowledge of Riverside-Bradt's equitable interest and of the fiduciary relationship existing between Foley and Riverside-Bradt. Error is also predicated on an alleged exclusion of evidence relating to value.

[1] As stated in the respondent Foley's brief, "Whether Foley complied with or violated Paragraph (8) of the Clarification Agreement was a prominent issue" in the case. This paragraph gave Foley the sole right of determining when and at what price the leasehold should be sold and leased, "After consultation with Bradt and hearing fully Bradt's views". The record discloses evidence which, if believed, supports the trial court's finding that "with the knowledge, acquiescence and approval of defendants, Riverside and Harlan H. Bradt", Foley entered into negotiations "* * * with a view to a possible sale to Kaiser of the entire leasehold estate", and "that after consultation with defendant Harlan H. Bradt, and hearing fully the latter's views with respect thereto", Foley arranged the sale to Kaiser.

The evidence discloses, as noted in the Foley brief, "that no one was more familiar with the Iron Chief property", in all phases of operation than was Bradt. It was Bradt who originally negotiated the lease from Southern Pacific, and after making the agreement with Foley, Bradt acted in the capacity of advisor concerning the Iron Chief and was paid $11,000 and expenses for such services. There is also evidence that Bradt and Foley communicated orally and by letter in reference to Kaiser negotiations, and that in a telegram of February 25, 1945 (Exhibit F-47), Bradt advised Foley that "sitting tight seems best procedure for present".

There is evidence that Foley first endeavored to interest Kaiser in purchasing ore from the Iron Chief, but without success. On January 26, 1944 Kaiser secured title to the fee of the Iron Chief property, and thereafter Foley and Kaiser were in conference in an endeavor to work out a sale of the lease to Kaiser. On December 10, 1945, Foley telephoned to Bradt who was in Montreal, that Kaiser had offered $1,000,000 for the leasehold contingent on getting the money from the R.F.C. Bradt stated that the offer sounded interesting but thought the price was less than the mine was intrinsically worth, to which latter statement Foley observed that it was not a question of instrinsic value but of how much could be obtained. Bradt wished to discuss the matter with others. Foley stated that Kaiser desired to have an answer the following day.

At this point there is a direct conflict of testimony as to which party was to call the other the next day; Bradt insisting that Foley was to call again, and Foley testifying that the Kaiser deal was held up all the next day waiting for Bradt to call but that no call was received. Apropos this matter, Bradt was asked at the trial, "Did you tell Mr. Foley that he had no right to make a sale under those agreements?" to which Bradt replied, "I don't think so."

Foley did not again hear from Bradt until December 16, 1945, when Bradt telephoned and was advised by Foley that a tentative agreement had been made with Kaiser at a figure some $130,000 above the million originally offered. Bradt then stated that the division of 75% to Foley and 25% to Bradt as specified in the contract was not satisfactory, according to Foley's testimony, "and he said that he was going to write me a letter telling me he didn't approve of the sale on that basis, and that he was also going down to Washington * * * and see if he couldn't upset the deal." Bradt did not write such a letter, however, and did not again communicate until "at the close of the escrow, and a flock of telegrams and letters came in from Mr. Bradt and Burke and Burke, professing surprise at the sale".

[2] Notwithstanding the voluminous briefs filed herein and a stenographic record of more than 2,800 pages of evidence, appellant's position largely resolves itself into the simple contention that the trial court should have believed the evidence of appellant rather than that introduced by respondents. That there was some conflict in testimony relating to Foley's conduct and in reference to negotiations between Foley, Bradt and others, cannot be denied. This fact, however, under the usual rules governing appellate review, affords no ground for reversal where the findings are supported by substantial evidence. As hereinbefore indicated, the record discloses such evidence.

[3] The trial court was confronted with a mass of evidence dealing with all phases of a somewhat complicated factual situation. The parties presented to the court, in extenso, all matters in any manner connected with the controversy. These items of evidence included not only the various agreements and documents directly involved, but also the negotiations leading up to the execution thereof, and many collateral facts more or less illuminating and explaining the different transactions. Out of all this maze of evidence and contentions, the trial court appears to have arrived at a final solution which in the state of the record, cannot in any sense be deemed unreasonable or unsupported.

In examining the record it immediately becomes evident that both Foley and Bradt were experienced experts in the mining field, and that they understandingly entered into contractual relations designed to benefit each party. It is likewise apparent that Bradt, who now complains of the eventual sale to Kaiser and the amount realized therefrom, was at all times in a position to know what was going on in reference to the transaction in all its phases; it is a reasonable conclusion from the evidence, despite Bradt's contrary testimony, that Bradt was so informed. That the transaction did not, perhaps, result in producing as much money as had been hoped for, is beside the point. Doubtless both parties likewise understood that their efforts might even result in a complete loss rather than in the expected profit.

[4] In respect to the cross-complaint of Riverside-Bradt, seeking to invalidate the sale to Kaiser so far as said sale related to the interest of Riverside-Bradt, and to declare a trust in reference thereto, the cross-complainants obviously assumed the burden of proof. In order to succeed in such cross action Riverside-Bradt was required to prove that Foley had breached contractual and fiduciary duties owing to cross-complainants.

The trial court expressly found that there had been no such breach of duty; that the sale to Kaiser was valid, and that the consideration paid was fair and adequate. This merely involved a question of fact and a consideration of the credibility of the witnesses produced by the respective parties. Even if the appellate court were of the belief that a different result should have been reached on the evidence, reversal would not be warranted so long as support for the trial court's findings is found in the record. No reversible error either in respect to the exclusion of evidence or otherwise, has been made manifest.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., and DRAPEAU, J., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 361

TYREE v. EPSTEIN.

Civ. 17484.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Sept. 11, 1950.

Wirth Tyree sued Herman E. Epstein to recover damages for malpractice and for defendant's alleged fraud in concealing the extent of plaintiff's injuries. The defendant demurred and moved to strike portions of the complaint. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, William B. McKesson, J., sustained the demurrer without leave to amend, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that evidentiary matter should not be considered on demurrer.

Reversed with directions.

1. Pleading ⇐218(1), 360(4)

In action to recover damages for malpractice and fraud, where patient alleged discovery of alleged malpractice and fraud on certain date and physician filed affidavit claiming that in his previous negligence action against city plaintiff had alleged earlier discovery date, conflicting statements as to time of discovery presented question of fact and not of law and could not be disposed of by court on demurrer and motion to strike.

2. Pleading ⇐216(1)

Statutory and traditional procedure for testing sufficiency of complaint on demurrer does not encompass consideration of evidentiary matters by court.

3. Pleading ⇐216(1), 360(4)

In action to recover damages for malpractice and fraud, where physician attached hospital report of operation to affidavit supporting demurrer and motion to strike, trial court could not consider report in determining sufficiency of allegations of complaint to state cause of action.

William Jerome Pollack, Los Angeles, for appellant.

A. Stewart Maddox, Jr., Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

[1] Plaintiff filed his complaint for damages alleging that he had sustained injuries in an automobile accident July 22, 1947, for which the City of Los Angeles was liable and that he had recovered a judgment against the City for $22,500 which has not been paid; that following his accident he was attended in the Los Angeles County General Hospital by Herman E. Epstein, a licensed physician and surgeon, defendant in the present action; that the defendant was guilty of specified acts of malpractice; that he fraudulently concealed from plaintiff the extent of plaintiff's injuries, representing them to be merely temporary and that he also concealed the alleged acts of malpractice. Defendant demurred to the complaint and made a motion to strike certain portions thereof. One of the grounds of the demurrer was that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. The motion to strike was addressed to the allegations of the complaint with relation to discovery of the alleged malpractice and fraud. The ground of the motion was that the allegations were false. The motion was based upon the affidavit of defendant's attorney which purported to set forth allegations contained in plaintiff's complaint against the City with relation to his knowledge of his injuries which were claimed to be in conflict with the allegations of his complaint in the present action with reference to discovery. The affidavit further stated on information and belief that plaintiff had given his deposition in the suit against the City in which he testified concerning his injuries and submitted his injured arm for examination. In addition there was attached to the affidavit the hospital report of the operation on plaintiff's arm which was performed February 14, 1948, in which it appeared that defendant Epstein had assisted to some extent. The demurrer and motion were argued. The demurrer was sustained without leave to amend and the motion was ordered off calendar. The record indicates that only those portions of the affidavit which related to the hospital records and the alleged contradictory allegations in the complaint in the former action were considered by the court. After the demurrer was sustained without leave to amend judgment was entered in favor of defendant. It recites that it was stipulated that the specified portions of the affidavit of defendant's attorney should be deemed added to plaintiff's complaint as an amendment in ruling upon the motion and the demurrer. The briefs on the appeal are devoted in large extent to a discussion of the significance of the additional facts which were thus brought to the court's attention. As far as we can determine the matter discussed is of strictly evidentiary character and wholly inappropriate for the consideration of the trial court or this court. In the present case plaintiff alleged discovery on a certain date, whereas it is claimed that his allegations in the former case show an earlier discovery. It may be that the trial court weighed one statement against the other, decided in favor of the earlier discovery, and in this manner found a reason for sustaining the demurrer upon the ground that the statute of limitations had run. We cannot hazard a guess upon this point. But if there were conflicting statements as to the time of discovery the question presented was one of fact and not of law. It is argued with apparent plausibility that there was no irreconcilable conflict between the two allegations, and we think it is manifest that the earlier allegations were not conclusive as to the date of discovery but were subject to explanation which, under the procedure here adopted, was not afforded to plaintiff. However this may be, plaintiff's rights should not have been determined on the basis of his former declarations, which were clearly susceptible of explanation.

More perplexing, however, is the injection into the case of a copy of the hospital report pertaining to plaintiff's operation. It reads as follows:

"County of Los Angeles Department of Charities
Los Angeles County
General Hospital
Report of Operation.

Operator: Dr. Dueker
Surgical Service of: Dr. Patterson
Dictated by: Dr. Dueker
Date of Operation: February 14, 1948
Preoperative Diagnosis: Complete left radial nerve palsy at site of previous fractured humerus, which had been reduced openly and plated.
Postoperative Diagnosis: Traumatic transsection of the left radial nerve at fracture site in middle third of the humerus.
Findings:
Operation: Exploration of left radial nerve.
Procedure: Under brachial block anesthesia with pontocaine, the patient was placed supine and the left arm prepared in the usual manner and draped, using sterile stockinette. The old linear incision on the lateral aspect of the arm was resected. The radial nerve was isolated and found to be intact, at the lower pole of this wound and lying between the origin of the brachioradialis and radialis muscles. The nerve was bluntly dissected upwards into a dense scar formation, exposing the old fracture site. The proximal end of the nerve was located as it left the radial groove in the humerus and dissected free to its entanglement in the scar tissue. The proximal neuroma and distal glioma were resected back to good fasciculi. The nerve was freed in its distal tunnel to the elbow, which allowed approximation of the two ends. The nerve was sutured with fine wire on an atraumatic needle, and a bed of muscle plus a single layer of oxycel prepared for the suture site. Dr. Epstein of the Orthopedic Department inspected the region and decided that the plate need not be be removed. The would was closed with No. 00 chromic sutures in deep tissue and interrupted black silk in the skin. The arm was placed in a circular cast in 90 degrees flexion. Patient returned to ward in good condition.
Is case clean?
Condition: 2/16/48
Risk: 2/17/48
Prognosis: rb
Copy to:

Surname of Patient	First Name	Middle Name	P. F. No.	Ward
Tyree	Wirth		1037-738	5800."

[2, 3] Having read this report and being of the opinion, as counsel argue, that it is necessary to have an understanding of it and of its relation to and influence upon the sufficiency of the allegations of the amended complaint to state a cause of action, we have concluded to pursue the matter no further. There is statutory and traditional procedure for testing the sufficiency of a complaint on demurrer. It does not encompass the consideration by the court of evidentiary matters such as were here injected into the hearing, nor matters which would require the court to possess or employ expert knowledge within the realm of medical science in order to comprehend the significance of the pleaded facts. Procedural innovations, consisting as they usually do of attempted short cuts, seldom result in improvements over the standard procedure which our courts have followed from the beginning. The present case is no exception.

The judgment is reversed; plaintiff should be allowed to amend his complaint if he desires to do so and the sufficiency of it to state a cause of action should be considered anew.

WOOD and VALLÉE, JJ., concur.

99 Cal.App.2d 384

DAVIDSON v. LONG BEACH PLEASURE PIER CO. et al.

Civ. 17399.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 12, 1950.

Action by Elizabeth Davidson, a minor, by her guardian ad litem, Naomi Bullard, against the Long Beach Pleasure Pier Company, a California corporation, and others, for injuries sustained when plaintiff was allegedly thrown from an amusement device called a tilt-a-whirl. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Harry R. Archbald and William B. McKesson, JJ., entered judgment notwithstanding the verdict in favor of the defendants and from the judgment and from an order granting motion for judgment notwithstanding a verdict and from an order striking memorandum of costs and disbursements, the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Drapeau, J., held that evidence was sufficient to sustain the verdict for plaintiff and the entry of judgment for defendant notwithstanding the verdict was error.

Judgment reversed and Superior Court directed to enter judgment for plaintiff for $10,185 in accordance with verdict of jury, together with costs in trial court and District Court of Appeal.

1. Judgment ⇐199(3.10)

A judgment notwithstanding the verdict may be granted only, when disregarding conflicting evidence and giving to plaintiff's evidence all value to which it is legally entitled, indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of plaintiff if such a verdict were given.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1014
Judgment ⇐199(3.3)

In determining a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, neither appellate nor trial court is authorized to weigh evidence or judge of the credibility of witnesses.

3. Theaters and shows ⇐6(1)

The proprietor of a public place of amusement is required to maintain in a reasonably safe condition every contrivance used in its premises, and to properly inspect and supervise the same.

4. Theaters and shows ⇐6(8)

Where plaintiff was thrown from an amusement device known as a tilt-a-whirl, and jury found that car on device used by plaintiff was not in reasonably safe condition and was not properly inspected or supervised, defendant company was liable.

5. Theaters and shows ⇐6(8)

In addition to duties of maintenance, inspection and supervision, with which operator of amusement device known as a tilt-a-whirl was charged, it was his further duty to use reasonable care to see that patrons were not injured while device was running.

6. Master and servant ⇐304

Owner of amusement device known as a tilt-a-whirl, who employed operator to run device, was liable for operator's want of reasonable care in every respect.

7. Theaters and shows ⇐6(23, 39)

Where plaintiff was thrown from defendant's amusement device called a tilt-a-whirl, because of allegedly negligent operation thereof, res ipsa loquitur doctrine was applicable, and in personal injury action refusal of trial court to instruct jury on the doctrine was error.

8. Negligence ⇐121(2)

Where a thing which causes injury is shown to be under management of defendant and accident is such as in ordinary course of things does not happen if those who had the management used proper care, res ipsa loquitur applies.

Pollock & Pollock, Edward I. Pollock and David Pollock, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Calvin L. Helgoe, John K. Ford, Los Angeles, for respondents.

DRAPEAU, Justice.

Three teenage girls, plaintiff, her sister, and their friend from Utah, were enjoying one of the Christmas holidays on the strand at Long Beach. They rode on a roller coaster. They went into the House of the Laughing Lady. And then two of them, the plaintiff and the girl from Utah, got tangled up with an amusement device called a tilt-a-whirl.

The tilt-a-whirl was located on an ocean pier belonging to defendant Long Beach Pleasure Pier Company; it was owned by defendant E. C. Velare; and, at the time the girls rode on it, it was operated by the defendant Carmen Tomei. Long Beach Pleasure Pier Company permitted the operation of the tilt-a-whirl on a verbal lease with Mr. Velare, for a rental of 25% of the receipts.

